THE DISCIPLES DIVINITY HOUSE
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

HERBERT LOCKWOOD WILLETT
LIBRARY

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2012 with funding from CARLI: Consortium of Academic and Research Libraries in Illinois

http://www.archive.org/details/christianevangel45unse

BL 1

1407

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Vol. XLV. No. 27.
ST. LOUIS, JULY 2, 1908.

SOME CENTENNIAL AIMS

Ten Thousand Ministers.

An Offering from Every Disciple to some Christian College.

The College for the Church, the Church for the College---Both for Christ.

EDUCATION NUMBER

7376

The Christian-Evangelist.

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER,
B. B. TYLER,
W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 835
Editorial—
State Brotherhoods and Colleges... 836
Our Independence Day..... 836
Christianity and Hygiene..... 836
Not "Cross Currents"..... 836
The Gospel of Rest..... 837
Notes and Comments..... 837
Editor's Easy Chair..... 838
Contributed Articles—
The Patriotic Optimism. David J. Burrell, D. D., LL. D..... 839
Mission of the Christian College. President Miner Lee Bates..... 839
True Education. H. H. Peters.... 840
Ante-Bellum Religion in Old Missouri 840
Church Membership: A Symposium 841
Our Budget 842
Evangelistic 846
College Work and Plans..... 847
Sunday-school 854
Christian Endeavor 855
Midweek Prayer-meeting 855
Adult Bible Class Movement..... 856
People's Forum 858
The Home Department 859

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
CHURCH GOODS
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis

The New Orleans Convention
OCTOBER, 1908

Many have written us inquiring about plans for going to our great Annual Convention to be held in New Orleans next October.

We have been anxious to make definite announcement concerning "The Christian-Evangelist Special" to the convention and return, but the Railroads have not as yet taken action on rates from St. Louis, so we can not now give our plans, but will do so in the near future.

After diligent inquiry we regret to say that it will not be possible to use a boat in our journey, as there are no boats available that would be suitable; therefore our trip will necessarily be an "all rail" one from St. Louis and return, and we are expecting a large party on this occasion.

W. Daviess Pittman
Business Manager.

Gloria in Excelsis
A SUPERB CHURCH HYMNAL

Edited and Prepared by the 20th Century Committee which is composed of more than

TWENTY OF OUR LEADING BRETHREN

PUBLISHED IN A

COMPLETE EDITION and an ABRIDGED EDITION

The COMPLETE EDITION contains 624 pages and 814 Standard Hymns, Spiritual Songs and Anthems, and also 64 pages of Responsive Readings.

The ABRIDGED EDITION contains 400 pages and 503 Standard Hymns and Spiritual Songs, and also has 64 pages of Responsive Readings.

In this book the Disciples of Christ have a church hymnal equal to the best church hymnal used in any church in the United States. The supervising committee of twenty well known brethren, with W. E. M. Hackleman as musical editor, have produced a book of hymns, songs, doxologies, glorias, chants and canticles, that excels anything ever attempted in our brotherhood before, and, with the 70 pages of responsive readings, makes a book of rare excellence and usefulness.

EDITIONS AND PRICES.

	Postpaid Per Copy	Not prepaid Per Dozen	Not prepaid Per Hundred
Complete Edition.
Silk Cloth Binding	$1.00	$ 9.50	$75.00
Silk Cloth, Leather Back	1.25	12.00	95.00
Abridged Edition.
Board Binding	$ .55	$5.00	$40.00
Silk Cloth Binding	.65	6.50	50.00
Silk Cloth, Leather Back	.85	8.50	65.00

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, JULY 2, 1908. Number 27.

Current Events

The New Secretary of War.

Mr. Taft's resignation as secretary of war will take effect June 30. He will be succeeded by Gen. Luke Wright, of Tennessee. It is not the first time that Wright has succeeded Taft. They were closely associated in the Philippines, where Wright was vice-governor when Taft was governor, and became governor after Taft returned to the United States. After six years in the Philippines, he served for a short time as ambassador to Japan, and then returned home nearly two years ago. Mr. Wright is a democrat, and was a Confederate soldier. In view of his political connections, his appointment to an important post in the Philippines by President McKinley caused considerable surprise—much more, in fact, than is occasioned by his appointment now to a cabinet position. The fact shows that, while party politics is still as partisan as ever in some respects, there has been a re-drawing of the political lines which has brought together old political opponents in rather a surprising fashion. The position of secretary of war probably requires greater executive capacity and more varied abilities than any other in the cabinet. The occupant of that place must not merely be prepared to direct the affairs of the army, but he must be prepared to serve as colonial secretary, directing the affairs of our insular possessions, and he must also exercise a wise authority over the Canal Zone and all that goes on within it, both of administration and construction.

Death of Grover Cleveland.

Ex-President Grover Cleveland died at his home in Princeton, N. J., on Wednesday morning, June 24, of a complication of disorders culminating in heart trouble. He was a great man, a statesman rather than a politician. As mayor of Buffalo and governor of New York, his experience before entering upon his first term as President had been wholly outside of the field of national affairs. But his personality was as large as his experience had been small. He always thought much of his own opinions, and he worked them out with a degree of careful studiousness which gave him a right to have confidence in them. The popular trust in his absolute integrity and disinterestedness—a trust which he never failed to justify—contributed to increase his feeling of independence of those who would have been his natural advisers. He was never an easy man to advise. During his second administration, those issues which have disturbed the political world and caused a re-drawing of party lines were coming to an acute stage and it was perhaps inevitable that he should forfeit all allegiance of a large part of his own party while winning the approbation of a considerable fraction of the opposite party. He was accused of stubbornness, of brutal indifference to the will of his party and its leaders, and of many mistakes in judgment, but he was never accused of weakness. After his retirement from office twelve years ago, he made his home in Princeton, N. J., where he served as a member of the corporation of Princeton University, and lived a life of dignified quiet in keeping with his position as the only living ex-President.

Mr. Bryan on the Republican Platform.

Mr. Bryan, in the "Commoner," attacks the Republican platform and reduces it to splinters and slivers. At least those who agree with him will think he has done so. He points out the features in which the platform varies from the published policies of the administration, which are known to be policies favored also by Mr. Taft. The platform gives several good openings for such criticism. For example, there is the failure to incorporate any reference to publicity for campaign contributions. The natural reply will be that the business of the convention was to formulate a platform representing a consensus of the party's judgment and not necessary to incorporate everything that even the most eminent of Republicans has favored. The criticism has been made that the convention was too much dominated by Roosevelt and now comes the counter-criticism that it did not put the Roosevelt policies in its platform—an administration candidate but not an administration platform. Mr. Bryan is much displeased also with the paragraph referring to injunctions. The labor unions in general share his displeasure. An injunction is a legal device for preventing something from being done. If A injures B or B's property, B can sue A for damages. But if A has nothing to pay, B will get only an empty satisfaction even if he wins his suit. It will be far better for B, in such a case, if he knows that A intends to injure him, to get an injunction which will prevent the injury. But there may easily be a difference of opinion as to whether or not the intended action would be an unlawful injury. A may claim that he is acting wholly within his rights and that it is an injury to him to prevent him from carrying out his plans. In such a case, both sides ought to have a hearing which would amount to a preliminary trial of the case. The injunction is a useful and necessary device, on the principle that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. But it is liable to serious abuse when an injunction is granted upon the application of one party without giving the other a hearing. To frame a law which shall so define the power of the courts that the abuses shall be checked and yet the usefulness of the injunction as an emergency measure not be impaired requires a more delicate handling of details than a national convention is usually capable of. The declaration of the Democratic convention on the subject will be awaited with interest.

College and Politics.

There seems to be no doubt but that a college education increases a man's chances of attaining political success. President Roosevelt is a Harvard graduate. Presidential Candidate Taft is a son of Yale. Vice-Presidential Candidate Sherman is a graduate of Hamilton College. Mr. Bryan, who will be a presidential candidate within ten days, is an alumnus of Illinois College. It will be a college man's campaign. Mr. Taft has been having a glorious time at the Yale commencement, celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of his graduation. The class of '78 was there in force and a lot of other classes besides.

A Backward Step.

An imperial edict has been issued by the Czar that all women students shall be expelled from the Russian universities and that none henceforth shall be admitted. The order affects about 2,200 women, many of whom have been in the universities for several years and are nearing graduation. It is natural that when the privilege of matriculation in the universities was extended to women, a large proportion of those availing themselves of the opportunity should be women of radical and revolutionary sentiments. The women students have therefore contributed rather more than their fair share to the student uprisings which have vexed the constituted authorities. It is a great pity that, after paying Japan so great a price for a lesson in modernization, Russia seems determined not to learn the lesson but clings to her mediævalism. The Russian universities are, of course, state institutions and under the control of a minister of education. The expulsion of women from the universities is the result of no theory about co-education, but a purely political stroke for the repression of a class which is considered dangerous.

Editorial

State Brotherhoods and Colleges.

We are hoping that the local brotherhoods now being formed in so many of our churches will eventually organize into state brotherhoods, have their stated meetings perhaps in connection with our state conventions, and make it one of their specific aims to look into the condition and needs of the colleges within the state that are seeking to serve the same cause. What worthier or more urgent cause could challenge their generosity and business sense than the proper care of the institutions that are furnishing us our trained workers?

We can imagine an assembly of business men gathered for the consideration of so important a subject as Christian education, raising and taking steps to have answered such questions as these:

1. What institutions have we in the state, under the auspices of the Disciples, that are doing distinctively Christian work?

2. What has each one of these in the way of buildings, equipment and endowment?

3. How many students have they, and what is the character of the work being done?

4. What are they doing to supply the deficiency in our ministerial supply and in our missionary force?

5. What do they need in the way of better buildings, equipment and endowment to enable them to do a larger and better work?

6. In what way can we co-operate with these institutions, through their boards of trustees, to enable them to secure the needed aid?

Why should not the men in our churches, banded together in brotherhoods, give such a manifestation of brotherliness, and of far-sighted business sense, in promoting the best interests of our beloved cause?

Our Independence Day.

The old-fashioned Fourth of July oratory consisted largely in telling how big we were, and how strong and how brave, and how able we were to "whip the whole creation." That period of mere boastfulness has passed away. We have reached a period of our national development when we can see our faults and our dangers, as well as our virtues and our strength. We are none the less patriotic because we refuse to shut our eyes to our national shortcomings. Indeed, that is the truest kind of patriotism that discerns our own weaknesses and seeks to remedy them.

It has come to be apparent to all thoughtful American citizens that our chief danger is not from the aggression of foreign nations, but from foes within. Ignorance, greed for gain, lawlessness, lack of reverence for law, human and divine, and for the rights of others—these are foes far more to be feared and fought against than all the armies and navies of Europe and Asia. These are the things which undermine the strength of nations and cause their overthrow. It follows that schools of all grades, and Christian colleges and churches, are better safeguards of our civil and religious liberty, and of our national greatness and power, than a large navy and increased armaments on land and sea.

It is for this reason—the vital relationship of Christian education to the permanence and prosperity of our national life—that we have for years issued our educational number in connection with Independence day. There are no institutions doing more to reinforce and cultivate the virtues that make for the moral supremacy and political stability of our nation than those colleges resting on private foundations, and having the liberty and recognizing the duty of developing not only the mental, but the moral and religious life of their students. President Roosevelt, in extending his greetings to the Religious Education Association, said: "I doubt if there is any lesson more essential to teach in an industrial democracy like ours than the lesson that any failure to train the average citizen to a belief in the things of the spirit no less than in the things of the body must in the long run entail misfortune, shortcoming and possible disaster upon the nation itself." In the same session of the Religious Education Association, Dr. MacKenzie, president of the Hartford Theological Seminary, said:

"It is one of the most significant facts in American life that the public mind confesses that it is continually dependent upon religion for health and success in the conduct of its institutional activities."

Let us see to it, then, that as a religious body forming a part of the national life, we give adequate support to our own colleges as the best means of making our movement a source of strength to the nation and to the kingdom of God.

Christianity and Hygiene.

It is the glory of Christianity that it is on the side of every movement that looks toward the betterment of the race. It is capable of adapting itself to the increasing knowledge of science and of the laws of health, and it is only a perversion of Christianity that holds out against any reform that is based on well-ascertained facts of science in relation to health. The rapid growth of the custom of using the individual communion cup is a case in point. The scientific discovery of bacteria, and the important part they play in communicating disease, has revolutionized both the practice of surgery and medicine. One of the ways in which it affects religious practice is in the communion service. Under the old method a number of persons drank from the same cup. It is freely admitted that in this custom there are possibilities of communicating disease. It would be a strange thing if Christianity could not adapt itself to facts like these, and avoid the danger while continuing the beautiful and impressive service of the Lord's supper. This has been met in the individual communion cup, the use of which has been demonstrated to be entirely practicable, and even more impressive, than the original custom of the use of a single cup, or of only a few cups.

Of course, there is no valid argument to be made against the modern practice on scriptural grounds. If it be said that a plurality of cups is contrary to the scriptural reference to "the cup," then the use of two or three cups would be as much a violation of the ancient rule as the use of the larger number. But there is nothing in the argument. The merest literalist must see that any convenient and orderly method of distributing the elements to worshipers carries out the spirit and intent of the institution. It is safe to say that where two methods are equally scriptural in their form and the one has the added recommendation of being safe and hygienic, while the other contains possibilities of contagion, the former is certain to triumph. The writer was gratified, on a recent trip to the far West, where many victims of tuberculosis go for their health, to find that the use of the individual communion cup was almost universal among our churches. This is as it should be. Superstition will not stand against scientific knowledge and indisputable facts.

Not "Cross Currents."

In an editorial on "Denominational Reintegration" in the "Congregationalist and Christian World," reference is made to the tendency toward the affiliation of kindred denominations, as between different branches of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist families. The editor regards this movement as a "cross current," with another tendency toward organic union, and thinks that while it may "hold in abeyance in some parts of the world the trend toward organic union, it will ultimately aid this trend."

We had not thought of these movements as "cross currents," but as parts of one general movement toward unity, having a common impulse in the desire to realize the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for unity. Naturally this union movement will take form first between those who are nearest akin. Where religious bodies are sufficiently alike in faith and polity to make organic union possible, the movement is naturally toward organic union. In other cases where there is at present sufficient difference to make immediate union impossible, the union sentiment finds expression in what is known as federation, which means such a degree of co-operation as is now possible. This co-operation is an essential preparation for a completer unity. These are all parts of a common movement toward the correlation of Christian forces with the view of enabling the church to accomplish its sublime mission in the world. They are not "cross currents," but are streams flowing in the same direction, and destined to converge at last in a united church.

When the tide comes in it inundates, first of all, the little pools and inlets nearest on the level of the ocean; but as it rises higher it flows into all the bays and inlets, adapting itself to the sinuosities of the shoreline, according to its levels. So the tide of Christian union now coming in manifests itself here in the form of organic union among churches of the same family, and there, showing its presence in the closer relationship between Christian bodies not yet prepared for organic union; but it will continue to rise until all intervening barriers are hidden from view by a tide which shall know no ebb, because it is pulled shoreward by the increasing attraction of the Son of God.

The Gospel of Rest.

There is a time for work and there is a time for play. There is a gospel of work, and there is a gospel of rest. The man who does not work, and work hard, does not know the blessedness of rest. Moreover, the man who works hard, and puts his life into his work, must rest occasionally or his work will deteriorate. Rest is as divine as working, because its end is more and better work.

There are some people who never learn this lesson, and some learn it too late. We admit that there is a certain kind of people of phlegmatic temperament, who never get in a hurry nor get much in earnest, nor expend much energy in their work, who apparently need no vacation. But the men who do the most effective work, and who make it a point to always do their best, expend a large amount of vitality, and these are bound to have seasons of rest for recuperation of energy and of vital forces. The same Jesus who sent the seventy into all the villages of Judea to preach the gospel of the Kingdom, said to them, on their return: "Come ye apart and rest awhile." Our hard-working evangelists and pastors will do better work with the coming autumn if they will turn aside now to some quiet place and rest awhile from their ardent labors.

There is altogether too much hurry and rush in our American life. We are living too fast and not living deep enough. We would do well to pause awhile in the hot pursuit of wealth, or in the prosecution of any difficult tasks, and take time to think a little, and to brood over the deep problem of life. It is better, occasionally, to look up through the branches of the trees into the quiet stars, than to have one's eyes continually fixed on the ledger. It is more likely to enable one to have something to his credit in the great ledger book of human life.

Our advice, therefore, to all those who can do it, and who feel that they need it, is to take a rest. Take it where you will have a change of scenery and surroundings, and where new objects will present themselves to your mind, and new lines of thought will be started. Take it where you can see most of nature and least of the artificialities and conventionalities of our modern life. Take it where you can secure moral and spiritual invigoration along with your physical and intellectual recuperation. In a word take your rest where and when, and in that manner that will enable you to do the best work when the rest period is over and you resume the routine duties of life.

Notes and Comments

The next International Sunday-School Convention goes to San Francisco. We shall give reports of the convention just held.

We suggest that at least one sermon be preached in all our churches ere long on the worshipful spirit. Your own congregation may not, perhaps, need it, but some visitors may. It does not seem to be a difficult matter for many people to forget that the house of God is for communion with him, that we go there to see his face and must not let that of our friends make his dim or distant. There would be a more reverent spirit about the Lord's Supper were there more preaching about it.

At least two of our great states—Illinois and Missouri—have now adopted the delegate plan for doing the business of the churches in conventions. This does not, of course, mean that no one except selected delegates can attend and enjoy the conventions. But it does mean that the churches of St. Louis can not next year, when the state convention comes to this city, control by their votes—for a local attendance, of course, would swell the convention crowd—any business that may be transacted. The churches in the country can outvote all the city churches in a delegate convention, should they so desire. This is a truly democratic method of doing business, despite the bogey-man who cries out ecclesiasticism.

We have little hope of Dr. Lasher ever in this world coming to appreciate the Disciples of Christ. He has for so long directed his editorials at them that he would not know how to adjust himself, we fear, were the walls between the Disciple and the Baptist folds appreciably lowered. The chief reason, we believe, is that the editor of the "Journal and Messenger" wants to stop with two hundred years of history. He will not have the Free Baptists either, for the same reason.

"Can any one fail," he says in a recent editorial, "to see that it is one thing to tolerate, for a time, those who walk disorderly (contrary to the traditions of the Baptist denomination), and it is a thing quite different from formally voting to receive those who openly declare their purpose to disregard the standard by which our churches have been governed for two hundred years."

A tradition of two hundred years is what prevents certain Baptists from a union with Free Baptists, because the former are in favor of a restricted communion and the latter are not. Yet thousands of those calling themselves Baptists are not close communionists.

We suppose it is this two hundred years of traditionalism that prevents the "Journal and Messenger" from seeing any good in the Disciples, who have one hundred years less of man's tradition, but whose one central plea is to go back to Christ and his apostles for guidance and instruction, and who are not worrying themselves one-tenth as much about whether conversion is before baptism or in baptism and membership after baptism, as they are whether a convicted sinner repents of his sins, publicly confesses the Savior, and acknowledges the Lordship of Jesus Christ by obeying his commands. They are striving to make Christians and following the method, as closely as they can understand it, that the Master has given them. They will be glad for Baptists to use the name by which they call themselves, but they see no good reason why they should adopt a divisive name when their own has a wider sweep, a higher authority, and is more truly descriptive for one who follows Jesus Christ.

Have you really thought about it? "The sacred thing with most people is a prejudice, and the more false and foolish it is, the more sacred."

It is difficult sometimes to estimate results of evangelistic work. Some people count heads, some people count Christian life, yet neither of these may come into the reckoning, for the word fitly spoken may give its fruit in the future, years after the evangelist or the pastor has passed from the scene. Even the method of counting heads may be utterly misleading. We notice that there has been some discussion about the Welsh revival, about which everybody was talking some time ago. It has been observed that there was a great slump back from the state of religious fervor into the apathy and listlessness as regards religious matters prevalent before the revival. We are glad, however, to have the assurance of Principal Edwards, a man of sound judgment, that this is an overstatement of the case. He says that the many cases of backsliding, to which public reference has been made so frequently, have occurred largely amongst the young people, who were, perhaps, registered as converts with undue haste. At the present moment, the principal says, there are between sixty and seventy thousand who have for three years remained in good standing. As for ourselves, we had no other expectation, judging by what we heard of the revival, than that there would be some losses. Emotionalism played an undue part in this Welsh movement, and there was so much mysticism on the part of one of the prominent leaders that many a convert would, we think, have but a hazy idea of the meaning of the Christian life. Principal Edwards' suggestion about the undue haste in rushing young people into action which has not been considered, is in harmony with the feeling of many of our own brethren about some of our own evangelism. It is not meant in the spirit of criticism, for the sake of criticism, but merely a call to examine ourselves as to whether this is the wise method for us to pursue. C. M. Chilton and F. W. Burnham, in their addresses before the Missouri State Convention, touched upon this particular phase of the winning of the child.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

Yesterday in St. Louis. To-day in our lakeside home at Pentwater, Mich. This seems a sudden transition from one place to another of an editorial office, but we are living in an age of rapid transitions. Besides, when the move is a customary one, as ours is, from city to lakeside about this season of the year, it is not only accomplished within a brief period, but it scarcely interferes with the regular editorial output. This is one of the advantages of going to a fixed place each summer, without spending half the time in finding a comfortable place, and the other half in regretting that you did not go somewhere else. To settle such questions once for all and to have not only a place to go to, but a cottage to remove into, containing another editorial office, solves the summer vacation problem and relieves it of its disagreeable features. It seemed good to-day to get back to these familiar scenes, which are none the less beautiful for being familiar. The weather is at its best, with just enough coolness in the air to make a pine knot fire on the hearth very comfortable in the evening. The old lake seemed to be in an especially good humor, and laughed us a hearty welcome as its multitudinous wavelets danced in the sunlight. Here, within a few hours after our arrival, our household has resumed its ordinary course, and we are beginning our summer tasks, with which we hope to mingle a little recreation as time and circumstance may permit. The change of location for the summer in no way modifies, very materially, our editorial work. We do not envy those who are able to leave their work at home and take a complete vacation. We are glad that so many can do this; and yet this has never been our lot in life. The most that we can hope for in this change of location is a cooler atmosphere, freedom from the noise of city life, and out of these more favorable conditions for work to get a little time each day to lighten the day's toil with recreation and rest amid these quieter scenes.

Apropos to the above, this paragraph is written in the early morning hour. The first rays of the sun are casting their golden sheen upon the branches of pine and hemlock, and the mists are being lifted from the broad bosom of the lake. A gentle breeze is stirring the leaves of the trees and roughening the surface of the lake. How quiet and restful the scene appears! It is two hours yet before the ordinary time of getting downtown to the office when in the city, and the day's work is begun with no fear of interruption by callers. These conditions are not only favorable for rest, but for work as well, and offer the opportunity of blending the two in such proportions as one's taste suggests, or his duties require. We love the morning hour. There is about it a freshness in its cool air, a quietness and an awakening life that puts the soul in an attitude of gratitude to God for the beautiful world he has given us to live in, and helps one to bring his soul into tune with the Infinite. The wren whose notes we hear has, as usual, found a nest where she may lay her young under the eave of our cottage, and there is a question of disputed ownership which will have to be settled by a compromise—a sort of modus vivendi, by which we will agree to live together without disputing each other's rights. We wonder if this pair of wrens supposed this entire cottage was built for their accommodation, and that they have the exclusive right to its use, just as a few people seem to imagine that the earth and the fulness thereof were created for their special benefit. But the bird's wants are few and simple, while those of man multiply and increase with his ability to gratify them, and he rarely, if ever, finds his fortune too large to meet his fancied wants.

Referring to the peregrinations of the Editor's Easy Chair, our Kansas City neighbor, "The Word and Way," has the following note:

"Among our many contemporaries only one editor, so far as we know, has an "Easy Chair," and that is Dr. Garrison of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis. How he came by this rare piece of editorial furniture is a wonder to us; and how he can afford it and find the time to occupy it, passes our comprehension. Summer vacations in the lake regions and winter vacations in California seem to be "Easy Chair" perquisites."

We might explain to our brethren of "The Word and Way," that in the present stage of religious progress, when everything is coming our way, the Editor of a paper like THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has the easiest job imaginable. Not that there is any lack of work to do, for the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST probably does more writing in bulk than the average of his editorial brethren, but work is easy when one works with God's plan for his age, with all good men, and with "the stars in their courses." There is always plenty of time to occupy an "easy chair," when it is also a work chair. As to the summer vacations in the lake regions, and winter vacations in California or Florida, these are, for the most part, pastoral visits of the Editor among his flock to learn better the condition and needs of his readers. In other words, it is the editorial office on wheels. True, in the heated term, we have other motives in view in seeking the cool breezes of the north, but even then the purpose is that we may do more and better work. And so we hope our good neighbors of "The Word and Way" will not adopt an "easy chair" with the mistaken idea that it is a lazy chair, and free from the necessity of work. Every chair is an "easy chair" to one who loves God, his fellowmen, and his work.

The foregoing note and comment of "The Word and Way" reminds us of a criticism of the Easy Chair, which was given to us recently by a friend, who was not giving it as his own criticism, but as one which he had heard from others. The substance of this criticism was that the Easy Chair conveyed the impression to its readers that its occupant was having altogether too easy a time in the world; that he seemed to have no trials, tribulations and disappointments, as most people have, and to be so far above the line of poverty as to be unable to sympathize with those who are bearing the heat and burden of the day in life's grinding toil; that it often speaks of the beauties of nature, and the joy of the world, whereas its readers would appreciate more a picture of the world's sin, sorrow and sadness. Perhaps these readers are right, but if so, our philosophy of life is wrong. The Easy Chair's theory has been that people, as a rule, have enough troubles of their own without having those of others thrust upon them. Not seldom does the "Easy Chair" seek to minister to the happiness and enjoyment of its readers by giving some bit of descriptions of the world's beauty, and the joy of living, when the Editor's own heart is heavy with life's burdens, cares and disappointments. We could more than fill the space occupied by the Easy Chair in telling of our own and others' troubles, and how bad the world is in which we are living, but we have not felt it fair to our readers to burden them with the disagreeable things in our own life to excite their pity, nor have we sought to point out the mean and ugly things of the world of which everyone sees too much; but rather to emphasize the fact, too often overlooked, that after all there is a great deal of beauty in the world, much of which lies all about us, if we only have eyes to see.

Neither the optimism that shuts its eyes to the evil of the world nor the pessimism that refuses to see the good, is the true philosophy of life. Optimism recognizes the evil in the world as well as the good, but it sees in the good the positive and ultimately triumphant force in the world. Optimism also sees the pain and sorrow among men, but does not believe that these are to be remedied by causing men to think of their pain and sorrow, but rather by lifting their thoughts to something better and more joy-inspiring. No intelligent physician goes into a sick room to tell his patient the ailments of all his other patients, and how many of them are likely to die; but he seeks rather to get their thoughts on returning health and vigor. This is the theory with which we have sought to do our work. If we may be pardoned for saying it, no heart perhaps is more sensitive to the sorrows and misfortunes of others than our own, and this fact has forced us, in self-defense, to look after the brighter side of things, and to seek to find in every cloud some silvery lining. It is not difficult, however, to understand how some, looking only upon the surface of things, might interpret what is intended to be the cheery and optimistic view of life, as a lack of appreciation of its darker side through a lack of acquaintance with its sadder experiences. Nor are we unaware of the fact that there are some people in the world who have an abnormal fondness for the gruesome and disagreeable side of life, and who enjoy nothing quite so much as being miserable themselves, and knowing that other people are in the same condition. But this is a limited class, and for these the Easy Chair is not written.

The Patriotic Optimist By David J. Burrell, D.D., LLD.

It was a hot Sunday and the sermon was on the text, "Our Country is Going to the Bad." At the church door I met my friend, the Patriotic Optimist, and remarked, "Well, what do you think of that?"

"I think," said he, "that the preacher ran without a message. Nobody in America, least of all a Preacher of the Good-spel, has any right to be a pessimist. Look at the evidences of Christian progress. Man, think of them!"

"Well, go ahead," said I, "what are they?"

Then this Man of Hope proceeded to give a reason for the Optimism that was in him, as follows:

"First; we have a Christian President; God bless him!"

"Second; of the names considered for the Presidential nomination, there was not one which does not stand for Christian faith. There's Taft, who goes about talking to our religious convocations; Bryan, who speaks up like a man for Christ and the Bible and old-fashioned orthodoxy; Hughes, who stands four-square as a believer in Christian truth and righteousness; Governor Johnson and Judge Gray and the others. Why, fifty years ago any sort of a man was available; now infidelity is a hopeless handicap, and there isn't a shadow of a chance for a godless man."

"Third; our Legislators are held to a stern reckoning by their Christian constituencies. Witness the recent performance in the New York Senate. The old-time Senator or Representative was accustomed to do as he pleased with reference to Anti-racing Bills, and the like, and snap his fingers in the face of morality; but now the people won't have it. A good sign! The Ten Commandments are cutting a wide swath in the Legislatures. Christian sentiment has the whip hand; and the Public Functionary who doubts that fact is admonished to beware the Ides of March."

"Fourth; the Christian people of our Country have discovered their strength. They are numerous enough and powerful enough to be the controlling factor in national politics; and they know it. Straws show which way the wind blows. When Mr. Roosevelt erased 'In God we trust' from our coinage, the people said, 'That was a mistake. We want Congress to put it back'; and Congress did it. When the Jews in New York City succeeded, by a still hunt, in putting an end to the singing of Christmas anthems in the Public Schools, the people said to the Board of Commissioners, 'This is a Christian Country.' And that was enough. The damage was repaired at once. So it goes always. The Christians of America have their way; as, within reasonable bounds, they ought and mean to have it."

"Fifth; the Churches of America are finding themselves. They are steadily getting together for the pushing of those great enterprises which make for truth and righteousness among all sorts and conditions of men. There never was so much real, sensible denominational union as now. Evangelism is in the air. Movements are everywhere on foot for the conversion of immigrants and the lapsed masses. There are "forward movements" in Home Missions, "forward movements" in Foreign Missions, "forward movements" in every sort of Christian work. There never was so much energy invested, never so much money contributed, never such a display of wisdom, enthusiasm and genuine fellowship as in these days."

"Oh, no! The pessimist in America must be a blind man. He can not read the logic of events. He thinks God is dead and the world whizzing through infinite space to inevitable ruin. But Garfield was right, 'God still reigns and the Country is safe!'"

My spirits rose as my friend proceeded; and, I confess, there seemed more Gospel in his words than in the jeremiad of the melancholy man in the pulpit. As we parted, I said, "This is God's country, I do believe."

And when we met again it was in another church, where the preacher's text was, "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice!" It was the first Sunday in July; the pulpit was draped in the American colors, and the people sang, as if they meant it,

"Our fathers' God, to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing:
Long may our land be bright
With Freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might Great God, our King!"

New York.

Mission of the Christian College By President Miner Lee Bates

The mission of a college is complex. The responsibility of its president is many-sided. What is the field of the small college in the educational world? What is the mission of the Christian college as distinguished from other colleges?

Broadly, the field of the small college is defined by its inherent limitations. A small faculty and a small enrollment can provide neither teachers nor students for a wide range of elective courses. Library and laboratory facilities are usually too meager to permit of extensive specializing. These limitations distinctly separate the small college from the university. The business of the university is to train specialists. The business of the college is to develop men. Each is of incalculable value. Each aids the work of the other. The college may begin the work of special training. The university furthers the development of men. The essential thing to recognize is that the mission of the small college is not to give technical, professional or other specialized training, but to offer those general courses which experience has found to be most effective in the development of power and character.

The small college may properly emphasize one or another department of its work according to the particular need of its constituency. In this one field specialized courses may profitably be offered as the demand may require. Such specialization gives an institution a distinct mission and individuality without impairing its characteristic advantages as a small college.

The boundary of the college field on the side of the secondary or preparatory school is so well fixed and so well understood as to need no discussion. The college course is now built squarely upon the four years' curriculum of the high school.

Between the high school and the graduate schools of the university are the four years of college. In the life of the student this period commonly falls between the ages of eighteen and twenty-three. In them the high school boy becomes the college-trained man, ready to enter upon the study and work of a particular calling. The degree of success he will attain in his vocation will be largely determined by the discipline he has received in his college course. The use he will make of his vocation in service to society will be largely determined by the ideals he has gained from his college associations.

The small college possesses distinct advantages for providing the needed discipline and associations for this strategic period of youth. Her very limitations are her strength. Just as in the university the narrowed field of study conduces to thoroughness in scholarship, so in the small college the narrowed field of personal association conduces to effective character building. Personal contact is the most important factor in education. Nowhere are conditions so favorable for close personal contact between teachers and students as in the small college. Where the enrollment does not exceed three or four hundred every student knows each member of the faculty and feels the impress of his personality. At this, the most vital point in education, the small college possesses unique advantage.

Similarly, in the small college, each student is impressed by the individuality of every other student. There is no occasion a larger body of students tends to divide itself. Mutual contact between various for the exclusive social groups into which types and degrees of culture during the youthful period of adaptation and frank responsiveness has large value for the development of broad sympathies, sane judgment and independence of character.

The distinctive mission of the Christian college is marked by its emphasis rather than by its limitations. Christian colleges have been founded because men believed that the ideal life, the adequate motive for its realization, and the ultimate hope of humanity are to be found only in Jesus Christ. If these colleges continue to be Christian in fact as well as in name it will be because in them the culture of Christian character and Christian ideals continues to be their first concern.

This emphasis is not without its dangers. Supreme stress upon Christian character may lead to tolerance of low educational standards. Zeal for the peculiar tenets of a religious body may develop into sectarian prejudice and intolerance. Effort to cultivate constantly and in all temperaments a religious fervor may produce a demonstrative sentimentalism or a professional piety which has no root in the actual life and must prove barren of all moral fruitage. Though these weaknesses are not uncommon they are by no means necessary. There is no good reason why a Christian college should be content with inferior educational standards, or be smitten with partisan blindness, or dissipate its religious convictions in excesses of religious emotion.

The mission of the Christian college is to conserve and cultivate during the trying period of intellectual growth and re-adjustment an intelligent, vital faith in the divine person and mission of Jesus Christ. Without such conviction the Christian ideal of righteousness can never be attained and the Christian ideal of service can never be realized.

What though in station lowly and obscure,
Unnoticed of the throngs that hasten by,
We toil at tasks with use to us unknown,
If, passing through the pearly gates on high,
We see with vision glorifi'd and pure,
The stones we shap'd in pain built in his throne.

—W. H. Bagby.

True Education By H. H. Peters

Occasionally some one announces that we need a new message. I do not see it this way. The message of the New Testament suits me. It can not be improved upon. But it has occurred to me for some time that we need a new method. Our people have always been perfectly rational in regard to the matter of culture in religion so far as theory is concerned; but our practice has not measured up to our theory. For years we have been announcing that one must grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. But we have not taken the interest in educational affairs which our theory warrants. Yet we are coming into a better day. Every activity of the church, congregational and general, will be carried on in the future along the line of educational methods. Since this is true, it is necessary once in a while to pause long enough to ask ourselves this question, What is true education?

The old idea of education was that it was a cramming process. It consisted in committing to memory facts and in learning rules. Its edicts were arbitrary and its methods were mechanical. The might of the rod was the law of procedure. The new education deals with principles. It gives training and discipline. It trains men to think as well as commit. The old education learned rules; the new makes them by processes of investigation. My father was a teacher under the old order. He could repeat from memory every rule in the arithmetic and recite history by the yard. When my educational training reached the observing stage he was concerned about my intellectual welfare. He said I would never become a mathematician. He has not changed his mind. My experience is the common experience of most young men who have been trained according to present day methods.

Education ought to make a man self-governing. It ought to help a man to think and dispose of the problems of life as they come to him day by day. Herbert Spencer says, "Bear constantly in mind the truth that the aim of your discipline should be to produce a self-governing being; not to produce a being to be governed." This is sound philosophy. The highest aim of true philosophy is to make a thinking man. Education, like character, must be formed from within. In fact, education is character. The truly educated person is in harmony with God and his world. He may not be able to recite dates or repeat rules from memory, but he is living the life of oneness with the Infinite.

Education and religion meet at the same point. Their aims ought to be identical. The highest aim of religion ought to be the noblest end of religion. Christianity says that Christ must be formed within us the hope of glory; true education says that we must be trained in the things that make for true living. I insist that they agree. True education can not be materialistic; it must be spiritual. "The soul culture is the culture of the soul." According to this rule much that is called education is to say the least only partial. I once heard Arnold Tompkins in a lecture on "The Religion of Education" say, "Ask the teacher who understands his business what he is trying to do, then ask the preacher who understands his business the same question and you will find that they will agree in their statements. One may use pedagogical terms and the other may use theological terms, but they will be the same in meaning." If this be true it will be very profitable for us to look into the whole problem of Christian Education.

The time has come for a thorough study of the laws and principles of the development of personality. Our Bible school problem must be restudied. Our evangelism must be re-examined. The work of the preacher must be re-investigated. Our missionary societies will be compelled to take advantage of these principles more than they are at the present time. In these matters the children of this generation are wiser than the children of light. But we are learning. In fact, we are improving very rapidly. The end of cyclonic disturbances has come. We have reached the day of better methods. Let us use them.

Ante-Bellum Religion in Old Missouri

see page 937.

By J. A. Smith

I read the Missouri edition of The Christian-Evangelist with a great deal of interest as it revives the old memories of the earlier days of that grand old state. The sketches of some of the first churches, coupled with the names of such splendid men as Moses E. Lard, J. W. McGarvey, D. T. Wright, Dr. W. H. Hopson, T. M. Allen, J. T. Johnson and another name, which you modestly omitted and I will supply, J. H. Garrison, and others, who have long since entered into life everlasting, are full of interest. The younger generation has no conception of the conditions that prevailed in those days, and were it not for the pathetic side, it would be amusing to read the annals of the work of the religious bodies of that time.

At a venture I will give a short sketch of my early experience in the northern portion of the state, where my father, who was also a minister, located in the year 1857, more than fifty years ago and antedated the great civil war. If I mention names, it will be with no disrespect for the dead, for probably all the old pioneers are gone, leaving behind a more enlightened progeny, at least so far as the gospel of Christ is concerned. The place in mind was and is in Mercer county, four miles northwest of Princeton, the county seat. Nearly all of the settlers in that neighborhood were natives of East Tennessee and brought with them the peculiarities of that people. They were the best of neighbors, and would do you a favor even if it greatly discommoded themselves. Their language was the brogue of the south and carried with it many provincial words that you had to learn before you could derive their meaning. Especially do I remember one family of two heads, the brothers Calvin and Caswell Brummitt, both being of the Methodist Protestant church, Calvin being a preacher. Both had large families and were the leading spirits of the community. Then there were the Clarks, the Phippses, the Bean family, the Ridenours, the Whites and among others Uncle Johnny Gilbert, who by the way was a character and always called things by Bible names. When the civil war broke out nearly all of the young men went into the Union army and Uncle Johnny was an uncompromising union man and he dubbed the federal soldiers "Joshuas." These former Tenesseeans were intensely religious folk, and at that day meeting places were at the residences of the people mostly, sometimes at the little log school house and at other times in the woods. When it came to religious matters, these folks were always ready for a "spute." They certainly had the courage of their convictions until the point was lost to them, then they would gracefully submit. My father and Bradford Clark once got into an argument on the "mode" of baptism, and of course father soon had the best of it, when Mr. Clark fell back onto the old resource of pedo-baptists, that it was an impossibility for twelve men to immerse three thousand men in one day. Arithmetic was brought into play and in a short time it was figured out how many one man could immerse in a given time, and Brother Clark made the proposition that he would act as the definite number and father could baptize him in lieu of the greater number being present, until the full time was demonstrated, and offering at the same time to give father a cow if he could baptize him once in a minute and a half for thirty times. The time was set and the witnesses were present to call time and the party repaired to Weldon fork of Grand River and the test was made. About fifteen persons were present and it was one of the most exciting episodes of the "Old Tennessee" neighborhood. The test baptisms proceeded, making less than the prescribed time, until the ninth dip, when Clark came up out of the water almost drowned, saying, "Brother Smith, you may take the cow, you have proven your side of the question to my entire satisfaction, but I still believe sprinkling is more convenient."

The church music was largely on the plantation order, consisting of repetitions and without regard to time or melody. Songs were all sung to the highest pitch attainable, and like the fashionable but earnest prayers and loud sermons, noise was the desideratum. The louder the song or megaphone voice of the preacher the better, and the long but noisy prayer was the effective one. Shouting was the usual accompaniment on all occasions. I remember a few lines of some of the popular songs and will give a few specimens, such as:

"My body's bound for to moulder in the clay,
My body's bound for to moulder in the clay;
My soul is a marching on."

Another:

"Say, fathers, will you meet us,
Say, fathers will you meet us,
On Canaan's happy shore?"

And so on till the mothers, brothers, sisters and neighbors were all included in the song.

"O! where is good old Moses,
O! where is good old Moses,
O! where is good old Moses?
Safe in the promised land."

Chorus:

"By and by we'll go and see him,
"By and by we'll go and see him,
By and by we'll go and see him;
Safe in the promised land."

And so on with the prophets and notable Bible characters till the catalogue was exhausted. These are only a few of the many, all bearing a close relationship with each other as to subject. Since that long time ago period, I have been led to believe that most of these good, well-meaning but primitive worshipers did actually sing themselves into the "Sweet by and by," the desire to reach that place seemed to be the burden of their songs and prayers.

In justice to the memory of my father, I will state that he refused to accept the cow for demonstrating the possibility of immersing a man in a minute and a half's time. Fifty-one years has wrought a wonderful change in the conditions in Missouri. The public school has and is leaving its impress on the people and as the people become more educated and informed, the old "things are passed away, and all things have become new," and all for the better.

Church Membership: A Symposium

The following propositions and questions were sent to a number of our leading preachers:

Proposition.

1. There is something in the earth which Jesus recognizes as his body, the Church.

2. There is also the local congregation, which is not the whole Church, but is the church at that place (not city, but street).

Question.

1. Is not every Christian a member of the first?

2. Is not every member of the first a Christian?

3. If a man is a Christian and a member of the church of Christ, by what authority and on what grounds can any man, or body of men, refuse him membership in the local church?

I give the answers these men made:

B. B. Tyler did not answer. I presume my letter to him was lost in the mails, as it bore my return address. J. H. Garrison said he would wait for the symposium, and "perhaps" add his contribution. L. M. Sniff replies, but notifies me that it is not for publication.

C. L. Loos says: "If any one is actually a member of the Church, i. e., the Church general, he is, of course, also a member of one of the congregations that constitute the Church. I do not see how any one can deny this. Of course a congregation can decide whether any one is a true member of the Church. There is no other body to decide. However, for a congregation to decide wrongfully to exclude a member and this member still be a member of the Church of Christ," would not affect his real religious status.

Then I asked Brother Loos this: "If a sincere man who has been sprinkled should offer himself for membership in the local church, would you receive him, or would you decide that he is not a Christian?"

To this he made reply: "My religious views and practices are in strict accordance with the New Testament. I allow no religious sentiments of mine to counteract the word of God. I know of no unbaptized members of the Church of Christ, and of no baptism but the immersion of penitent believers. Here I rest the whole matter. I do not allow any views of my own to contravene the Divine Word. I allow myself no liberty of that sort, as so many others do."

A. B. Philputt says: "Every Christian is a member of the Body of Christ; i. e., every one who is formally a Christian. 2. I doubt very much whether every member of the Body of Christ, i. e., formally a member, is a Christian. If he is really a member he is a Christian, of course. 3. On no grounds that I can see; nor do I see why they should want to do so."

Then I asked this: "If a sincere man who had been sprinkled should offer himself for membership in the local church, would you receive him, or would you decide that he is not a Christian?"

This letter, also, was lost in the mails, as it brought no reply and was not returned to me.

J. B. Briney says: "Your first proposition is unquestionably correct. I am not sure whether the Scripture recognizes a plurality of independent churches or congregations in a city or not. There are some things that seem to indicate that all the disciples in a given city constitute the Church of that city. I unhesitatingly answer your first and second questions in the affirmative. As to the third, I may say I am acquainted with no ground upon which any Christian, in the New Testament sense of that term, can be refused membership in any local Church of Christ."

Then I asked: "If a sincere man who had been sprinkled should offer himself for membership in the local church, would you receive him, or would you decide that he is not a Christian?"

In answer he says: "I would not receive into the membership of a local congregation any unimmersed person. The term 'Christian' has such a wide and elastic meaning in our day that one would be liable to be misunderstood if he should say that no unimmersed person is a Christian. I will say, however, that in my understanding of the Scriptures, no one was called a Christian in the days of the apostles except a baptized (immersed) penitent believer. In other words, no one was regarded as a Christian who was not of the Body of Christ, and no one could enter that Body without being immersed."

Herbert L. Willett says: "My answers would be: (1) Yes. (2) Yes, provided his character and conduct are such as to be worthy of recognition by Jesus. (3) A local congregation can only refuse membership to one who claims to be a Christian, on the ground that he has not fulfilled, or is not fulfilling, the conditions of church membership. Every local church has such rights and can take such action on these grounds. Such action must, of course, rest for its validity upon the conviction of the local church that something is wrong in the status of the one to whom recognition is denied."

Then I asked this: "If a sincere man who had been sprinkled should offer himself for membership in a local congregation, would you receive him, or would you decide that he is not a Christian?"

This letter presumably was lost in the mails also.

A. B. Jones says: "This question overlooks the fact that the Church of Christ on earth to-day exists in an abnormal condition, and that this necessitates an abnormal procedure in our efforts to restore the Church to its normal condition."

Then I said: "Would you receive into the membership of the local church a sincere man who had taken sprinkling for baptism, or would you decide that he is not a Christian."

His answer was in one word, "Neither."

Then I asked: "Then, by what authority or on what grounds, do you refuse to take into the local church one who is a Christian and member of the Body or Church of Christ?"

His answer was: "On the ground that he has not been baptized, a prerequisite to church membership."

I have not asked Brother Jones to explain how baptism is a prerequisite to (local) church membership, but not to membership in the Body or Church of Christ. Perhaps he will explain it to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Here is the gist of the whole matter: A Christian is a baptized believer. There is no use or logic or good sense in saying "in the New Testament sense," or putting in any qualifying words. I think these men all must agree that every Christian is entitled to local church membership, and to every privilege of the Christian. This view I hold: We can take this scriptural ground and give credit to all for Christian character and Christian living and godliness and piety, and love them as such, and be consistent and be respected for our convictions.

Morristown, Ind. E. L. Frazier.

[We do not wonder that one of Brother Frazier's questions was "lost in the mail" so frequently. It asks for the decision of a question that must be decided in a higher court. We are authorized to receive baptized believers into our local churches, and none others, because these are the New Testament conditions of church membership. As to whether any one who fails to comply with the ordinance of baptism is, or is not, a Christian, is known to Him who knows the heart and its motives, and whether such an one has obeyed Christ to the best of his ability. If he has, according to Alexander Campbell's definition of a Christian, he is a Christian, despite his defective obedience. But that does not annul the conditions of church membership. Brother Jones' answer is entirely correct when he says he would "neither" receive such an unbaptized person nor deny that he is a Christian. Nearly every departure from the New Testament terms of church membership comes from the attempt to decide this question which Brother Frazier raises, and to base church membership on the decision. The Lord has not laid any such task upon us. Let us stand loyally by the terms of church membership, as they are given by him, as we understand them, and manifest charity to all men; so shall we most surely meet with Christ's approval. EDITOR.]

[Since the foregoing comment was written, Brother Frazier has forwarded a letter received from Prof. Willett, which he asks us to add to the symposium. It will be observed that he, too, answers the last question "neither," and believes still in standing by the conditions of church membership as we have always understood them.——EDITOR.]

Dear Brother Frazier: In response to your recent letter, let me say that I should hold unquestionably that every one who is a member of the body of Christ is a Christian.

That every Christian is a member of the Church of Christ.

Such a person can not, upon scriptural grounds, be refused membership in the local church unless it was felt by the man or men who would thus receive him that the practice of the local church, or of the body of which it was a part, required compliance with additional requirements beyond those recognized by the Church at large as essential to salvation.

The question which you ask in your appended paragraph proposes a dilemma which does not exist. You say, "In any view of this, would you receive a sincere man who had been sprinkled into the local church, or would you decide that he was not a Christian?" I should do neither one. If to the full extent of his ability to understand the scriptures he believed himself a follower of Christ, and lived a life consistent with this profession, I should count him a Christian and treat him as such. In the question of receiving him into the local church, there would remain the additional point of his compliance with the custom and practice of that local church, or the body to which it belonged. The Disciples recognize their brethren of other churches as Christians. At the same time they do not receive them into fellowship without insistence upon immersion. In other words, they require for membership in their own churches, as a matter of full obedience, that which they do not hold as essential to salvation. With this practice of the Disciples I have always stood and stand to-day. Very sincerely yours, Herbert L. Willett.

Our Budget

—Education!

—It belongs to patriotism.

—Here's to the birthday of the Republic!

—Long may it be cherished in every land!

—Long may we keep our country true to the highest ideals for the welfare of man and the glory of God!

—And here's to our colleges, where the highest kind of patriotism is fostered, where morality and religion, sheet anchors of our liberty, and the foundation and perpetuity of our government, are inculcated.

—We make no excuses for giving large space in our annual educational number to the cause of the colleges. It has been a neglected cause, but is now recognized by thinking men as one of the most fundamental parts of our work. The educated man and woman is increasingly in demand. If the Christian churches are to be among the controlling forces of the future, we must provide men and women well trained.

—Study what we are doing in our college work and seek to understand the needs of the colleges, and help them by your co-operation to meet the requirements that are demanded of them and us.

—The Editor-in-Chief has gone to his lakeside summer retreat. Those who think that this means one long holiday for him, an occasion for ease and luxury, labor under one of those mistakes that many people make who know nothing of newspaper work. We direct their attention to the "Easy Chair" page in this issue.

✣ ✣ ✣

—We have received two of the college annuals.

—F. H. Cumming has taken the work at Palmyra, Ill., having removed from Pontiac.

—We call attention to Brother Abbott's request for date and places of county conventions.

—Claude C. Jones, of the 34th St. Church, Washington, has taken charge of the work at New Bern, N. C.

—We will be glad if Wm. A. Ward, the evangelist, will send his present P. O. address, as we have mail for him.

—Congress has appropriated $1,500,000 for the American exhibit at the proposed exposition at Tokyo, Japan, in 1910.

—J. L. Darsie, of Hiram, O., has been recalled to the Fifty-sixth Street Church, New York City, to fill the pulpit for a season.

—Dr. Herbert Martin, of the First Church, Brooklyn, has just sailed for Europe, to be gone until the middle of September.

—J. L. Greenwell, of Seattle, Wash., was asked to deliver the Church Extension address at the Oregon and Western Washington Conventions.

—Word comes to us from Sister Jennie Fletcher that T. A. Abbott dedicated the Goshen Christian Church near Caiusville, Mo., on June 7. It cost $3,000.

—J. R. Middleton has been recalled to take charge of the church at Lewis, Kan. He served it as pastor for three years until last fall, when he removed to Garfield.

—Phil. A. Parsons has just closed his work with the church at Plainfield, N. J., and goes to Hamilton, Ill. Brother Parsons has been a hard worker in a difficult field.

—Prof. F. E. Trucksess, lately assistant pastor of the Christian Church at Lafayette, Ind., but now in the field as a song-evangelist, has moved his family to his old home at Brownsburg, Ind.

—Ernest J. Doley, who has just graduated from Bethany College, sails to-day for his home in Adelaide, S. Australia, and after a visit to his parents will return via Oxford, England.

—We regret to hear that E. B. Widger has been compelled to go to the hospital due to straining himself by some lifting in his interest in the erection of the new church at Jefferson City, Mo.

—C. F. Stevens, Spokane, Wash., is cordially considering a move toward the living-link in the Foreign Society for that church. The recent visit of Dr. Royal J. Dye greatly stirred the church.

—Roscoe R. Hill, missionary of the Foreign Society, at Matanzas, Cuba, reports eight recent baptisms at Union, one of the out-stations from Matanzas. This makes thirty-one baptisms at this point this year.

—C. M. Smithson, having declined a call to remain at Flora, Ill., another year, expects to enter the evangelistic field September 1, and has arrangements made for September and October and possibly November.

—Plans are on foot for a revival in October at Sharon, Kan., with E. A. Newby as evangelist. S. E. Hendrickson, the preacher, reports that the brethren at Haselton, where he also ministers, have rented the Presbyterian Church for a year.

—The work goes along at Guthrie, Okla., under T. L. Noblitt. The building has just been repaired. The church gave $25 to foreign missions and the Children's Day offering was $17.91. Brother Noblitt is in demand for many special addresses.

—William Durban, our English correspondent, sailed last week on the "Mauretania" for his home, after a brief visit to his daughter and son-in-law. We hope Brother Durban will get over next year for the Centennial and see some of this country.

—B. B. Tyler was elected a life member of the Executive Committee of the International Sunday-School Association and to his place on the lesson committee, which he filled for eighteen years, Prof. H. L. Calhoun, of the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., was appointed.

—The Bible school at Shenandoah, Ia., has more than doubled its attendance since T. J. Golightly took the work there in February. A Young Ladies' Mission circle has been organized and an adult class for men of fifty. A teacher training class is now being organized.

—Rochester Irwin, of Washburn, Ill., reports the ordination there of Adam Birley to the Christian ministry. He is about forty years of age and has a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures. He would like to locate somewhere in Oklahoma or northern Texas. His work of the past has been that of a printer.

—The financial statement issued by Alfred R. Kimball, treasurer of the Inter-Church Conference on Federation, shows a deficit yet in the apportionment of the Disciples of Christ. Those who are willing to help extinguish that deficit are requested to address the treasurer as above at 81 Bible House, New York City.

—B. F. Norris has resigned his pastorate at Cabool, Mo., because of its distance from his home. He has served this church six years, during which time it has grown into one of our best churches in South Missouri. J. D. Pontius, a consecrated and able young minister who has been quite successful in the state, has taken charge of the work.

—There is a great disposition among our churches to send their ministers to the National Convention and provide their expenses. This is right. The missionary cause is the business of the whole congregation and not of the preacher alone. Seventy-six Baptist churches paid the expenses of their pastors to the Northern Baptist Convention, at Oklahoma City, in May last.

—S. J. Vance has just held a good meeting at Collville, Wash. A few earnest brethren here without a pastor began the work of building a church and within a very short time have erected, practically free of debt, the finest and largest church building in the city, which cost $7,000.

—We regret that Milo Atkinson, whose leave of absence from his pulpit at Covington, Ky., we announced last week, has had a relapse, and for several days has been in a very serious condition. Our last report was that the surgeon's knife seemed inevitable. Mrs. Atkinson solicits the prayers of the brethren in his behalf.

—The management of the Bible College of Missouri will seek to respond to all invitations to assist in county meetings. Prof. G. D. Edwards is in the field representing the college, and may be addressed at Columbia, Mo. Others in close touch with the college may be secured for addresses and sermons. Address either Prof. Edwards or Dean W. J. Lhamon, Columbia, Mo.

—The last service has been held in the schoolhouse on the S. L. W. Ranch at Greeley, Colorado, where the congregation has met since its organization four and a half years ago. J. E. Lynn, pastor of Central Church, Warren, O., who is spending his vacation in this community, preached the sermons. There were seven accessions. On Sunday, June 28, the new building was dedicated.

—The congregation at Nelsonville, Ohio, will dedicate their new $13,000 church on July 19. President Miner Lee Bates, of Hiram College, will have charge of the ceremonies. A hearty invitation is extended to all former pastors and members who have moved to other points and to the nearby churches to enjoy this occasion with the Nelsonville brethren. Walter Scott Cook is the minister.

—M. J. Nicoson will, we understand, not take the work at Clarksville, Tenn. Special reasons made it seem imperative to him to remain at Keokuk. Dan Trundle has been preaching several Lord's days for the Clarksville church and reports enthusiasm in the work there growing. We learn from him that Senator Carmack, who was making the race against Gov. Patterson, belongs to the Christian Church.

—After a strenuous winter's work Geo. P. Rutledge has been granted a two months vacation by the Third Christian Church at Philadelphia. He has taken a cottage at Cape May Point, N. J., and will be there during July and August. All departments of his church have been doing good work. There have been additions almost every Sunday since the first of November, and the Children's Day offering was $325.

—The Annual Convention of the Church of Christ of Prince Edward Island will be held at Summerside, July 11-13. During the convention there will be the dedication of the new church building which is just being completed. An enthusiastic gathering of the forces is anticipated. John H. McQuerry, minister of the church at Charlottetown, writes us that any visiting brethren will be gladly received. They are asked, if they are going to the island on a vacation trip, to plan to be at Summerside during the convention.

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS

in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them

PLEASE MENTION THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

—G. H. Bassett sees a field full of promise at Salisbury, Mo., where the attendance at church and Bible school is increasing. A Junior Endeavor Society has been organized. A Senior Society and Training class are to be. The Centennial aims are to double the Bible school, have organized adult classes, induce all students to unite with the church, while a new building, a greatly increased membership, deepening of the spiritual life, and co-operation in all missionary efforts is the purpose of the congregation.

—J. D. Greer has been nearly four years at Laddonia, Mo., and has not labored in vain. There have been about 150 accessions, mostly by confession and baptism. The church is in line with co-operative missionary work, and the offerings have been increased. The Bible school is almost ideal, and its worthy superintendent, J. C. DeLaporte has been at its head for over twenty years. The Y. P. S. C. E. has done an excellent work. There is a teacher training and a Forward Mission Study class, and the congregation hopes to do its part in realizing Centennial aims.

—J. B. Lockhart, at Clarence, Mo., rejoices with his congregation in the dedication of a new $10,000 building. Going to the work there in January, 1907, Brother Lockhart held a meeting resulting in 39 additions. Then came the question of a new building. The house was completed some time ago, and will seat from 400 to 500 people, and is the neatest and most complete in its part of the state. The women of the church raised about $1,500. The membership is 160. This was L. L. Carpenter's 716th dedication. The congregation feels that there is a bright future before it.

—In our Missouri number reference was made to Wheeling, where W. H. Hook preaches, as being "a little known place." Perhaps that description is hardly just. It is simply a little town, but is reasonably well known as far as towns go. Our congregation there is not large, but the majority of them are noble men and women. In the few months that Brother Hook has served them there have been 10 additions, nine by confession and baptism. The apportionment for their school on children's day was $35, and the amount will be raised. The school is in excellent condition. The official board of the church is worthy of special mention.

—Committees have been appointed to set about the plans for a new church building at Carthage, Mo. Since D. W. Moore took the work there a determination to replace the present antiquated and small structure with a new temple of worship has come anew. The church already has a fund for a building and the minister stated recently that $15,000 more would give a capital with which a $35,000 building could be begun. A mass meeting is to be held in two weeks, when pledges for the building fund will be taken. The work is in a very hopeful condition. Three additions last week made the number since Brother Moore took the work in March, amount to 49.

—S. J. White entered upon the pastorate at Chillicothe, Mo., six months ago, and since then has had 48 additions with 100 per cent increase in the Bible school attendance and offerings. A good teacher training class and an Endeavor Society have been organized, $600 paid on the pipe organ, all missionary offerings increased and 15 added to the C. W. B. M. The Centennial aims are to get rid of all debts, increase all offerings, enlarge the school, and especially develop the church spiritually. Brother White has a good record behind him, and has held pastorates in Ohio, and at Cameron and Trenton, Mo., with about 1,400 additions, besides 800 added in his meetings.

—After three years' delay for lack of funds, work on the building for the West Side Church of Christ, Bridgeport, Conn., is at last begun. The building finished as planned will cost about $6,000, but the basement finish is being omitted, thus reducing the amount of present expenditures. "This is a great undertaking for such a weak band of workers," writes W. B. Blakemore. "All of our people are wage earners and only two families own homes. But friends have been raised up who are helping to bear the burden. Through the appeal of our Ladies' Aid, many sister societies have helped by returning the little books with an offering. Let those who have not responded to this appeal do so as early as possible in order that we may be able to meet our obligations and that there may be no halt in the work. Our Bible school has had an average attendance of forty-eight in May. This is an increase of one hundred per cent since the first of the year. We have a teacher training class, also an enthusiastic boys' club under the leadership of one of our young men. The field is very difficult, but it offers many opportunities."

—J. W. Monser is well known to the brotherhood of Missouri especially, in which state his later years have been spent. He was baptized by O. A. Burgess at Eureka, Ill., in 1859, at which place he was also ordained to preach the Gospel. He has held pastorates at Atlanta, Ill., at Topeka, Kan., Des Moines, Ia., and at Warrensburg, Mo. At present he lives in Kansas City, and preaches in adjacent congregations. He was editor on a Sunday-school Commentary for five years, and is the author of "Follies of Free Thought," "Types and Metaphors of the Bible," "Encyclopedia of Evidences" and "The Literature of the Disciples." He is at present preparing topical notes for an American Revised Version of the Bible. He considers the ten years that he spent as librarian of Missouri State University as among the most valuable of his life-work. He has always been earnest and hopeful, and expects to labor up to the last of his life.

—At the 45th annual business meeting of the Central Church, Syracuse, N. Y., the reports received from the various societies connected with the church were, writes C. G. Van Wormer, encouraging, and breathed a promise of future advancement. The Bible school especially is proceeding along new lines and has organized two supplementary societies—a sunshine club of girls and a boys' brigade. The church treasurer disbursed during the year $5,420.55, of which $400 was for missions and other affiliated interests, an increase over former years. With harmonious action it was decided to introduce the individual communion service, and it was a pleasing feature of the occasion when it was announced by Brother Serena that Sister William Foust desired the privilege of presenting a service to the church, "in memoriam" of her husband, who was a loved and honored elder some thirty years. Some improvements have been made to the church property as well as changes in the internal arrangements to render the work of the several societies more convenient. There were 32 accessions during the year and a new year is entered with a membership of 306 and an inspiration and hope for larger things.

MISSOURI CONVENTION NOTES.

Herbert L. Willett pointed ou that we had a great message when we numbered only a thousand people. He warned us against being careless about the things for which we stand, and for which we came into existence.

C. M. Chilton's remark about the hysteria, etc., with which much of the Sunday-school campaign is characterized, was felt to be much needed, and frequent reference was made to his fine statement about evangelism and the children.

Brother Boyd, of Covington, Ky., who is an inveterate attendant of our National Conventions and the Congress, happened to be in the West at the time of the Missouri Convention, and made a point of attending its sessions.

C. A. Finch had many bright things to say in his address. Brother Finch has been long identified with the state work in Kansas.

Dr. Willett preceded his second address by stating that he thought that it might be considered a very appropriate thing that the Disciples of Christ should always meet where there is much water.

F. W. Burnham, in acknowledging a gracious introduction, said that he was "born in the Sucker State and of Yankee parentage, and didn't think that anything good could be said of him."

As illustrating the ignorance of Bible knowledge which is so prevalent, Robert M. Hopkins told a story about one woman who, when asked to represent some character in the Bible at a social meeting said she would take St. Patrick.

As We Go to Press.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Danville, Ill., June 29.—Seventy-seven converts yesterday; closed with 1,005. Pastors Ainsworth, Jones, Scott and George Smith continue meeting in their separate churches three days this week. Tabernacle seated 3,000. Ullom, Vancamp and myself enjoyed this grand fellowship with these workers; great blessing followed.—Charles Reign Scoville.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Belton, Tenn., June 29.—Great congregations in skating rink; adult and sunbeam chorus of 200 voices; 51 additions to date. W. M. Williams, pastor; Professor Hoggett, chorister.—John L. Brandt, evangelist.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Amarillo, Texas, June 29.—One hundred and twenty-seven additions; stormed out last night; close Wednesday night. Fulton, Ky., next.—Fife and son, evangelists.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

—Dean W. J. Lhamon, assisted by Singing Evangelist O. J. Marks, is in a promising meeting at Holden, Mo. From July 20 till near the close of August Dean Lhamon will be engaged in Chautauqua work in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa.

—At Warren, Mo., the house has been remodeled, and for the first time a home mission offering was taken. The Bible school here has more than doubled since January. R. B. Havener gives one-fourth of his labor here.

—The Central Church of Toledo, O., has provided for its debt of $4,000, pledges enough being secured to permit a thorough redecoration. The Bible school rooms are already finisned. This congregation moves forward unitedly. There are additions nearly every Sunday and the services are to continue through the summer months, though many of the down-town churches have already closed. Grant W. Speer is the minister.

—The work at Shelbyville, Mo., where R. B. Havener ministers, is in good condition. The offering for missions was $200, more than double what the church did last year, and over 75 per cent of the membership now have fellowship in the offering. A meeting is planned for August, with E. M. Smith, of Centralia, as preacher and C. E. Wagner, of Palmyra, leading the singing. It is expected, too, that the church building will be remodeled before the meeting.

—We had the pleasure of a call from C. H. Nichols on his return from the International Sunday-school Convention at Louisville. Brother Nichols is a bright representative of the Disciples of Christ who has the honor to be Secretary of the Oklahoma Sunday-school Association. We are glad to note this widening influence of our brethren, who, instead of being tabooed as they have been for so many years, are at last making an entry into some of the great co-operative Christian work.

—Andrew P. Johnson, pastor of the First Church, of Bethany, Mo., recently gave a banquet to 125 business men of the town. After a bountiful feast a number of speeches were made on vital subjects by the leading men of the town. This banquet was to arouse interest in a contemplated series of sermons to the business men. These furnish the subjects, and already much good has been accomplished by this move. An adult class of young men is being organized, and about 40 are ready to enter now.

—The trustees and the alumni of South Kentucky College, Hopkinsville, Ky., by unanimous vote, changed the name to "McLean College," in honor of A. McLean, President of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. This step has long been under consideration. The trustees believe it will greatly promote the interest of the College to have a name less local and more universal in its significance. The College honors itself in taking the name of Archibald McLean, for he stands for the best in Christian life.

—Mrs. F. A. Curtius reports that at Chaffee, Mo., a Christian church has been organized with 25 charter members, four of whom were by confession. The outlook is bright. Chaffee is a new town, located in Scott county, Missouri. It is a railroad town of about 1,800 population, and has three churches—Methodist, Baptist and Catholic. The relations between these have been pleasant; but there was no Christian church and had been no preaching of our simple faith until two weeks ago. They are planning to have a tent meeting in July or August.

—The question comes to us as to whether a cross surmounting the cupola of the church is objectionable, and should be removed. One of our churches in a given community exchanged buildings with the Baptist Church which had the cross on it, and some have objected to it. The only possible objection would be that this symbol is so generally monopolized by Roman Catholics that the character of the church might be misunderstood by strangers; but in a small town this would hardly be possible, and we see no objection to the sign on a Christian Church. It is perhaps the most fitting symbol that could be possibly used for a church of a crucified Saviour. There is no good reason why Roman Catholics should be allowed to monopolize it.

—Howard T. Cree, of the First Church, Augusta, Ga., recently inaugurated a series of Sunday evening services in the open air which has attracted favorable comment from the press of the city and is patronized by constantly increasing crowds. Large arc lights have been installed, benches and chairs brought into requisition, a cabinet organ is used and a speaker's platform has been erected on the lawn adjoining the church. In the midst of summer's heat it has been found an ideal place for holding services and the idea might well be utilized by others during the summer months. The music is made a specially attractive feature and it is found that many are brought within the radius of the church's influence who heretofore had been unreached.

—A new congregation has been organized at Milwaukee, Wis. For more than twenty years, in this city, now having a population of 350,000, we have had but one congregation. Some 23 members, most of whom withdrew from the church on the south side, with its sympathy and support, have just organized a Second Church of Christ. Claire L. Waite, of the First Church, says that Rupert A. Nourse, formerly of Des Moines, Ia., deserves great praise for his great courage and efficient work in starting the new cause. Secretary Wm. J. Wright visited Milwaukee recently and his inspiring address called out $375, the largest offering ever made there for home missions. It is hoped that by next fall a city missionary can be secured to take charge of the new organization.

—H. F. Burns has resigned at Peoria, Ill., to take effect the last Lord's day in July. In his three years' ministry there have been 380 additions to the membership and offerings to missions have been increased and the current income last year was $1,000 more than during any previous year. The best work of Bro. Burns has been in the Sunday-school, which has been reorganized, a graded system being introduced so that the school is now using a regular text book series with note books and other modern equipment. The enrollment is 250. The spirit of closer co-operation with the denominations has prevailed in the work, and at a recent annual banquet there were present members of the First Baptist Church, Theodore G. Soares making the chief speech on closer relations between Baptists and Disciples.

—Geo. L. Snively dedicated a beautiful building at New Berlin, O. Robert B. Chapman is the minister. The cost was about $18,000 and $20,000 was the amount raised. The Netz sisters and C. H. Altheide added to the pleasures of the day by their music. The organ has been enlarged. John Evans, who has so long served as one of the elders, writes us that the building is one of the most beautiful and best equipped of any in that county. It has concrete foundation, brick veneer walls, bowled floor for the auditorium, is finely finished and has every facility for work and worship. The minister has won his way into the hearts of the people, both through his ministry of the Word and his pastoral work, while his wife is a worthy helpmeet. There is here a good Sunday-school with an average attendance of about 180, a large men's club doing good work, and the audiences are large.

An Important Request.

Dear Brethren! Will you not please notify me at once of the date of your county convention and the place of gathering? Do not say that brother so and so will surely do that; you do it, and do it now.

T. A. Abbott,
311 Century Building.
Kansas City, Mo.

The Work in Mexico.

My family and I have been in Mexico eight weeks. The American department of the Christian institute closed in May. The Mexican department closed last week. Both gave excellent entertainments. In the American department four received certificates of graduation; in the Mexican fourteen received them.

A notable advance has been made in the Mexican work by the purchase of property for the congregation in San Luisito. This is across the river from Monterey proper, and has a population of more than 10,000, among whom this little congregation of 40 persons stands alone. Manuel Lozano, who has for several years been assistant pastor of the Central Mexican congregation, has gone to San Antonio, Tex., to become pastor of the new work there. He is one of the choice spirits, and we regret to give him up.

Among the young preachers that go out for work this summer is Juan Flores, who is to preach at Sabinal, Tex. He is an excellent student, and a bright future awaits him.

The Mexican teachers have all been engaged for another year. The American congregation is growing in interest and work. Several of the mission family are away on their vacation. The Mexican teachers will begin this week a systematic Bible study to be continued during the summer. They are to use these studies in cottage meetings which they are intending to hold in different parts of the city. I. H. Fuller.
Monterey, Mexico.

A Deserved Honor.

A well deserved honor has been conferred upon President Clinton Lockhart, of Texas Christian University, by Kentucky University, from which institution he graduated with the degree of A. B. in '86, and A. M. in '88. The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater at its recent commencement, notice of which came as a surprise to President Lockhart. His Ph. D. degree was conferred by Yale University in '94.

Professor Anderson, of Texas Christian University, writes: "For more than twenty years President Lockhart has been very prominently connected with the various lines of church work and the development of the system of education under the direction of the Christian church. His services have been used by the church in various capacities, prominent among which are the positions held as director of the Bible chair work, Ann Arbor, Mich.; president of Columbia College, Kentucky; president of Christian University, Canton, Mo.; professor of Biblical literature, Drake University; chief lecturer at various lectureships, and he has just been requested by the chairman of the program committee to present one of the leading papers at the national convention of the Christian Church, October, 1909, being the Centennial celebration of the movement inaugurated by the pioneers of the Christian Church."

The New Hope
Is the Best Remedy for the Drug and Liquor habits
HOME TREATMENT can be administered
J. H. GARRISON, President
Correspondence invited. Address New Hope Treatment Co., 2712 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.

The Drowning of W. T. Clarkson.

I learn through press report that W. Temple Clarkson, pastor of the church at Rome, Ga., and brother to E. R. Clarkson, one of our state evangelists of Georgia, was drowned while on the annual picnic of the Ross church at Kirks Grove. Brother Clarkson was swimming, being an expert at the art, but in diving became entangled in some lines and lost his life. He had been in the state only a few months, but the splendid hold he had gotten on the people of Rome, together with the evangelistic meeting held by him and his brother a few weeks ago in which the membership of the church had been more than doubled, made us feel sure we had a promising man among us. It was my pleasure to have a college acquaintance with him in Transylvania University some years ago, and I remember him as a young man of deep consecration and fine energy. Recently he had been pursuing his studies in Columbia University and at the earnest solicitation of his brother had come to take the work of Rome and give to that cultured but small congregation the fruit of his best labors. His death is a severe loss to the congregation and the entire community to which he had already endeared himself by many pastoral ministrations as well as his public addresses. Howard T. Cree.

Augusta, Ga.

Fine Work at Lamonte, Mo.

The Lamonte Bible school has just closed a three months' contest with the Fremont, Neb., Bible school, in which Lamonte was easily victorious. The last day of the contest showed an enrollment of 382. Fremont, with I. H. Fuller as minister, is a worthy foe and did large things. He was the former Lamonte pastor. The school made a large offering on Children's day, and on the same day pledged and paid a part of $60 to the Orphans' Home at St. Louis.

H. A. Pearce.

This is a pioneer church. The fact that about one-half of the entire population of the town is actively identified with us, shows that some one or more has done strong work in the past. I have been here only since the first of the year, and find every department thoroughly organized, doing solid, effective work. We do not allow missionary secretaries to push us; in fact, we push them. The C. W. B. M., Circle and Juniors will doubtless meet every Centennial aim suggested. Y. P. S. C. E. knows of no reason why it should not meet its Centennial aims. The Bible school, which has increased about 75 per cent in attendance, interest and offerings since January, with the second largest teacher training class in the state—153—with its thoroughly equipped, organized and graded Primary department, with two Adult Bible classes of more than forty members each, is very much interested in its Centennial aims. A number of "Timothies" have gone out from this church, but the one we are training now—Bro. Elbert Taylor—gives promise of being among the strongest. As superintendent of the Second district teacher training work, all who have classes are urged to report often to me.

H. A. Pearce, Minister.

A New Church and Campbell Relics.

It was my privilege to attend a banquet given by the church at Syracuse, Kan., and to aid the brethren there in raising money to erect a new church. Our young brother, J. R. Robertson, organized the church three months ago as a missionary enterprise, while he was minister at Garden City. Indeed, he has organized two other churches during the past two years, which now have good buildings. Two months ago he gave up his work at Garden City to devote all his time to the young church at Syracuse. A lot has been purchased in a very central location, and more than half enough money has been pledged to erect a neat and modest church. This the brethren will at once proceed to do, expecting to have it ready for dedication this fall. There are a number of splendid men and women members of the church there, more than is ordinarily found in a church of its size. Brother Robertson has filled them with enthusiasm, and we shall hear good reports from them.

I was pleased to meet Dr. Morris McKeever, a grandson of Thomas Campbell. In his old age he prizes a leather-bound Bible which belonged to Thomas Campbell, and was in the shipwreck off the coast of Ireland; also a watch made from a snuffbox of Mr. Campbell's, and a letter written in 1855 by Mrs. McKeever, the sister of Alexander Campbell. It would be a splendid thing for the Centennial committee to make sure that Dr. McKeever, with his precious heirlooms, is at Pittsburg next year.

Here at the Central we are busy preparing for the Scoville meetings, which begin August 30. Many persons in southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma are planning to visit us during these meetings, and we give them cordial invitation. E. W. Allen.

Wichita, Kan.

A Call to Service.

Wanted—Twenty-five men ready to go to Africa now and win the great Nkundo race to Christ.

A great race of people are open now to us as never before in our history. Uganda had its martyrs, and thirty of the noblest of Britain's church volunteered and were sent out in one year into that rich harvest field. The Telugus had their great famine and the Church sent out the Gospel and food to them, and that great pentecost was recorded. The Congo is now challenging us to a day of like opportunity and like responsibility. The great Nkundo race of Equatorial Africa are open to us and are begging, actually challenging us with the call of "Why don't you come and teach us also?"

An unprecedented situation! Village after village is calling "Come and teach us, too." Brethren, we can not, we dare not refuse to let this opportunity pass by.

The wonderful transformation in lives already wrought by the Gospel and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ gives us surety of success. The marvelous evangelism of that transformed native Church at Bolenge provides us a force of scouts who are not only courageous, self-sacrificing and consecrated, but are as well competent and tireless evangelists.

Brethren, shall we, a million and a quarter of Disciples, be found recreant to our duty?

Not only is the native field ripe unto the harvest, but now government and trader opposition is nil. Where before they hindered and obstructed missionary effort, even of the native evangelists, they are now welcoming us and begging us to come and settle before the false church shall come with her lies and hypocrisies. This is our opportunity. This in itself constitutes a call and we have now open to us the great Bosira River and its tributaries. The "Bosira Munane," the "Great Bosira," with its thousand of villages, is waiting to hear for the first time the name above all other names, the name of Jesus, and begging for the Gospel message of salvation. Will you withhold it?

A steamer costing between $10,000 and $15,000 will be necessary to carry the supplies and the messengers of peace and life to the millions now fighting their feuds and cannibals' wars, and to carry the message of salvation to the sin-stricken inhabitants of that great river. Will you withhold it? Why, we have hundreds of men and women who could immortalize their names and multiply and perpetuate their lives in a gift of this absolutely indispensible Messenger of Good Tidings. And they could do it to-day, if they would.

The gifts of that native Church at Bolenge challenge us to a like liberality, to join with them in the sending of the Gospel messengers. Africa is to be evangelized by the African himself of each great race. But we must first evangelize the evangelist, and then teach and train them and send them out to preach to their fellows. This is our task now.

Twenty-five men needed for Africa! Brethren, they are in our colleges to-day, and are ready for service when the Church says by her open purse—we are ready to do our share. We will consecrate our means as they will give their lives. There is not a church of three hundred members that should not or could not support their own representative, and receive in return such a reflex of joy and such an impulse to service as they have never before had. Here is indeed the challenge to the Church—the graduates from Bethany, Hiram, Kentucky University, Drake, Eureka, Christian University and Cotner University, among the finest of their classes, young men and women who are willing and anxious to go to Africa to do their share in evangelizing the great Nkundo race and give their lives, if necessary, for their regeneration. Can the Church afford to let this consecration of life go unused for the Master's Kingdom? Nay, verily. Our Lord is trying you, if you be worthy his name. He is giving you the opportunity of your lives, that of sharing with him in the saving of the world. He is calling us in the miraculous transformations of a cannibal, polygamous and superstitious race into marvelous examples of heroism and devotion and consecration in Christian service and giving as at Bolenge.

"The Great Bosira for Christ," our battle cry. The Nkundo race—our crown. Let us be worthy the name we bear and give as we have never before given; really give in our great joy to our Lord and Saviour; that his name may be known in "Darkest Africa" and exalted among the heathen. Brethren, if we do not arise to this opportunity, the millions still waiting to hear his blessed name will indeed "tell God on us," as one of the wild villagers challenged the native Church, "If you do not stop and preach to us, we will tell that God you preach about, when we come to meet him, that you passed us by."

Yours in his glad service for the evangelization of "Darkest Africa,"

Royal J. Dye, M. D.

FIFTY-EIGHTH YEAR

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

THE HIGHEST GRADE BOARDING SCHOOL IN THE WEST FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN

ENVIRONMENT.—Combines all the advantages which tend to develop young women for full realization of the higher things of life in the intellectual, moral and social world.

COURSES OF STUDY.—The Preparatory Course admits to college or university courses. A full College Course of four years leads to an A. B. degree. Two years of College work leads to the B. L. degree. One year of College work graduates a student as Associate in Arts.

SPECIAL COURSES.—Music, Art, Expression, Cookery, Sewing, Domestic Art and Physical Training taught by teachers from the great universities of America and abroad.

FACULTY.—Experienced specialists trained in the great universities of America and abroad.

HOME.—A Christian home, noted for thoroughness, moral influences, high culture and satisfactory results.

If you want your daughter to enjoy the best advantages obtainable, investigate Christian College and write to-day for the illustrated catalog.

Address MRS. W. T. MOORE, President, Columbia, Mo.

OUR EDUCATIONAL WORK IN MISSOURI.

Christian College, at Columbia, is our oldest institution of learning in the state, and one of the oldest of all our educational works. The first steps were taken in the memorable year of 1849 by Dr. Samuel Hatch and Prof. Henry H. White, of Bacon College, Harrodsburg, Ky. D. P. Henderson and James Shannon were associated with them, and John Augustus Williams was the first president of the new school. At first a small house in town was used, but the growth of the college was so rapid that it became necessary to seek larger quarters. By 1884 it had become the best equipped college in the West. Following Mr. Williams, L. B. Wilkes, J. K. Roberts, G. S. Bryant, W. A. Oldham and F. P. St. Clair were in turn presidents. Mrs. Luella W. St. Clair took the reins on the death of her husband, resigning by reason of ill-health, to be succeeded by Mrs. W. T. Moore. It was at this period that the college took on its financial growth. Two years later Mrs. St. Clair became associated with Mrs. Moore in the presidency of the college, and large building enterprises were entered upon. These being successfully carried out, in the spring of 1903 Mrs. St. Clair accepted the presidency of another college. This is our best equipped institution in the state, and its standard has been raised till its teaching work is now of the best collegiate kind.

There are two other excellent female colleges in the state under the direction of our Christian churches. William Woods College, at Fulton, Mo., was located at Camden Point about 1880, and was known as the Orphans' School of the Churches of Christ in Missouri. The building having burned in 1889, the convention meeting at Warrensburg decided to relocate the school at Fulton. F. W. Allen was its first president, but since June, 1896, J. B. Jones has held that position. For a long time there was financial difficulty, but in 1900 provision was made to liquidate all debts. In honor of the financial assistance of Dr. Woods, of Kansas City, the name of the school was changed to William Woods College for Girls. It has a good plant and everything points to a bright future for it.

Missouri Christian College, an account of whose work will be found elsewhere, is another institution where young ladies are educated. Formerly this was called the Female Orphans' School, but several years ago it changed its name to that by which it is at present known. E. L. Barham has done very much through his administration to make this school a success.

We have two colleges in the state that are co-educational, and started especially with a view to education of ministerial students. Christian University at Canton has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, and its charter was first in the United States to embody the advanced position of granting to women a co-equal and co-ordinate education with men. Its first building was erected in 1853, under the direction of D. Pat Henderson and James Shannon, who was its first president. Destroyed by fire in 1903, a handsome building has replaced the old one. Christian University has at last entered upon a more prosperous era, and to the self-sacrifice of its president, Carl Johann, it owes very much.

The Bible College of Missouri is located at Columbia, the seat of the State University. It was started by W. T. Moore, under the co-operation of a number of prominent brethren in the state, who believed that it would be possible to take advantage of the regular courses furnished by the state and supply the students the Biblical training and Christian influences which the state does not provide. The college property is a handsome building, and there is an endowment of about $50,000. Dean Lhamon and Professor Sharpe are the regular teaching force.

Education at the Missouri Convention.

The report of the Ministerial Education Society showed among the assets: Loans to students, $1,015; receipts, June, '07, to June, '08, $776.40, and a total of $1,991.40. The disbursements were: Loans to students, $320; stamps, etc., $1.94; a total of $321.94. Leaving a balance in cash, loans and $1,669.46, and a balance in bank of $454.46.

The report of the educational committee was presented after reports from Christian College, William Woods College, Christian University, Missouri Christian College and the Bible College of Missouri had been presented. It stated that no institution has heretofore received the attention from congregations or ministers that it justly merits. With 175,000 Disciples of Christ in the state, there is an ample patronage and a material wealth that could fully endow and support every school, and inasmuch as their endowment and equipment should be fully commensurate with our wealth, our numbers and our great plea, recommendations were adopted by the convention: (1) That all our preachers be urged to preach at least one sermon a year, requesting contributions of money, inspiring a thirst for knowledge and turning our young men to the ministry; (2) that educational rallies be held; (3) that generous giving be stimulated, and (4) that the convention make acknowledgement to those who have contributed to the success that the colleges now enjoy.

College Work and Plans

Bethany.

More perfect weather was never enjoyed in the blue grass hills of West Virginia than from June 7 to June 11, 1908. On Lord's day the old church was crowded for the baccalaureate service, the front seats being occupied by the graduates according to immemorial custom. The morning sermon was delivered by the writer, and in the evening President Cramblet gave the annual sermon, which was strong, clear and inspiring. The usual meetings of trustees, literary society contests, field day, class day and concerts occupied Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Thursday a record-breaking commencement crowd gathered in the assembly hall of the new Carnegie library. There were twenty graduates for bachelor degrees, ten of these being ministerial students.

THE ADDRESS.—The commencement address by Dr. Samuel Harden Church, of Pittsburg, dealt with "The True Spirit of Service." It was a wholesome, wise and timely message. Rapt interest was held while the orator plead for unselfish devotion to work for the common weal; for well developed personality and a symmetrical education, with classical and technical studies evenly balanced. The address was re-enforced by the speaker's strong and gracious personality, and the words received added weight from his achievements, position and lineage. Dr. Church is the author of "Oliver Cromwell, a History," "John Marmaduke" and other books, secretary of the Pennsylvania lines and the Carnegie institute, and grandson of Walter Scott and Samuel Church.

THE NOBLE COMPANY.—Coming into Bethany on the splendidly constructed new electric line makes one think all the more of its sacred past and the noble company of great men and good women whose spirits seem still to abide about its hallowed precincts. It is not without reason that men of all ages and lands have made pilgrimages to the homes and graves of the world's benefactors. If one can prolong his visit from days into years he is all the more certain to carry away the impress of the mighty past.

THE PRESIDENT.—The seven years of President Cramblet's vigorous administration are showing abundant fruitage in the Bethany of to-day. He was enabled this year to mention three very substantial steps of progress. First, the completion of the Carnegie library, which affords not only a home for the college's splendid collection of books, but society and lecture halls and a commodious auditorium. Second, the college has been admitted to the benefits of the Carnegie fund, and pensions actually granted to Professors Pendleton and Wynne. Every heart responded warmly to the president's praise of these devoted teachers. Miss Pendleton has been not only one of the most influential teachers in the college for many years, but as secretary of the faculty and of the trustees she actually saved the life of the institution again and again. The third success of the year he mentioned was the completion of the trolley line from Wellsburg at a cost of $175,000. It is not possible to-day to realize the manifold significance of this to the future of Bethany. Numerous expressions and testimonials of appreciation were showered upon President Cramblet for this victory wrested from apparent defeat.

THE CENTENNIAL.—In all our plans for the Centennial there has been universal recognition of the necessity of doing something substantial and worthy for Bethany College. Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., was appointed as the special Centennial representative. He has received unanimous indorsement of September 27, 1908, as Bethany College day. Disciples throughout the brotherhood are being asked to consecrate larger or smaller amounts of their means on that day to the Centennial endowment of our mother college. There is no church so hard pressed, and no Disciple so poor but that they can have some fellowship in this labor of love. All of us are indebted to Bethany; all of us belong to Bethany. There is encouragement for numerous gifts in the confident expectation that there will be several offerings of amounts equal to the largest that have gone out in the past to build up the younger schools of the brotherhood, so Bethany's success in this Centennial enterprise will make for victory in all our educational institutions.

W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

Bible College of Missouri.

The Bible College of Missouri at Columbia, Mo., is growing in the number of its students and in favor with the brotherhood. Its enrollment increased last year 30 per cent. Its credit courses in the University of Missouri are becoming more popular each year with the students of the university. About 10 per cent of the students in the arts department of the University of Missouri took credit work last year toward their A. B. degree.

Inclusive of two outside classes conducted by Dean W. J. Lhamon the total class enrollment last year was 386. Exclusive of these two classes it was 304. The number of individual students who took work in Lowry Hall was 187.

Thirty young men and women studied with a view to distinctively Christian work. Thirty churches within reach of Columbia are being cared for by the students and faculty of the Bible college, and more churches have asked for help than the college can answer. Nothing has given more satisfaction than the call from the churches for the Bible college men as preachers and pastors.

With the growth of the University of Missouri the Bible college is bound to grow rapidly in its work among university students. And as its advantages become known ministerial and missionary students are coming in greater numbers. Among these advantages are (1) a great university thoroughly equipped. (2) A central location in the midst of a numerous brotherhood. (3) Interchange of credits between the Bible college and the University of Missouri. (4) Hundreds of churches within reach of Columbia, many of them calling in vain for such help as college men can give. (5) A growing body of strong, scholarly, spiritually-minded ministerial and missionary students. (6) Thorough Biblical, ministerial and missionary courses of study coupled with scholarly, conservative and constructive teaching.

The board of trustees is composed of men who are among the strongest and most favorably known men in the brotherhood. The Bible college charges no tuitions, and its work is therefore in the nature of a mission. On this basis it makes its appeal to the brotherhood for financial support. Prof. G. D. Edwards is in the field this year as the representative of the college in financial and fraternal ways.

A novel feature of the work during the coming year will consist of visits and lectures by neighboring pastors. Among these the following have consented to render such service: E. M. Smith, of Centralia; F. W. Allen, of Paris; W. A. Fite, of Fulton; E. J. Lampton, of Louisiana; J. H. Wood, of Shelbina; R. B. Helser, of Fayette; E. B. Widger, of Jefferson City, and A. W. Kokendoffer, of Sedalia. Prof. C. M. Sharpe will be actively engaged in the teaching work of the college the whole of next year.

W. J. Lhamon.

Butler College.

The fifty-third annual commencement of Butler College was celebrated at Indianapolis June 18. The graduating class this year numbered 23, of whom eight are men and 15 women. The majority will take up the profession of teaching. Many will continue their studies in graduate schools. Of the three ministerial students, Clay Trusty is pastor of the Seventh Christian Church, Indianapolis; Benjamin Smith, pastor of the church at Zionsville, Ind.; and Claude M. Burkhart will reside in Indianapolis and preach at adjacent points. All give promise of great usefulness in their careers.

Owing to the affiliation of Butler College with the University of Chicago, which continues until 1910, the three graduates attaining the highest standing in their college courses are given scholarships entitling them to a year's tuition in the University of Chicago. The scholarships this year were awarded to Elmo Scott Wood, Hallie Gretchen Scotten and Eva May Lennes. The program of commencement week was full of the usual pleasant reunions and commencement exercises. Final chapel exercises were held June 12. Baccalaureate sermon was preached June 14 by Carey E. Morgan, who took as his theme, "Abundant Life." Mr. Morgan is an alumnus of the class of '83 and his return after an absence of many years was one of the most pleasant features of commencement week. The sermon was full of sentiment and poetry and was generally received as a most fitting message for a graduating class to take with it. The Philokurian banquet was the occasion of the reunion of 51 former members of the society. The president's reception was largely attended. Class day was signalized by the production of an original masque by Miss Charlotte Edgerton of the graduating class. It is thought that they will shortly be published.

This marks the end of the first year of President Howe's incumbency. Friends of the college feel that it has been a most successful year. The attendance at the college has gradually increased the last three years, as shown by the number of the graduating class. Last year there were seventeen and this year twenty-three. Installments on the subscriptions to the endowment are being gradually paid in and it is hoped that the larger part of the endowment will be in the hands of the college by the end of next year. Few changes in the faculty are announced for next year, and everything betokens continued prosperity for the college.

Christian College.

This, the oldest college in Missouri for the education of women, is now one of the most modern in its plant, equipment and methods. It is located at Columbia, the educational center of the state, where is also the University and other colleges. Its curriculum is of the best college standards and it provides for preparatory courses. It has just had one of the best years in its history.

The most important announcement about the coming year's work is the association of Hon. Morton H. Pemberton with the management. Mrs. W. T. Moore, the president of the college, has for several years done the double work of managing the college proper and the business of the college. This double work has been a severe test of her strength, and she has found it absolutely necessary to have some relief. This has been provided by securing the services of Mr. Pemberton as business manager for the coming collegiate year. He is a university man, has had experience in college work, and at one time was connected in a business way with Christian College.

Mr. Pemberton owns a large farm in the same county, and this will be laid under contribution for furnishing the college with additional supplies. Christian College maintains a truck garden of several acres adjoining the campus, where everything is grown that is needed for the college table during the entire session. In addition to ordinary vegetables, 3,000 home grown celery plants furnish an abundance of this healthful food each season, and a fine dairy herd of Jersey and Holstein cows supply rich cream and pure milk. A handsome illustrated catalog will be sent upon application to the secretary or the president.

Christian University.

Christian University, at Canton, Mo., closed her fiftieth session with a fitting commencement. T. P. Haley, so favorably known because of his long and faithful service in the Master's cause, delivered the baccalaureate address and Clyde Darsie, of Quincy, Ill., delivered the address on commencement day to the graduation class. On both occasions the beautiful university chapel was crowded by a sympathetic and appreciative audience. Many visitors were present to celebrate the semi-centennial of Christian University, and the festivities culminated with the alumni banquet, when 117 members of the association sat down to the great feast prepared by the local committee.

The session which has just closed has been one of the best in the entire history of the school. Nothing happened to disturb in any way the harmony and confidence existing between faculty and students. The enrollment was 10 per cent larger than at the preceding year and prospects are very flattering for a still larger increase next session.

Two of this year's graduates have just been employed by the Foreign Missionary Society to proclaim the gospel beyond the seas to those who are yet in darkness and another member of the class has signified his intention to go whenever he is wanted. The number of young men preparing for the ministry—more than 40—is now larger than ever before. These students now minister to about 75 congregations located within easy reach of Canton and are doing splendid work for the Master. (Their churches had over 700 additions during the year.) At the same time they gain experience that can not be obtained in any other way and incidentally earn enough money to support themselves while attending school. I am satisfied that ten times as many graduates of the Bible department of Christian University could be located with good churches in Missouri alone. Can not something be said or done to induce more bright and promising young men to prepare themselves for this, the noblest of all callings?

Many persons have the impression that Christian University is a school for ministerial students only. This is a mistake. Only about one-fourth of our students are preparing for the ministry. The other students, both ladies and gentlemen, are taking the regular college courses in the preparatory, college and music departments.

We confidently believe that the future has great things in store for Christian University and invite all young men and women who desire to be educated under Christian influences to investigate the advantages offered in this school.

Carl Johann, President.

College of the Bible.

This has been a prosperous session for the College of the Bible. The attendance has not been at the maximum, nor yet small. There have been 201 ministerial students in attendance upon the classes of the College of the Bible and the College of Liberal Arts of Transylvania University, though about half of this number has been enrolled among the students of the latter institution. This is a decrease of four from the number attending last year. The character of the work done by the students has never been surpassed.

The year has also been a successful one for the college financially. The report of the treasurer shows a healthy state of affairs and that of the financial agent of the college, W. T. Donaldson, indicates that his labors have resulted in the immediate or prospective addition to the college endowment of the sum of $63,000.

The commencement exercises were held June 9. The graduating class was large, numbering 26, of whom two were women. The average in scholarship of the class was very high. Fifteen of the 26 had an average of over 90 per cent and only one fell below 85 per cent. Nine states, Canada and Australia, had been the homes of members of this class before they came to Lexington. Almost all of them have had considerable experience in preaching, and some are already preachers of high rank. The majority have already entered upon engagements with churches.

Two are to take up work in Australia, and three are to go to foreign fields.

The prospects are good for a large attendance next year. The students of the past session are making themselves useful among the churches during the summer. They now serve 145 churches within the environs of Lexington. Prof. S. M. Jefferson was unable, owing to sickness, to meet with his classes during the closing days of the session, but his friends will be pleased to learn that a slight operation which was necessary was entirely successful and that he will return to his college work in the autumn with renewed strength. Prof. B. C. Deweese left on June 11 to spend his summer in England and Scotland.

The atmosphere about the College of the Bible is distinctly hopeful. Plans are being laid for a greater college and for one of greater usefulness. This sentiment is shared in alike by faculty, trustees and students, and definitely expressed by President McGarvey in his annual report to the trustees. It was the desire of the trustees that a part of this report be sent to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for publication and an extract from it is consequently attached.

"I have on several occasions within the last year publicly announced as my hope and expectation that the College of the Bible shall eventually become the greatest seat of Biblical learning in the world. This may appear to some like an idle dream; but some institution is destined to occupy that high position, and why not ours? The institution which shall occupy it shall do so, not as a result of accident, but as the result of strenuous effort wisely directed. It will be the result of ample financial resources supporting a succession of teachers endowed with brains, heart and industry in no ordinary degree.

"Hitherto such financial support has not appeared within our reach; but now, with the prospect of large additions to our endowment funds in the not very distant future, we can begin to look forward to it with confidence, and we shall begin to prepare for a corresponding enlargement of our work.

"I have had a conference with my junior colleagues on this subject, and have charged them each to select a branch of Biblical learning in which to make himself a specialist and a master, so that in this no man anywhere shall be his superior. They are all young enough, if a goodly length of life shall be granted them; they all have sufficient preparation in a general knowledge of the Bible, and they all have brains enough to accomplish this grand purpose. They have pledged themselves to it and have selected their lines of work. In order that progress toward the final goal may continue after their decease, they are to keep watch for young men in their classes from year to year, who shall be capable of pushing this high aim still higher, to incite them to it, and to see that all needed aid and encouragement shall be given them.

"The part which the board of trustees will take in pursuit of this great purpose will be to avoid overloading the professors with work in the class room, to free their minds from the distraction in reference to their financial affairs; to assist, when need be, the young men whom they may select for advanced studies; to elect these to suitable chairs in the college, some of which are yet to be created; and to keep guard incessantly lest any incompetent and unsafe men shall be selected as professors. * * *

"The purpose is that in the good days of our future, whatever is known or can be known by mortals about the Bible, its contents and its history shall be known and taught by the faculty of the College of the Bible; that skepticism, in its present forms and in all the protean forms which it will yet assume, shall be here encountered and overthrown; and that students of the Bible from every quarter who wish to add to the Biblical knowledge imparted elsewhere shall flock to this college for fullness of information. * * *

My own part in the feeble beginning of this effort will soon terminate, but I trust that like the patriarchs of old, though I shall not receive the promises, my dying eyes, like theirs, shall see them and greet them from afar. As one step toward the final attainment, our faculty has resolved to prepare and propose, before the close of another year, a post graduate course which shall justify those of our students who can, in remaining with us one or two more years, and shall offer to the graduates of other colleges and seminaries additional incentives to finish their Bible studies with us." W. C. Morro.

College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

Cotner University.

The year just closed has brought new interest and encouragement. A substantial brick building, 40 by 80 feet, with cement basement, costing about $4,000, was opened for physical training at commencement time. It has a partial supply of equipment to be added to soon and also bathing facilities. As soon as pledges are collected it will be entirely paid for. More than a thousand dollars was quickly subscribed to build and equip an outside heating plant to be in use next year. It is hoped to collect what is further needed this summer. All other expenses of the year were met. The attendance was doubtless affected somewhat by the financial fear and stringency at the opening of the year. A good attendance, however, was secured. Three hundred and seventy-five different students were enrolled, a small increase over last year. The prospects for next year's growth are encouraging.

The medical school will hold a somewhat closer relation to the college of arts next year. The work in this department consists hereafter of four years of nine months each. The first two years will be nearly all conducted in the science department at the university and the remaining will be given in the medical college building in the heart of the city where better clinical facilities can be had.

The conservative management and splendid progress of Cotner have done much to bring its business needs to the front. The feeling is growing that no investment is safer or more worthy than such a school standing for the educational interests of the brotherhood.

The supreme interest of the hour in our plans is the better equipment and adequate endowment of this work. It is felt that this help can not be looked for mainly nor at first from the rich, but must be the outgrowth of sacrifices of the many. A fund has been raised to make as thorough a canvass as possible during the coming year to this end. Surely Cotner University has demonstrated its right to live and be sustained in its career of usefulness in this great field so rapidly developing.

A church edifice, suited to the needs of our large congregations, is soon to be added to our equipment on the religious side of the work. No encouragement is greater than the healthy growth and prosperity of the university church. Bespeaking the good will and prayers of the brotherhood we face another year.

W. P. Aylsworth.

Cotner University's commencement exercises marked the close of a very successful school year in every way. The work done was of high order and in the Inter-collegiate contests Cotner won honors, also succeeded in capturing the Rhodes scholarship and won all debates in the state triangular contests, in the oratorical contest received honor and in athletics standing in most cases at the head.

While all the exercises of the commencement week were of commendable order there were some that deserve mention. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Chancellor Aylsworth on Lord's day morning, June 1. The theme was, "Things New and Old." The sermon was classic in style and a thing of merit with regard to the thought. After the sermon five young men of the graduating class were ordained to be ministers. In the evening the missionary sermon was delivered by H. O. Pritchard, the minister of the university church.

The rendition of Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice by the school of expression deserves a place of honor. The rendition of the oratorio by the school of music was commended very highly by critics. The commencement address by Charles Medbury, of Des Moines, Ia., on "The Test of American Democracy," was a masterpiece. Every one felt that it was perhaps the best address ever delivered at a Cotner commencement. There were twenty-three graduates besides those of the medical department, who had a commencement themselves. Everything bids fair for a great year at Cotner in 1909.

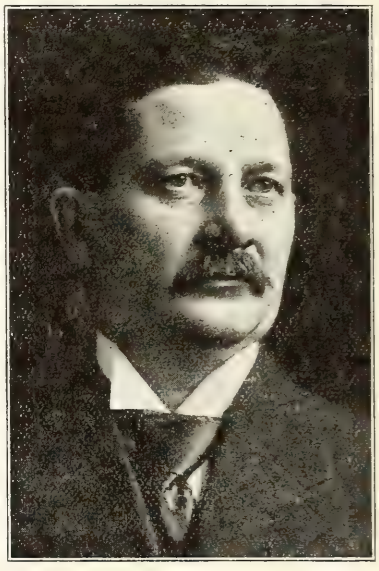
H. O. Pritchard.

Drake University.

Drake University closed a most successful year, graduating 230. The commencement day address by Dr. Frederick D. Power, of Washington, D. C., was highly praised and constituted a fitting close for the year.

The attendance for the year, including that at the summer school, was 1,864, a substantial increase over that of the previous year. The attendance during the regular school year was 1,446, an increase of 200 over that for the same terms the year before. We had 21 students from Australia, Canada, Chili, China, England, Japan and New Zealand. Four others will be here next year from Australia, and two will come from the Philippines. From 27 states outside of Iowa 240 enrolled. From Iowa we had an attendance of 1,585, representing 88 of the 99 counties of the state; 703 of these came from Des Moines and the county in which the university is located. Of the 1,846 attending, 598 did not report their church affiliation, or were not members of any church, 657 were members of the Christian Church, 212 of the Methodist, 127 Presbyterian, 78 Catholic, 63 Congregational and 50 Baptist. Many other denominations were represented by smaller numbers.

The university has been constantly advancing its standards in recent years, until to-day no institution in the Middle West stands higher. In the classification of colleges in the state of Iowa the state board of educational examiners gave Drake rank "A." The institution is recognized by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, and has been placed upon the accepted list of institutions by the Carnegie foundation. The professional schools of the university are recognized by the standardizing agencies throughout the country as being in class "A."



President H. M. Bell.

Additional faculty members have been elected: Professor Isaac Franklin Neff, recently of Bethany College, elected to the chair of mathematics; Miss Armenella Black, an instructor in Smith College at Northampton, Mass., to have charge of French and Spanish, and Dr. Florence Richardson, who recently received her degree from the University of Chicago, to instruct in psychology and education.

During the year the current expense income amounted to $125,000, the receipts from fees alone reaching the sum of $91,995.05. Many gifts were received, totaling more than $45,000. Among these may be noted $25,000 from Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Freeland, of Corydon, Ia., to endow a chair of Greek; $5,000 from Mrs. Martha Johnston and $3,000 from Mrs. Flora Keith Vawter to endow scholarships for ministerial students. The chairman of the board, Mr. T. P. Shonts, made gifts amounting to more than $5,000; Mrs. Eva Goss, $1,500, and many other gifts of smaller amounts.

On June 16 the new library building, costing $50,000, the gift of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, was dedicated. This library has stack room for more than 150,000 books. In addition a number of splendid recitation rooms are provided. The reading room is one of the best appointed and best lighted to be found anywhere. During the year a large $20,000 heating plant has been constructed, adding very much to the efficiency of the equipment at the university.

A friend of the university recently gave the following figures which indicate more clearly, perhaps, than any other one thing the growth of the school in the last twenty years. In 1888 the salary of a professor in Drake University was, for the highest, $1,000, and the lowest $500. In 1908 the highest was $1,900 and the lowest $1,000. For the year ending June, 1888, the total amount received from tuition and fees was $7,890; June, 1908, about $92,000. The total income for expense purposes for the year 1887-1888 was $13,100, while for the year 1907-1908 it was $125,000.

Music Conservatory of Drake University (one wing yet to be completed).

The Bible college of the university during the past year enrolled 173 students, as against 137 for the previous year. The work in that college has been of a very high order. The college of liberal arts has had a splendid growth, 558 students being enrolled. Dean Frederick Owen Norton is justly regarded as a man of unusual ability, both as to scholarship and executive capacity. The medical college and law college have both been very successful. It is, no doubt, well known to our friends that Drake University has, unquestionably, the leading school of music in the Middle West. Nearly 500 students were enrolled in the conservatory this past year.

Plans are completed for the enlargement of every department of the university for the year beginning September, 1908. The authorities of the university take more pride in the maintenance of high standards than in the attainment of a large attendance and a big current expense fund, much as the latter is needed.

Eureka College.

The most important movement of the year just closing is the shaping of the Centennial campaign. Over eighty friends of the college have united in the support of a field secretary for five years. H. H. Peters has entered vigorously upon this new work. By general consent he is an ideal man for such an undertaking. He is a graduate of the institution, class '05, and has held successful pastorates in Illinois. He knows the brethren and they have confidence in him.

The Centennial campaign includes three specific aims: (1) To increase the student body to 400. (2) To enlarge the membership of the Illinois Christian Educational Association to 5,000. (3) To raise the endowment to $250,000.

To assist in the first of these aims the students organized at the end of the college year the Boosters' Club with a membership of about 100. The Illinois Christian Education Association has been doing aggressive work through the field secretary, Miss Mary Monahan. It is with general regret that she gives up this work. The executive committee is fortunate in securing Miss Cora Carrithers as the new secretary. She is exceptionally well qualified for this position and begins her work immediately. Through the untiring efforts of the president, Mrs. Sarah Crawford, the I. C. E. A. has been a potent factor in extending the usefulness of the association and the board of trustees appointed at the semi-annual meeting a special campaign committee consisting of Ashley J. Elliott, chairman, Peoria; F. W. Burnham, Springfield, and W. B. Stroud, Eureka. Through these various active agencies the loyal friends of Eureka College will work in the coming months for the building up and strengthening of the institution.

In addition to the usual work in the ministerial, collegiate, preparatory and commercial departments, manual training and domestic science are added.

The work in the sacred literature department is more extensive and better arranged than in former years. It requires three years to complete this course, which includes the training of young men and women who are to be leaders in the churches, as well as preparation and equipment of the ministerial students. A course in Sunday-school pedogogy makes it possible for young men and women to prepare for efficient service in the teaching ministry of the church. There is constant emphasis upon the value of service. The whole college is dominated by the spirit of consecration. During the commencement week two of the strongest young men of the graduating class became volunteers. Another member of the class, a noble young woman, sails to Japan in the early autumn, and another member of the class is a volunteer and expects to go to the foreign field after teaching for a time. Among our undergraduates there are eight members of the volunteer band. The spirit of devotion which has given 24 of our graduates to the foreign field will continue to grow with the coming years.

The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are important factors in the spiritual life of the college community. These have had during the past year 35 and 50 members, respectively, which in prayer, Bible study and social life lay the foundation for worthy character.

The religious atmosphere of the college contributes to Christian character and culture in such a way that our young people become active in every department of our Master's kingdom.

The second annual assembly of the Eureka Chautauqua Association is held on the campus July 2-12. The program is a strong one, including such speakers as Folk, Talbot, McGuire, "Billy" Sunday, George R. Stewart, Lane, Colonel Bain, Carmack, Petitt and the usual good music, entertaining features, and class work. While the Chautauqua is not a college organization, we are glad to furnish it a home and to help it along in every possible way, as it is in harmony with the work we are trying to do.

Eureka, Ill. Robert E. Hieronymus.

Eugene Bible University.

The thirteenth year of the Eugene Bible University, located at Eugene, Ore., closed May 18. There were 53 students in the Bible college and a total attendance in all departments of 125. It is expected that the new $35,000 school building will be completed in September. The Bible university comprises the Bible college, the preparatory school, the school of oratory and school of vocal music. The students may also avail themselves of all the advantages given by the University of Oregon.

For catalog or other information address E. C. Sanderson, president, or Walter Callison, secretary.

Hamilton College.

Hamilton College, at Lexington, Ky., closed its thirty-ninth session with a brilliant week of programs. Several excellent programs of music were given, the high water mark being reached in the concert given by the pupils of Fraulein Ida P. Scudo, the director, assisted by pupils of the vocal department. The program showed the splendid achievement of a number of students who made music their major course. There will be no change in the faculty of the school of music for next year, with the exception of the election of Mme. L. Young Kloman as head of the vocal department. She has spent the past ten years in Europe being the founder and director of a successful school for girls in Rome, Italy.

Two strong programs were given by the School of Expression during commencement week, and the exhibit of the school of art was given during two afternoons. The baccalaureate service was held at the Broadway Christian Church, the sermon being preached by Charles R. Hudson, pastor of the Frankfort (Ky.) Christian Church. It was an able and masterly presentation of the subject of "Growth," from the words of the Master, "Consider the lilies of the field how they grow." It was an occasion of genuine inspiration. Commencement was held in the opera house. Dr. Henry Churchill King, president of Oberlin College, was the speaker of the evening, giving a scholarly address on "The Fine Art of Living." Mr. St. Clair, the president of Hamilton, awarded several handsome gold medals offered in a number of the departments and closed the program with a brief address along educational lines, presenting the certificates and diplomas. There were 24 academic graduates.

Among some points of interest from the president's report for the year are: The increase in number of matriculates, the attendance having doubled in the past five years, the number this year being 290 from 20 states of the union. Another point of interest is the growth in religious organized work among the students, the Y. M. C. A. numbering 137, the auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. having a membership of 89 with the addition of four mission study classes which have done excellent work. Contributions from student organizations to missions and other worthy cause have amounted to $240.

A number of the 1908 graduates will enter institutions of higher learning in September and the ambition of the faculty is expressed in the fact that four of the teachers are spending the summer abroad in travel and study.

Last September the demand for resident accommodations was so great that a residence next door to Hamilton, the former home of President Robert Graham, was used for an additional dormitory for Hamilton and is now known as Graham cottage. The outlook for a prosperous year in 1908-'09 is most promising.

Hiram.

The year just closing has been an exceptionally happy and prosperous one. There has been an increased attendance; and the spirit of the student body has been unsurpassed. Hiram's representative, Mr. David Teachout, won first place in the intercollegiate oratorical contest, and the Hiram debating team won in the debate with Denison University. In athletics our boys have won more battles than they have lost. The outgoing class of twenty-five—eighteen young men and seven young women, are a vigorous company of young people, who will give a good account of themselves. Eight of the young men enter the ministry, several as missionaries. Miss Eva Row, who takes the Master's degree, is under appointment to go to India.

Hiram has been exceptionally blessed the past year with the presence of veteran missionaries. Mrs. Wharton and Mrs. Morton D. Adams have been resident here with their families for several years. Brother Adams is now home on furlough. G. H. Brown and wife have just arrived from India. Brother Hunt and family, from China, are spending some weeks with us. The following have also made visits of longer or shorter duration: F. E. Meigs, from China; F. E. Hagin and wife and C. S. Weaver and wife, from Japan; Miss Mary Graybiel and Miss Olivia Brown, Miss Emma Lyon, from China; Royal J. Dye, from Bolenge, Africa; Miss Kate Johnson and David Rioch, from India. Never, in a single year, has Hiram been permitted to see and hear so many of our missionaries fresh from the triumphs of the mission fields.

THE CAMPUS OF EUREKA COLLEGE.

Including those now under appointment Hiram has about 40 representatives on the foreign field. Of the 50 new missionaries the Foreign Society proposed to send out during the present missionary year Hiram was asked for twelve. Eight of the twelve are already on the field or under appointment. In the last thirteen years Hiram has sent forth 56 to do service in "the regions beyond." F. W. Norton is still pressing on in the work of raising funds for the Wharton Memorial

Hiram College, Main Building.

Missionary Home at Hiram. Every year the demand is more urgent for such an institution for the education of the children of our devoted missionaries.

These notes are penned on the eve of commencement and home-coming week. Everything betokens the largest gathering of alumni and friends of the college in its history. The advance guard are already arriving. The election of Miner Lee Bates to the presidency was everywhere received with enthusiasm. Since he took up the work in March the tide of enthusiasm has been steadily rising. There is certain to be a very large increase in the attendance next year.

During the last few months an endowment campaign has been going on quietly. Mr. Carnegie promised the last $25,000 of $100,000 new endowment; $44,000 of the $75,000 needed to secure the Carnegie offer has been secured; and it is expected before the year ends to reach the full $100,000. B. S. Dean.

Hiram, O.

Kentucky Female Orphan School.

This school is intended for orphan girls who have not the means to attend other institutions of like grade. Its object is to make of its pupils educated, self-sustaining, Christian women. The majority of our graduates become high class teachers. Applicants must be over 14 years of age, and must be well recommended as regards health, character and ability to learn. An endowment is provided to assist in defraying the expenses of the school, but every pupil is expected to pay according to her ability or that of her friends. Churches, societies and benevolent individuals can do a good work in helping worthy girls to a place in this noble institution. Application blanks will be sent upon request, and, when filled in, they should be returned as early as possible. All letters relating to application for admission should be addressed Orphan School, Midway, Ky. Every application should be accompanied by a letter of recommendation from some responsible person, preferably from some individual known to one of more of the trustees of the school. Mark Collis,

Chairman Board of Trustees.

Milligan College.

The twenty-seventh commencement of Milligan College was a complete success. The baccalaureate sermon was preached this year by A. I. Myhr, secretary of the Tennessee Christian Missionary Society. He took as the central idea of his sermon the phrase, "One New Man," in Ephesians 2:15, and made a powerful plea for loftiness of character ideals and the infinite worth of manhood, pure and simple.

The annual literary address was delivered by the new president of the college, Frederick D. Kershner. President Kershner spoke on the ideal education, interpreting in its light the special aim and mission of Milligan College, as it has been and will be. His principal thesis was that the most important phase of education, though the one most sadly neglected in modern institutions of learning, is the ethical side, the proper culture of the moral nature of the student. At commencement President Garrett, in a brief but impressive and touching address, bade farewell and god-speed to the college and the work for which he has done and sacrificed so much. On account of enfeebled health he will remove in a short time to the West, whence all hope he will shortly return, his oldtime strength restored. The last seventeen years have been for President Garrett one period of continuous, unflagging, faithful service to the college, much of the time under circumstances the most adverse and trying. He will take with him when he goes the gratitude and hearty good wishes of scores whom he has directly helped to better life, and indeed, of all who know of the work he has done, and who appreciate the value of Christian education.

Life ever springs from death, and new hopes blossom in the ashes of the past. President Garrett leaves Milligan, but he has the satisfaction of seeing her at last come into her own and of viewing the prospect of a larger fruition of his work. With the official endorsement of the representatives of the Christian Church of Tennessee, the rechartering and reorganization of the

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

William Woods College

For Young Women

Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.

J. B. Jones, Pres. Fulton, Mo.

Oklahoma Christian University

Located at Enid, Oklahoma. One of the finest railroad centers in the southwest. Elevated region, bracing atmosphere and good water; excellent climate and fine buildings. A well equipped educational plant, one of the best west of the Mississippi River. Large and experienced Faculty, extensive courses—literary and Biblical. Superior advantages for Business Training, Music, Fine Art and Oratory. The following Schools and Colleges in successful operation:

I. College of Arts and Sciences.
II. College of the Bible.
III. College of Business.
IV. College of Music.
V. School of Oratory and Expression.
VI. School of Fine Art.
VII. Elective Courses in great variety.

EXPENSES MODERATE.

There is no better place in which to be educated than in a school located as this is in the heart of this great and rapidly developing southwest that offers better opportunities to young people than any other place in the United States. Preachers, Lawyers, Doctors and Business Men by the thousand are needed.

Next session opens September 15, 1908.

Send for catalogue to MISS EMMA FRANCES HARTSHORN, Registrar, Oklahoma Christian University.

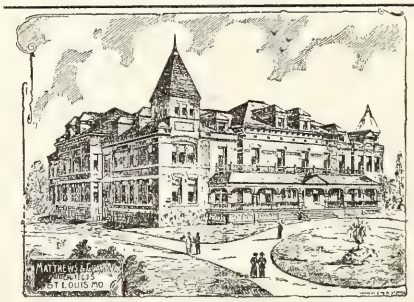
E. V. ZOLLARS, President, O. C. U.

TEXAS CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

WACO, TEXAS

Thirty-sixth year. Faculty from leading Universities of Europe and America. Graduates take advanced standing in the older American Universities. Music, Art and Oratory advantages unsurpassed in the Southwest. Three Grand Pianos, twenty-five new Upright Pianos and Pipe Organ in daily use. Up-to-date Practical Business College in connection, first-class Library and Reading Room, five well-equipped Laboratories, capacious Natatorium and modern Gymnasium. Athletics the best. Pure Artesian Water. Our own heat and light plans.

CLINTON LOCKHART, A. M., Ph. D., President



CARR-BURDETTE COLLEGE

AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, ART AND EXPRESSION

In location, building, climate and health conditions, home furnishings, department equipments and faculty Carr-Burdette is the peer of any Young Ladies' Boarding School North or South. Experienced educators have so adjudged it. It is select and limited in number. Building and grounds deeded to the Church free from debt. Bible taught every day. Write at once for catalogue and read for yourself, or visit us and see for yourself. Address,

SECRETARY, CARR-BURDETTE,
Sherman, Texas.

PASTORS COLLEGE

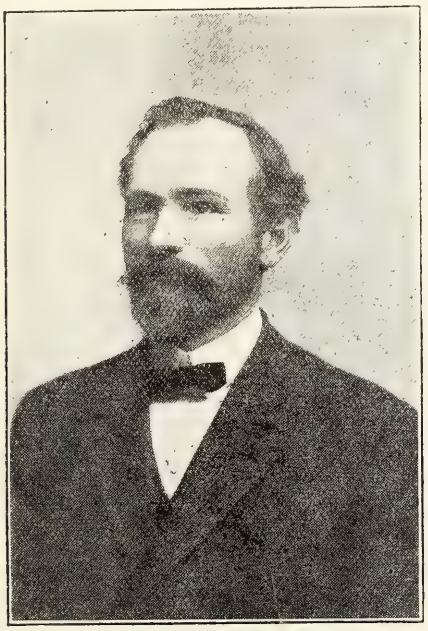
CHAMPAIGN, ILL.

A new and superior road to the ministry—new studies, new methods, new ideas in soul-winning and church work. Entrance in September only. Study how to think, how to read by the live method, how to preach. Only one year in college, then preaching, with directed study for three years before graduation. The Emanuel Movement, combining medical consultation with religious ideas on sound psychological principles, now winning popularity, will be thoroughly taught. Entrance qualifications are of the heart rather than the head. Especially advantageous to those who can not pend several years in college, or to those who want the best and have the price. Power, freshness, energy, business sense in this up-to-date system. Send for catalogue.

school, and the general awakening of interest in her work, she seems assured of a greater share of the patronage and support to which the principles for which she stands and the records of what she has done entitle her. When President Garrett resumed his seat, State Secretary Myhr arose, and in a few vigorous words conveyed to the school the good wishes of the state board, and assured the new president of his and its hearty co-operation in all possible ways. President Kershner then took a few moments to make announcements for the coming year, speaking briefly of important changes to be made, the section of the new dormitory, now building, the refitting and refurnishing of the old buildings, strengthening of the faculty, and improvement of courses of instruction. F. H. Knight.

Missouri Christian College.

The fifty-ninth session closed with a class of 11 in the academic department, one in voice culture, one in expression, and one in post-graduate piano. Governor Joseph W. Folk delivered the commencement address to an audience conservatively estimated at 2,000. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by L. O. Bricker, and the address to the undergraduates was delivered by John



President E. L. Barham.

P. Jesse. No commencement of this old institution ever passed more happily or satisfactorily.

The year has been one of marked success; the attendance has been fully equal to the capacity of the building, and work in every department has been unusually strong; the income of the year has been ample to meet all expenses and to complete the laying of granitoid walks about the building and premises. Many churches and friends, among the latter the beneficiary and senior classes, made donations during the year which were gratefully received and are thankfully acknowledged.

Among the improvements to be made the present summer are the addition of physical, chemical and biographical laboratories; enlargement of the library; rearrangement and improvements in each of the special departments, especially the art; new maps and charts for the departments of language and history; and an electrical program clock and new furniture for the study hall and chapel. Renovation and improvements will also be made in the boarding department.

At the meeting of the board of incorporators T. H. Capp was commended for his devoted and untiring labor and splendid success as financial agent, and sent forth in his work another year.

All rejoice in the strengthening of our institution in its equipment and appointments, in the enlargement of its patronage, and in the confident expectation of coming to our Centennial free from incumbrance.

Camden Point, Mo. E. L. Barham, President.

Oklahoma Christian University.

Oklahoma Christian University has had a very successful year. We have three fine new buildings, having a combined floor space of over two acres, all completed and well equipped; and as fine as are to be found in the brotherhood. We have a fine campus, street car facilities, commanding location, good water and many of the other modern conveniences. The university will open

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN

Sixtieth session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses, Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture. New Laboratories. Splendid Campus. Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on request.

E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College Lynchburg, Virginia.

Classed by the U. S. Commissioner of Education as one of the fourteen "A" colleges for women in the United States. Four Laboratories; Astronomical Observatory; Gymnasium; boating course, etc. Fifty acres in the campus. Endowment reduces cost to students to $300 a year for full literary courses. For catalogue, address WM. W. SMITH, A. M., LL. D., President.

MISSOURI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

ONE YEAR FREE AT ROYAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, LEIPZIG, FOR THE HONOR GRADUATE.

Faculty of 30 graduate instructors. Vocal and Instrumental. Classes and private lessons. Languages, Oratory, Dramatic Art. Normal courses for Teachers. Boarding department for young ladies, one-half block from school. Careful supervision. Students met at train. Terms moderate. Write for Catalogue.

J. C. EISENBERG, DIRECTOR 2108 LAFAYETTE AVE. ST. LOUIS, MO.

FORTIETH YEAR.

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.

Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address

MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.

Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.

WHEREWITHAL SHALL I PAY?

Most students for the ministry must answer this question. Here are answers that have come to students in the College of the Bible during the past session.

Sixty-two in other ways than by preaching have earned sums varying from $5.00 to $300.00, average earnings $91.00.

Seventy-three have preached for one hundred and forty-five churches. Their remuneration has varied from $50.00 to $600.00.

Seventy have received loans without interest from the two Educational Associations connected with the College of the Bible. The sums loaned vary according to the need of the student, from $16.00 to $150.00.

Write for a Catalogue or Information. Ask for the Leaflet, "Aids to Self-Help in the College of the Bible." Address THE COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE, Publicity Department, Lexington, Ky.

BUTLER COLLEGE

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.

its second year on September 15, with ten schools and colleges and a well-equipped faculty of sixteen men and women. E. V. Zollars is president.

The university opened on September 17, 1907, under many disadvantages, but the work went on, and the class work was not seriously interrupted. During the year a total of 257 different students enrolled, coming from 17 different states. Over 90 enrolled in the college of music, and 54 were ministerial students. A splendid year's work emphasizes the need as well as the opportunity that faces the Christian churches of this rapidly growing region. Many of the agencies that help to develop student life have already been formed, among which may be mentioned the Y. W. C. A., Ministerial Association, Athletic Association and Literary societies.

The aim of the university is: (1) To adapt the work to the needs of its constituency, rather than follow ideals long proven to be inadequate to our day and time. (2) To make the school religious, and to give to it a distinctly religious atmosphere. (3) To make it a brotherhood school, in a very real sense. The result of a period in school life is often to take the student away from the people and to inculcate the caste spirit. We hope to avoid this. (4) To train young men for the ministry. We are eminently qualified for this by having men as teachers who are characterized by the evangelistic spirit. Men who go out from under their instruction will go with a passion for humanity. In other words, the university will seek to prepare the student for service in the highest sense.

A card to Miss Emma Hartshorn, registrar, addressed in care of the university, Enid, Okla., will bring you a catalog. Randolph Cook, Minister First Christian Church, Enid, Okla.

Pastors' College.

A new college for preachers is proposed by George Thom Smith, Ph. D. It is to be located at Champaign, Ill., and it is said that the student who can comply with the conditions is offered unusual opportunities. Some cherished studies, such as evidences of Christianity, are boldly omitted; while hitherto unused text-books are to be introduced. Dr. Smith evidently is prepared to break traditions. Ample material for sermons, we learn, are the key to actual practice in preaching, while he proposes to offer sane evangelism and individual power to think accurately and gracefully as an inducement for young men to enter the ministry.

School of the Evangelists.

During the year we have put the finishing touches on our new buildings and paid off every cent of indebtedness. We have enrolled 140 students, representing 30 states and countries. We are working seventeen young preachers on the farm this summer. We have started a big hennery for the school which is already profitable. We are planning to enroll at least 200 ministerial students next year. We are rejoicing in a splendid outlook for every department of the work. We are sending out catalogues free and shall be glad to send you one.
Ashley S. Johnson, President.
Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Temple Seminary.

The Christian Temple Seminary closed its fourth session in the commencement exercises covering five days, from June 14 to 18, and was the best commencement in our history. This institution has no rival in its field and is doing a work in Bible study that is attracting general attention throughout the city. One hundred and nineteen students matriculated last session and next session promises to have a still larger patronage. These students are from various religious bodies and all are in the work for study and service. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by the dean. Monday and Wednesday evenings were given to class exercises and they indicated close application. Tuesday was field day and one of the handsomest launches in our harbor was tendered for the use of the seminarians and they spent the day twenty miles south of the city. On commencement evening twelve students were graduated and two others received additional seals on their diplomas as a reward for post-graduate work. B. A. Abbott delivered the address, which was strong and beautiful. O. B. Sears and L. B. Haskins took part on the program.

Our fifth session opens October 2 and we are looking for the largest enrollment in our history. This work is practically free and furnishes the beginning to preachers and missionaries.
Baltimore, Md. Peter Ainslie, dean.

Texas Christian University.

One of the most prosperous years of this university has just closed. The attendance was larger than formerly, though the financial depression cut off the influx of new students in the middle of the year. In many ways the school has proved stronger than in former sessions, and especially is its strength better understood. Only a few years ago it was regarded by many in this state and other states as simply an academy or as doing a low grade of college work. Now it is understood by all to rank with institutions of the first-class, requiring precisely the same grade of scholarship for the degree A. B. as the state universities.

The Bible college has won a recognition that it did not formerly have. Since the enlargement of its faculty and the raising of its course of study it is coming to be known as offering a curriculum of ministerial studies quite the equal of any other in the brotherhood and as having a faculty second to no other. The B. D. degree here marks a higher scholarship than A. M. in the largest universities. The Bible college faculty has seven professors.

Financially the university has made progress during the year. It has learned that it has large resources in the churches in Texas. The receipts from education day alone have more than equaled the income on a $100,000 of endowment. Many gifts for endowment and other purposes have been received. The secretaries are now in the field for all their time. The plan of the endowment company is regarded by business men as the best that has been used for colleges so far as known. While the times have been for many months most unfavorable, the work of raising money, though somewhat retarded, has gone steadily on.

The new gymnasium and natatorium, built by student enterprise, and now being fully equipped, will give a better foundation for athletics, for which the university is famous throughout the state. The new college of fine arts will include music, oratory and painting. These departments last year had a total attendance of nearly 250, not counting names more than once. The combination of these departments into one college means a strengthening of all and an attention to these accomplishments that is more worthy of the age in which we live and of the aspirations of American students.

It is often urged that a college of business hardly belongs to an institution like this, and in some respects this is true. Nevertheless, it is certain that young people preparing for business circles need Christian education as much as young people preparing for any other activities of life. It is further true that a college of busi-

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

EUREKA COLLEGE

A record of fifty-two successful years. Six substantial and convenient buildings, lighted with electricity and warmed by central heating plant. Beautiful campus shaded with natural trees. Biological and physical laboratories with modern equipment. Carefully selected library, including the best periodicals. Lida's Wood, girls' dormitory, known far and wide. Wholesome atmosphere. Eureka stands for the best. Courses offered: Collegiate, Preparatory, Sacred Literature, Public Speaking, Music, Art and Commercial.
For catalogue and further information, address ROBERT E. HIERONYMUS, President

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY
CANTON, MO.

A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.
Send for free illustrated Catalog.
Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

BETHANY COLLEGE

Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environment well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET, Bethany, W. VA.

HIRAM COLLEGE
HIRAM, OHIO.

A well established college with an honorable history, devoted to the Christian education of young men and young women.

Situated in the heart of the historic Western Reserve, Hiram partakes of the sturdy character of the early pioneers. Somewhat secluded, yet feeling the pulsing life of a great city, it is an almost ideal place to prepare for a life work.

The college campus is one of the most elevated points in Ohio. The air is clear, and pure spring water in abundance is supplied through the village waterworks. The town is lighted by electricity. New sidewalks of cement and stone are under construction.

Hiram places large emphasis on the most important factor in education, personal contact. The peculiarly close and sympathetic relation between Hiram students and their teachers makes Hiram almost unique even among small colleges.

Hiram offers four thorough courses of study; the Classical and Ministerial, leading to the degree of A. B., and the Philosophical and Scientific, leading to the degree of Ph. B. or B. S. Besides this a full Preparatory course of four years is offered; and a Department of Music of high rank maintained.

The religious life of Hiram is virile, genuine and sane. The life of the Christian Associations is dominant. Missionary enthusiasm is intense. The Student Volunteer Band numbers 25 members and has held successful meetings in many of the churches of Northeastern Ohio. The study of missions, both in the class-room and in the Mission Study Class, is conducted by Prof. Paul. Courses for ministerial students are strong, and are being materially strengthened for next year.

The fall term opens September 22, 1908. For catalog and further information address PRESIDENT MINER LEE BATES, HIRAM, OHIO, mentioning The Christian-Evangelist.

ness in connection with an institution of many other departments has notable advantages over those business schools which are entirely separate in their management.

By organization this university includes two colleges outside of Waco, Hereford Christian College and Carlton College, both of which prepare students for the freshmen or sophomore classes of the college of arts. These institutions are in excellent condition, and are valuable parts of the educational forces of the state. They are not situated near enough to Waco to become in any sense competitors, and they exert a wide influence for good in their respective portions of the state. Two other colleges in Texas are conducted by the Disciples, the Add-Ran-Jarvis College at Thorp Spring and the Carr-Burdette College at Sherman. While these are not immediately connected with the university, they are conducted in perfect harmony and sympathy with it, and are in the hands of excellent directors and teachers. The latter is strictly a female college, and has excellent facilities for the culture of young ladies. These young ladies are advised to take a more extensive course of study in the university, and thus perfect their education.

Thus, while Texas has several institutions of learning, it has this one crowning virtue, that its forces are able to work in perfect harmony with each other and so to distribute their efforts as to meet a wide variety of needs, and to cover fairly well a broad extent of territory. As yet Texas has less than four million inhabitants; but the time is coming when it will have forty millions.

Waco, Texas. Clinton Lockhart.

Transylvania University.

On June 11, in historic Morrison College, were held the forty-ninth annual commencement exercises of Kentucky University, closing the last session of the institution under that name. The baccalaureate sermon was preached on Sunday, June 7, by Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky. (A. B. '95), and long-time president of the Alumni Association. The commencement address was delivered by Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary of Louisville, Ky. Forty-four young men and women received degrees and diplomas. The honorary degree of doctor of laws was conferred on President Clinton Lockhart (A. B. '86, A. M. '88), of Texas Christian University.

Carnegie Science Hall (now nearing completion).

As already announced, the old name of Transylvania University was reassumed on June 12. The change of name has met the hearty approbation of the faculty, the student body, and the alumni everywhere, and it is believed that the old Transylvania with its long and honorable history and traditions will be of distinct value to the new.

The year has been one of progress and success. There was a marked increase in the number of strictly collegiate students, the faculty has been strengthened, the work in all departments has been of high standard. The $50,000 Carnegie Science Hall, work on which has been for sometime delayed, is now nearing completion and will be equipped and ready for use at the opening of the next session. With its spacious class rooms and laboratories for physics, chemistry, and the biological sciences, it offers facilities that are hardly excelled by any college laboratories in the South.

Student interests have prospered unusually this session. The successes in athletics have been far surpassed by the success of the representatives of the literary societies in contests with other institutions—a series of victories almost unparalleled in the history of the literary work of this university. A. L. Henry.

Virginia Christian College.

Virginia Christian College has closed its fifth school year. The first year it enrolled 155 students. The enrollment has steadily increased each year, and closed with 228 the last session. F. M. Rains made a full house glad by his address on "Faith, Vision, Love." He will find a hearty welcome whenever he returns. The graduating class numbered sixteen, an equal number of young men and young women. The senior class for next year numbers thirty. The college plant as it now stands, containing 86 acres of land, is worth from $80,000 to $90,000. After two years of faithful work Professor Davis has secured $30,000 in bankable notes and cash, and after a little further technical arrangements with Mr. Carnegie we will be ready to put up new buildings to the amount of $50,000. This will provide a distinct college building and new dormitory for boys.

For three years past the school has firmly declined to enroll students who use strong drink or tobacco, or follow such habits as will undermine character. This decision is sent to parents and young people in letters and literature the year round. In brief, the same standard is held for young men and boys as is held for the young ladies, and we see no reason why Christian education does not require this. Nine-tenths of the young men of the institution to-day would entirely refuse to fall back to the old methods. The students, unless there be some under 15 years old, and teachers are united in a college government association. The whole body elects 12 of the students to what is called the board of directors. The faculty constitute an advisory board. The president of the school is president of the association and has veto power, but under the advice and co-operation of the faculty four-fifths of the students may carry a point of government over his veto. Many very valuable and helpful things have come out of this co-operation even in its experimental stage, and we have seen nothing of evil. It unifies the whole body, develops a spirit of co-operation and tends to the betterment of college life.

Many of the citizens of Lynchburg have proved their good will by giving money to help establish the school. This year for the first time we are making a canvass in the city for students. Lynchburg has fine public schools; their graduates are well prepared for our junior class.

God has given his blessings to the college and we seek its further development in true harmony with his will. J. Hopwood.

Lynchburg, Va.

William Woods College.

The session of 1907-8 of William Woods College, located at Fulton, Mo., was marked with signal success. Our articulation with Missouri University and endorsement by the Northern Central Association of Colleges, have, in some measure, toned up the literary and scientific departments and we have reaped the benefit of an enlarged teaching force. The management will continue to secure the services of the very best teachers. The enrollment was 249—of which 173 were boarding pupils. The beneficiaries numbered 53 and one missionary's daughter was among the students. There were 27 graduates in the literary department, 16 other graduates and four post-graduates.

The introduction of student government has put the institution upon a higher plane. We are delighted to recognize the spiritual tone that prevails. The students and teachers continue to unite with the Fulton Church in forming a living link with the foreign field, Miss Rose Johnson, in Japan, being their representative. The old chapel has been transformed into living and school rooms and an assembly hall, hardwood floors placed in a number of the halls and other improvements and repairs made. Special assistance was received through the will of Mrs. Lucinda Powell, while Mrs. Mary Dulany cancelled an annuity bond of $7,500 which now becomes an actual gift to the college. Dr. W. S. Woods was again the kind friend of the school, meeting a considerable amount of deficiency, as well as donating money for improvements. The need for further endowment is more pressing as the years go.

J. B. Jones.

Busy People's Bible Course

at home, leading to graduation. Use your spare time. Terms easy. Circulars free. Write Pres. Chas. J. Burton, Ph. B., Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

BEFORE DECIDING

WHERE TO ATTEND SCHOOL

Send for Catalog of

VALPARAISO UNIVERSITY

Valparaiso, Indiana,

One of the Largest Universities and Training Schools in the United States.

25 Departments	Excellent Equipments
165 Instructors	School the Entire Year

Students may enter at any time.
Expenses less than at any other place.
Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President, or O. P. KINSEY, Vice President.

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

On recommendation of the Board of Curators, and by authority of the Kentucky Legislature, the name Kentucky University is given up, and this historic Institution, on the very site and with the memories of the oldest seat of learning west of the Alleghenies, reassumes the name Transylvania. Kentucky Univerisity has done noble work and the new Transylvania will preserve the best inheritance of the past and grow with the larger work of this new time.

Transylvania University is a standard institution with elective courses, modern equipment, a strong faculty chosen from some of the best universities of America and Europe, and those surroundings which make for thought and culture. First semester begins September 14, 1908. Send for catalog to-day. PRESIDENT, TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY, Lexington, Kentucky.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Bentonville, June 21.—One additional confession and baptism not heretofore reported.—J. W. Ellis.

Winslow, June 22.——Meeting closed last night with large audiences and fine interest to the end. Five more baptisms yesterday. A fine site for a building has been secured and the erection will be begun a little later. My next meeting will be at Choctaw, Ark.—D. T. Stanley.

California.

San Diego, June 24.—Two additions at University Heights Church last Lord's day.—Volney Johnson.

San Francisco, June 23.—Herbert Yeuell's meeting with the West Side Church resulted in 205 responses to the invitation. We have been greatly helped. A fuller report will be sent.—Robert Lord Cave, minister.

Canada.

Charlottetown, P. E. I., June 24.—Mitchell and Bilby are in a good meeting here with fine audiences and two accessions. We are having strong sermons and good music.—John McQuerry, minister.

Georgia.

Atlanta, June 24.—Revival at Howell Church, in this city, has opened auspiciously. Evangelist "Sunshine" Shaw is leading us. There is a splendid interest, notwithstanding hot weather. Baptisms to-night. The meeting will continue until the Yeuell tent services at West End, which begins July 5. Both churches are in difficult fields.—Dean L. Bond, minister.

Indiana.

La Fontaine, June 21.—Two added since last report, one by letter and one from the Baptists.—A. L. Martin.

Tampico, June 24.—We had one addition by confession and baptism at my appointment at Surprise, while at my last meeting at Honeytown there was one by baptism.—Jesse Reynolds, minister.

Iowa.

Waterloo, June 18.—C. L. McKim, of Oelwein, closed a good meeting here with 23 added—12 of them by confession.

Kansas.

Abilene, June 22.—There were two added yesterday—one by confession and one by letter—C. A. Cole.

Tyro, June 22.—Four added at regular services by confession and baptism, all highly esteemed citizens.—C. W. Yard.

Lyons, June 22.—I dedicated a new church at Lakin, Kan., June 14, free from debt. I preached six nights and had 27 additions. The work moves forward here at Lyons.—W. L. Harris, minister.

Sharon, June 22.—Two added here yesterday by primary obedience, also one baptism at Hazelton last trip. We are making arrangements for a revival in October with E. A. Newby as evangelist. —S. E. Hendrickson.

Minnesota.

Pleasant Grove, June 22.—We have closed a two-weeks' meeting. We held cottage prayer-meetings a week in advance and these were helpful and generated a beautiful spiritual fervor. We had six added on June 14 and immersed four in the River Root in the presence of several hundred spectators. Four others are to be immersed next Lord's day at the same place. The District Union of the W. C. T. U. comprising several different counties, met in our church building recently. The winner of the golden medal reciting contest was the little daughter of Brother and Sister Flathers of this church.—Richard Dobson, pastor.

Missouri.

Louisiana, June 22.—Two made the good confession here yesterday and two united by letter.—E. J. Lampton.

Glenwood, June 23.—I closed a successful meeting with 21 additions—11 baptisms. The strength of the church has quadrupled. The pulpit supply committee is in correspondence with a good preacher. I go to Wyocena for a meeting beginning July 5.—Joel Brown.

Nebraska.

Rising City, June 22.—Plans were laid for a great meeting which began here May 22 with bright prospects. Storm followed storm, leaving only eight services up till June 14, when the weather was good enough for people to attend. Samuel Gregg, the evangelist, presented the plea in a masterly way. The church has been greatly strengthened and a good feeling exists. New lights were installed in the building. We were favored with a visit from our honored state secretary, Brother Baldwin. His aged mother and sister are among the staunch workers here. Grandma Baldwin sustained a broken arm from a fall one evening. We are glad to report, though, that she is making good progress toward recovery. —A. O. Swartwood, minister.

Ohio.

Montpelier, June 24.—Seven additions to the West Unity congregation since last report—three by baptism and four by letter and statement.—F. M. Pitman.

Toledo, June 22.—At the regular services at the Central Church yesterday 16 came forward. There were seven confessions and baptisms.—Grant W. Speer, pastor.

Oklahoma.

Claremore, June 24.—I recently resigned as pastor of the church in North Little Rock, Ark., and have again entered the evangelistic field. I have held a short meeting near Adair and have had 12 additions by confession and baptism since last report. Will my friends please address me here for two weeks?—Morton H. Wood, evangelist.

Oregon.

Enterprise, June 19.—One baptism at Wallowa last Lord's day. I shall be glad to answer all inquiries concerning the opportunities in the growing towns of this fertile valley.—W. S. Crockett.

Gladstone, June 22.—Brother Berry's meeting closed last night. There were four confessions and 50 persons are ready for the charter organization. The Tabernacle debt was provided for, and we address ourselves to the future with new hopes. Brother Berry's visit is much appreciated. We expect to organize on the first Lord's day in July at least 60 members, and arrangements are shaping to commence the erection of a handsome church building in the early autumn.—A. H. Mulkey.

Newberg, June 22.—Nine added since last report—six by confession—three by statement. This makes 70 since November, the beginning of my pastorate here. This is a mission church helped by the O. C. M. C. I preached in the basement of the Tabernacle for the first time yesterday, and used the unfinished baptistry. Prof. A. W. Shaffer spent his four weeks' vacation with us and served as assistant pastor. He helped us very much in song and many other ways.—George C. Ritchey.

Tennessee.

Union City, June 19.—John L. Brandt and C. H. Hoggatt closed a two and a half week's meeting with us recently. There were 50 additions—44 of them by confession and baptism. We were greatly hindered by political agitation, heat and rain.—J. J. Castleberry, minister.

Clarksville, June 24.—We report two baptisms to-night. We are getting ready for decision day.—Dan Trundle.

Texas.

Waxahachie, June 22.—Eight additions here yesterday.—J. B. Boen.

Hubbard City, June 23.—We had a crowded house at both services yesterday. I am to begin a meeting at Mertens July 6.—W. M. Stuckey.

Bryan, June 24.—I have associated with me W. D. Parnell, of Dallas, who, until recently, has been with J. B. Boen. Brother Parnell is a splendid chorus leader and cornet soloist. We hold our first meeting at Yarrellton, a tabernacle meeting, beginning July 10, and afterwards a camp-meeting at San Gabriel, July 31, a famous camp ground of Central Texas.—James A. Challener.

Laredo, June 20.—I recently closed two short meetings with home forces, one at Devine and the other at Laredo. There were 14 baptisms beside other additions, and helpful results.—D. D. Boyle, minister.

Hamlin, June 26.—I have just closed a good meeting here in the Methodist church. There were seven additions with six baptisms, but other things must be reported more fully.—Percy G. Cross.

Washington.

Seattle, June 17.—Thirteen added to the Queen Anne Church since the last report and during the last three Lord's days—10 by letter and three by confession.—J. L. Greenwell, minister.

Colville, June 24.—I closed a fifteen-days' meeting here with 18 additions. The first week we held a Bible school rally, getting 36 new scholars and a cradle roll class of about 20 little people. Have organized a teacher training class of about 26 members. Brother and Sister N. M. Field, of Dean Avenue Christian Church, rendered valuable assistance with the singing. I am to be at Ritzville next Lord's day and then return home to Carthage, Mo., to do evangelistic work in the state.—S. J. Vance.

NERVOUS WOMEN

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

To quiet the nerves, relieves nausea, sick headache, and to induce refreshing sleep.

Sunday-School

July 12, 1908.

SAUL CHOSEN KING.—1 Sam. 10:17-27.

Memory verse: 24.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God.—1 Sam. 23:3.

Read chapters 9, 10 and 11 to get the full story of the calling of Saul to the kingship over Israel. It is not a simple matter, even among a simple people, where all men have been upon a common level in matters of government, to choose one man who shall thereafter be supreme. The approval of the old leader must rest upon him; he must be the choice of God; he must be a man who can win his way and be as big as his office; and he must command the support and allegiance of the people.

Accordingly we see these several steps in the calling of Saul to be king. First, Samuel anointed him when he was looking for his lost cattle (9:1; 10:16). This was done by divine authority, and there is no hint in this part of the narrative that the people's desire for a king was in the nature of rebellion against the direct authority of Jehovah. In fact, 9:16 gives the impression that the granting of a king was an act of mercy on the part of Jehovah for the better protection of the nation. God says to Samuel: "To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him to be prince over my people Israel; and he shall save my people out of the hand of the Philistines; for I have looked upon my people because their cry is come unto me." This distinctly contemplates the monarchy as primarily a device for more efficient government and leadership than could be secured under the system of judges, and not as essentially a wicked revolt from the authority of Jehovah.

Then, secondly, Saul was chosen by lot from among all the people (10:17-27). Here again, as in chapter 8, the idea is presented that the desire for a king is a rejection of God. Nevertheless, God grants the wish and assists in the choice of the king; in fact, makes the choice, for a selection by lot was considered as equivalent to a direct choice by God. The Hebrews, like many other peoples of antiquity, notably the Greeks and Romans, conceived that the hand of God controlled the dice when any important matter was put to the arbitrament of chance. So, to select by lot was only a way of having Jehovah designate the man whom he had chosen for the office. Saul's hiding among the baggage at the time of the casting of lots could not have been because, in his humility, he had no idea that he would be chosen, if he had already been anointed "to be a prince" (10:1), and was treasuring in his heart and concealing from his family the words which Samuel had spoken to him regarding the kingdom (10:16).

After this selection of a king by lot, the people all went home, and Saul went home, too. There was no coronation or inauguration, no oath and no robes of office. It was a very simple and primitive state of society. The newly-chosen king went home and got to his plowing. He was, as yet, a king without a court, without an army, without a country. God had made him king, but he had yet to make himself king. The place which had been given to him was simply an opportunity. Then the Ammonites came up against the men of Jabesh, and the people who were in peril sent messengers and appealed to Saul. It was at this time that Saul showed his qualities of leadership, raised an army, won a great victory, delivered Israel from a peril and a reproach, and made himself king by showing that he had it in him to be a king.

After all these events—after Saul had been secretly anointed by Samuel, after he had been publicly chosen by lot, after he had proven himself to be a leader in battle—then the people came together in Gilgal, "and there they made Saul king" (11:15).

Christian Endeavor

July 12, 1908.

CHARACTER AND COURTESY.—1 PET. 3:8-12.

DAILY READINGS.

M. Rooted in Christ.	Col. 2:1-7.
T. Courtesy in Speech.	Jas. 3:1-8.
W. Courtesy to Enemies.	Acts 26:24-26.
T. Courtesy in Letters.	2 John 1:1-5.
F. Courtesy in Salutations.	Luke 10:5-8.
S. Courtesy to Rulers.	1 Kings 1:28-31.
S. Topic.

The first word of the Scripture lesson is the central point for the consideration of this subject. It is the word "finally." It calls our attention to what precedes, and introduces a summing up of the subject of courtesy and character. In looking over what leads up to this lesson paragraph we notice in the seventh verse, and also in the first verse of the third chapter of 1 Peter, the words, "In like manner." Following the indication of these words we find ourselves in the second chapter contemplating the example of Christ, for we are told in the twenty-first verse of the second chapter that "He left us an example that we should follow his steps."

Beginning with the example of Christ and following the thought through the remainder of the second chapter and the verses of the third chapter up to our lesson portion, we have set before us as an example the character and the courtesy of Christ for our imitation, and summed up in the lesson portion, which begins at the eighth verse and closes with the twelfth.

Jesus has been named as the first gentleman of his times. We might say that he is the world's first gentleman, and the only true gentleman in whom the truest character and the finest courtesy have their sweetest and highest expression. If this were not so we could not feel at the end of these centuries that he was still our example. The fact that we are willing to accept him as our example, and turn our feet to walk in his steps indicates that the judgment of the centuries is that he has been, and is still, the first gentleman of the world. Coming to the lesson portion we note that the character and the courtesy which we are to acquire in imitation of Christ are summed up in the words like-minded, compassionate, loving, tender-hearted, humble-minded, not rendering evil for evil, nor reviling for reviling, but contrariwise the blessings.

What a beautiful world it will be when the followers of Christ with sweet sincerity and strong patience accept joyfully this character and courtesy in Christ as their model and strive to work it out! Truly, then, we shall, as Peter says, "inherit a blessing."

Having led us from the example of Christ through the illustrations of it to this conclusion in the lesson paragraph, Peter introduces another word which invites us a little further. He says, "for." What follows is very significant; "he that would love life and see good days." What Christian Endeavorer does not love and wish for good days? But Peter would have us to know that life which may be loved, and days that are good, depend upon the character and courtesy defined in the previous verses, and also in the careful observance of the words which follow: We are to keep our tongues from evil and our lips from guile, and must turn away from evil to the doing of good, and to the pursuit of peace.

Courtesy is the coin of character. Such a character naturally expresses itself in such a courtesy as is indicated in the lesson verses. Peter has another use for the word "for" in the twelfth verse, in which he indicates that we are to acquire this character and courtesy not only for its own sake, but because the eyes of the Lord are upon us, and if we need help in this realization we have comfort and hope in the further fact that "his ears are open to our supplication."

If we despise the character and do not value the courtesy which comes from this following in the steps of Christ, we must tremble before this further word of Peter, "the face of the Lord is upon them that do evil."

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

THE BODY THE TEMPLE OF THE SOUL.

Topic, July 8: 1 Cor. 6:19, 20; Luke 12:23-33.

The body was not made simply for itself. Man is not simply a machine, though "fearfully and wonderfully made." The body is a machine, but the mind is intended to be its master. The spirit is to the body what the current of mysterious electricity is to the wire. The human body is a marvelous system of electrical wires strung over and through another system of bones, wrapped up in another system of muscles, which are wrapped up in still another series of delicate tissues called skin. It is a marvelous body, and has well been called the "House Beautiful." But the body without the spirit is dead. It is one of the pathetic and heart-breaking facts in human experience. We know it's true physically. Strange we are so blind that we often fail to recognize that it is just as true spiritually. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." This is the declaration of a simple fact in the realm of the spiritual.

Man's body was made for the dwelling-place of his own spirit, primarily. It is every man's high calling of heaven, first of all, to be himself. Get that, and there is nothing in the religion of Jesus Christ to interfere with the independence of the man that lives in the body. We can do as we please with these bodies of ours—wreck them if we will and suffer the calamity; for all of which it is hardly fair to blame Providence—the Power that made us so wonderfully and endowed us so marvelously and mysteriously. But to have made us otherwise would have been to make us less than men. It is better to be a man than an angel, according to the hint given us in the Psalmist's wonderful description of man and his creation. "Thou hast made him a little lower than (not the angels as in the old version) God; thou hast crowned him with glory and with honor, and didst set him over the works of thine hands." Man is as independent as God in the sphere of his activity; that is, in ruling over the works of God's hands with which we have to do.

It is a wonderful revelation that our bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit. This sublime fact links us with the Divine. And somehow we feel that it is fitting. At our best we recognize, as Augustine said, that "Man was made for God and will not be satisfied until he finds him." And this is in perfect accord with the great apostle's declaration, that "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth, and hath appointed the bounds of their habitations that they should feel after God and find him, though he be not far from every one of us; for in him we live and move and have our being." "We are his offspring," the Greek poet declared. And our hearts assure us that it is so. We are the children of God by birth, though some of us are far descended, and it seems hard oftentimes to trace, even dimly, our heavenly ancestry. We have gone away from God. It is another of the pathetic and heart-breaking facts of our human experience.

Still may we all become the children of God by faith. Faith; what is it? The electric force that brings us and binds us to the Infinite, the unseen and the eternal. Faith is the wireless telegraphy of the soul. Why should it be thought credulous or even strange, in these days of wireless messages, as marvelous and mysterious as the researches and reaches and revelations and raptures and rejoicings of faith. And why should it be thought a thing incredible that God, our Father, should give his Spirit unto those that ask him? "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father in heaven give the Holy Spirit unto them that ask him?" It was the Master that said it, and our hearts leap up at the promise, though some of us are slow of heart to believe all that he has spoken, as the disciples of old. "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts crying, Abba, Father!" It is the child's cry, and the Spirit bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs and joint heirs with Jesus Christ to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and which fadeth not away. Now are we the children of God and temples of the Holy Spirit; or else we are aliens from the covenant of promise and strangers. Sons or strangers—which?

A Fifty Year Test.

The many attempts during the past fifty years to improve upon the standard of all infant foods—Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk—have been in vain. Eagle Brand is prepared under rigid sanitary conditions. As an infant food its equal is unattainable.

Christian Endeavor Charms

We handle a large and beautiful assortment of Christian Endeavor pins and badges and charms.

Junior and Senior monogram buttons	$ .05
Coin silver scarf pins, 15c to	.50
Coin silver charms	.60
Solid gold catch pin	1.00
Solid gold face button	1.25
Solid gold charm	1.50
Solid gold charm, style D	1.75
Solid gold charm, style A	2.50
Watch fobs range from 25c to	2.00

Then we have unusually lovely Gift Badges, set with emeralds, pearls or diamonds, for $6.00. These are for the Junior, Intermediate or Senior Departments. Our customers may tell us price and general preference and we will make selection when requested.

Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

The Adult Bible Class Movement at the Louisville Convention.

This great movement is only three years old officially, having received recognition in the Eleventh International Sunday-school Convention in Toronto in 1905. Though only three years old, you would have thought the movement to have reached maturity if you had seen it demonstrating itself at the Twelfth International Sunday-School convention at Louisville, Ky., on Friday, June 19.

W. C. Pearce, the Superintendent of this great work for the Association, had been preparing for this Convention. He had visited many cities in the interest of the organized work among adults, hoping to make the movement appear worth while at Louisville. On Wednesday preceding the regular sessions of the Convention a great conference was held in the Warren Memorial Presbyterian Church. A whole day was given to this department and the meeting was planned to hold simultaneous sessions for men and women. The whole range of problems of this department was covered in the discussion.

On Friday morning Superintendent W. C. Pearce gave the report of the movement from its organization three years ago. The present status of the movement may be seen from the following extract from his report:

ORGANIZED CLASSES.

It is not possible to give a satisfactory statement of the number of organized adult Bible classes or their membership. All our statistics are gathered by the State and Provincial Associations through the county associations. The statistical blanks used for gathering the information for this convention were printed and distributed before the adult department was organized. We can report that 1,632 certificates have been issued by forty-nine associations, and an application for a certificate has been received from the Philippine Islands. This guarantees that each class is organized according to the international standard and registered with its state or provincial association. These certificates have been issued by the following associations:

ASSOCIATIONS IN ORDER OF THE LARGEST NUMBER OF CERTIFICATES OF RECOGNITION ISSUED.

*New York	310	Texas	13
Pennsylvania	189	Vermont	12
Ontario	160	Nova Scotia	12
Ohio	117	California (North)	11
Kentucky	95	North Dakota	10
Indiana	82	North Carolina	9
Illinois	81	Louisiana	8
Kansas	57	Manitoba	7
Michigan	45	New Hampshire	7
Rhode Island	34	Idaho	6
District of Columbia	30	Georgia	6
New Jersey	30	New Mexico	6
Maine	28	Oklahoma	6
West Virginia	25	Arizona	5
Iowa	21	Minnesota	5
Missouri	21	Washington (West)	5
Virginia	21	Connecticut	4
Nebraska	19	Wisconsin	4
Delaware	17	Maryland	2
Colorado	16	Quebec	2
Massachusetts	16	Wyoming	2
New Brunswick	16	Tennessee	1
Arkansas	15	British Columbia (West)	1
California (South)	15
South Carolina	15
Alabama	13	Total	1,632

*The number issued in New York includes those receiving the New York certificate. New York standard required is the same as International.

None Reported: Alaska, Florida, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington (East), Hawaii, Philippines, Porto Rico, Mexico, Newfoundland, Alberta, British Columbia (East), West Indies.

A public demonstration gave convincing evidence of the power and popularity of the Adult Bible Class movement among men. On Friday evening, June 19, the members of men's classes who were attending the convention at the Warren Memorial Presbyterian Church met at 7:15 and organized a great procession. Representatives of the police force of Louisville headed the procession, the first of the kind they had ever led, perhaps. Prominent leaders of the great International work were at the front, Justice McLaren of Toronto, Mr. Hartshorn, of Boston, Marion Lawrance and W. C. Pearce, and others. A bugler and a man with a megaphone marshalled the host. Banners were plentiful, and one of them announced that the men of America were for the Man of Galilee.

Five abreast the host marched, singing as they went, toward the great armory. The sight was moving and inspiring and compelled deep emotion when you stopped to consider what it indicated. One thousand and five hundred men were in line, men who were proud of the fact that they were banded together to study the Word of God, men who were not ashamed to sing hymns of praise as they walked through the streets. It may be safely ventured that no procession will pass through any city's streets this year that will mean so much for the world as this procession meant.

The center section of seats in the great armory was reserved for them. They marched in singing, and the audience inside sang with them as they waved their Chautauqua salutes in welcome. The great choir, under the leadership of E. O. Excell, stood to welcome them with singing. It was an overwhelming sight. As one lady expressed it, when she tried to sing a lump in her throat choked back the song as she looked upon a regiment of Christian men marching in.

When the men had all entered and before they were seated, W. C. Pearce, the International Superintendent of Adult Bible Class work, stood before them on the great platform and asked them:

"Men, what is our aim?"

"The world for Christ," came as one voice from 1,500 men.

"What is our means?" was the next question.

"The word of God," was the response like the sound of many waters.

"What is our purpose?" was the next inquiry from Mr. Pearce.

And you should have heard the reply which came like a peal of thunder, "We mean business."

The Value of the Adult Class.

The organized Bible class has had for us a value that is inestimable. It has proven itself a great factor in solving some of the most difficult and perplexing problems of the church and its work. As I have had to do with the young people and organized class work among them, I speak out of this experience.

There is nothing unusual in the situation here. It is a town of twenty-five hundred people and six churches. The Bible schools had very little hold upon the young people. The average attendance of the young people's class in our school was seven, with an enrollment of twenty; other similar classes in town about the same. The dance hall and the pool room seemed the center of attraction to many, while marked indifference to the church and its claims characterized others, the situation itself being but a tacit confession on the part of the church of its inability to direct the life of the young people.

In view of these conditions, it [illegible] teresting to any who are as [illegible] as to the value of organized Bible cla[illegible] fort, to know what it has accomplished for us. We have at present 150 active members in our organized Bible class, and they are the very best young people in the community. The average attendance is 100 each Sunday, 75 per cent of which also attend one or other of the church services. The class grows steadily. The older boy or girl brings the younger and helps to build up other classes. Accessions to the church are frequent. One hundred and one of the number are now Christians and members of the church. The class gives us a tremendous leverage in the community. We find an introduction to, and are brought into sympathetic contact with, many homes otherwise closed. We have the prayers of many anxious hearts who are concerned for those boys and girls. Such an organization becomes almost irresistible when directed to given ends. My class added at least $500 to the physical value of the church last year in building their own class parlors, when their former room became too small. [illegible] sider the moral and spiritual influence [illegible] great band of young people, "organized around the Bible" in a town of this size, and you get an estimate of what this organization means to the church and pastor.

To take this life out of its old channels of indifference and apathy, and command it for the King; to organize and direct it to the glory of God and the upbuilding of his church fills the heart with joy and satisfaction. F. M. Field.

Geneva, Ohio.

A Delta Alpha Class.

What is now known as the Delta Alpha Class of the First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., was originally Class No. 7 In the beginning, probably in the year 1901, there were two young women in the class and others joined from time to time until at the end of the year the total membership was probably ten or twelve. We continued to grow steadily but moderately up to the time of our class organization on October 9, 1904, and at that time we had present 23 and a total membership of 45. The record of our progress would be about as follows:

TOTAL MEMBERSHIP.

1901		2
1902		10
1903		20
1904	(October)	45
1905	(December)	73
1906	(December)	144
1907	(December)	220
1908	(April)	330

In our present total membership we include those who have been members of the class and for various reasons are no longer active members and are now entered as honorary members. There are now 75 on this list, leaving 255 active members.

On July 28, we moved into a new and very commodious church building where we have had favorable opportunities for growth and usefulness. Before this time we had no Sunday-school room and [illegible] laboring under serious difficulties, w[illegible] it was almost impossible to do good work or make much progress. We are now a well-organized force of Christian workers and are trying to do all we can for the church, the Sunday-school and the cause of Christ generally. F. M. Robinson.

Atlanta, Ga.

and m had it

THE WORLD-FAMOUS

Tissot Bible Pictures

A collection of 120 from the Old Testament and 120 from the New Testament

Size 5x6 and beautifully colored. Each collection in a convenient portfolio.

EVERY CHRISTIAN HOME SHOULD HAVE THESE PICTURES

And having made special arrangements with the publishers, we are in position to suppiy them at the remarkably low price of

$1.00 FOR EACH COLLECTION

Upon receipt of $1.00 we will send by mail, postpaid, either the Old Testament or New Testament collection,---the selection to be made by the purchaser.

OR

We will send these pictures to subscribers to "The Christian-Evangelist"

ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE

UPON THE FOLLOWING TERMS AND CONDITIONS:

1. A portfolio containing the full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $3.00 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full amount, $3.00, to pay the subscription for a period of two years. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are now paid.

2. The same offer as above to any subscriber who sends in $3.00—one-half of this amount to apply on his or her own subscription, and one-half for a new subscriber for one year.

3. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $1.50 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full $1.50, to pay the subscription for a period of one year. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears, or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are paid.

4. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any NEW subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" sending us $1.50 for one year's subscription.

5. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any of our present subscribers who send us a new subscriber under the terms set forth in the preceding paragraph (No. 4). That is, we will send a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the new subscriber, and also a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the old subscriber sending us the new subscription.

6. A portfolio containing full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us two new subscriptions, accompanied by $3.00 to pay for same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old Testament or New Testament studies.

SPECIAL AND EXTRAORDINARY

7. Two portfolios, one containing the full collection of 120 pictures of Old Testament studies, and one collection containing 120 pictures of New Testament studies, both free of charge and postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us three new subscriptions, accompanied by $4.50, to pay for the same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old or New Testament studies.

We reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time, without notice.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

People's Forum

A Protest.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

As an evangelist of the Christian Church, I wish to enter my protest against the article by Earl Marion Todd, on "Evangelism for the Times," recently published in The Christian-Evangelist. Other evangelists are capable of speaking for themselves, and may do so; but, as for me, I do not purpose to allow such an uncalled-for and unjust criticism to go by unnoticed. I am surprised that such an article found space in one of our religious papers. It would be scarcely permissible in a Monday morning pastor's meeting where the faults of pastors and evangelists might be discussed with some degree of profit. But to offer such an absurd thing to a "Congress of Disciples" and then publish it broadcast to be read by hundreds of unsuspecting people, is more than I can harmonize with good judgment. Even if the writer was requested by the program committee to be "critical," he should have confined himself more closely to facts, and not have built up a mere man of straw in order to have something to knock down with his criticism. Such articles do much more harm than good, and many people will be unduly prejudiced against good evangelists. If the author knows of even one evangelist who is guilty of the faults he criticises, he should name him out, and let the churches be warned against his impositions. Evangelists, like other preachers, are not perfect, but these criticisms are too indiscriminate, and the many good evangelists are made to suffer instead of the few bad ones. It is a general onslaught against evangelism.

They are spoken of as "uncultured," "dogmatic," "superficial," "dealing with dead issues," "ill-informed in matters of church history and contemporary science," "often wholly neglectful of intellectualism on the one hand and true emotionalism on the other;" "reliant on evangelistic clap-trap and machine methods." They are said to have a "feverish desire to get results," "make records," and "run to send on telegraphic reports." With them "prayer has often the smallest place in the meeting, and is often almost wholly neglected by the evangelists in private life and visitation." They are classed by this distinguished writer as men of brass and bluff, rather than men of brains and heart." They are accused of "commercializing the evangelistic profession." Whilst these are mentioned as "notable exceptions," yet he received these criticisms from "a large number of our most prominent pastors," who are supposed to secure the very best evangelists when they have revival meetings. "His sermons are a mere hodgepodge of wild and reckless and ignorant speculation and mossback conservatism, adorned with historical sketches in caricature, punctured with coarse jokes and enlivened by quixotic attacks on sectarianism, higher criticism and Darwinism, and, if the church be not more than ordinarily strong, must lower almost irremediably the ideals of Christian life and service in the congregation, and completely destroy the laborious and painstaking work of the conscientious pastor." Such a tirade is simply ridiculous, and a reflection on evangelists that the writer should be good enough to retract. I know most of our evangelists personally, but I do not know of a single one that is guilty of even a few of the faults here criticized. I suppose, however, that we will all plead guilty to the charge of discussing "dead issues," if he means by that Christ's plan of salvation as set forth in the New Testament. I have known a few "conscientious pastors" that did not care to have these "dead issues" mentioned, for fear some of "the other denominations" might take offense at it. We will also plead guilty to trying to "count numbers." Jesus wants us to convert the whole world, and the evangelist that can not lead souls to Christ is a failure, and should quit the field at once. The churches and pastors are right in calling evangelists who can "get additions," but they are wrong in not trying to feed and care for the lambs that are born into the fold, and blame the evangelist for doing for them what they call him to do. We may be considered "ignorant," but we evangelists do believe the Book, and preach Christ and His plan of salvation, instead of Darwinism and higher criticism. After the "laborious work" of the "conscientious pastor," who has been feeding his flock on "live issues," until it is about dead, he then usually sends for one of these "ignorant," "uncultured," "ill-informed" evangelists to come and raise him and his dead church to spiritual life, and use his "clap-trap," "machine methods" to set every department of the church in active working order.

Let this criticism of evangelists and their methods cease. Perhaps their peculiar methods are the secret of their power. Do not rob them of it. Let the evangelist do the work the way he can do it best. As a class they are among the most spiritual men I know, and they are doing the work that only a few pastors can do. The life of the evangelist is short because his work is arduous and heavy. Do not try to kill him too soon.

Roger H. Fife.

Kansas City, Mo.

[It is highly confirmatory of the truth of some of Brother Todd's criticisms, that a heated "protest" like the above is allowed to take the place of calm, rational arguments or statements dealing specifically with some of these criticisms. It is charged or implied, for instance, in Brother Todd's paper, that commercial considerations sometimes enter too prominently into the work of popular evangelism. Is there any ground for that statement—any exceptional instance of that kind? It is charged that some evangelists discuss "dead issues," and do not adapt their preaching to present-day conditions, which keep men out of the Church. Is Brother Fife prepared to "protest" that there is no such preaching by any of our evangelists? Again it is said that evangelists sometimes deal in jokes that do not harmonize with the spirit of an evangelistic service. Did Brother Fife never hear anything of this kind? He may say he does not indulge in such jokes, but does he know that all others are guiltless? This is what we mean by being specific.

It is easy to call these criticisms "ridiculous," but that convinces no one. The people want facts. Brother Fife knows, too, or should know, that no criticism of Brother Todd is intended against the evangelists for believing in "the Book" and teaching "the New Testament plan of salvation." Indeed, his contention is that all our evangelists do not give the same prominence to prayer, to the work of the Holy Spirit, to salvation by grace, through faith, and not by the works of the law, and to the nature and necessity of repentance which the New Testament gives to these things? Does Brother Fife know that all our evangelists do this? Unless he does, he has no right to "protest" in behalf of others.

Brother Fife questions the "good judgment" of the Editor in publishing Brother's Todd's paper. He may know better than we what ought to be published. We do not propose to discuss that question. But it seemed to us and to other brethren who heard it, that such a public document should be given to a wider public, that its merits might be tested in the crucible of fair and just criticism. Is it to have such treatment? If not, silence would be better than denunciation.—Editor.]

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905

A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.

For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

GULF COAST.—If persons wanting reliable information about the gulf coast country of Texas will write to me, enclosing stamp, I will gladly answer. Edwin D. Hamner, pastor Christian Church, Bay City, Texas.

Church Supplies, Etc.

HAS IT for less. All church and Bible school supplies. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelist sand Ministers..

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

I AM READY to make engagements for meetings this fall and winter. Will join evangelist for permanent work. Frank E. Meharry, singer, 111 East Main st., Danville, Ill. References: Jesse Van Camp (with Scoville), M. B. Ainsworth, minister, Danville, Ill.

PASTOR WANTED.—Population 6,000, church membership 250. New Church just completed, cost $15,000.00, seating capacity 800. Willing to pay $1,000.00 year and parsonage free for the right kind of man. Must be up-to-date and progressive in every respect. Married man preferred. J. A. Morgan, Paragould, Ark.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write Hinners Organ Company, Pekin, Illinois, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Positions Wanted.

WANTED—A position as housekeeper by a young Christian mother in a country home. Has two bright boys, aged 7 and 9 years, respectively. Mother is ambitious to raise them under Christian influence. The boys would be quite helpful on a farm. For further particulars address Samaritan, 3'1 I. O. O. F. Building, Danville, Ill.

Real Estate.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN A CHRISTIAN COLONY—in Canada, where forty bushels of wheat will grow on fifteen-dollar land? For full particulars write The Christian Union, Des Moines, Ia.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

THIRTY-SIX DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS plus 25 1-2 hours a week pays for all the privileges of an up-to-date school. Catalogue free. Address School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Typewriters.

OLIVER TYPEWRITER.—Good as new. Absolutely first-class order. Bargain price. C., care of Christian-Evangelist.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis. Mo.

The Home Department

Fingernails.

Be careful not to break them,
And bite them you must not,
For if you do it's no excuse
To say that you forgot.

Go straight away to mother,
If nails are long or rough,
Then she will take the scissors out
And cut them just enough.

It doesn't hurt to cut them,
Yet children often cry
When mother fixes finger nails—
I wish they'd tell me why.

Woodlots in Japan.

In these times of great drains on the timber supply, caused by the heavy demand for forest products of all kinds, Americans may see in Japan an example of what can be done in growing wood on small plots. That country contains 21 million woodlots, about three-fourths of which belong to private persons and one-fourth to communes. The average size of the plots is less than nine-tenths of an acre. They usually occupy the steepest, roughest, poorest ground. In this way land is put to use which would otherwise go to waste, and if unwooded would lose its soil by the wash of the dashing rains. From Japan's woodlots, the yearly yield of lumber is about eighty-eight feet, board measure, per acre, and three-fourths of a cord of firewood. In many cases the yield is much higher. More than half a billion trees are planted yearly to make up what is cut for lumber and fuel.

"You have three pairs of glasses, professor?" "Yes; I use one to read with, one to see at a distance, and the third to find the other two."—Christian Work and Evangelist.

Household Pests.

Cupboards and closets can sometimes be rid of mice by stopping up the holes where they come in with corks dipped in carbolic acid; but if you want to keep out the pests, you must keep the house and surroundings clean, well-aired and dry. During the winter season the cockroach, or water-bug, is apt to put in an appearance, and if they can find plenty of moisture, coupled with darkness and warmth, they are content. These conditions exist especially around sinks, bath-tubs and in cupboards that are not carefully dried after cleaning, and it is wise not to keep kitchen garbage, wet cleaning-cloths or dishcloths in the kitchen. A good way to get rid of the large black ants is to mix half a teaspoonful of tartar emetic with sweetened water and place it where they will find it. The woodwork of kitchen closets and cupboards, as well as that around inclosed sinks, harbors roaches. Wash the shelves at least once a week with gasoline and water, about equal proportions, letting it run into every crack and crevice; then, when this has dried, sprinkle powdered borax around freely and blow it into the cracks and crevices in the walls and behind shelves. Some housekeepers sprinkle equal parts of ground pepper and borax in the places they infest, and to prevent moth from getting into carpets sprinkle with equal parts of borax and salt. Even if you dislike seeing the powder about, do not wipe off or sweep away; it is cleaner than bugs, especially the roaches, as they spoil whatever they come in contact with. It is said that this is due partly to their excrement, but more largely to a dark-brown liquid which is exuded from their mouths and from certain glands about the body; so it is a wise plan to take every precaution to destroy and get rid of these household pests.

Missionaries Go to Lapland.

Several woman missionaries have started for Lapland to hunt up nomadic tribes during the summer and to preach to the adults and teach the young. In the warm season the camps of the Laplanders are often hundreds of miles apart, and travel in the desert is full of dangers, particularly for women. Yet male missionaries have never reported for duty in these high northern latitudes, and so the women go.

Insane Blame Alcohol.

The annual report of Superintendent Atkins of the St. Louis City Insane Asylum declares that of about 950 patients cared for during the fiscal year, alcohol liquor or drugs figured in 696 cases. Of that number, 217 males and 100 females were burdened with excessive personal or ancestral use of alcohol, while 203 other males and 110 other females were victims of moderate personal or ancestral use of it. Excessive or moderate drinkers numbered 128, of which 23 were women. The fathers of 127 more were excessive or moderate drinkers. The total number of insane patients whose insanity was traced to excessive or moderate use of alcohol numbered 420 males and 210 females, or 630 in all. Sixty-six owed their insanity to personal or ancestral use of drugs.

The report shows the average number of patients in the asylum to have been 637, and the cost per patient $162.18 a year, or 44.3 cents a day. New patients numbered 303. The total annual expenses aggregated $108,402.40, of which $5,403 was special and not included in the maintenance expense. Salaries aggregated $38,345.40 and groceries $50,326.98.

Dr. Osler is of the opinion that half the nervous wrecks are caused by eating soup. The other half, we presume, are caused by being pushed into it.—Washington Post.

Eat Less—Live Happier.

Dr. W. A. Evans, health commissioner for Chicago, gave a talk to the Presbyterian ministers of the city on eating and drinking. Like most advisers on this subject, Dr. Evans thinks that people eat too much, especially in the summer, and they could save money and health by eating less. How much and what the health commissioner himself eats we do not know; but he makes the following prescription for Presbyterians and other people:

Breakfast—Berries or some fruit, a cereal, coffee or tea.

Luncheon—Boiled rice, bread and butter, more fruit.

Dinner—Thin soup, one slice of meat, two vegetables, more fruit.

"The largest part of meat eaten goes toward heating the body," said Dr. Evans, "therefore meat should never be taken oftener than once a day in warm weather. People who live in warm countries live largely on fruits, vegetables and rice, and in hot weather people of all countries can duplicate this diet to their own advantage."

EAT TOO MUCH.

"Practically everybody eats too much at all times. We manage to get along more or less comfortably in winter, but our eating makes us uncomfortable in summer. If the average man would cut his food in half in warm weather he would be far better off.

"And as for drinking, I think nearly everybody drinks too much. Do not drink too much of anything, even water, in warm weather, or at any other time. The man who drinks to keep cool in summer is taking long chances. Drink as little of everything as possible and do not have the drinks too cold.

ABOUT BABIES.

"The most important thing of all, though, is the feeding of babies. Far more babies suffer and sicken from overfeeding than from insufficient nourishment. Too much milk is just as harmful as bad milk is."

A well-known minister was called to the telephone by a representative of a local paper, who inquired the subject of the next Sunday morning's discourse. "Wise as Serpents, Harmless as Doves," responded the clergyman. When the paper came out, the minister was electrified to read that "Mr. Blank will preach on the subject 'Why Is a Serpent as Harmless as a Dove?'"—The Congregationalist.

There once was a person named Beauchamp,
Who wrote sermons and tried hard to preauchamp;
But his voice had a crack,
And he cried out, "Alack!
Why can't shout loud enough to reauchamp?"

Church Furnishings and Supplies

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Made of several materials and in many designs. Send for full particulars and catalogue No. 27. Give the number of communicants and name of church. "The Lord's Supper takes on a new dignity and beauty by the use of the individual cup."—J. K. WILSON, D. D.

GEO. H. SPRINGER, Manager,
256-258 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

BELLS BUCKEYE BELLS, CHIMES and PEALS are known the world over for their full rich tone, durability and low prices. Write for catalog and estimate. Established 1837.
The E. W. Vanduzen Co., 419 E. 2d St., Cincinnati, O.

New S. S. Songs for 1908
Joy and Praise
By Wm. J. Kirkpatrick and J. H. Fillmore.
Up-to-date in ideas. The best ever. FREE sample pages. Returnable book mailed.
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE, 528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.
or 41-43 Bible House, New York.

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References. Correspondence Solicited.

"DOWN IN OLD MISSOURI"

By S. S. LAPPIN.

CHAPTER IV.

The Long Last Mile.

The last long half of that undulating stretch of road lay before us. Southwestern Missouri was a memory and Illinois a prospect, but that yellow stony road was a reality present and tangible. Our team, fresh from two weeks on pasture, was ready, even eager for the start. A little incident that might have ended in something more serious than the hearty laugh it gave us, served to impress this on our minds. Our young driver one day attempted to flick a fly from the rump of Old Dick, the spirited "blue pony;" not understanding the benevolent motive of the boy, that vindicative beast promptly planted three vicious kicks on the front end-gate of the wagon, splitting it in as many pieces. It so happened that the hoofs landed each time safely between the pair of bare brown legs dangling down in front, but the full-moon eyes of the lad that scrambled back to safety were a sufficient guarantee that the experiment would not be repeated. Poor old Dick, before we reached our journey's end he had not the spirit left to resent even greater indignities than that.

Under the influence of the bright sunshine and the open air of our out-door life the buoyant spirit of childhood began to assert itself anew. Not even my mother, with all her sorrow and anxiety, could wholly withstand the persistent call to brighter thoughts. Our story thus far, when interested questioners drew it from us, failed not to rouse the hearty and genuine sympathy of the simple folk along the way. Often we were urged to stop and make our home among the hospitable people of some pleasant neighborhood. Various reasons were urged. One man whose wife had died leaving him a family of small children to care for, was specially insistent. One inducement he offered gave rise to some levity among us children behind the wagon cover. His wife, before her demise, had made two kegs of soft soap, "Fustrate soap," he said, and one of these should be ours if we would but occupy a vacant log house not far from his own and do baking and mending for his family. But none of these things, not even the bonanza above mentioned, could move my mother from her determination to return to Illinois.

We had not traveled far when we began to hear of another family in like state which was but a few days ahead of us. They, too, were bound for Illinois and, as in our own case, the father was under the pall of the incurable white plague. Our grave was behind and theirs ahead, that was all the difference; we hoped for their sakes that theirs might be so far ahead as not to be among strangers. There was but one main road leading from the southwest into St. Louis, and as we were both following that, we heard of them almost every day. The condition of the man grew more and more serious. All who had seen him said he was very, very ill and could not live many days. And so the end came at last. Though we were expecting it, we were shocked and depressed above measure when we found the grave one day. It was on a green bank in the woods near where the road crossed a small stream. We came upon it unexpectedly—a little ridge of clay—and our own wound was opened anew by the sight. We wondered if the family had prepared their dead for burial and filled the grave with their own hands. If so, then in this, at least, their lot was harder than ours. When we lost the trail of their wagon soon afterward, it seemed we had parted company with kin folks, though doubtless they never heard of us.

It is a long and uneven road the heart-broken travel! They are so far apart and so burdened that, at times, each one thinks himself traveling alone. But other wayfarers are always ahead and others ever follow. Could they but "speak each other in passing" it might be a brighter world than it is. There is but the wordless sympathy of unseeing sufferers; it is only through fellowship with him who suffered alone for us all and whose ministry has made of one blood all nations that the bruised heart of humanity can even come to throb as for one body.

Somewhere, in Illinois perhaps, that fatherless family ended their journey and a lone woman took up the task of caring for her orphaned brood. I should like to know how fared the folks we trailed so long on the return from our pilgrimage to the Ozarks and who, after we had tasted the gall of bitterness, took up the cup in turn and drank deeply from the other side.

We lived almost wholly in the wagon day and night, taking care to stop not far from some village or farm house each evening. We could have been comfortably housed each night, no doubt, and often did the good people where we went for water to prepare our meals, chide us that we had not asked lodging with them. But this queer quality we call independence is a thing to be reckoned with, and my mother had her share of it. Six years later when the "bad year" came in Southern Illinois, able-bodied men men who owned their homes asked aid from the county, but no crumb of assistance from that source was permitted to enter our house, though we tasted no wheat bread in the six months of distress.

Somewhere southwest of St. Louis we passed through a settlement of foreign people—Germans, I think. They were new in America and clannish. During the three or four days we spent on their roads, we had to drink creek water chiefly, for they asked no favors and granted none. Whether from pure selfishness or native suspicion, they would not let us have water from their wells either for the team or to drink. One evening, when we had had no water since noon and had camped for the night with no prospect of drink for man or beast, two men traveling together stopped near us. They, too, had had trouble getting water and were in no mood to be trifled with. Learning that we had been denied at the house nearby, one of them called to my brother to bring the horses and a bucket. He led the way and asked courteously to be allowed to water his team. This being curtly refused, he produced a large and dangerous-looking pistol and coolly repeated his request. A key to the padlocked well was forthcoming, and there was water a plenty for that night. A few steps backward would bring me to German ancestors, and I have wondered if they had this trait of exclusiveness so well developed. Perhaps so, and therefore I will be charitable with our Missouri friends and cherish a hope that a younger generation has smashed the padlocks ere this.

Old Rover, the dog, was our faithful guard and vigilant scout for the entire expedition, but he too fared sadly among the foreigners. They had big dogs and bad ones, so that visits to back doors, where a morsel of food might sometimes be found, had to be made with caution. Rover was not afraid; indeed, he vanquished several ferocious fellows who disputed his rights, but to tackle a fresh specimen at every house proved too much for our leg-weary canine; he learned to follow the wagon more closely, turning aside only when some venturesome rabbit seemed to promise a repast.

This great shaggy friend, who had voluntarily espoused our cause, and who deserted us within two weeks after we were settled, proved a friend indeed. We had little to give him for his faithfulness, but that seemed to make no difference with him. I smile now as I think of an incident in which he had a prominent part one evening. We were preparing to eat a lunch in the wagon and my mother placed her hand, in which she held a long loaf of bread, on the edge of the wagon bed. Rover, lying on the ground below, caught sight of the protruding loaf and laid hold with all earnestness. Of course, we scolded and threatened, but a taste of the bread seemed to deepen his determination to dine with us and he held on. Right doggedly did he pull and tug in spite of harsh protests from the wagon, and members of the juvenile trio looked on with anxiety and amusement till the loaf was torn asunder, leaving us a scant supply for our meal. But the look of satisfaction that

The Great Temperance Beverage

The only satisfactory beverage when you're hot and tired and thirsty is

Coca-Cola

Cooling and Crisp as frost.
Relieves fatigue.
Deliciously thirst-quenching..
Absolutely wholesome.

GET THE GENUINE

5c. Everywhere

34

shown from the dog's countenance as he licked his chops, with the hearty laugh we had, was splendid sauce for what was left.

Among the dreads and dangers of the trip, our passage through St. Louis was the direst of them all. For many days we made careful inquiry as to every detail. As we came closer, evidences of the nearness of a great center of population began to be seen, like bits of drift cast out into still water by the force of a whirl-pool. The rigs we met were of a different type and the loads of teamsters were not such as farmers usually haul, while the people themselves were more of a ring-streaked and striped appearance. We had been told by many that it was "ten miles through St. Louis," and this appalling intelligence staggered minds to which Springfield was the climax to bigness.

Not many miles from the city we camped by the turn-pike one evening. We wanted to be fresh for the trying trip of the following day, but we dreaded to come nearer the, to us, fearful maelstrom of dangers, and so we went into camp early. Lulled by the sense of security so easy to children, we were soon sleeping soundly except my mother. Her sensitive ears missed no sound and when, in the middle of the night a horseman rode up, she had been listening to his hoofbeats on the stony road for miles. He drew rein by our wagon and began to hello at us. Though terrified and trembling, my mother managed to ask him what was wanted, shaking her eldest son into consciousness meanwhile. A scattered conversation of questions and answers ensued while the boy was being roused, and our visitor showed a disposition to loiter and give trouble. Presently my mother hit upon a happy stratagem. She let down the flap of the wagon-cover she had raised, and called out, "George! George! wake up here and answer this fellow's questions for him." The name would fit for a man as well as a boy, and the broom-stick that was thrust out about this time was a good enough substitute for a rifle barrel when seen in the dim moonlight. At this psychologic moment Old Rover, on guard under the wagon as usual, let off a groan that would have done credit to a grizzly, and our friend of the horse lost no time in moving on. Of all this I knew nothing, else I too might have distinguished myself. When they pulled me out of the wagon over the double-trees I dimly felt that something unusual was on; the impression deepened as we went straggling up the few rods of road to a farmhouse and when I awoke the next morning to find myself within the four walls of a house I was thoroughly convinced of it. The good woman who received us with astonishment wept over my mother when she heard the story of her fright and petted and pampered us children as only a good woman will do when her emotions are enlisted.

We were off early the day we were to move on the great city. How far it seemed to the real town after we got to where the houses were close together! How our eyes opened wider and wider as each new wonder appeared! How our mother trembled at the prospect of things that might happen to us! How our driver watched his mustang team as he guided them among street cars and vehicles and along the crowded thoroughfares! But straight through the great city and across the long bridge into Illinois we went without a single mishap, going from our course but once and then by but a single block, so well had the way been learned beforehand.

I have seen St. Louis a good many times since then and on some gala occasions. I reveled in the marvels and beheld the crowds at the great World's Fair. But one never sees the miracle of a great city through the untaught eyes of childhood a second time. The bewilderment of attractions on every side, in the windows above and on the pavement below, the multiplicity of sights and sounds and smells fairly foundered our senses and furnished food for fervid remembrance during many a day that followed. I have seen many wonderful feats performed and been glad at times to add my note of applause to the huzzas of the crowd at exceptional displays of skill, but, all things considered, I do not know of one more wonderful than that of my elder brother who brought that team of mustangs and our ramshackle wagon through those miles of crowded streets, picked his way across the great bridge and landed his cargo safely on the Illinois side when he was barely turning thirteen. And this, too, is as it seems to me after thirty years.

Roads were better on the Illinois side and we made better time. A few days' travel brought us to that section of the country from which, one day six long years ago, we had gone forth in quest of a home. Just now as I write there comes to me the words of a woman of old returning to her kindred from a sad sojourn in the land of Moab. As never before I can feel the force of her lament, "Call me not Naomi" (that is pleasant), "but call me Mara" (that is bitter), "for the Almighty hath dealt bitterly with me." Human life is the best interpreter of the sacred scriptures.

One evening our tired horses were turned into a little lane with persimmon trees on either side. At the end there was a home-like farmhouse with a great Honey-locust in front. It was Uncle David's, and when we drew up on the chipyard by the gate our journey was ended. A great fat, good-natured woman who scolded incessantly but kindly and coaxingly came out to greet us, and a serious-looking man came in from the fields for a glimpse at this batch of battered flotsam cast up at his door by the ebb tide of immigration.

Uncle David! I speak the title with deference now. He was a poor man, though he seemed rich to us, for he owned a farm. But it was a rather poor farm in a rather poor township of a rather poor county of a rather poor part of Illinois. But, though he was a poor man, measured by his possessions, he was a man, and such a man as we find but two or three times in our three score years and ten. Politically he was a Democrat, fraternally a Free Mason, religiously a Universalist and socially the last court of appeal for the whole community. Uncle David! Gone from the earth these years, may the good Father of us all be kind to him where he is, for we were homeless and helpless in a world that knew not nor cared and he took us in.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Send for our Catalogue.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

THREE GREAT TRIPS

$16.00 DETROIT AND RETURN. On sale daily; limit thirty days; good via Chicago or direct to Detroit.

Detroit, located at the Canadian boundary, is noted as one of the most beautiful cities in the country; fine parks, miles of pretty boulevards, modern hotels and an ideal summer climate make it the "Mecca of the Summer Tourist." Belle Isle Park, an island of seven hundred acres, situated in the middle of the St. Clair, about two and one-half miles from the center of the city, is one of the most attractive public parks of the country. From Detroit many side trips of one and two days are available by lake, river and rail at nominal expense, including the Flats of the St. Clair, Huronia Beach, Port Huron, Chatham and Windsor, Ont., Put-in-Bay, Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, etc.

$19.40 BUFFALO, NIAGARA FALLS AND TORONTO AND RETURN. On sale daily. Limit thirty days. Stop-overs at Detroit, Cleveland and Niagara Falls. Routes: Wabash, via Chicago or direct via Detroit and rail to Toronto, returning via same route; or Wabash, via Chicago or direct, via Detroit, and rail or steamer from Detroit to Buffalo (or steamer from Detroit, via Cleveland to Buffalo), rail to Niagara Falls; Gorge Route to Lewiston; steamer to Toronto; returning same route or via direct rail line via Detroit.

$33.10 BOSTON AND RETURN. On sale daily, via Montreal and White Mountains, and every Thursday via Buffalo and direct line; limit thirty days. Stop-overs at Detroit, Niagara Falls, and at all Canadian points. Side trips via St. Lawrence River, $4.50 more from Kingston and $8.00 more from Toronto.

Full particulars of these and many other attractive trips at Eighth and Olive.

Or Write C. S. CRANE, G. P. A.,
St. Louis, Mo.

How the Minister's Cause Was Won

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

The congregation at Holland Center used many times to wish that they might get some minister who would please Matthew Fairbanks, but somehow none could ever be found. According to Matthew Fairbanks's ideas, they preached either too long or too short, visited too much or too little, were too much educated or else were not educated enough, were too narrow or too broad, and so on. And expressing his opinion as he did, freely and at all times, and being the successful man of business he was, he soon found followers. And somehow there was never good pastoral work done in that congregation at Holland Center.

The minister seemed to feel the chilliness of unfriendly eyes, and his sermons in some way fell to the ground. There being no one there to hold up his hands, he felt his helplessness. So, little by little, owing to Matthew Fairbanks, the critical feeling grew until each minister cut short his pastorate there with but small regret. The congregation dwindled more and more as time went on, and friction arose between the members.

"I'm sure I don't know what in the world is the matter with us," spoke up Mrs. Collier at prayer-meeting one evening. "Our members are growing fewer and fewer, the young people don't like to come, and even the people outside are beginning to regard us with suspicion. We have good members. Why is it?"

There was no minister present that evening, and this was a prayer-meeting just by themselves, but no one answered the question, and the little woman sat down. But the reason of the condition of that church at Holland Center was due solely to one man, Matthew Fairbanks, who, on account of his criticising, uncharitable, unjust, unChristian manner of talking, had brought things to just such an unhappy pass. The last minister had resigned and gone away, and a new one had taken his place. He was a clean-faced, ruddy young man, with frank eyes, and a decided, businesslike manner.

"Well, Matthew," asked old Caleb Powers, standing outside of his carpenter-shop one morning, as Matthew Fairbanks passed by, "I hear you've got a new minister. Like him?"

Matthew stopped. "No, I don't," he replied, testily. "Thinks just because he's out of college he knows it all. He's gone and done away with the old hymn-books we've used for over twenty years, and got new ones."

"Maybe they're better than the old ones," mildly suggested Caleb, but Matthew frowned.

"Instead of preaching Sunday nights, as he ought to, he's begun a series of lectures, too," went on Matthew, sternly.

"Guess he thinks you've been preached to enough," remarked Caleb, with a laugh. "I myself can't see that you're any the better for it. What you need," he added, with a shrewd look on his face, "is some one to get you out of the rut. You've had your way; let the new minister have his."

But Matthew deigned no reply, and went on his way. Old Caleb looked after him thoughtfully.

"There ain't a preacher in the whole of Christendom that could please that man," he said to himself. "A pity, too; Matthew Fairbanks has the makin' of a fine character, but that fault-findin', criticisin' way of his would kill any church on earth. I've always said," continued the old man, "if a church-member sees everything wrong under the sun in his own church, he'd better, for that church's good, be out of it."

Just about that time Matthew Fairbanks' only child fell sick. It seemed a trifling ailment at first, but as days passed, the slight cold developed into pneumonia. He had married late in life, and this little child, his only son, was the dearest object of his life. He was a sweet little boy of seven, with big brown eyes, a rosy mouth, and dimpled cheeks. How his father loved him! How he hung over him in speechless grief, as he grew no better!

"Matthew, you must rest," his wife would tell him, but none of her entreaties could move him from that little white bed.

"He has only a chance," the doctor finally acknowledged.

Matthew Fairbanks looked up. "I knew it!" he cried. "He will die!"

That afternoon the minister called. He had begged to be allowed to go up for only a minute.

Matthew sat by his child's bed, his eyes sunken, his face white. He scarcely looked up at his visitor.

The little boy lay flushed and worn among the pillows, his breath short. The minister took a seat by him.

"Well, Jamie," he began cheerily, taking up the little, wasted hand, "you're pretty sick, aren't you?—but see here, my boy. My wife and I have been thinking what would make you better, and finally we hit on this." He took up a package as he spoke, and opened it.

The child looked at it with interest. He had roused a little.

"It's a game, Jamie," explained the minister, "and it's called 'The Merry Men of War.' See, here are the soldiers, and you set them on this board on these pegs. At the end of the board opposite the men, is a little spring. Now you take this big marble and see if you can hit it. If you can, down goes your man—like this." With a dexterous move of his wrist he took a marble, touched the spring, and quick as a wink, over toppled the tall soldier.

Jamie laughed — even laughed. He reached out to take one of the fascinating men of war, but he was too weak.

"Papa," he said feebly, turning to his father, "come and see them. Will you play them with me?"

"Yes, my boy, yes," replied Mr. Fairbanks, huskily.

Jamie was worse that night, but he babbled of the toy soldiers, and how he was going to play with them when he got well.

As morning dawned, it seemed that the frail life must go out, but some little thread held him to life.

"It seems to be a mere matter of will power," spoke up the doctor, as restoratives were administered. "He's clinging to something."

And then Matthew Fairbanks thought of the toy soldiers, "The Merry Men of War," that Jamie and he were to play together when he grew better, and how, too, the minister had done his best to impress the child with the thought that they would make him better.

"He's living so he can play that game," thought the father.

Jamie did not die, but slowly and surely came back to life and during his convalescence "The Merry Men of War" were never off his coverlet except as his bed was made. He played with them at morning, he played with them at night, he played with them at all times.

One day while Jamie slept, with a soldier clasped in the frail hand, Matthew Fairbanks fell on his knees and asked the pardon of his heavenly Father. The scales had fallen from his eyes, and he saw himself as he really was, the one cause of all the discord in the Holland Center Church, from which so many bitter springs had sprung.

"I'll never, dear Father," he prayed, "never so long as I have life, speak one word against thy messengers again. O Lord, I've been wicked; I've been bitter; I've been censorious. And thou hast heaped coals of fire upon my head. When the minister brought my child that game it came to me: Would I have done the same in his case? He knew the unkind things I had said of him. He knew the seeds of strife I had sown, but he came, Lord, he came —came into the enemy's house because he had thy Spirit."

And down there by Jamie's bed as he wept and prayed, it seemed to him that, for the first time in his life, he felt the full sunshine of his Father's love. A new Matthew Fairbanks got up from his knees by that bed and went about his business. The first thing he did was to go to the minister, and, with tears in his eyes, ask his forgiveness.

"No matter what others attribute Jamie's recovery to," he said, brokenly, "I know—I feel sure—it was owing to you. And God revealed to me by that gracious act my own wrong-doing. Can you forgive me?"

The minister wrung his hand. There were tears in his eyes, too. "Praise the Lord," he said, brokenly. "Take ye away the stone. I've been praying for that, and he has."

The church at Holland Center grows now, the minister stays, and the right feeling prevails; and Matthew Fairbanks no longer finds fault, but is the minister's right hand in everything, and especially in all good works.

And why?—Because by a single loving act toward a little sick child that minister, through God, wrought—shall I say it?—almost a miracle.—Advent Review and Sabbath Herald.

When Feet are Tired and Sore

Bathe them with

Glenn's Sulphur Soap and lukewarm water, just before retiring. The relief is immediate, grateful and comforting. Sold by druggists. Always ask for

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

Send for our Catalogue.

Christian Publishing Company,

St. Louis, Mo.

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING

IN THE

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS

Two Cents per word, per insertion.

For Mother.

I give my mother lots of kisses,
There's really never one she misses:
A "wake-up kiss" right in the morning,
A "good-night kiss" when I've been bad,
A "sorry kiss" when I've been bad,
A "happy kiss" when I am glad.

Once she was sick; I went to stay
At Aunty's house, oh, miles away!
Then I sent kisses in a letter,
She said they truly made her better.
There's never really one she misses,
Oh, I give mother lots of kisses!
—A. V. L. Carrick, in Youth's Companion.

The Kidnapping of Araminta Amelia.

By Effie Stevens.

Patty walked slowly down the front walk with Araminta Amelia, carefully wrapped up in grandma's gray knit shawl, in her arms.

Araminta Amelia was just recovering from an attack of measles, and one could not be too careful, Patty thought.

Usually Araminta Amelia indulged in the mumps—the measles were something new in her somewhat varied experience of diseases.

When Patty reached the big maple tree next to the street, she placed Araminta Amelia upon the bench that was built around its trunk.

"The sun is considered good for sick people," Patty said to herself, unconsciously imitating Aunt Kate's decided tones.

Then Patty ran over to the other side of the yard to see how her flower garden was growing. Alas! it was not growing very well. Patty was such a little girl that she often forgot to take proper care of it. While she was mourning, the minister came along. He lived near by and was Patty's very good friend.

"Hello! Who is this young lady?" he cried, picking Araminta Amelia up.

Patty came running to the spot.

"Oh, you mustn't!" she exclaimed, breathlessly. "That's Araminta Amelia, and she's got the measles. You might catch them."

The minister laid Araminta Amelia down upon the bench very suddenly, and pretended to look very much alarmed. The minister was splendid at make-believes, almost as good as Patty herself. That was one reason why they were such good friends.

"Why didn't you tell me before?" he asked. "I haven't had the measles since I was two years, three months and two weeks, to say nothing of days, hours, minutes and seconds, younger than you are, Miss Patty, and sometimes people do have the measles twice, you know."

Patty nodded her head wisely. She knew all about it.

"Araminta Amelia has had the measles four times since last Friday, she remarked, gravely. Friday was the day on which Patty had learned that there was such a disease as the measles.

"You don't say so!" cried the minister in well simulated astonishment. "Well, if you leave her out here all alone I am afraid some one may kidnap her."

Then the minister hurried away, and Patty sat down beside Araminta Amelia with a perplexed frown upon her chubby face.

Patty was just beginning to discover how many new things, especially words, a very little girl has to learn about.

She puckered up her tiny brows and pursed her rosy lips, as she had seen grandma do when she was in doubt about anything, but it did not help her to understand the meaning of the funny word.

"Kid-nap," she said slowly to herself "Kid-nap. I know what a nap is. Araminta and I take a nap every afternoon. But kid—kid"—

"Mamma wears kid gloves," she remembered after a moment. "Gloves and going to sleep. Oh, dear, that doesn't mean anything at all! This is a bad something that might happen to Araminta Amelia. I'll run and ask mamma."

So the little girl, forgetful of the possible danger that might befall her beloved dolly, left her on the bench alone, and ran into the house.

"Oh, mamma!" Patty cried. "What is a kid?"

Mamma was busy, but she stopped a minute to answer her little daughter's question.

"What is it about a kid?" she asked wonderingly.

"What is a kid?" Patty repeated, eagerly, an idea coming to her suddenly. "What animal is a kid?"

"O," replied mamma, "a kid is a baby goat. We saw one in the park a while ago, you know."

"I remember," replied Patty, her face fairly beaming with smiles. "Thank you, mamma," and away she trotted.

"I suppose the minister meant that a kid might come and trouble Araminta Amelia while she was taking a nap," she mused, "though why he didn't say so, I can't see."

When Patty reached the bench she stopped and stared and stared.

Araminta Amelia was gone.

Patty looked on the ground; she looked up and down the street; she even looked up into the branches of the tree above her, although, of course, she knew better than to think Araminta Amelia had walked off or climbed a tree by herself, but no Araminta Amelia could she find.

Patty began to cry as if her heart would break.

Just then her big brother, Tom, came along.

"Why, what's the matter here?" he asked, picking his small sister up in his strong arms.

"A—a—kid's carried off Araminta Amelia," Patty sobbed, despairingly.

"Who was it?" inquired Tom, fiercely. "I'll attend to any youngster who troubles my little sister."

"You're my dearest brother!" Patty cried, hugging him ecstatically. "But it wasn't any youngster, it was just a kid—a baby goat."

At that moment Rover, the dog, came running to meet them with something long and gray dragging behind him.

"Why—why," said Patty in amazement, "that's Araminta Amelia's shawl."

"It looks very much like grandma's shawl," observed Tom, dryly, setting Patty down and unfastening the shawl which had caught upon Rover's collar.

"I borrowed it," said Patty. "Grandma said I might."

"All right," said Tom.

"Rover, old fellow," addressing the puppy coaxingly, and showing him the shawl, "where did you get it? Show us, that's a good dog."

But Rover only wagged his tail and barked joyously, as though he thought he had done something very smart indeed.

By this time the entire family, with the exception of papa and the baby, had arrived upon the scene.

Finally, Rover, evidently tired of keeping his great secret to himself, ran into the vegetable garden, behind the house, and began digging down into the soft earth. The others followed.

All at once a bit of pink silk appeared above ground. Patty did not wait any longer. She dropped down upon her knees beside Rover and began digging as hard as she could. Between them both it did not take very long to unearth poor, abused Araminta Amelia.

"I guess your kid was only a puppy after all," said Tom, laughing.

"Yes," replied Patty in a puzzled way, "the minister said a kid woulld do something bad to her while she was taking a nap if I didn't take care. And I—I ran off and forgot her. I'll never do it again. But I guess he meant Rover, though it was funny for him to call a dog a kid."

Every one looked puzzled. What could Patty mean?

"Just what did the minister say, dearie? Tell mother," said mamma, putting her arms around Patty, who was beginning to cry once more.

"He didn't say exactly those words," sobbed Patty; "but he meant them. He said kid and nap, anyway."

Tom laughed. "Kidnap," he shouted as soon as he could speak.

At that the others laughed, too, and even Patty smiled through her tears, though she did not know what they were laughing about.

Mamma, seeing her puzzled face, explained softly that when the minister said some one might kidnap Araminta Amelia, he only meant that some one might carry her off.

"And Rover did kidnap Araminta Amelia," returned Patty. Thus Patty learned a new word.—Congregationalist.

Paying the Fiddler.

"If you dance, you must pay the fiddler." That is very old, and very true. It is one way of saying, "If you have your fun, you must pay the cost of it."

As a young man was leaving college for the summer vacation, an older man quoted that to him. "Yes, you must pay the fiddler," he repeated. "And sometimes his charges are very high. Count the cost; ask his price before you dance."

Quite true. You'd better think of it. Sometimes he charges you your good health, and you go through the remainder of life's way wearily dragging a diseased body. Sad handicap. And you paid it all for just a short dance, just a brief "good time." Sometimes he charges you your virtue and honor, and you are a moral leper after that, infecting every one you are allowed to touch. Big price to pay for a dance.

Sometimes he charges you the respect and confidence of your wife, the welfare of your children, the sweetness and happiness of your home. I'm sure you would never have danced had you first asked what you would have to pay the fiddler.

My poor girl, you gave him the roses in your cheeks, the fragrance of your thoughts, the glory of your life. You gave him all; and you are left poor indeed. I'm so sorry for you. Why did you not ask his charge?

People, think. Look about you, and think. See the old dry orange shells, the pulpy sweetness all gone, all squeezed out to satisfy the fiddler. See the bloated bundles of putrid badness; the goodness all gone under the crooked fingers of the fiddler. Hell's highway is trodden smooth by the pauperized dancers. People, do think.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

AN IDEAL LOCATION IN THE CAPITAL CITY OF IOWA

OPEN TO BOTH MEN & WOMEN ON EQUAL TERMS

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

DES MOINES, IOWA

College of Law

¶One of the oldest and best equipped schools of the Middle West. Offers a three year course in law subjects leading to the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Also a combined course leading to the degrees of A. B. [or Ph. B.] and LL. B.

The location in the capital city of Iowa, gives the student an opportunity to become acquainted with the procedure of the courts, both state and federal, and affords excellent facilities for research work. The course of instruction has been carefully arranged—the text book, case, and lecture systems having been judiciously combined.

Established in 1881, its growth has been continuous. More than 1850 students in attendance during the school year 1907-8. More than 100 instructors in its faculties. Eight well equipped buildings. Good library facilities.

Expenses Are Low

Students so desiring can usually find remunerative employment in the vicinity.

Fall Term opens September 14th-1908
Winter Term opens January 4th-1909
Spring Term opens March 29th-1909
Summer Term opens June 18th-1909

Send for announcement of department in which you are interested. Address,

Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa

College of Liberal Arts

¶ Offers courses of four years based upon high school courses, four years in extent, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. Courses, requiring an additional year's work, leading to the corresponding Master's degree. Courses are also offered in combination with the Bible College, the Law College, and the Medical College.

The system of instruction embraces a major, a minor, and elective subjects, thus permitting the student to arrange such a course as will be best adapted to his needs.

College of Medicine

¶Offers a course of four years based on four-year high school courses.

First two years' work taken at University, where anatomy, physiology, chemistry and other fundamentals are taught. Each department has thoroughly equipped laboratories.

Last two years taken at New Medical Building. Centrally located. Clinical advantages unsurpassed.

Clinics in hospitals and college free dispensary.

Combined courses leading to the degree of A. B. and M. D., or S. B. and M. D.

Conservatory of Music

¶ The largest institution presenting musical iustruction in the Middle West. The aim is not to count growth by numbers of students, but by their musical equipment and ability to present to others that which they studied here.

Courses are offered in voice, piano, pipe organ, violin, harmony, music history, piano tuning.

College of Education

¶A school primarily for teachers. Offers course of four years, based upon high school courses four years in extent, leading to degree of B. Ed. The student completing the work may also receive the degree, A. B., Ph. B., or S. B., if work has been properly planned.

Two-year courses have been arranged especially for those preparing to teach in small high schools, or in the grades, and for primary, kindergarten, oratory, music, drawing, physical culture, and domestic science teachers and supervisors.

College of the Bible

¶ Offers English courses, based upon a four-year high school course, leading to a certificate. Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to the degree of B. D. Combined courses leading to degrees of A. B. [or Ph. B.] and B. D.

The college endeavors to make its course of instruction adequate to the growing demands of ministerial students.

The chief purpose is to provide Biblical instruction on liberal and scientific principles for students, irrespective of church relations, and at the same time furnish ample facilities in education for the Christian ministry. It seeks to encourage an impartial and unbiased investigation of the Christian scriptures.

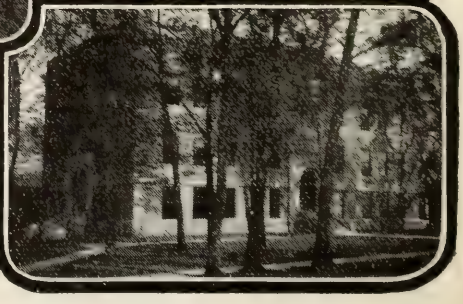
Drake University Summer School

¶ The best possible provision for instruction of teachers in all subjects for certificates of any grade, for credits looking towards advanced standing in general and special professional lines.

Provision for those who wish to begin work at any time after May 15th, making it possible to get three months instruction in certain lines.

The University High School

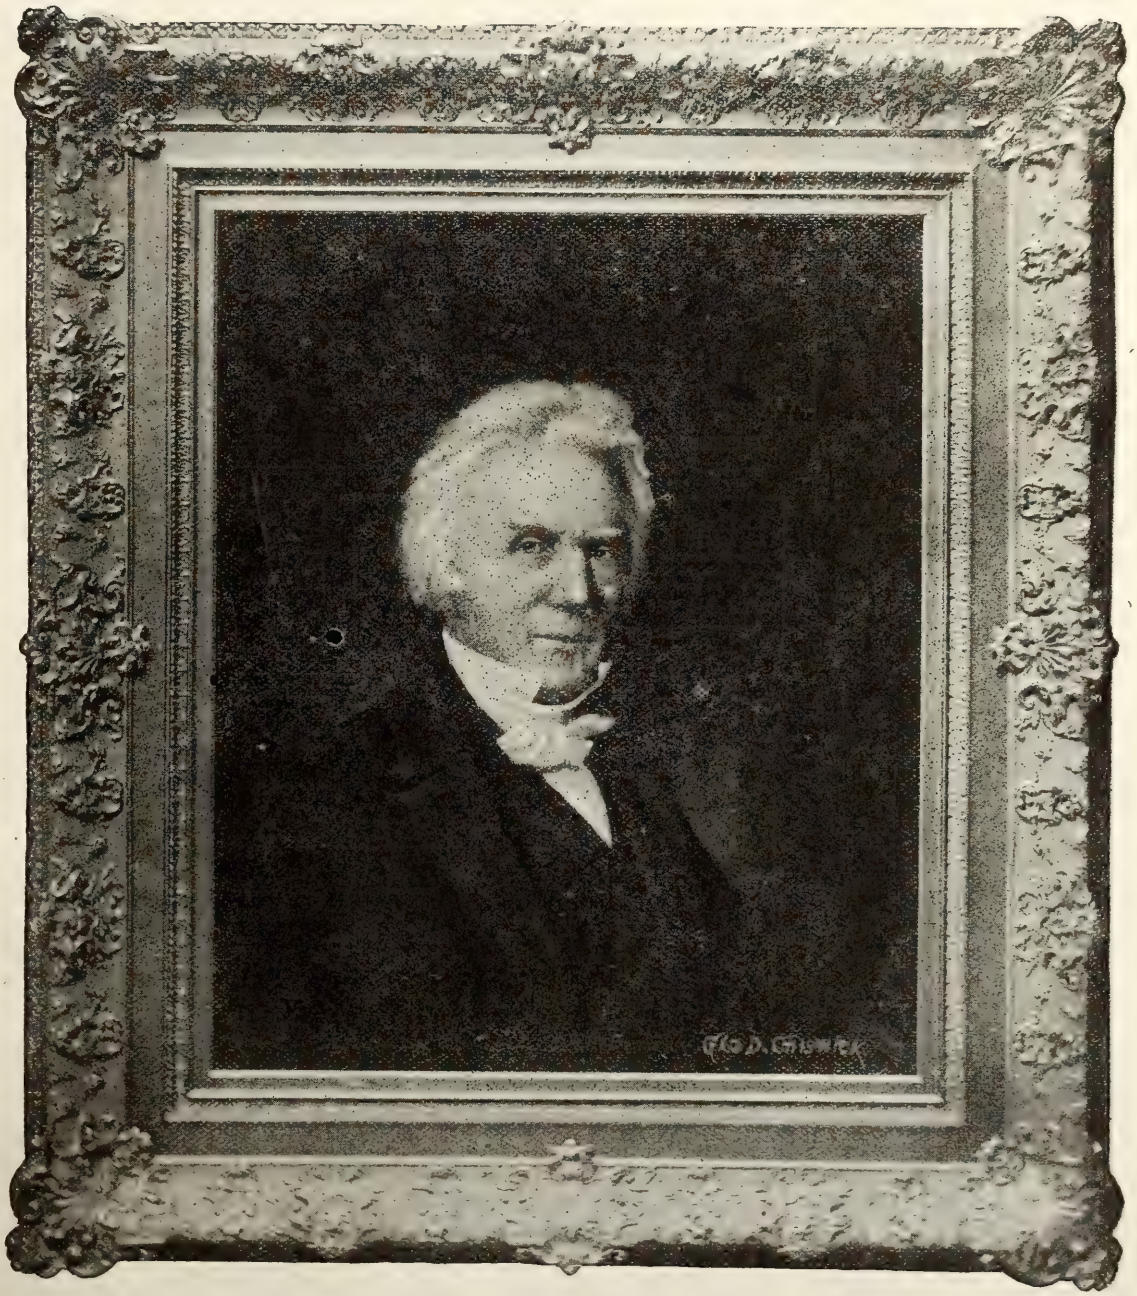
¶Classical, Scientific and Commercial courses for students preparing for college or the practical affairs of life. The Commercial course includes a thorough drill in book-keeping and actual business and office practice, or in shorthand and typewriting, including also the use of the business phonograph.



THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Vol. XLV. ST. LOUIS, JULY 9, 1908. Number 28.



Alexander Campbell, from a photograph of the new portrait just presented to the Iowa Historical Building by our convention. See page 881.

The Christian-Evangelist

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor

F. D. POWER,
B. B. TYLER,
W. DURBAN,
} Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 867
Editorial—
A Work of Disintegration.....868
"Is Our Protestantism Still Protestant" 868
Union in Chicago.....869
Notes and Comments.....869
Current Religious Thought.....870
Editor's Easy Chair.....871
Contributed Articles—
Mrs. Mary Ann Barclay. Philip Johnson 872
Promoting the Summer Slump. W. R. Warren 874
Waiting Sixty-three Years for the Harvest. William Oeschger.....874
The Knickerbocker Parson. William Durban 875
Increase of the Ministry.....876
Voices of the Dead. Charles Darsie..876
Our Budget 877
Report of the International Lesson Sunday-school Committee 880
The Iowa Convention.....881
Adult Bible Class Movement.....883
News from Many Fields.....884
Evangelistic 886
Sunday-school 887
Midweek Prayer-meeting 887
Christian Endeavor 888
People's Forum 889
Obituaries 889
The Home Department.....890

The New Orleans Convention

OCTOBER, 1908

Since our communication on this subject in the last week's issue of The Christian-Evangelist we have received information to the effect that the round trip rate, by rail, from St. Louis to New Orleans, and return, will be $18.25. To this must be added the sleeping car charge of $2.25 each way for a single berth, or $4.50 each way for a double berth.

As yet, we have not selected our route, but hope to do so in the very near future, and will then make definite announcement concerning every detail of the trip, including Hotel accommodations at New Orleans, for those who prefer to go to the St. Charles Hotel (the headquarters of the Convention) rather than some boarding house. The Hotel rate will not be expensive, considering the accommodations furnished.

We hope that many will decide to go to this Convention, and will join The Christian-Evangelist family in whatever arrangements it may make. In this connection, we are pleased to announce that the National Benevolent Association will join with us on this occasion, so that the party from St. Louis will not be divided. Therefore, the friends of The Christian-Evangelist, and also of the National Benevolent Association, will please report to us their intention to join us, and to all who send in their names and addresses, we will send special information in the form of circular letters that we may not have space for publication in full, in The Christian-Evangelist.

Sincerely,

W. Daviess Pittman

Business Manager.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

THE TEACHER TRAINING HANDBOOK

By MARION STEVENSON

YOU WANT IT

1. Because it is the most complete teacher-training book published.
2. Because it will teach your class how to study the Bible.
3. Because it teaches the class the Bible rather than something about the Bible.
4. Because it makes the most thorough work possible.
5. Because it has been adopted as a college text book.
6. Because it gives a true view of Old and New Testament History.
7. Because it is the only teacher-training book published which gives New Testament Institutions.
8. Because it gives a working knowledge of Bible Geography.
9. Because it is up to date on Bible School organization, and pedagogy.
10. Because it received the unanimous approval of the International Committee.

Manilla binding, 224 pages.
Single copy, 30c, prepaid. Five or more copies, not prepaid, 25c each.
Limp cloth, 40c each.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, JULY 9, 1908. Number 28.

Current Events

This paper goes to press too early in the week to give any report of the doings of the Democratic convention which meets in Denver on Tuesday of this week. The interest centers in the choice of a candidate for vice-president and the formulation of a platform. The nomination of Mr. Bryan for first place on the ticket seems so certain that there is little room for excitement on the subject. His campaign managers claim to have already pledged 25 more than the two-thirds which the rule of a Democratic convention requires for a nomination. The platform is awaited with interest. This much, however, can be predicted in advance. It will be a campaign in which it will be extremely difficult to state the positions of the two parties in a way which will clearly show the contrast between them without using terms which one or the other of them would repudiate. There will be a tariff plank in the platform which will differ rather widely from the Republican statement, which calls for a tariff adjusted to cover the extra cost of production in the United States "plus a reasonable profit." There will be an anti-injunction plank which will try very hard to please the labor unions better than the Republican element without alarming capital. Beyond that—let us wait and see.

Democrats at Denver.

The Mexican government is being harassed by a joint movement of insurrectionists and bandits. The former want a more liberal government; the latter want no government. But for their present purposes they find it easy enough to join hands in rising against their common enemy, the strong government of Diaz. The storm center of the insurrection is at Torreon, in the northern part of Mexico. It is difficult to believe that, with the almost perfect system which Diaz has developed for the control of the country and the putting down of the slightest incipient uprising, the insurrection can assume very alarming proportions, but the government evidently takes the situation seriously and is preparing to meet it by both military and diplomatic measures. Ambassador Creel, the Mexican representative at Washington, who had been preparing for an extended absence, has been ordered back to Washington. The United States has always furnished a convenient base of operations for leaders of insurrectionary movements in Mexico, and more than one revolutionary junta has been discovered from time to time actively at work. With the degree of freedom of speech and of the press which is allowed by our laws, it is possible for a band of active agitators to do a good deal of effective and pernicious work without actually rendering themselves liable to punishment, and it has not always been easy to convince our Southern sister that we were dealing fairly with her when we have failed to break up and deliver over to her tender mercies these companies of agitators. The Diaz regime has done wonders for Mexico. Its iron-handed style of government has brought peace and a reasonable degree of prosperity where in the old days every man did that which was right in his own eyes. And in the main it has been a wise and beneficent hand as well as a strong one. But the time has come for a more liberal government. A republic composed of subjects can not permanently endure, and Mexico's troubles with insurrectionists will increase rather than diminish unless her government becomes republican in fact as well as in form.

The Mexican Insurrection.

The death of Mr. Cleveland calls to mind the fact that he was one of our greatest political phrase-makers. He had the gift of hitting, oftener than other public men, upon a phrase which caught the public ear and fancy and attained wide currency. Some words he rescued from the oblivion in which they had reposed in the unabridged dictionary and put upon the tongues of men. Other words, ordinary enough in themselves, he coined into phrases which became part of the currency of common speech. Here are a few notable phrases and sentences which have been culled from his public utterances and writings:

Public office is a public trust.

After an existence of nearly twenty years of innocuous desuetude, these laws are brought forth.

Party honesty is party expediency.

It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory.

I do not believe that nations any more than individuals can violate the rules of honesty and fair dealing.

If the wind is in the south or west, so much the better, but let's go fishing wherever the wind may be.

Cleveland as a Phrase-Maker.

We failed to comment, a week ago, on the very interesting reply which President Eliot of Harvard made to President Roosevelt's telegraphic request that he permit a couple of boys who were under discipline to row on the Harvard crew in the Yale-Harvard race. The two boys had violated an important college rule in connection with the use of the library and had been suspended in consequence. This put them off of the crew, and it seemed quite important for the winning of the race that they should be reinstated. The President of the United States and the Assistant Secretary of State, both Harvard alumni and eager sportsmen, wired to President Eliot asking if he could not find some other punishment and let them return to their places in the boat. The reply was a little homily on college ethics and honor such as few people have the temerity to give to the President of the United States. President Eliot said: "Each man did a dishonorable thing. One violated in his private interest and in a crooked way a rule made in the common interest, while the other gave a false name and did not take subsequent opportunity to give his own. The least possible punishment was putting them on probation, but that drops them from the crews. A keen and sure sense of honor being the finest result of college life, I think the college and graduates should condemn effectively dishonorable conduct. The college should teach that one must never do scurvy things in the supposed interest or for the pleasure of others." This is a tolerably pointed observation. It makes it very clear that there is one great educator in the country who considers that winning a boat-race is not nearly so important for his college as maintaining its ideals of honor and the discipline which is essential to the proper maintenance of that honor. One feels pretty sure after this that there is not going to be at Harvard one sort of treatment for athletes and another for common students who contribute nothing but their scholarship to the honor of the college. It is a very wholesome lesson. Under the circumstances, it was not without a certain sense of satisfaction (even to a Yale man) to observe that Harvard won the race after all, and without the services of the two supposedly indispensable lads who had been dropped from the crew. College discipline and college are at an end when the athlete becomes so indispensable that special consideration must be shown to him by the college authorities.

President vs. President.

The noiseless gun is an accomplished fact—and a very deadly fact it will probably prove to be if its manufacture and sale are unrestricted. Hiram P. Maxim has perfected a weapon in which the noise is eliminated, very much as the noise of the gasoline explosion in an automobile is eliminated, by the use of a muffler which allows the gas produced by the explosion of the powder to escape slowly from the barrel of the gun instead of escaping with a rush all at once. The noise which ordinarily accompanies an explosion is produced not by the actual explosion, that is, the generating of gas by the ignition or concussion of the explosive material, but by the sudden escape of the gas. In a test made in-doors in the presence of a number of scientific men, the gun sent a thirty-two-calibre soft-nosed bullet through a city directory and yet made so little noise that some of the observers thought that the gun had not gone off at all.

The Noiseless Gun.

Editorial

A Work of Disintegration.

We called attention recently to some circulars which seemed to point to a movement in antagonism to our present organized missionary work. We are now in receipt of a letter from a brother in the western part of the United States in which he says:

"I am writing for information on missionary plans and methods. We have here in ——— a little group of men advocating the adoption of the missionary plan proposed by Russell Errett, viz.: each church to select the field it desires to help and send its missionary offering direct, without passing through the hands of any Missionary Board. Of course, you know all about the plan. I want you to write me frankly and as fully as you feel able, just what you think about it."

There is more of the letter, but the above will suffice. We think it better to tell our brother and others what we "think of it" through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Observe that we are asked to give our opinion of "the missionary plan proposed by Russell Errett." When and where was this missionary plan proposed? It is assumed by the writer of this letter that we know all about it. We have seen nothing of it whatever, except what this letter states. What new method of proposing a new missionary plan for the adoption of the brotherhood is now being used? So important a matter as a change in our missionary methods as is indicated in this extract ought to receive open and fair consideration. No other policy can win among us.

If we are to write "frankly" concerning what we think of this "missionary plan," we must say distinctly and unequivocally, that it means disintegration, division and anarchy in our religious work. It means going back more than half a century to the disorganized condition out of which we have been steadily growing. It means undoing the work of more than three score years, under the leadership of such men as Alexander Campbell, David S. Burnett, Isaac Errett, Thomas Munnell, Robert Moffett, and a host of others who have gone before, and of those still living, who have given their lives to the great work of bringing the churches into line for co-operation in the conversion of the world. It means shutting our eyes to the tendency of the age, which is toward union and co-operation, and going back into the individualistic and haphazard plan of every man and every church acting independently of all others. Were this plan to meet with any general encouragement, it would bring shame and confusion into our ranks at a time when we should be united, harmonious and enthusiastic, moving together as a great disciplined army to the celebration of our approaching Centennial.

This, in brief, is what we think of it. When we come to look for the motive that lies behind a movement like this, which would turn back the hands on the dial of our progress for more than half a century, we must say, distinctly and unequivocally, we hesitate to speak. Admitting that the motive may be all right, is there not a policy advocated and a spirit manifested that can but work mischief to our unity and co-operative work? We would not charge our anti-missionary brethren with dishonest motives, but we do know that their policy and principles, should they prevail, would mean utter disaster to the great cause we represent. Unity and co-operation are one and inseparable. To oppose the latter is to strike a blow at the former. For this reason, and other obvious ones, we urge the brethren everywhere to stand by our present missionary organization. God has greatly blessed us, so co-operating, and we ought not to turn back now.

We have never doubted for a moment that the great heart of the brotherhood beats soundly and in sympathy with our great and growing missionary work, and with all that we have gained in the way of better organization and discipline in our missionary methods. The danger has been, and is, that brethren will allow themselves to be led, unwittingly, into measures and movements whose effects will be disintegration and division. "What we say unto one, we say unto all, Watch."

"Is Our Protestantism Still Protestant?"

The above is the title of a very thoughtful article in the first number of the "Harvard Theological Review," which began with the present year. The article is by William Adams Brown, of Union Theological Seminary. The writer mentions two answers to this question by two distinguished authors. Prof. Harnack in his book, "What Is Christianity?" holds to the view that modern thought has introduced "no new phase in the history of the Christian religion." On the other hand, Sabatier, in his work entitled "The Religions of Authority and the Religion of the Spirit," regards both Protestantism and Roman Catholicism as outgrown forms of Christianity, representing religions of authority, while a new and distinct type of Christianity is being introduced, which he calls the religion of the Spirit. The writer of the article agrees with Prof. Harnack, that Protestantism is capable of adjusting itself to the new conditions, by being true to its original principles; but while he admits the force of Sabatier's position, he thinks Prof. Harnack minimizes too much the changes which have occurred in modern thought. Moreover, he thinks that many Protestants have indeed lost the Protestant spirit.

In order to answer his question, the writer of the article asks what it means to be Protestant, "and especially what is the distinctive mark by which Protestantism is separated from the type of religion which we call Catholic." After denying that this distinctive mark is the difference of experimental and traditional religion, as some think, or an individualistic and social religion, which others have affirmed, the writer holds that the real difference is found "in its view of the nature and ground of faith. To Protestantism in all its forms, faith is a personal act involving the whole man—reason, as well as feeling and will. To Catholicism this need not be the case. * * In Catholicism we have a rational system erected upon a foundation which is nonrational. In Protestantism credence is asked for dogmas surpassing reason in the name of a rational faith." In this connection the author has this significant paragraph on faith which is well worth studying: "Where faith is understood in the Catholic sense as belief upon testimony, it is manifestly inadequate unless supplemented by works. Indeed, it is itself of the nature of a work; since it is one among other conditions which the Church prescribes, upon the fulfillment of which a man's salvation depends. But if faith means trust in a person worthy to be trusted, carrying with it the inner response of the whole being to the ideals and purposes which he reveals, then it is clear that it must be the all-comprehending Christian virtue including within itself all else, and of itself alone sufficient for salvation." Here is where modern Protestantism has erred, as relates to faith. Using the term in its narrower sense as excluding what St. Paul calls "the obedience of faith," it has predicated salvation on it alone, without that surrender to "Christ's ideals and purposes," which is an essential part of that faith on which justification is based in the New Testament.

Coming to the question, "What is the distinguishing characteristic of the thought which we call modern?" the writer answers it thus: "It is the extent to which it recognizes, and the consistency with which it attempts to apply, the principle of development." This idea, he says, has modified every department of our thought and life. "It has reconstructed our science, rewritten our history, and is transforming our social, our economic and our political ideals. It would be strange, indeed, if it did not leave its traces on our theology." The writer adds: "What differentiates modern Protestantism from its predecessor is not the fact that it has abandoned the earlier faith in a rational revelation of universal authority, in order to take refuge in some vague religion of the Spirit without definite content, but that, whereas the older Protestantism found that revelation in an unchanging system once for all communicated, modern Protestantism finds it in living principles incarnated in a person, and therefore a free and expanding life, and progressively applied and verified in the course of an enlarging experience." As there are two types of Catholicism, the Greek and the Roman, the one stagnant and the other progressive, so the writer holds, "What is needed is a like discrimination between the different types of Protestantism; between the Protestantism which turns its face to the past, and finds God's revelation in an unchanging system contained in an infallible book, and the Protestantism which looks toward the future, finding God's revelation in living principles, incarnated in a person, and hence needing ever new application to the changing conditions of a changing world." The writer holds that these fourfold divisions, viz.: the two types of Catholicism and the two types of Protestantism, present the real situation as it exists to-day. Under the dogma of papal infallibility, Roman Catholicism finds the opportunity of cutting loose from the dead past and adapting itself to new conditions as they arise, which, the writer holds, is the real significance of that dogma.

But Christianity, the writer holds, is larger than any of these types. These different influences are in Christianity because they are in life; but Christianity itself is something different from these. "It is the new impulse imparted to the life of humanity by the life of Jesus of Nazareth—the new insight he brought, the new stream of tendency which, beginning from him, has entered into the strife of human forces, playing upon and being played upon by them all." While Christ may be found in all these historic forms, "it does not follow that he is found in all with equal clearness and adequacy." "The Roman religion of progress is truer than the Greek religion of stagnation, and the Protestantism which insists upon bringing all so-called progress to the test of reason represents a step beyond both." We take it that the author means by "the test of reason," the reason enlightened by revelation and the light of Christian experience. The closing sentences of the article deserve careful consideration: "We should belie our spiritual ancestry if we did not recognize the great contribution of the Reformation to human progress, and jealously guard the truth which the Reformation won. But there is work still to do, and that is to present the Christ whom all Christians know as Lord, and whom the earlier Protestants recognized as their individual Saviour by his direct appeal to each man's heart and conscience—to present this living, spiritual Christ in his larger social relations as the inspiration to the goal of progress. This is the task of the theology of the future."

So much for the article. It is, then, according to the author's last statement, simply the question whether Protestantism can be true to the Christ of revelation in his demands upon the Church. That it has not been in the past is evident. That it is coming to be more conscious of its disloyalty to Christ, in its zeal for denominationalism and sectarian tenets, is equally evident. We believe, with the writer, that if the principles of Protestantism be carried to their legitimate conclusion, it need not be succeeded by a different type of Christianity. It remains to be seen, however, whether it is sufficiently plastic for Christ to mold it into that church, which is to be without spot and without blemish. Will Protestantism respond to Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers, and close up its divided ranks so that it can make common cause against common foes? Will it maintain an open mind for the reception of the ever-increasing knowledge of truth, while holding fast to Christ, and adjust itself to the new conditions as they shall arise, making the church the obedient agent of Christ's will, and the willing instrument of social service to mankind? These are the questions which confront our modern Protestantism, and the answer which it gives will determine the question whether our Protestantism is still Protestant.

Union in Chicago.

We referred briefly in our news columns last week to the union which has been consummated in Chicago between the First Christian Church in that city and the Memorial Baptist Church. The prominence of these two churches, and their location in the heart of a great city like Chicago, give unusual importance to the event. Some of the conditions which led to this union, and on which it was effected, are worth mentioning as a guide in similar situations.

1. The local situation made it desirable. These two churches were working in the same community, among the same people. One of them had a church building and no pastor. The other had a pastor and no church building.

2. The fact above stated, standing alone, would not have justified union; but in connection with another fact, namely, that the two churches were standing practically for the same things, both holding to "the one Lord, one faith and one baptism," discarding human creeds as authority and holding the New Testament as their sufficient rule of faith and practice, to unite seemed to be the wise and Christian thing to do.

3. Something must always be conceded in order to union, but nothing that is vital or important should be conceded. They must have a common name. "The Memorial Church of Christ (Baptist and Disciple)" was agreed upon, because both claimed to be Churches of Christ before the union, and neither was ashamed of having connection with the bodies known as Baptists and Disciples. Their missionary offerings are to be divided between the two bodies, as heretofore. The united congregation meets in the Baptist building and has elected Dr. Willett as pastor. All the details of worship and work will be amicably settled by the united congregation.

We have not, at this writing, seen the pamphlets issued by the two churches when the union was consummated which, we learn, have been sent to the office by Bro. Richard Gentry, now in Chicago, who, in a personal letter, says that "The united church met on Friday last and unanimously chose Dr. Willett as its minister. The question of an associate minister is to be decided later. Last Sunday the united church began its existence with a very happy day, a large Bible school and a large congregation, with splendid interest."

We are not able to see why the cause of Christ is not strengthened in Chicago by this union. It seems to us that in all similar circumstances such union might be effected to the glory of God and the advancement of his Kingdom. In many other cases there may be union; that is, practical co-operation as brethren, without the merging of local churches. In other localities, however, union must wait for the removal of prejudice and misunderstanding. In all cases let the brethren seek to be guided by the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ.

Notes and Comments

Brother Carpenter, whose communication will be found in "Our Forum," needed not to assure us of his own loyalty to our missionary organizations, nor that of the members of his Board, and of many others whose names appear on the program at Bethany Park. That is not the question. How does Brother Carpenter explain the contents of these circulars that are being sent out by the Standard Publishing Co., and by Brother J. V. Coombs, in which the Evangelistic Congress is set over against our missionary conventions, and the Congress, which has been held for a number of years, as of a different type and having a different spirit and aims? Brother Carpenter's letter explains nothing, except that he, and the Board of Bethany Assembly, are not aware of an ulterior aim behind the active propaganda that is being carried forward by these circulars, and through one of our papers, in behalf of the National Institute of Teacher Training and National Congress of Evangelism. Let the authors of these circulars express their friendship for, and hearty co-operation with, our missionary organizations, as Brother Carpenter has done for himself, and let them assure the public that nothing will be said or done in these meetings to prejudice the brethren against our present co-operative missionary work, and we will gladly publish it and the brethren will feel assured that, in going to Bethany Park, they will not be lending their influence to a divisive and opposition movement. Brother Carpenter mentions frequently the name of Brother Moninger. He is not a principal in the matter. These circulars emanated from the Standard Publishing Company. We await an explanation from the author of these circulars as to their meaning.

"The Southern Presbyterian" mentions, as a noteworthy fact, "the hunger of the people for instructive preaching, for that which evokes vigorous thinking. People seem to be wearying of mere illustrations and entertainment in the pulpit, but eager for that which evokes thought. Doctrinal preaching, if well presented, is heartily welcomed by large numbers." This is certainly a healthy sign so far as it exists. When we learn to discriminate between "doctrinal preaching" and sectarian preaching, there will be far less prejudice against the former than now exists. Preaching that is not doctrinal, that is, that does not teach, lacks an important and essential element.

Our real progress as a religious body began with learning to co-operate through voluntary organizations. Every advanced step among us has been marked by more thorough organization of our forces. Our great missionary organizations are the crown and glory of our work. They represent to the world the concrete result of our zeal for the conversion of the world. Through co-operation, by means of these organizations, our churches have grown in liberality, in spirituality, and in devotion to the general interests of Christ's kingdom. Any attempt to oppose or undermine these great organizations that are accomplishing so much for the conversion of the world and for the spread of the plea which we are making for Christian union, should be discountenanced by every lover of the cause of Christ.

Current Religious Thought

"An exchange asks: 'What shall it profit a church if it sell its oysters and ice cream and lose its spirituality?' Let those churches answer that neglect the prayer-meetings and the class-meetings, and have 'leap year socials,' lilliputian weddings and ecclesiastical cake walks."—Methodist-Protestant.

It is a fatal mistake, thinks "The Presbyterian," to ask a man to join the church before inviting him to be united to the church's Head. "One belongs to the church because he belongs to Christ. He belongs to the Master by right of purchase. He belongs to the church as an element of its life. The church-sponge does not truly belong to the church. He is a parasite and a poisoner."

The "Western Recorder" comments on the tendency that will be specially noticeable in the dog days as follows:

"The 'Congregationalist' is right in saying that the advertisements of Sunday services of several Baptist churches in Boston are signals of distress. It adds: 'Such topics, 'The kind of a girl a young man should marry,' etc., indicate desperate need of an audience. One church announces 'a unique stereopticon service,' 'young lady ushers,' 'no other service like this in Boston.' Thank heaven for that.'"

Says the "American Israelite": "The spread of the anarchistic spirit is in the main due to the casting out of religion from the souls of the malcontents. The increase of suicide is based upon the removal of faith from the heart of man. Drive religion out of the world and humanity would soon lapse back into a barbaric state. The world can not get along without God and religion."

In an article on Brotherhood the "Advance" says:

"When analyzed to its bottom principle, the organization of the Brotherhood means a revival movement. Its essential purpose is to revive the religious life of the men of the churches and to keep them revived. And this may be expected to lead on to a more general evangelistic movement for the conversion of men. The more the organization takes this direction, the greater will be its influence and permanent efficiency. As an evangelizing agency the Brotherhood may become such a power for good as can not be easily measured. With converted men and women, it will not be difficult to bring in the reign of social righteousness and of kindly relations which some of the speakers urged with intense eloquence."

To the man who depends on novelties, here is a word of sound warning from the "Southern Presbyterian":

"What 'draws' may not build up. The novelty seeker will go to the novelty giver. Attendants caught by novelties seldom last long. It is against their nature to hold on long, or to be held on long. The pure, simple, old-fashioned gospel, simply, lovingly, sympathetically told, is, after all, the true and permanent attraction."

"A great deal is getting into print and otherwise being given publicity about how the farmer is going to be affected by prohibition. Secretary of Agriculture Wilson pronounces it all rot. He says if every distillery and brewery in the country were to close its doors the American farmers, as a class, wouldn't know it, so far as the effect would show itself on the markets for grain."—National Daily News.

Bishop Doane joins issue with "the narrow church" in the following fashion and the "Churchman" has some comments:

"'If the Church is to be kept in turmoil and unrest by a few turbulent spirits, if she is to be made ludicrous by an attempt to tie her, under full sail, to anchorages of narrow isolation, then the fight is on, and timidity and time serving must give way to the recognition of "the depth and length and breadth and height" of the awakened love and life of our aroused and real Catholicity.' In these great words Bishop Doane in another column forces the issue between sectarianism and Catholicity.

"Here is the crux of the whole matter. Are Christians to work together for the saving of the world, or are they to continue to force Christians to strive against Christians, and to do it in Christ's name? Shall the Church follow Christ, and claim them as brothers in him, and thus, fulfilling the apostolic mission, slowly but surely establish apostolic order? Or, shall it follow men by forbidding, and condemn those who do not in all things follow with us? The Church can never forfeit for any reason apostolic order. That would involve the unity and continuity of the Church. But, equally, if apostolic order is not used in the spirit of our Lord for the accomplishment of the apostolic mission, it can never fulfill and thereby commend apostolic order to mankind."

"The South is very conservative—so everybody says—but it oddly enough gets ahead of the North in some examples of progressive innovation. Thus, for an ecclesiastical instance, the action of the Northern Methodist general conference, just held at Baltimore, in abolishing probation for converts received into the church, was but tardily following a precedent long ago set by the Southern Methodists. The Methodist Episcopal Church South years since abandoned the practice of 'keeping the prodigal son six months on the porch of the Father's house,' as the probation custom has been not inaptly described. Similarly the Southern Methodists have taken the initiative in the matter of securing a new 'brief statement' of Methodist doctrine, and though for the present the Northern Methodists refuse to follow, they will undoubtedly in the long run have to admit that in this, too, their Southern brothers blazed the path of progress.—Interior.

The "Christian Endeavor World" has an editorial on the privilege of confession. We, as a people, have always practiced the public acknowledgment of a belief in Christ. The writer in our Boston contemporary has, perhaps, more in mind than this simple acknowledgement. He says:

"The duty of confessing Christ is often urged. The motives of gratitude, the strengthening of one's own resolution, the possibility of making the way easier for others, are presented again and again. On decision days in Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor societies, and in times of special evangelistic work, as well as on ordinary occasions, the appeal is made again and again.

"Doubtless there is need of all this, and the arguments used are sound. But is enough made of the privilege of confession? Is it found necessary to exhort athletes to wear the initial marking them as having represented their colleges in great contests? Does it take much pleading to persuade the boy or girl to wear the badge of a society telling of the realization of years of ambition? Does a Grand Army man try to conceal the fact that he served in the ranks? Why should discipleship of Christ be treated as the one association of which it is natural to be ashamed? If it means all that it should, what could be more natural than to wish to express the joy that it brings? Why should the emphasis be put on the thought of confession as an ordeal?

"We do not half know the blessedness of confession because we seldom have to pay a price for it that shows its worth. Because it costs so little we value it the less. Influences are all around us that make the step of confession easy. Friends expect it; home training makes it natural; the church influences lead toward it. There is a suggestion of cowardice in refusing to act. If we were in India, where considerations of caste have their great force; or in China, where loyalty to parents makes a change of religion seem undutiful; or among the Moslems, where embracing Christianity threatens one's life, we should know something of confession that costs. We might also know more of the blessedness of confession. Because we have not such experiences must we allow ourselves or others to lose the sense of the privilege of acknowledging the Saviour and Lord?"

"Are you going away for the summer? Well, don't part company with your conscience."—Epworth Herald.

"There is a story of a potter in China who received from the emperor a command to make a rare set of porcelain ware for the royal table. With greatest pains he began his work, desiring to make it the finest achievement of his life. Again and again, however, when the pieces were put into the furnace they were marred. At length another set were ready for burning, and the potter hoped that this one would be successful. But as he watched it in the furnace he saw that this, too, would be a failure. In despair he threw himself into the fire and his body was consumed. But when the pieces of pottery were taken out they were so wondrously beautiful that nothing like them had ever before been seen. Not until the potter sacrificed his own life in the doing of it was his work successful. The old heathen legend has its lesson for Christian life. Our work never reaches the highest beauty, is never fit for our King until love's sacrifice is wrought into it. Things we do for ourselves, to win honor for our own name, to make profit for our own enrichment, are never the things that are most beautiful in God's sight. The greatest things we do are those that are wrought in utter self-forgetfulness, for Christ's glory."—Forward.

A distinguished German scholar who had devoted his faculties to what he claimed to be the demonstration of atheism came consistently to his death bed. He was prepared, he said, to prove out of the expiring sparks of his own life that it must become a quenched and blackened flame. He observed the processes of dissolution calmly, with the long habit of the scientific method. Friends, themselves unbelieving and unhoping, stood about him, waiting to catch the last flicker of defiance from a soul to its God. For some hours he had lain unexpectedly silent, and with eyes closed. He had very dark, large eyes, piercing and powerful. Suddenly he opened them, and from their caverns shot out a fire before which the coldest scoffer in the room shrank back. With a loud voice the old scholar cried out:

"'There is another world!'" and fell upon his pillow, dead.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in "Harper's Bazaar."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

This is a memorable day in our domestic annals. July 2, 1868—July 2, 1908. These dates span a period of forty years, and this is the fortieth anniversary of our wedded life. We count it among the happiest events of our lives that our lines, hitherto running so far apart, converged in our college life, and were made one very soon thereafter in a covenant which we have regarded as solemn and inviolable as our baptismal covenant with Christ. We were in life's young morning then, full of youthful hopes and ambitions. To-day we are facing the westering sun, which is well on its way toward the horizon. We have had our sorrows, as well as our joys, but we have shared them together, and so have lightened the one and multiplied the other. This has been a cloudy, lowering day, but this evening the clouds have lifted from the west and the glorious sun, coming out from behind the clouds, is painting a golden pathway across the lake as bright as the pathway of the just, which is to grow brighter unto the perfect day. What matters it though the day of our brief lifetime be shadowed with clouds, if at the evening time the clouds shall lift, and there shall come the bright shining of the sun? "At evening time it shall be light." Neither of us has ever raised the question as to whether marriage is a failure. It has brought its own vindication every mile of the journey we have walked together. And here, on the shores of this northern lake, far from the friends we have known and loved these many years, we feel like sending out our joint benediction, with a prayer for God's blessing on all the homes of our readers, that the sacred ties which bind the family together may grow sweeter and stronger with the passing years, and so purified and spiritualized as to become bonds of unity in the life that lies beyond these mortal shores.

Speaking now of marriage in the abstract, and not in connection with this special anniversary, is there any institution among men which bears upon it more clearly the marks of its divine origin? It is the only institution now in existence that has come down to us from the very beginning of the race. It lies at the foundation of our civilization, and of all other institutions which bless mankind. But, like every other divine institution, it has been sadly abused, and the laws governing it have been ruthlessly violated. Not only have polygamy and polyandry defiled and perverted the divine institution, but more subtle, but scarcely less disastrous evils, have served to make, what God intended to be a fountain of purest joy and divinest blessing to mankind, a source of misery and corruption. We have not succeeded in clothing marriage with the sacredness and divinity which belong to it by right. We do not begin early enough to teach our children the sacred nature and meaning of marriage, nor do we sufficiently guard them, as they grow older, against such associations as are likely to lead to unhappy marriages. The subject is often treated with a lightness and jocularity that deprive it of its sacred character in the eyes of the young. The divorce evil, of which we all complain, must find its true remedy much farther back than in divorce laws. Thoughtless marriages inevitably make business for the divorce courts. If the home and the church will do their duty in teaching the young, and in guarding them against unholy wedlock, it will greatly simplify the work of our legislatures and courts. To the extent that we can succeed in ruling out false motives that so often enter into marriage, such as material gain, social position, not to mention the grosser passions, and permit mutual love between kindred spirits to be the ruling motive, we shall succeed in bringing marriage to its original purpose as a fountain of unmixed blessing.

Those who come earliest and stay latest at these lakeside resorts receive the greatest benefit from that quiet and restfulness which tired people long for. Only a few of the cottages on this shore are yet occupied, but in a few days more they will probably all be opened. Garrison Park, which last year had but one cottage completed, this year has three completed and another approaching completion, while two or three others probably will be begun later in the season. One of the handsomest cottages on the shore is that just completed belonging to Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Moore. Brother Moore is expected in a few days, and his wife will follow a little later. The cottage approaching completion on the hilltop south of "The Pioneer" is that of F. P. Arthur, now corresponding secretary of the Missionary Society of Michigan. The beautiful cottage adjoining us on the north is still awaiting an occupant, and is the only available cottage in our park, though our neighbors on the north, the Oceana Beach Company, have two or three vacant cottages for rent. All these, however, will be occupied very soon. Many of our friends find accommodation at the clubhouse—an excellent little hotel on the beach only a few minutes walk from us. T. P. Haley and wife have engaged rooms there, we understand, and are expected soon. Mrs. Agnes Hodgen and her sister, Mrs. Craig, our close neighbors in St. Louis, have taken one of the two cottages known as "The Heavenly Twins," on one of the highest summits on this shore. H. T. Morrison, Jr., who was recently married to Miss Mary Logan Coleman, of Springfield, Ill., came over with us on the boat with his bride, and they are quartered in a newly-erected cottage of their own in Campbell Park, north of the channel. The family of H. A. Denton has been located here in a cottage on Lake Pentwater for several weeks. Brother Denton has been making them a flying visit, and preached for the little congregation here last Lord's day, greatly to the edification and delight of all of us who heard him.

Now that the summer season is on, it does not follow that the work of winning souls should cease, but there will have to be a wise adaptation of means to ends in order to accomplish the best results. In many of the smaller towns and villages the churches will hold union services in a grove or park in order to get at the people. Tent meetings will be held in many parts of the country. Individual work can be done by the Disciples who are scattered abroad on their summer outings, and many can be reached in that way which would be inaccessible by the regular services of the church. One can nearly always catch fish if he has the kind of bait that they want, and goes where they are. Yesterday, while out on the pier, we saw literally thousands of fish, as if there were a mighty migration of the piscatorial tribes. The water was fairly black with them, and we supposed, at first, that we had a bonanza in fishing. But on throwing out our lines with hooks baited with minnows we found that they were wholly indifferent, and paid not the slightest attention to what we had to offer. Perhaps something else would have appealed to them; but we had nothing else, and so missed our opportunity. It is possible, too, they were not hungry and were bent on sport rather than feeding, for many of them were leaping out of the water, as if they were enjoying a sort of picnic or a day off. People get in that mood sometimes, and often the choicest bait of gospel truth which you can offer them fails to attract them. But neither fish nor men stay in that mood permanently. All men have their thoughtful moods—times when they are led by certain events to think soberly of life and its meaning, and of their own personal relations to God and to their fellowmen. As the successful fisherman must have different methods of catching fish, suited to different times and places and conditions, so the successful church must adapt its methods to conditions and times and circumstances, so that by all means, and any means, it may save men.

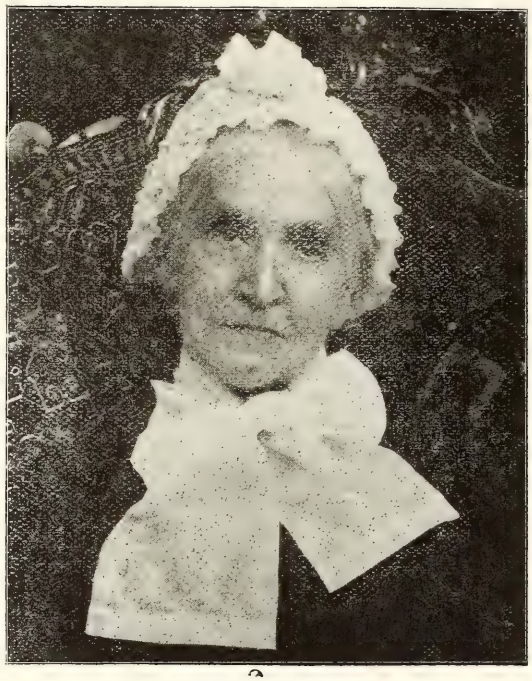
A little later on we shall start our vesper services here by the lakeside, on the sand, known as our beach service. Many of the people of the village come over to these evening services, and many visitors, not accustomed to attend church at home, hear the old gospel songs sung at these services, which takes them back to childhood days, and recalls the memories of youth-time when they attended church. They listen to the short talks concerning Christ and His love for men, and many of them will catch a new vision of life, and will silently resolve, when they return to their homes, to attend church, and to live better lives. In this way a summer resort of the kind we are establishing here is a co-worker with the church in its great mission. For some reason, men will listen to informal talks about religion and things eternal, under the starry dome and beside the murmuring lake, who at home avoid the church and the stated sermon as something foreign to their taste. Nature herself is a minister of God speaking, through her myriad voices, of God's goodness and wisdom and love. God is not dependent upon any one means for winning men to His love and service, but in a thousand ways he is calling to men and appealing to the highest and best there is in them that they may make the most of themselves, and of the life that now is. All the relationships and callings of life, all its experiences, whether of joy or of sorrow, all the beauty and sublimity of nature, and all the goodness we see in men, are intended to appeal to our higher nature, as deep answereth unto deep, and to bring our lives into harmony with that Supreme Will that lies behind all these varied phenomena.

A Noble Woman, and Wife of our First Missionary.

Mrs. Julia Ann Barclay

By PHILIP JOHNSON

"Grandma Barclay" fell asleep April 19, 1908; and had she lived until June 30, would have been 95 years old. She was more interesting and attractive prior to her last illness than many women thirty years her junior. If she had lived until the Centennial—and there seemed to be, until this winter, no reason why she should not—she would have been far and away the most interesting figure of that occasion, both because of her intimate and long relationship to the history of the movement in connection with the Campbell and Barclay families, and also because of her own remarkable personality. In practically perfect bodily health and in almost full possession of her mental faculties, with some impairment of memory, she was indeed a living voice from the dead past. Born the very year in which the Brush Run Church took fellowship with the Redstone Baptist Association, and only four years after the appearance of the "Declaration and Address" of Thomas Campbell, her interesting life spanned practically the entire historic period which is to be rounded out so fittingly in the Centennial celebration at Pittsburg in 1909.



"Grandma" Barclay.

Mrs. Barclay was the daughter of Captain John Colson Sowers, of Staunton, Virginia, where she was born on June 30, 1813. She carried till death the stamp of refinement and rearing received in this cultured little town of Old Virginia. She had the soft voice, the southern accent, and engaging manners of the old Virginia matron. Staunton is yet a sort of Athens to Virginia. Mary Julia Baldwin, niece to Mrs. Barclay, founded and conducted, for about forty years, a most flourishing female seminary in this same seat of learning, which lives to-day, a monument to its founder and a blessing to humanity.

A part of the education of her girlhood days was obtained from the schools in Wheeling, away out west on the Ohio River, whither she went as a girl of thirteen to visit her sister, Mrs. Heiskell. This far-distant city was reached necessarily by the old stage coach that did service in those good old days on the Cumberland Pike. However, most of her training was gotten from the then famous Sheffy School for Girls, located in her own home town.

Mrs. Barclay married Dr. J. T. Barclay just before she was seventeen years old, and might have married him sooner but for the advice of older heads to the contrary. His people were well-to-do, and so were hers. To Dr. Barclay she gave her first and only love. The marriage was consummated in 1830 at Staunton, Va.

Dr. Barclay's mother was widowed early in life, and married again to a Captain John Harris, a large tobacco planter, and lived at Viewmont, Albemarle county, Va. Thither the bride and groom withdrew after the wedding at Staunton, taking with them a large bridal party to spend the honeymoon with Dr. Barclay's mother. After the honeymoon was over, they repaired to Charlottesville, where they set up housekeeping close to the home of Dr. Barclay's mother, and right in the atmosphere of the university from which he had received his education.

Soon Dr. Barclay's eye and heart fell upon Monticello, which was for sale. The next year (1831) he purchased the fine estate of Thomas Jefferson and Mrs. Barclay became the mistress of Monticello. The business transaction was made with Jefferson Randolph, grandson of Thomas Jefferson. Dr. Barclay bought the beautiful home, with three hundred acres of land, for $7,500. He paid $3,000 cash, and put into the trade a brick house in Charlottesville which had cost $4,500. It was entirely natural that Dr. Barclay should want Monticello for his home, both because of its intrinsic worth as an estate, and also on account of the long and intimate relationship between the Barclay family and the name of Jefferson. Dr. Barclay's grandfather, Thomas Barclay, was a devoted personal friend to Washington and Jefferson, and was sent by Washington as first Consul-General to France, when Jefferson was Minister to France, in 1785. Thomas Barclay was sent as Commissioner to the Emperor of Morocco to make a treaty of peace between Morocco and the United States, which treaty was concluded in 1786. Thomas Barclay went as first Consul-General to Morocco in 1791, and took a little ebony writing-desk given to him by Thomas Jefferson. This desk is yet in Mrs. Decima Barclay's possession, as is also the commission signed by George Washington, President, and Thomas Jefferson, Secretary of State.

The estate of Thomas Jefferson has long been considered one of the most beautiful old homes in the United States. The house at Monticello was thirty-two years in building. It was begun in 1770 and finished in 1802, and cost, all told, according to Jefferson's books, $7,200. The bricks were made on the ground, and the nails were made on the place by hand, forged by Jefferson's own negro boys.

The Marquis de Chastellux, an accomplished Frenchman, who visited Jefferson, gives a beautiful description of Monticello in "Travels in North America." "It was a debt nature owed to a philosopher and a man of taste, that in his own possessions he should find a spot where he might best study and enjoy her. He calls his house Monticello (in Italian, "little mountain"), a very modest title, for it is situated upon a very lofty one, but which announces the owner's attachment to the language of Italy; and above all, to the fine arts of which that country was the cradle, and is still the asylum."

Another distinguished Frenchman writes that Monticello "is infinitely superior to all other houses in America in point of taste and convenience, and deserves to be ranked with the most pleasant mansions in France and England."

Dr. and Mrs. Barclay lived at Monticello four years, from 1831 to 1835. Their two oldest children were born during their residence at this place, Robert and John, and both were rocked in the Jefferson cradle. Dr. Barclay took great pride in restoring the serpentine walks, terraces, and in planting new trees in the yard, and Mrs. Barclay was a model housekeeper. It was often said by "Jeff" Randolph, who was a frequent visitor at Monticello during their stay in his grandfather's old home, that Mrs. Barclay kept the floors in a far more beautiful condition than they were kept during the lifetime of this grandfather. The elegant floors of beech and cherry she kept polished by waxing and dry rubbing. The old gong clock which Jefferson had imported from Europe had ceased to go, and it was inevitable that the mind of Dr. Barclay should accept the challenge as an opportunity to exploit his extraordinary mechanical genius. He went to Charlottesville, purchased about one hundred dollars' worth of suitable tools, began his work, and at length set the old clock a-going. According to latest reports, it is still ticking.

Mrs. Barclay was always industrious and continued to be even until the end came, old as she was. She was proud of her distinction as a good housekeeper and of her accomplishments with the needle. She often said that she was not like a Mrs. Carpenter of her acquaintance, whose husband was a pay-master in the navy. This Mrs. Carpenter, it seems, was so occupied with her social functions in Washington society, that her husband's socks suffered from lack of attention. He adopted the plan of throwing the worn ones into a barrel arranged for that purpose. When it became filled, he sent them to his mother down in Virginia to be darned. Mrs. Barclay was jealous of this distinction in her own home.

Dr. and Mrs. Barclay were forced to give up Monticello on account of the constant stream of visitors. Mrs. Barclay told me that her mother visited Monticello during her residence there and advised them to sell and move elsewhere, saying to her: "Julia, I wouldn't live at Monticello if you'd give me the place." A special servant was detailed whose particular duty it was to meet and take charge of the visitors that daily presented themselves to be shown through the house and grounds. Visitors came every day to see the place where the immortal Jefferson had lived and entertained. The habit was formed in his day. Monticello had been for years the home of hospitality. One of Jefferson's granddaughters has written a description of the daily life at Monticello. She says that "Visitors came of all nations, at all times, and paid longer or shorter visits. I have known a New England judge to bring a letter of introduction to my grandfather and stay three weeks. The learned Abbe Correa, always a welcome guest, passed some weeks of each year with us during the whole time of his stay in this country. We had persons from abroad, from all the states of the union, from every part of the state, men, women and children. In short, almost every day for at least eight months in the year brought a large number of guests. People of wealth, position, men of office, professional men, military and civil, lawyers, doctors, Protestant clergymen, Catholic priests, members of Congress, foreign ministers, missionaries, Indian agents, tourists, travelers, artists, strangers and friends. Some came from affection and respect, some from curiosity, some to give or receive advice or instruction, some from idleness, some because others set the example; and very varied, amusing and agreeable was the society afforded by this influx of guests.''

Bacon says that Jefferson knew that this great hospitality was using up all of his income, and more, as it actually did, but notwithstanding this prescience of bankruptcy, he was so kind and polite that he received everybody with a smile and made them welcome. They literally ate him out of house and home. They were there at all times of the year; but about the middle of June, the travel would commence from the lower part of the state to the Springs, and there would be a great throng of visitors.

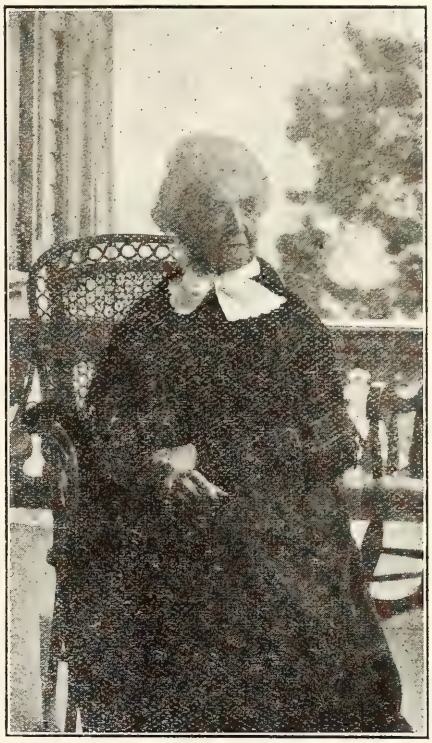
Dr. Barclay sold Monticello in 1835 to Capt. Uriah P. Levy, for the modest sum of $7,000. They moved thence to Scottsville, Va., and afterward for a short time to Staunton, during the last illness of Mrs. Barclay's father, then at length to Washington, D. C. It was during this stay in Washington that the church was begun there by Dr. Barclay and family—meeting first in his own home, then in a nearby engine house, and at length in the City Hall. Soon after leaving Monticello Dr. and Mrs. Barclay were seized with the desire to go to China as missionaries. Mrs. Barclay sent all her jewelry, including the ring given her by Dr. Barclay, to a Dr. Converse, a Presbyterian minister of Richmond, Va., and had it sold for the missionary offering. They also freed their slaves (before they left for Jerusalem), and were at this time ready to go to the foreign field. But the grief of his mother was so great, at the thought of parting with her only living child, that her earnest remonstrance and his filial affection prevailed, and not until after the death of his mother did he carry out the great desire of his heart.

It is a well-known fact among us that Dr. and Mrs. Barclay kindled the first missionary fires within the ranks of the Disciples. By their generosity, by his pen, and by their example we began to be a foreign missionary body.

In October, 1848, Dr. Barclay writes, prior to the organization of the Missionary Society and promises pecuniary aid and further says: ''The time has come when we not only may, but should and must attempt immediately to disseminate the truth as it is in Jesus among the benighted pagans, both by colporteur operations and regular foreign missions. Would that I had the wealth of Crœsus to consecrate to this all-important enterprise! But of silver and gold I have little—very little—but I have a heart to attempt whatever such feeble instrumentality can be expected to accomplish, and should we organize as a missionary body, as I trust we shall, and some be found in our ranks to 'hazard their lives' for the purpose of declaring the name of the Lord Jesus to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, cheerfully will I say: 'Here am I; send me.' ''

In October, 1850, Dr. Barclay and family started for Jerusalem. During this first stay in the Holy Land Dr. Barclay preached the Gospel to the high and low, healed the sick, and busied himself in collecting data for his book, ''The City of the Great King.'' This book was illustrated by his only daughter, Mrs. J. Augustus Johnson, a gifted artist. She was the only Christian of modern years who, up to that time, had entered the ''Tomb of David.'' This she did at the risk of her life, to make the only picture of the tomb yet given to the public.

Dr. Barclay crawled through the sewer underneath the ''Mosque of Omar,'' built on the site of Solomon's temple, from the ''Holy of Holies,'' to the ''Valley of Hinnom,'' through which the blood of the sacrifices once flowed, and made accurate measurements of it. He also discovered a cave under the city of Jerusalem, from which, as he believed, stone had been quarried for the building of the temple, and where they could have been dressed without the sound of the hammer.



From a photo by Paul Moore, taken on the porch of Bethany Mansion, June, 1907.

Dr. Barclay did the first printing ever done in the city of Jerusalem. Among his converts there was a Dr. Zimple, a German naturalist of some note, whom he baptized in the River Jordan. He also baptized an American woman M. D., in the pool of Siloam. For several years she practiced medicine among the poor Arabs on Mt. Olivet. Mrs. Barclay kept the home, looked after the children, and, much to the delight and ofttimes to the astonishment of visiting missionaries, frequently prepared the meals in true American style.

Dr. and Mrs. Barclay returned to America in 1854, at which time he completed the arrangement and, at length, the publication of his book. In 1855 he was appointed by the President of the United States to take special charge of the Philadelphia mint to make experiments to prevent counterfeiting and deterioration of our metallic currency. In this he was so successful that the lower house of Congress passed a bill awarding him a gift of one hundred thousand dollars. This bill the Senate failed to endorse, by one vote only.

In 1858 Dr. and Mrs. Barclay went the second time to Jerusalem to renew their labor of love with greater zeal than ever. This work they continued until the outbreak of the Civil War in America, when, ''not to be a burden'' to the brethren at home, he resigned, and lived for a time with his children at Beirut, Syria, and on the island of Cyprus. He finally returned to America in 1865, at the close of the war, and accepted the proffered chair of Natural Sciences in Bethany College, which position he held until 1868.

From Bethany Dr. and Mrs. Barclay went to Alabama, where he spent the remainder of his days. During these last years he was occupied in preaching the primitive gospel at Wheeler Station, his own home, where he and his son, Dr. J. J. Barclay, succeeded in establishing a church. Here he passed away in 1874. From this time on Mrs. Barclay made her home with her son Judson and his good wife, Mrs. Decima Campbell Barclay. Mrs. Decima Barclay was the tenth and youngest daughter of Alexander Campbell, and had the honor of caring for both her own and her husband's mother. For twenty-five years Mrs. Campbell and Mrs. Barclay lived together at her home. Mrs. Campbell called Mrs. Barclay ''Sister Barclay,'' and Mrs. Barclay returned the compliment with ''Sister Campbell.'' They were very intimate, and very attentive to each other. Mrs. Campbell was eleven years the senior of Mrs. Barclay, so Mrs. Barclay assumed the care of Mr. Campbell's widow in a most natural and devoted manner. What a fine friendship that was, and what a beautiful picture it used to be to see Mrs. Barclay, along between her seventieth and eighty-fifth years, watching with tender solicitude every need of the still older matron than herself! Mrs. Campbell was so dependent upon her and so attached to her that her own daughters were wont to say that if all three should die, they believed that Mrs. Campbell would miss Mrs. Barclay more than she would miss her own children. It is said that on Sundays, when Mrs. Barclay would be at church, Mrs. Campbell would watch anxiously at the window for her to come back down the long walk under the tall fir trees, and would wistfully inquire if it were not time for "Sister Barclay" to return from church.

Bethany Mansion, the home of Alexander Campbell. The room in which he and Mrs. Barclay died is shown above the x.

She and Mrs. Campbell moved with Mrs. Decima Barclay from Alabama back to Bethany some fifteen years ago, and lived here in the "Bethany mansion" until the end of their days. Mrs. Campbell died at the great age of ninety-five years. It seems a coincidence that Mrs. Barclay lived to the same ripe old age. Mrs. Barclay was entertaining and interesting up to the very last. Two years ago her grandson, Dr. Judson Barclay, brought his bride from Kansas to see the home-folks at Bethany. In the midst of the happy occasion accorded the bride in her presentation, "Grandma Barclay" was seated near her in the upper parlor, as entertaining and bright as any one, attracting as much attention almost as the bride herself.

Mrs. Barclay spent the last fifteen years of her life at Bethany in the Bethany Mansion—the old home of Alexander Campbell, the house in which he was married, and from which he and his father both were buried. She was laid out in the very sheets, brought from England in 1802, which were used at the death of Thomas Campbell, and also at the death of Alexander Campbell.

Her son, the Hon. J. J. Barclay, married to Alexander Campbell's youngest daughter, is the only child that survives her. They live in the old home at Bethany.

Mrs. Barclay was a queen among women, the center of any group in which she was placed, and a woman of remarkable sense and refinement. She read all the church papers week by week, and waited every day, with interest far younger than her years, for her turn at the daily newspaper.

Everybody loved her. The students at the College counted it a great privilege, when they went to the Bethany Mansion, to have a visit and a word with "Grandma Barclay." I have known the servants of the house to vie with one another for the privilege of serving in her room. To them, she was akin to royalty. She was generosity itself. She not only gave away her jewelry and slaves in her younger days, but on leaving Jerusalem gave her trunks of household linen to the converted Jews, and until her dying day she was constantly giving something to somebody. She often gave away the very clothes that the members of the family thought she should keep for herself.

It was beautiful to hear her talk of her religion. Her father's people were Presbyterians. When she became a Disciple he was so distressed that he offered her a large and valuable farm in the Valley of Virginia, if she would return to the Presbyterian ranks. Nobody could fail to be impressed with the sincerity and beauty of her devotion, when she talked of the "pure truth of heaven," or referred back to the time when "the light of heaven" shone in her heart. These were favored moments to her company. When she spoke thus, and her good old face kindled with the immortal glow, it was good to be near her.

We so often speak of the "grand old man," "God's gentleman," "a man among men," etc., that it is entirely fitting to think and speak of her as "God's noble woman." She had royal blood in her veins, whether her ancestors wore jewelled crowns, or lived in humble estate. Nature had so mixed up the elements in her that she was woman complete. The fine forces disengaged from her personality must count for good, and count for eternity. God bless her memory!

Bethany, W. Va.

Promoting the Summer Slump

By W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

According to the proverb "it is the unexpected that happens"; but as a matter of fact it is the expected that happens. The church expects a reaction after the revival, and it comes. The preacher expects most of the people to stay away from prayer-meeting, and they refuse to disappoint him. The members go to church expecting a dull sermon, and they get it. At this season of the year preacher, superintendent, teachers and everybody else unite in expecting a summer slump in the Bible school. In most places it has already put in an appearance.

Nine times out of ten the only reason for this annual depression in the Bible-school is simply this expectation. Only a few of the members are away for vacation at any one time, and most of these can easily be induced to attend the Bible school where they are visiting. Their number can also be more than balanced by an extra attendance of aged persons and invalids who are shut in at other seasons.

The summer is just the time when the largest number of persons can be brought together for any purpose. It is the time of big conventions, both political and religious. It is the time of picnics, social, religious and commercial. Hundreds of Bible schools have demonstrated that it is the best season in which to build up and double attendance.

Plan for improvement, talk of growth, expect an increase, enter into a summer contest with a neighboring school, hold an out-of-door session, utilize the interest aroused by your annual picnic, join the seven schools that have reached the Centennial aim by making their Bible school enrollment twice the church enrollment. "All the church and as many more in the Bible school" is the Centennial aim. Make it your watchword for the summer of 1908.

Waiting Sixty-Three Years for the Harvest

By William Oeschger.

To the end that some one may be encouraged to continue to sow the good seed of the Kingdom, even though there is no visible promise of an immediate harvest, this little incident is related. Some years ago the writer was sent for by an aged citizen in the community who was hardly ever known to step into a church. The writer was greatly surprised at the request, for the certain person in question never attended the writer's church services; neither was he known to attend any other. He was a man of the world. He was chiefly interested in making money and living for the pleasures of the world. When the writer called he found him ill and quite feeble. He had not been with him long until he made the discovery that he was much interested in his own salvation. He soon made it known that what he wanted was to confess Christ and be buried with him in Christian baptism. Now, the thing that puzzled the writer was, what was it that made this aged pilgrim so set in his determination to be baptized? He had lived in the neighborhood in which he was then living for more than sixty years. During all this time he had been surrounded by members of the Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian churches. His own wife was a member of the Methodist church. When he informed his family that he wanted to be immersed, they raised all kinds of objections. But he could not be turned from his purpose. As soon as arrangements could be made for his immersion the writer baptized him in a near-by stream. After his baptism the writer requested him to relate what it was that induced him to take this step. With trembling voice he related that sixty-three years ago he had heard Alexander Campbell preach a sermon in Washington, Pa. He felt at the time that he ought to obey the Gospel, but for some reason failed to respond to the invitation. A few days after he heard Mr. Campbell preach he left Pennsylvania to make his home in the West. But that sermon never left him. Its truth continued to haunt him. For more than half a century he carried its truth in his heart. He could not dismiss it. Though the seed thus sown remained dormant for so long a season, it finally germinated and brought forth a harvest. The harvest came sixty-three years after the sowing. Mr. Campbell went to his reward, but the seed sown by him bore fruit long after his death. Surely, the Word of God abideth forever. Let us never weary in our sowing. God will take care of the seed. Let us never be discouraged, even though we should not see the harvest in our own lifetime.

BETTER POSITION

And Increased Salary as a Result of Eating Right Food.

There is not only comfort in eating food that nourishes brain and body but sometimes it helps a lot in increasing one's salary.

A Kan. school teacher tells an interesting experience. She says:

"About two years ago I was extremely miserable from a nervousness that had been coming on for some time. Any sudden noise was actually painful to me and my nights were made miserable by horrible nightmare.

"I was losing flesh all the time and at last was obliged to give up the school I was teaching and go home.

"Mother put me to bed and sent for the doctor. I was so nervous the cotton sheets gave me a chill and they put me in woolens. The medicine I took did me no apparent good. Finally, a neighbor suggested that Grape-Nuts might be good for me to eat. I had never heard of this food, but the name sounded good so I decided to try it.

"I began to eat Grape-Nuts and soon found my reserve energy growing so that in a short time I was filling a better position and drawing a larger salary than I had ever done before.

"As I see little children playing around me and enter into their games I wonder if I am the same teacher of whom, two years ago, the children spoke as 'ugly old thing.'

"Grape-Nuts food with cream has become a regular part of my diet, and I have not been sick a day in the past two years."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Ten Knickerbocker Parsons

By William Durban

On the eve of departing for England, I will undertake the task of reciting some of my recent experiences during this visit to America. These are personal experiences, for they relate of my conversations with various ministers with whom I have talked during the past few weeks—all eminent preachers in New York. As I write I am in Washington, which wears the same grandiose and pompous aspect as when I first saw it nine years since. And because of a certain personality still resident at the White House, I chose all the more readily to use the word "Knickerbocker" in the caption of this article. For the wonderful President whom most all Americans appear to covet in continuity if he would have considered self first and country afterwards, reminds one in his name of the stock of New Amsterdam, of the Dutchmen who planted that persistent stock on Manhattan, and of the splendid influence which blended with Saxonism to constitute the germinal elements of real national greatness. I am old-fashioned, notwithstanding my radicalism as a British Progressive Liberal. I love dear little Holland, though it is suggestive of quaint and gaudy tulips rather than of fragrant roses, and though the Zuyder Zee Scheveninger bring up memories of stiff and stubborn outlines of dyke-dams, of dunes, and of Dutch sturdiness as it persists to this hour. Holland has forever taught mankind that a little nation of men and women who fear God and fight priestcraft, may save the world. It seems to me that an American gentleman was right who said to me the other day, "Yes, this is a great country indeed, but its greatness alone can not save it from the fate that has overtaken other great nations." I understood his implication and applied his admonition to the British Empire as well as to this great Republic. Now for my ten Knickerbocker parsons, whom I name thus because they are either in Manhattan or in its environment.

In Greater New York are nearly five millions of human beings. My ten clergymen have dwelt on the conditions in which they are toiling among these. As they belong to various denominations their talk covered the whole ground. I went one morning to see Dr. Junius Remensnyder. Now, this gentleman is of a peculiarly persistent type and of a very noble type, too, for he is a leading Lutheran—eloquent, learned, popular, experienced, and conservative. He took me from his study into his beautiful church adjoining his parsonage — a fashionable sanctuary "up town." Thus I quickly discovered that Luther's grand old reforming program of faith is the creed of a multitude of cultured and respectable citizens today, in the very position where modern developments might be supposed to have swept it away. C. Remensnyder told me how mightily the Lutheran communion is increasing in America. He claims that it is growing faster than any other denomination. Of course, immigration has much to do with this increment, but he maintains that his own and other Lutheran churches in the United States are being immensely strengthened by the reaction from reckless criticism and destructionism.

Another day I called by appointment on Dr. Huntington, the famous rector of the celebrated Grace Church, Broadway, one of the most beautiful edifices in the great city. I shall not soon forget this venerable and delightful Episcopalian's talks. He is the author of the memorable proposal for Christian Reunion known as the "Lambeth Quadrilateral," and now that the Pan-Anglican Congress is being held in London he had much to say on the topic. But Grace Church is the scene of a magnificent system of ecclesiastical sociology. It is a people's church, a center of complex institutionalism. A great cluster of buildings on three sides of it comprehends a college for thirty choir boys, a restaurant for working girls which I saw crowded, a great nursery for little children whose mothers are at daily work, a school for about a hundred older girls, a fine electrical plant for all the buildings, this church being the only one on earth which makes its own electricity, and an annex to the rectory for accommodating the curates. Also Grace Church carries on a great East Side Settlement amongst the poor. I should add that in one of the Broadway buildings is a chapel where a Spanish Evangelical Church worships with a Spanish pastor supported by Grace Church. The Episcopalians of New York are a great, wealthy and beneficent community.

To interview a famous Baptist was the work of another day. This was Dr. MacArthur, who gave up a long morning for me. His claim is that the scene of his preaching is the most beautiful Baptist church in America. I think that it may be unrivalled. But the man is unique also. He gave me a vivid account of his ministry. "I began here and I shall finish here," said he. Concerning the American Baptists, he spoke in enthusiastic terms as to their astonishing progress, and he furnished statistics which prove that they are marching on with leaps and bounds. I spent another morning with my kind old friend Dr. Akel, who has been recently causing a sensation by a sermon on a somewhat different view of the outlook. He has in eloquent admonitions voiced a warning to all the churches because organized ecclesiastical Christianity is steadily losing ground. But he was misrepresented as having declared that Christianity was waning through the world. He told me he had said nothing of the kind, and he has published the sermon in extenso. His criticisms relate to the churches, not to Christianity itself.

Dr. Goodell, who is perhaps the most popular Methodist preacher in New York, and is said to preach regularly to the largest audience in the city, next entertained me. He dwelt on the secrets of his success, and I was forcibly reminded of the style in which the late C. H. Spurgeon used to descant on his methods. Dr. Goodell narrowly escaped at the recent convention the process episcopari. He will inevitably become a bishop of the Episcopal Methodist Church. He explained to me that he had for some years abandoned the use of manuscript in the pulpit, speaking to the people from heart to heart. With him I find, as in other cases where success crowns a preacher, a winning and magnetic personality is a leading factor in the case.

Not soon shall I forget my talk at the most important of Dutch Reformed churches, with its famous pastor, Dr. Burrell. This versatile and genial minister had just come back from a little trout-fishing excursion. He is also a unique personality. The ten men of whom I am writing are all dissimilar individualities. Not one of them takes any cue from any other living being; each is purely sui generis. Dr. Burrell writes a new book every year. I knew that, for I possess and read his books, which teem and glow with illustrations and recitals of experience. He is, like Dr. Joseph Parker, a preacher first and last, and the people flock round him. His sermons as printed read easily, but he elaborates them with immense care and pains. The pastoral work he organizes by using three capable assistants and the results are very valuable. Again I was reminded of Spurgeon, who preached and organized and so ran on a double line of rails with mighty speed and wonderful efficiency. [An article by Dr. Burrell appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last week.—EDITOR.]

Dr. Parkhurst, forever honored as the conqueror of Tammany, received me at his house where I had sat listening in the same room nine years before to his recital of his conflict with that "Wigwam Tiger." He was preparing to start for Europe, but spared me an hour, during which he dwelt feelingly on his career. He asked me to advise young aspirants to the ministry not to take regular preaching too soon. He did not commence till after his thirtieth year, and has ever since been thankful for his previous long experience and study. Next Dr. Hillis talked awhile with me. My frequent intercourse with this eloquent Congregationalist has endeared him to me. He also was on the eve of leaving for Europe, to preach both in Paris and London. His mind has just been severely exercised by the demonstration at Carnegie Hall of the Christian Socialist Fellowship, and he preached a sermon on the "Foes of Our Country," in which he pointed out how at that vast gathering at which many ministers attended on the platform, the talk before the proceedings were over generated into the accent of revolutionary anarchism. That sermon appears in the "Brooklyn Daily Eagle," and should be studied by all preachers.

On Christian Sociology I enjoyed a talk

WIFE WON

Husband Finally Convinced.

Some men are wise enough to try new foods and beverages and then generous enough to give others the benefit of their experience.

A very "conservative" Ills. man, however, let his good wife find out for herself what a blessing Postum is to those who are distressed in many ways, by drinking coffee. The wife writes:

"No slave in chains, it seemed to me, was more helpless than I, a coffee captive. Yet there were innumerable warnings—waking from a troubled sleep with a feeling of suffocation, at times dizzy and out of breath, attacks of palpitation of the heart that frightened me.

"Common sense, reason, and my better judgment told me that coffee drinking was the trouble. At last my nervous system was so disarranged that my physician ordered 'no more coffee.'

"He knew he was right and he knew I knew it, too. I capitulated. Prior to this our family had tried Postum but disliked it, because, as we learned later, it was not made right.

"Determined this time to give Postum a fair trial, I prepared it according to directions on the pkg.—that is, boiled it 15 minutes after boiling commenced, obtaining a dark brown liquid with a rich snappy flavor similar to coffee. When cream and sugar were added, it was not only good but delicious.

"Noting its beneficial effects in me the rest of the family adopted it—all except my husband, who would not admit that coffee hurt him. Several weeks elapsed during which I drank Postum two or three times a day when, to my surprise, my husband said: 'I have decided to drink Postum. Your improvement is so apparent—you have such fine color—that I propose to give credit where credit is due.' And now we are coffee-slaves no longer."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

with Dr. Bliss, who has for some years been investigating conditions with definite results embodied in a great volume just issued, a Cyclopædia of Sociology. This monumental work is indispensable to the preacher, and as Dr. Bliss is an experienced and eminent minister, the volume is compiled under genuine Christian auspices. He takes an optimistic view of the religious and social outlook.

Last, not least, was my entertainment at their residence by Dr. S. T. Willis and his admirable wife. Brother and Sister Willis are always to me amongst the chief attractions of New York. From them I learn always the status of the Disciples of Christ in Greater New York. The outlook is very encouraging, but the work is almost as difficult as in England. We are constantly being told that New York is not America, but it certainly is the real key to America, and success there must react on all America. Dr. Willis has been and is a hero. He has for nineteen years stuck to his post, has seen the cause grow, has led his people on, has built a beautiful new sanctuary in a beautiful district, and confessed to me that the strain had at one time almost cost him his life. Dr. and Mrs. Willis are amongst the finest incarnations I know of the doctrine of "conservation of values." May they and I be spared to meet again. And now the Mauretania sails in a few hours, and I must say once again farewell, but not finally farewell, to America.

Increase of the Ministry

The report of the committee on increase of the ministry in Missouri was prepared for the convention by J. P. Pinkerton. It was a very fine document, going into the situation in much detail. It began by mentioning the note of alarm sounded by the committee on the "state of the cause" at the Sedalia convention last year.

The special committee then appointed, of which Brother Pinkerton was chairman, realized the seriousness of the problem and sought first to diagnose the case. It found that many other religious bodies are suffering from the same trouble. The Presbyterians in Missouri needed forty more preachers last October, while in thirty of their theological seminaries it was reported that there were 400 men less to-day as students for their ministry, compared with ten years ago. This, despite the fact that the population of the country has increased 8,000,000 and the membership of the church 300,000. Methodists and Congregationalists, likewise, lament the decrease of ministerial students. After careful investigation the committee came to the conclusion that first in its influence on the minds of young men is the inadequate support of the ministry. It was stated in the Congregational council that the allurements of the commercial life and fear of the dead line are the reasons of the alarming decrease in the number of young men entering the ministry. Increased pay for the ministers, it was urged, was the only solution. The committee quoted from an article by Cephas Shelburne in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in 1904, in which it was pointed out that while the cost of living to-day is 36 per cent higher than for the year 1904, and wages in nearly all lines of work have been increased, the salaries of preachers have not increased to meet the demand upon their pocketbooks.

At a Methodist conference in Indiana the bishop said: "If you want more men and better preaching you must pay better salaries and put up more money." The committee quoted from an article in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST by the Hon. Champ Clark, in which he pointed out that the ministers need money as well as other men. Among his large acquaintance with ministers he did not know of one that was extravagant. Yet, not one in ten owns his own home or is able to lay up a dollar for the accidents of the future. Mr. Clark made a very strong appeal for us to live up to the scriptural doctrine that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and thus prevent the future pulpit being turned over to dullards. "And so," says the report, "we could go on quoting from addresses, articles and personal interviews." And it adds to this that the fact that the ministry is underpaid is a mighty cause in deterring men from devoting themselves to it.

A second cause is the "dread of the dead line." Experience and reason teach that a well-balanced man is stronger, especially for intellectual work, at middle life than at any other period. And no man is willing to choose a vocation the exercise of which is beset by so many contingencies, not the least of which is that they may be compelled to retire long before decline or abatement of mental and physical powers, well knowing there are other learned professions in which age and experience are a badge of ripened powers, mature thought and increased ability. The preacher's heart may beat strong and hopefully, but a white head, in many cases, will beat him out of the pulpit. This fear of retirement by loss of mental and physical powers is intensified by the fact that after a man serves as a minister of the gospel for many years, he is practically disqualified for any other profession or vocation. It is pathetic to witness a preacher of power who has held high places and performed successful work, trying to eke out a precarious living in some secular calling, when he is yet capable of serving Jesus Christ as a preacher of the everlasting gospel.

The third cause is the uncertainty of the tenure of pastorates. The young man considering what he shall do in life sees lawyers, doctors, farmers, merchants, starting their business and settling down in a given locality and continuing until they choose to retire or change of their own accord. Not so the minister. He is subject to the meanness of littleness and the caprice of ignorance.

The fourth reason is the inadequate provision made to assist young men to procure the necessary education. The curriculum to-day for the preacher who would be abreast of the times embraces far more than it did a few years ago. A large majority of the young men entering the ministry are from the poorer families, and they have to maintain themselves during the time of preparation. For many it is a hopeless task, unless they have timely and wise assistance.

Considering some of the remedies for these sad conditions, the committee (1) asked the question whether we realized that God will be the loser if the human grain is left ungathered. (2) The matter of ministerial supply should be pressed upon the conscience of parents. A preacher recently made the startling statement in his pulpit, that should any considerable number of young men of the community announce to their parents that they had decided to become preachers, it would create consternation, arouse bitter opposition and lead, in some instances, to disinheritance. Not merely the wealthy, but the poor also, dissuade their children from the ministerial career. A third suggestion was that the churches be stirred and listed in the cause. It ought to be a cause for shame that not one preacher has ever gone from the ranks of a congregation. Every congregation alive to its privileges and responsibilities should feel it a sacred duty as well as a high honor to send forth an ambassador for Jesus Christ from its fellowship. A fourth suggestion was that the need should be pressed home to the hearts of young men themselves. Under this head the committee report quoted THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S editorial, "Why More Young Men Are Not Entering the Ministry."

TO THE EVENING STAR.

A Twilight Meditation.

Bend low thy wing, oh, star,
And bear me hence, afar,
To home and love and rest,
Among the sainted blest.

How swift thou speed'st along,
Trilling thy even-song;
Trailing thy robe of light
Into the silent night!
Now hid by cloudy veil,
Lost is thy golden trail;
Amid the dark and gloom
Lone is thy way, but soon
Forth from grey deeps thou glidest,
Into the blue thou ridest.
Unquenched, undimmed, thy light,
Illumes the silent night;
And on thy 'splendent way,
Thou movest toward the day,
As rides a ship o'er sea,
Fearless and strong and free!

Oh, soul, keep thou thy light,
As stars the starless night;
Somewhere the gleam and glow,
Engild the earth below.
Press on thro' storm and strife,
And stress of mortal life;
Hope's star presages dawn,
Heaven opens with the morn!

Mettie Crane Newton.

New York City.

Voices of the Dead.

Dr. Orville Dewey once said: "The world is full of the voices of the dead." Did you ever listen to the voice of a departed human being? No, you will not hear it in the cemetery. Not even the voice of love can provoke the silent dust. Neither will it pay you to waste time and money in visiting the so-called spiritualistic seances. Nothing has come out of such assemblies to make the hungry soul wiser or better.

But listen to the rustle of the tree and hear the voice of the one who set out the sapling years ago. Look upon the old homestead and see the lives of loved ones, written everywhere. Or else go to the house of God and hear once more the voices of those who toiled, in season and out of season, to bring perishing souls to Christ.

Or, perhaps, alas for some, you must listen to the cursing of lips that were not taught to pray, or to the click of the intoxicating glass that exists because of the greed or cowardice of those who have gone to share the doom of him who puts the bottle to his neighbor's lips.

You can scarcely hear or see anything in all this world that does not tell a story of dead men's lives. And more important to us is the fact that our own lives will speak long after our tongues are silent in the grave. What voices, think you, will those who come after hear from us?

Uhrichsville, O. Charles Darsie.

Our Budget

—Summer is here.

—"Fret not thyself."

—We received the next installment of "Down in Old Missouri" too late for printing in this issue.

—Every one should read Professor Philip Johnson's fine account of dear old "Grandma" Barclay, one of the remarkable women of our country and intimately associated with our religious movement.

—For an editorial comment on Brother Carpenter's communication in "Our Forum," see "Notes and Comments."

—Anent the circulars in relation to the Evangelistic Congress at Bethany Park, recently mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, W. E. M. Hackleman, who is a member of the board of Bethany Assembly, writes: "I can assure you that our board is not a party to such procedure as those quotations indicate." Certainly not, knowingly. And yet the prestige of the Bethany Assembly is evidently being used in behalf of an enterprise that, by its circulars, is shown to be an opposition movement to existing organizations. Now that this fact is apparent, it remains to be seen what action the assembly board of managers will take.

—The Editor wishes to thank all the college men for their contributions to our education number, and especially President Bates, of Hiram College, for his excellent statement of the work of a Christian college. Conducted in that spirit and with that aim, our colleges ought never to lack for students or endowment. Let the "whirlwind campaign" for college endowment be organized.

✣ ✣ ✣

—F. M. Lindenmeyer has accepted the work for half time at Baxter, Ia.

—Wallace M. Stuckey and his daughter are in a promising meeting at Mertens, Texas.

—L. E. Sellers has resigned at Terre Haute, Ind., to enter upon evangelistic work September 1.

—L. H. Otto preached the baccalaureate sermon to a large class of high school graduates at Ottumwa, Ia.

—E. L. Powell has sailed for Europe, to be gone until September 1. We regret to hear he is not at all strong.

—The Brooks brothers, with J. Wallace Tapp, are in a revival at Olean, Mo., after which they go to Bethany Park.

—The Third Sunday-school, Philadelphia, Pa., apportioned $250, sent an offering of $319.69 to the foreign work.

—The Third District missionary convention of Nebraska met in Ashland. S. D. Dutcher, of Omaha, was the president.

—Edward Clutter is to hold a meeting at Latham, Kan., beginning July 19. The church there is making good preparation.

—J. B. Boen has received tokens of appreciation from the membership at Waxahachie, Tex., where he recently took up the work.

—The International Sunday-School Association met at Fremont, Neb., where I. H. Fuller is minister of the Christian Church.

—R. E. McKnight has, we notice, closed his pastorate in San Francisco and entered upon charge of the church at Gilroy, Cal.

—The Bible school at Lebanon, Mo., has a teacher training class of twenty-four already started. Edwin L. Ely, the pastor, is leader.

—Any church within reasonable distance of St. Louis needing supply work on Lord's days during the summer may communicate with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—At Clarion, Ia., an indebtedness of over $1,200 has been paid off, while improvements have been added to the church property. H. C. Littleton is the minister.

—A new house of worship was to be dedicated at Newton Falls, Ohio, June 21, with F. M. Rains as speaker of the day. J. C. Archer has charge of the work there.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of June amounted to $42,035, a loss of $17,808 as compared with the corresponding month one year ago.

—The Harvard summer school of theology meets July 1-18 of this year, the subject being Comparative Religion. Some of the ablest men in the country are lecturing.

—W. D. Endres, who took the A. M. degree at Chicago last month, will preach for the church at Harvey, Ill., living there and continuing some studies in the university.

—John Grimes, of Drake University, has been called to take charge of the work at Tarkio, Mo., which pulpit was vacated by C. G. Brelos moving to Texas the first of the year.

—The church property at Stanhope, Ia., has been improved by the laying of cement walks. The work goes along well under John I. Nicholson, who has been in demand for special memorial and other addresses.

—Prof. W. C. Payne recently attended the Y. M. C. A. conference of college students at Cascade, Colo., and gave instruction on the "Life of Paul." This conference is attended by about 400 students.

—The work is in excellent condition at La Fontaine, Ind., where A. L. Martin is pastor. We have not heard the average attendance of the school for June, but on one Sunday it was 196, as against 177 for May.

—It is very gratifying to know that, aside from the Methodist Sunday-school in America, the Disciples of Christ give the largest amount for foreign missions through the Sunday-schools of any religious body.

—J. H. Bryan is now associated with J. H. Hardin in the Bible school work of Missouri. Brother Bryan was formerly in the state work in the same cause in Iowa. He is a Missouri boy and will, we feel sure, do good service.

—One hundred and eighty-eight individuals sent offerings to the Foreign Society during the month of June, a gain of fifty-two over the corresponding month last year. These offerings amount to $1,429, a gain of $454.

—R. H. Sawyer, of Carrollton, Mo., has just given a stereopticon lecture on "Ben Hur" to an audience that filled his church to overflowing on Sunday evening. Brother Sawyer has a collection of more than a thousand slides on various subjects.

—George L. Snively preached in his old home church at Cuba, Ill., last Lord's day, where the church, under A. Immanuel Zeller, is enjoying a prosperity such as it has never had before. Brother Snively, his father and his sister, were all born in the same room there and baptized in the same baptistry.

—The work at Wayland, Mich., moves along apace. There is both growth in the membership and in the Bible school. There is a teacher training class of fourteen. A. M. Soay is the superintendent. Improvements to the extent of $500 have just been put on the building.

—Dr. Hiram Van Kirk, late dean of the Berkeley Bible Seminary, at Berkeley, Cal., but who, with his wife, has been spending a few months at Marburg, Germany, has been appointed lecturer on systematic theology in the Yale Divinity School for the coming year. They will travel in August and return to this country in September.

—David H. Shields has been called for the twelfth year, with another advance in salary, by his church in Salina, Kan. By the way, we see that this popular preacher has just been doctored, the Kansas Wesleyan University at its recent commencement having conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

—O. L. Adams takes a month's vacation at Akron, Ia., after more than five months' continuous revival work. At his recent meeting at Westmoreland, Kan., while there were only two baptisms among those added, these were the first in over five years, for the church had been without preaching for four years.

—By his meeting at Sparta, Mo., E. H. Williamson is able to have a salary of $600 assured for a minister. The Bible school was doubled, as well as the church membership. There are three churches in this town of 350 inhabitants. Brother Williamson is the living link evangelist of the South Street Church at Springfield, Mo.

—The brethren at Chapmansville, W. Va., are feeling good over the dedication of a new church building by J. Green McNeely, who was assisted by Brethren Crites, Pearce and W. Garrett. The attendance was good and money was raised to cover all the debt. Brother McNeely is to dedicate the new house at Griffithsville, in the same state, July 19.

—Earle Wilfley is to be pastor of the First Christian Church, St. Louis. He announced his resignation at Crawfordsville, Ind., last Lord's day, and his acceptance of the St. Louis pastorate was announced at the same time to the congregation there. Mr. Wilfley is expected to make the change not later than October. W. Daviess Pittman will supply the pulpit of the First Church during the summer.

—Dr. Royal J. Dye sent the following telegram to the office of the Foreign Society from Seattle, Wash.: "Queen Anne and First Churches became living links. Great rejoicing." This means that the new church on Queen Anne Hill, Seattle, becomes a living link in the Foreign Society. The First Church supported its own missionary last year.

—Information reaches us of the marriage of S. P. Spiegel, state evangelist of Alabama, and Miss E. Settle, organist of the Christian church at Owenton, Ky., at the home of W. J. Clark, our minister at Sparta, Ky., on June 5. The wedding came somewhat as a surprise to the many friends, but that did not prevent the newly-weds from being showered with congratulations.

—J. E. Wolfe, who for a brief period was one of the state evangelists of Missouri, has, we understand, located with the church at Weston for full time and is now settled in the minister's home there. He was greeted in a way that good-hearted people like to greet the minister they love, and there was an abundance of things for kitchen and other parts of the house provided.

—The National Benevolent Association was recently favored with two more good annuities. One of these brings the investment of the donor up to $2,000. He is not a man of large purse, and does not desire his name to be made public. The other annuity is for $4,500 from a man and his wife who desire to benefit aged and dependent Disciples, the preference in their gift being for ministers and their wives. This name, too, is withheld.

—C. A. Polson has been a year with the church at Exira, Ia., during which time the attendance and interest in all the departments has doubled. Men who have not attended church for years have become regular attendants. Brother Polson's work has been so appreciated that he has been invited to stay at an increase of salary. B. J. Gallagher, city superintendent of the schools, writes us that he "wears well, and the longer he has been here the better he is liked by every one."

—The next quarterly meeting of the Disciples of Cleveland and vicinity will be held at Bedford, Monday, July 13. Sermon at 10:30 a. m. by Geo. Darsie, of Akron, dinner at the church. In the afternoon the C. W. B. M. of the district will have the program. A large attendance is expected.

—Arrangements have been made so that A. A. Doak, late of Oakesdale, is to take the work at Colfax, Wash. This is the county seat of Whitman County. W. J. Wright, we understand, urged the State Board to see that a capable leader should be sustained in this important center. Brother Doak accepted the work on the understanding that he can hold three meetings of three weeks each during the year. Those wishing his services should address him at once.

—D. H. Carrick, who has been a member and preacher among the Congregationalists, was recently received into the fellowship of our church at Argenta, Ill., after a sermon by L. B. Pickerell. Brother Carrick preached for the church on two Lord's days, and is anxious to secure pastoral work among us. His wife is a daughter of Elder J. A. Brennan, for many years prominent in the Argenta church. Because of her musical ability, she will be of assistance in the ministerial work.

—A news item about the second quarterly meeting of the Disciples of Philadelphia has been delayed. This was the best meeting, it is said, that has been held for many years in the city. The Kensington Church was crowded and the enthusiasm was great. Among those who made addresses was E. M. Gordon, our missionary, who has since passed away, while H. L. Willett spoke on "The Bible, the Word of God," his address being received with great applause.

—At Auburn, Neb., a teacher training class of 15 has just graduated. Hugh Lomax, the minister, presented the diplomas. Mrs. J. O. Redfern has been the faithful teacher for the past four months. Professor E. L. Rouse, of the state normal at Peru, was the speaker of the evening and emphasized that in view of the great price that had to be paid for us, our highest service is demanded and the highest service that we can give the world is to teach the truths of Christianity.

—The laying of the corner-stone of a new $15,000 church was celebrated with appropriate services on July 4 at Chester, Neb. J. E. Davis, of Beatrice, was scheduled for the principal address, assisted by Brother Harding, of Belleville, Kan., and Brother Davis, of Hebron, Neb. Since Charles E. Cobbey entered upon the ministry there the net gain to the church has been nineteen in a period of nine months. The Bible school is in prosperous condition, having increased about 50 per cent the past year. Arthur Dry, of this church, is the devoted superintendent at a mission school four miles from Chester. At the Children's day program a missionary offering of $11.39 was taken. For this information we are indebted to Deaconess Grace Steward.

—It will be gratifying to the friends of Dr. W. E. Garrison to know that he has just been elected to the presidency of the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, located at Las Cruces—one of the largest and most important educational institutions in the Southwest. It is supported jointly by the territory and the federal government, and has an annual income of over $100,000. President Garrison has just finished his first year as president of the New Mexico Normal University at Las Vegas, but resigns the work there to accept the position at Las Cruces, which is 300 miles south of Las Vegas, and 3,000 feet lower in altitude. The higher salary and lower altitude were both motives for the change.

—The "Christian Standard" denies with some heat that there is any ulterior motive in the meetings to be held at Bethany Park under its auspices. We are glad of that. It does not explain the meaning of those circulars sent out to certain men, purporting to rally a great gathering there to rebuke our congress and missionary conventions. That explanation seems to be due. Reference to "the Campbell Institute" does not meet the case, as The Christian-Evangelist alone is responsible for its request for the meaning of those circulars. We asked for information in the interest of unity, as God knows our heart. Will not our brethren of the "Standard" give information in the same spirit?

—After almost seven years' service in the mission fields of the Philippines, W. H. Hanna, with his family, arrived in San Francisco on June 20. For some weeks he will be in residence in California, and he will be glad to present to the churches life on the island and mission work therein. He is prepared to give stereopticon views, showing Filipino scenery, life and missions. These are at the disposal of the churches. Brother Hanna may be addressed at 1144 East Twenty-seventh street, Los Angeles, Cal.

—Tissot! This is a name which at once arrests the attention of those familiar with art and Biblical literature. Not since the days of Dore has there appeared an artist who can be compared with Tissot as a painter of Biblical scenes and characters. Tissot spent a long time in the Holy Land making the sketches and getting the impressions for that wonderfully fine series of paintings, reproductions of which are now being offered on very easy terms by the management of the Christian Publishing Company. There are in all 240 of these fine Bible pictures, beautifully colored. You can either buy them outright, or get them without money upon some special terms as detailed on the last page of The Christian-Evangelist this week.

—We understand that R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., has been elected president of Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., and has accepted the position. We have had no official notice, but we believe that the report which reaches us is trustworthy. The University compliments itself as well as Brother Crossfield in this appointment. He can not only claim this University as his Alma Mater, but nearly all of his ministerial work has been in the state of Kentucky, though he has held occasional evangelistic services very successfully in other states. His post-graduate work was at the University of Worcester. Brother Crossfield has made a great success also of his organization and conduct of the Owensboro Bible-school. Readers of The Christian-Evangelist will remember the two photographs recently published in our columns, representing his great school and his large men's class.

—Lone Jack is a rather odd name for a Christian church. Of course, the church takes the name from the place, which is a town in Missouri. Here there has been a Christian church since 1840. An interesting history of this church has been written, and we shall be glad if it can be widely circulated, for this would help a deserving young man who has had more than his share of misfortunes. Romelus L. Travis suffered an attack of spinal disease when a boy, which so affected his nervous system that he has lost all use of his lower limbs, and has slight control of his body and arms. He is an orphan and makes his home with aged grandparents. In spite of his unequal struggle he has an ambition to be independent. Setting about to educate himself, he has published some writings, the last of which is the "History of the Church of Christ at Lone Jack, Mo." This contains a picture of the church building, an account of what has occurred in the church from the time of its institution, a list of the members during all this period, and the biography and portrait of the present pastor. We believe there are many who have been members of this church, who would like to have this history, and we are glad to make this announcement for their benefit, as well as in behalf of a young man who needs the encouragement which the sale of his book would give him. The price is 30c, postpaid.

—Telegraphic dispatches bring news of the death of Simpson Ely, due to a street car accident. It appears that he was on his way to Joplin, Mo., to hold an evangelistic meeting, and was just alighting from the trolley when he either fell or was jolted off the car, striking his head on the street. He was picked up and proceeded to his destination, but arriving at the house of one of the church members, complained that he felt ill and asked for rest. He ultimately passed away at the Wakefield Home, Villa Heights. We regret to record this sudden death of a man who has, in his day, accomplished much good. He had been in the ministry for about thirty-nine years, and had traveled extensively in evangelistic work through the country. For two or three years he was president of Christian University at Canton, Mo. He was also president of the Bible College at Fairfield, Neb., for a year, but it could hardly be said that he was a leader in educational work, for his equipment did not qualify him for this. His best work was in the evangelistic field, while he made quite a success in the distribution of tracts. His most fruitful work, perhaps, was at Kirksville, Mo., where he preached 700 sermons and had 735 additions. Of late years he has been identified with the more conservative of our brethren, and, in his opposition to some movements which he did not favor, has taken himself, perhaps, more seriously than those did who were advocating the onward movement of the Christian churches. He was the only man, for instance, at the recent Kansas City convention who did not come forward and take his stand in the Brotherhood circle. His mother recently died at the advanced age of ninety-one years. His wife and two daughters were present when he died. His son, Marcellus Ely, is pastor of the Christian Church at Charleston, S. C.

Bethany Day.

Do not forget that Bethany day for the great Centennial offering for the Endowment of that College is the third Sunday in September, or September 20. Every church should get into line for this great occasion. The preachers should preach a sermon on the subject, and a great offering should be taken in every congregation. Will the elders of the churches as well as the preachers look after this matter as early as possible? Individuals should continue to send in their special contributions to the St. Louis Union Trust Company, St. Louis, Mo., or to the Mercantile Trust Company, Pittsburg, Pa. All such contributions will be acknowledged by the banks and the names of the contributors entered in a book, which will be on exhibition at our Centenary in 1909.

Five Thousand Facts About Canada. By Frank Yeigh, Toronto. Price, 25c.

A glance over this booklet reveals an astonishing amount of information about the Dominion. Each sentence contains a fact, and there are chapters on every conceivable subject. From the fact that 250,000 Americans have in the last few years found homes in Canada, the chapters dealing with the natural resources and products are of greatest interest. Canadians in America will find this volume of interest; Americans who look Canada-ward will find it of value.

A Kansas Dedication.

The writer dedicated a neat little church home for the congregation at Tescott, Kansas, on June 28. Every cent of debt had been paid before the day of dedication. Money was raised for the expenses of the day and for current expenses. A union communion service was held in the afternoon.

A Sunday-school was organized with W. E. Park as Superintendent. Alvin E. Hottell was called to preach half time. S. R. McGavran is the elder. This is a small band of Disciples, but they are heroic and success is before them.

Salina, Kan. David H. Shields.

A Working Church.

The Rushville (Ind.) church is making some records of late that are signs of gratifying progress. The Auxiliary of the C. W. B. M. has just added over fifty new members to the roll, bringing the membership up to 215, which makes our society the banner auxiliary in Indiana. The society supports W. C. McDougal at Calcutta, India, and is intensely enthusiastic. A contest in the Sunday-school has brought the record up to nearly double its former average, which is now near the 400 mark. On June 7 we had 452 present and an offering of $358.00. The Sunday-school and church support Brother Leslie Wolfe at Manilla, P. I.

The Rushville and Little Flat Rock churches have just had a union service and Roscoe Smith was formally ordained to his life work of the ministry by the writer, assisted by representatives of both congregations. Another of our splendid young men has recently entered the ministry, Charles Vail, who is now in charge of the cause at Stockwell, Ind., and doing an enthusiastic work. We are glad to introduce Brother Vail to the churches as a true man of God. He has been a reporter on "The Daily Republican" and has taken a correspondence Bible Course and is an excellent worker and speaker. We are preparing for a great meeting to be held the first of the coming year with Herbert Yeuell as leader. Our Ladies' Aid Society is raising a fund of $500 for redecorating the auditorium. This will likely be done in the month of August.

R. W. Abberley.

What Came of a Sermon.

I am very greatly interested in what the Editor said recently of Bro. William Dowling in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST (Easy Chair, May 28). I often meet with evidences of his consecrated work. I want to speak of one in particular. He was once holding a meeting in a country schoolhouse in Northern Ohio. A young man from that community who had been reading the Bible, but who found his conception of its teachings to be very different from all the preaching that he had heard, happened to attend one of the services. That night Brother Dowling's sermon gave a clear expression to the dim thoughts that had been in the young man's mind. In one short hour they all became tangible and definite to him. When the invitation was given he walked to the front to make the good confession. There had also been slowly forming in his mind the determination to start a school. He came to Valparaiso thirty-six years ago with $500, and leased an old college building that had been abandoned by the Methodists. He acted as janitor and president and filled all the professors' chairs. He gathered together about forty pupils. That school continues to-day as the largest university in America. Last year it was second only to Harvard in attendance. This year it is ahead and has enrolled over 6,000 students, with 165 professors and 22 different colleges or departments, with more than a million dollars invested in buildings. Through all these years the man who made the school has been most devoted to the church. From this university 100,000 young people have gone out to the uttermost parts of the earth, and each one has gone out with an abiding impression made by the steadfast character of the president.

The young man who heard Brother Dowling long ago has stood for thirty-six years in the door of this church fifteen minutes before Sunday-school begins, shaking hands with every one who comes, and he is the last one out at night, having spoken a word of encouragement to all. He never misses a prayer-meeting when he is in the city. I heard him say a few weeks ago that Christ, as he heard him preached in those days gone by, has made his life.

If Brother Dowling can look down from heaven, as I believe he can, he knows that all his sacrifices would have been richly rewarded had he never done more than to have preached that sermon that reached the heart of President H. B. Brown.

Bruce Brown.

MY LAST SUNDAY IN THE HOLY LAND.

I began the study of the international Sunday-school lessons the first day of their appointment, January, 1872, and have kept up with them ever since, and have enjoyed the past quarter's study of the book of John as much as any of the lessons during the thirty-six years of their use. In fact, I have become very much attached to the series, for the increase in Bible study and general knowledge of the scripture has become so marked that I have become a Sunday-school enthusiast. But the cause that has led to the writing of this article was one of the last lessons, being the one that I last heard in the Holy Land. We had turned our faces toward the setting sun as we left old Damascus and began to sing "Home, Sweet Home." But turning to Baalbec and from thence over the Lebanon Mountains, many of the party became restless to get to the Mediterranean Sea and several took passage on the "diligence" as it came along. One friend turned his palanquin outfit over to me that I might approach the sea with the dignity of a Syrian prince.

The evening sun was reflecting the blue waters to us as we entered the old city of Beyreut. Sunday morning came and at 11 o'clock we attended service at the Presbyterian church. Dr. Marquis, president of the McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, preached for us. He was with another party but we were together at Jerusalem and Jordan and Nazareth and had conversations on the "Land and the Book." His text was John 13:7: "Jesus said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." His sermon showed that he was full of knowledge of this great historic land and its prophetic lines. The preachers and tourists present were all benefited. When the governor of the city heard of the arrival of our American party he said America had done so much for their city that he wished to give us the privilege of the city. After our noon meal we were placed in charge of his deputy with carriages, that we might visit the "halls of justice" through its various departments, thence to the reception room and take a cup of oriental coffee. We were taken to the homes of several prominent citizens, thence to the Protestant Syrian College, in the city suburbs. It is a fine school and doing a good work. In the campus is a neat chapel. Being informed that a Sunday-school was then in session, I left the party and hastened to the church. The superintendent rose up before the Sunday-school —all young men with "fez" on each head. He said, "My young friends, I can say but little to you in regard to this lesson, because it is on the crucifixion of our Lord. Its sadness shrouds the human heart in deepest gloom, but an American has written some beautiful lines. Then it was that my heart bounded when I learned that an American had so impressed that Palestine Sunday-school superintendent in poetic measure. He then quoted the following:

"There is a green hill far away,
Without a city wall,
Where the dear Lord was crucified,
Who died to save us all.

"We may not know, we can not tell
What pains he had to bear,
But we believe it was for us,
He hung and suffered there."

I was delighted to hear him recite that familiar hymn, but my delight reached a climax when, at the closing song, "I Gave My Life for Thee," the deep-toned organ joined in the human melody. They sang in Arabic. I did my best in English with spirit and understanding. I hastened forward at the close with extended hand to that superintendent. He said, "Oh, why did you not make yourself known so I could have you talk to these young men? They would have been so well pleased." I replied that his closing was more pleasant to me than anything I could have said.

But while our party were enjoying so richly this lovely Sunday Ameid Racheid Bey, the deputy governor of the city, a learned young Turk, was in a high fever and heart burnings from a sudden attack of love sickness, caused by meeting our bright Chicago girl. We had all taken our meals at the same table and the young Turk soon joined in conversation with the young people. By nightfall he began to express his adoration with a beautiful bouquet of Palestine flowers, but this was not enough. The disease intensified so that he could think of nothing but that beautiful American girl. My advice to guard the girl till we could get on our steamer for Constantinople was followed. The Turk tried to head us off by a telegram a week later when we anchored in the Golden Horn, but our young folks headed him off. What an eventful day was "My Last Sunday in the Holy Land!"

Irvington, Cal. J. Durham.

As We Go to Press.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Turner, Oregon, July 5.—Dr. Dye and wife created great enthusiasm; thirty volunteers for foreign field and over $2,000 for boat on Congo to be called "The Oregon."—Oregon Christian Missionary Convention, per D. Errett, president.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Olathe, Kan., July 5.—Closed here tonight with 65 added; great meeting; 11 today. De Soto, Kan., next.—Wilhite and Adams.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Louisville, Ky., July 6.—The Third Church's $25,000 building was dedicated yesterday, with all indebtedness provided for. F. M. Rains was with us.—W. S. Gamboe.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Pasadena, Cal., July 6.—Closed with 1,500 added at Danville. We are here to dedicate a $90,000 building and lot with Bro. F. M. Dowling and hold a three weeks' meeting; 57 added at first invitation yesterday.—Scoville, Ullom and Vancamp.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Cincinnati, O., July 3.—All indications are that Christian Endeavorers broke all their records in American Missions on Inland Empire day. The campaign is still on until September 30. Gather up the fragments and send in your offerings at once. Fort Smith, Ark., $300, and will become a living link; Waco, Tex., $33; the Central, Springfield, Mo., $25; New Boston, Mo., 10; Vermont, Ill., $10; Wilmington, Ohio, $10; Memphis, Tenn. (Linden Street), $10; Bethel, Ill., $10; First, Springfield, Mo., $10; Third, Philadelphia, Pa., $11; Central, Des Moines, Ia., $10; First Ch., Covington, Ky., $10; Hamilton, O., $10; Carthage, Ill., $10; Dallas City, Ill., $10; Elyria, O., $10; Rockville, Ind., $10; Fairfield, Ia., $12; Beaver, Pa., $10; West Side, Springfield, Ill., $15; Wilson, N. C., $10; Osceola, Ia., $10; St. Louis (Compton Heights), $10; Lancaster, Mo., $11. This is something like it should be. Praise the Lord.—H. A. Denton.

Report of the International Lesson Sunday-School Committee

(American Section.)

In making its last report, the sixth international Sunday-school lesson committee appointed at Denver, in 1902, desires to record first of all the loss which we sustained in the death of Rev. John Potts, D. D., who had acted as the chairman of the committee since 1896.

The members of the committeee bear him in affectionate remembrance and never can forget his kindly, genial presence, his courtesy and consideration in all matters of debate and difference of opinion which manifested themselves, and his skillful leadership through many difficult times of storm and stress. We are glad that it has been our privilege to co-operate with him for so many years, and we can truly say in the words of Holy Writ, "The memory of the just is blessed."

Since the last triennial convention held at Toronto, the lesson committee has had four regular meetings, the first of which was held immediately after their election. The next meeting was held in Buffalo in 1906, the next in Boston in 1907, and the last is the one which was convened just before the beginning of the present convention. Sub-committees on various courses have also held meetings during the past three years, and so far as lay in their power the committee as a whole have endeavored to fulfill their duty to their constituency. In general, it may be said that since the adoption of the beginners' course and the authority to move forward in preparation of advanced courses, the work of the committee has greatly multiplied. Indeed, it is not an exaggeration to say that the present committee have had at least double the amount of work laid on their shoulders that any of their predecessors have borne.

It will be remembered that at Toronto permission was given to the committee to issue advanced courses of lessons for such schools as had felt the need of them. The whole field of adult class teaching was new, not to the committee alone, but to other Sunday-school workers as well. The committee had little experience of others by which it could be guided, and, therefore, was thrown upon its own resources very largely for the conduct of this work. The committee began by issuing a three-years' course for advanced scholars without consultation with lesson writers and teachers. This was done partly because of the cry for rapid preparation of advanced courses. It proved, however, to be a mistake. Editors, well nigh universally, refused to accept and prepare lessons on this three years' course. Another and different three years' course was then presented to the lesson committee by certain members of the Editorial Association, which course the lesson committee in turn did not feel it would be wise to adopt as their own.

The committee then issued a one year's course on "The Ethical Teaching of Jesus," on which criticisms from various sources were requested before the lessons were put in their final shape. This single year's course has been somewhat used, though how extensively we are not able to say. The course on the ethical teaching of Jesus was followed by another running parallel (so far as possible) with the regular international lessons for 1908. This course, too, has been used somewhat, though again we are in the dark as to how widespread its use has been.

A third year's course has now been prepared, running, so far as possible, parallel with the regular lessons for 1909, which lie in the Book of Acts. The only departure from this general parallelism is, that this advanced course begins by taking up the life of the Apostle Peter as set forth in the Gospels, so that when he is introduced to the class at Pentecost they may have some knowledge of his previous life. The committee ventures to think that this last course is possibly better adapted to the needs of the average advanced class than any of the courses that they have produced heretofore. At the same time the committee recognizes that teachers of advanced classes are generally persons of some experience and of positive views, and that to suit the main body of these teachers in the best way possible will require still longer experience and much of that virtue which has for centuries been thought to be Job's highest attribute.

At the meeting of the committee in Boston, April 24-26, 1907, after prolonged discussion, the committee decided to recommend to the triennial convention at Louisville, that they be authorized to prepare a fourfold grade of lessons as follows:

1. A beginners' course, permanent, for pupils under 6 years of age.
2. A primary course, permanent, for pupils between 6 and 9 years of age.
3. A general course as at present planned for pupils over 9 years of age.
4. An advanced course parallel with the general courses to be prepared by each lesson committee for such classes as may desire it.

On June 19-21, 1907, a conference was had between the British and American sections of the lesson committee in London. There were present: Members of the British section, 10; members of the American section, 6; British Sunday-school leaders, 10; American Sunday-school leaders, 6. Total, 32.

The object of this conference was to discuss matters relating to the Sunday-school work at large, especially as bearing upon the choice of lessons to be prepared for the whole Sunday-school constituency.

The findings of this conference are already widely known. The chief "finding" of this conference is expressed as follows:

"That the international lesson committee undertakes to provide schemes of lessons for the whole range of Sunday-school teaching, including primary work (ages 3-9); general or intermediate work (ages 9-15); and senior or advanced work (over 15 years). That the lesson for the general or intermediate division shall be uniform, and that primary and advanced lessons may be prepared by the American and British sections of the lesson committee acting jointly or independently, but with a view to securing uniformity as soon as possible."

There was some difference as to the nomenclature of the different departments in the Sunday-school organization, but that did not affect the trend of opinion on the part both of our British colaborers and of those from our side of the water who attended the conference.

At the invitation of Mr. Hartshorn, the chairman of the international executive committee, a special conference was called in Boston, January 2, 3, 1908, of editors, lesson writers, publishers, lesson committee and members of the international executive committee. The theme to be discussed was, "The International Lesson System—How May It Be Improved?"

There were present at that conference fifty-four persons coming from twelve states and two provinces in Canada and representing eleven denominations. To go somewhat more into detail there were present: Members of the international executive committee, 6; members of the lesson committee, 7; Sunday-school teachers and lesson writers, 29; publishers, 9; others, 3. Total 54.

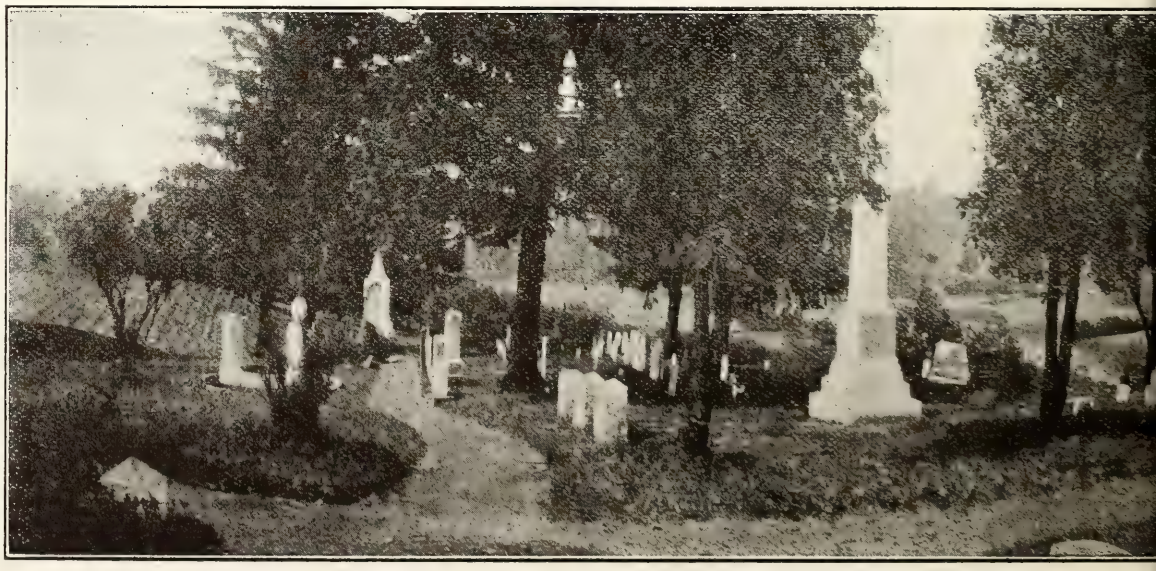
After two days spent in prolonged and friendly discussion, the following resolutions were adopted:

1. That the system of a general lesson for the whole school, which has been in successful use for thirty-five years, is still the most practicable and effective system for the great majority of the Sunday-schools of North America. Because of its past accomplishments, its present usefulness, and its future possibilities, we recommend its continuance and its fullest development.

2. That the need for a graded system of lessons is expressed by so many Sunday-schools and workers that it should be adequately met by the International Sunday-school Association, and that the lesson committee should be instructed by the next international convention, to be held at Louisville, Ky., June 18-23, 1908, to continue the preparation of a thoroughly graded course covering the entire range of the Sunday-school.

Your lesson committee have thus been compelled to face the fact that we are in the presence of wide and impotant movements in the world of Sunday-school work. They believe that this association ought to continue in its leadership of the vast Sunday-school system, and unify under one banner all who are seeking to win our scholars for Christ. Your committee have just spent long hours in reconsidering the whole situation, and now recommend the adoption by this convention of the following statement of facts and resolutions based thereon:

1. A new situation has been gradually brought about: (a) by the action of this association in providing for the beginners'



The cemetery at Bethany, W. Va. In front of the large monument marked by the two crosses are the graves of x and xx. grave is an unmarked one near the single cross, and now beside him has been laid course at its Denver convention in 1902, and for the advanced course at its Toronto convention in 1905; (b) by the action of the lesson committee in April, 1907, favoring graded lessons; and (c) by the actions of the conferences between some members of the American lesson committee and the British lesson committee in London, 1907, and of the Boston conference in January, 1908.

2. It being evident that the very large majority of the Sunday-schools on this continent and in the British Isles, and practically all the schools in foreign lands, are now, and must be for many years to come, dependent upon the uniform lesson system, we rejoice to affirm with the Boston conference the necessity of continuing that system, which is rooted in the affection of many millions of people.

3. There is a large and increasing number of Sunday-schools which earnestly desire and are able to establish a thoroughly graded course of Sunday-school education, and many of these are looking to this association and its lesson committee for leadership in that new and difficult work.

4. There are a large number of Sunday-schools which are able and anxious to use graded courses among the younger and among the advanced scholars, while continuing to use the uniform lesson in the school, and they, too, look to us for guidance: Therefore, be it re-

1. That this convention of the International Sunday-school Association instruct the lesson committee which is to be appointed for the next six years, to continue the work of arranging and issuing the uniform lesson as heretofore.

2. That this convention authorize its lesson committee also to continue the preparation of a thoroughly graded course of lessons, which may be used by any Sunday-school which desires it, whether in whole or in part.

3. That this convention instruct its lesson committee in the fulfillment of these tasks to seek the continued co-operation of the British section of the lesson committee.

The committee are glad to note that at the present meeting of the lesson committee the British section of the lesson committee is more largely represented than it ever has been before, there being four present, and we look upon this as an omen of a more perfect co-operation in Sunday-school work between the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon peoples than has ever yet been realized.

In laying down the task taken up six years ago, the committee is conscious of many deficiencies in their work. At the same time they are equally conscious of an earnest effort to meet the needs of Sunday-schools the land over, both of that vast majority of schools that for many years will not be able to go beyond the uniform lessons for all grades, and of those schools which desire lesson material furnished for a complete grading of the school from the beginners' department to the adult class. Doubtless, future lesson committees will be able to perfect the work, building on foundations already laid, erecting a superstructure that shall be to the praise of God and to the vast advantage of the millions represented in the Sunday-school army the world over.

A. F. Schauffler, Secretary.

Louisville, June 20, 1908.

The Iowa Convention.

The convention of 1907 decided to hold its session for 1908 on the assembly plan, at the Des Moines Chautauqua grounds, lasting one week. But the board of managers were unable to secure the grounds at the proper time, and was obliged to make other arrangements. Accordingly the convention was held with the Capitol Hill Church, in Des Moines, of which J. M. Van Horn is pastor. It began Thursday, June 18, at 2 p. m., and closed Wednesday evening, June 24. Many doubted that so long a convention could hold up in interest until the end, but the doubts were not justified. The convention held up well in both interest and attendance, and will go on record as one of the very best conventions ever held in Iowa.

J. M. Van Horn.

Alexander Campbell. Dr. Barclay's
ay. See page 872.

The first day and a half were devoted to the C. W. B. M. of the state. The work of this splendid organization is in fine shape. The officers elected were as follows: President, Mrs. A. M. Haggard; vice-president, Mrs. Alice Peak; recording secretary, Mrs. S. C. Slayton; treasurer, Mrs. Leta Page Ashley; corresponding secretary, Miss Annette Newcomer.

Friday evening and Saturday were used by the Bible school and Christian Endeavor interests. The Friday evening addresses by Arthur Long and C. S. Medbury, the one on the Bible school and the other on the Endeavor work, were great inspirational addresses. The various addresses of Saturday were efficient in arousing great enthusiasm for the two interests represented. C. L. Organ, the new leader in the Bible school and Endeavor work, made an excellent impression in all his convention work, and the people are convinced that he is the right man for the work. The address at night of Finis Idleman on "Evangelism" was a worthy climax to a great convention day. Perhaps the most significant event of the day was the unveiling of a fine oil portrait of Alexander Campbell in the Iowa Historical Building. At 11 o'clock the convention repaired to the Historical Building, which is in the same block, and there occurred a most impressive service, consisting of prayer by S. H. Zendt, the unveiling, by B. S. Denny, the presentation address by Dr. D. R. Dungan, a fine solo by DeLoss Smith, and an address of acceptance by Hon. B. F. Carroll. Thus Iowa takes the lead in placing the portrait of Mr. Campbell among the portraits of other illustrious men in its state historical building. [See the reproduction of this portrait on our front page.—Editor.]

Sunday was a great day for our people in Des Moines. The pulpits of our churches and of several other churches were filled by visiting preachers and about 400 delegates attended church. The feature of the day was a great communion service at 3 o'clock in the Auditorium. It was attended by about 2,000 people and was a very impressive occasion, under the direction of the veteran D. R. Dungan.

Monday forenoon was given to hearing appeals from the several national boards. A. McLean, G. W. Muckley, J. H. Mohorter, W. T. Moore, for the American Board, and G. B. Van Arsdall for the Board of Ministerial Relief, made most excellent addresses and won the hearts of the people for their causes.

The remainder of the I. C. C. was occupied by many excellent addresses, too many to be specified, some of which were remarkably good and deserve special mention. There was but one discordant note in the convention, and that was safely met and disposed of. Noah Garwick, minister of the church at Waterloo, came before the convention with a grievance against the State Board, and asked that a committee be appointed to examine into the matter. The convention yielded to the request, and magnanimously permitted the aggrieved party to appoint the committee.

Finis Idleman.

The election resulted as follows:

Officers of the convention: President, Arthur Long; first vice-president, J. K. Ballou; second vice-president, C. H. Morris; recording secretary, S. B. Ross.

Officers of the Board: President, S. H. Zendt; vice-president, J. D. Corbett; recording secretary, J. J. Grove; corresponding secretary, B. S. Denny; treasurer, J. M. Lucas.

The following standing committees were appointed:

Auditing.—I. M. Leiser, D. B. Byers, J. B. Burton.

Obituaries.—J. Mad. Williams, Miss Annette Newcomer, J. H. Ragan.

Tracts.—J. T. Nichols, C. L. Organ, C. H. Strawn.

Temperance.—D. R. Dungan, D. H. Buxton, Hill M. Bell.

Plan of Work.—J. D. Corbett, H. I. Prusia, Arthur Long, B. S. Denny, W. E. Brandenburg.

Union.—J. Mad. Williams, C. H. Morris, S. H. Zendt, O. M. Pennock, H. D. Williams.

The annual report of the Board, as made out by Cor. Sec. B. S. Denny, is an excellent printed document of twenty-three pages, giving a most thorough view of the work of the Board and the condition of the cause in the state. The total receipts of the convention for the past year were $13,478.19.

Here follow some figures of interest to men of every state:

Total number of churches	446
Preaching full time	164
Preaching half time	160
Preaching fourth time	27
Preaching occasionally	10
No preaching	85

The convention of 1909 will be held with the church at Davenport.

The State Ministerial Institute, as the closing part of the convention, began its work Tuesday evening with an address by Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, on "The Plea of the Disciples, the Ultimate of Protestantism." It was certainly a great address in every way—great as an apologetic for the plea, great as a sympathetic criticism of the past advocacy of the plea, and great in its hope and help for the future of the plea. His next address was delivered Wednesday forenoon, and was on the theme, "Lawyer or Prophet; or, Shall the Disciples Be Legal or Free?"

These two addresses raised quite a storm. At the conclusion of the second address there was an extended demonstration of disapproval, and for a time it looked as if there would be an ugly discussion. The discussion came, but it was in good humor. C. H. Morris, of Marshalltown surrendered his place on the program for Dr. D. R. Dungan to review the two addresses. Dr. Dungan availed himself of the opportunity, and did the work in splendid spirit. After all, the differences were chiefly concerning terms used and viewpoints occupied. Brother Jenkins spoke Wednesday morning on "Our Education." It was a magnificent address, full of valuable suggestions for our people. I must not fail to mention Brother Jenkins' address of Wednesday afternoon on "The Order of Services in Our Churches." This address met the hearty approval of the entire body of ministers.

Other valuable features of the institute were a review of Forsythe's new book, "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," by C. C. Rowlison, a paper on "Things in the Church to Help the Preacher's Message," by R. W. Lilly, and the president's address by G. B. Van Arsdall.

The institute placed itself on record as favoring the organization of a national ministerial association during the New Orleans convention. It also instructed the executive committee to provide that all leading papers be carefully reviewed in future meetings. The next meeting will be in the second week of February next and with the church at Drake University.

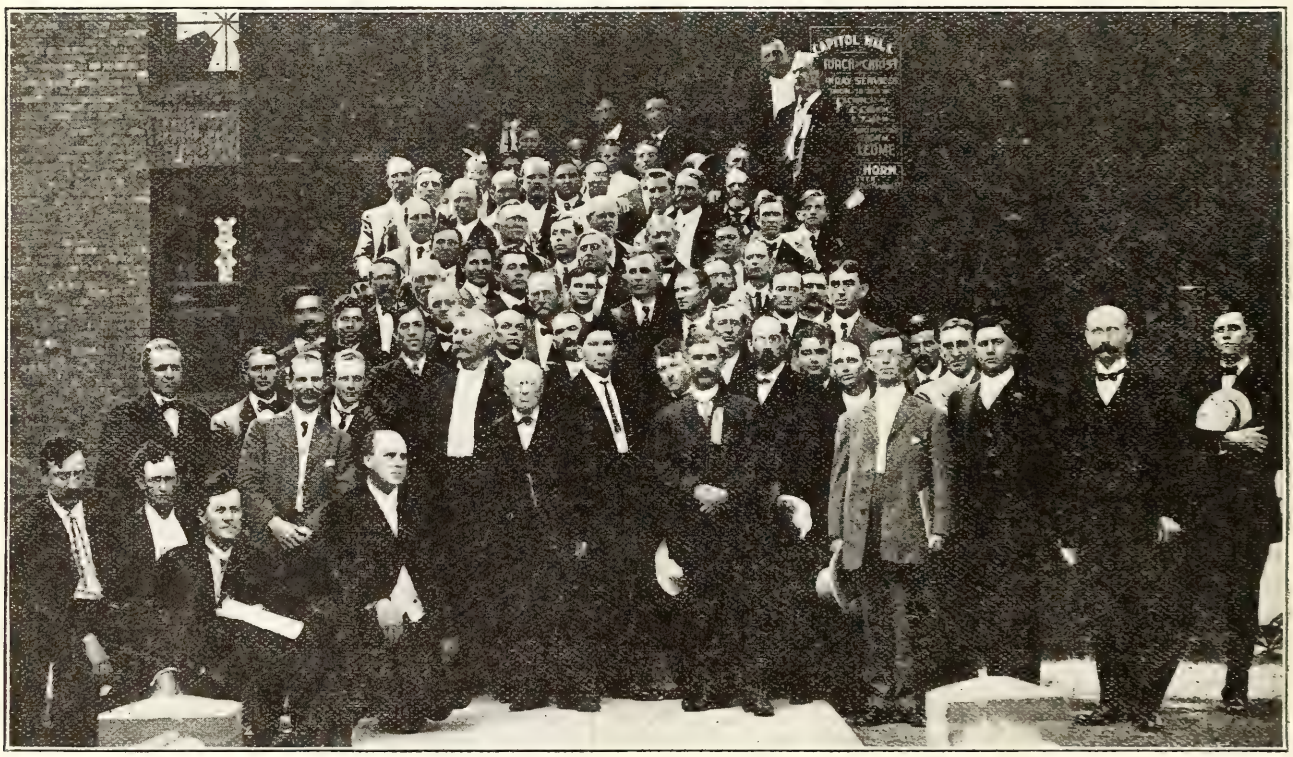
The following officers were elected: President, Finis Idleman; vice-president, S. H. Zendt; secretary-treasurer, H. D. Williams. Members executive committee: Prof. F. O. Norton and R. W. Lilly.

The Capitol Hill Church looked after the entertainment of the convention in fine shape. The church is at present in excellent condition under the ministry of H. E. Van Horn, who is proving himself a worthy companion with Idleman and Medbury.

C. S. Medbury, who presided over the convention, did it in an admirable way. He is as gracious and earnest in the chair as in the pulpit, and that is saying much. His spirit seemed to imbue the convention with goodwill and activity. At the most critical period in the convention, when Mr. Garwick made his attack on the management, Arthur Long was in the chair. It was a trying time for a chairman, but he held the reins nicely. Brother Long is one of the universally loved young ministers of Iowa and the convention honored him with the presidency for the coming year.

The ministerial institute was presided over by G. B. Van Arsdall. He had a difficult task, and, while his rulings were not all universally approved, his tact prevented any disorder. His successor is Finis Idleman, whom the institute delights to honor.

H. D. Williams.



Iowa's Ministerial Association in attendance at the State Convention.

Sunday-Schools and Missions.

The third annual conference on the Sunday-school and missions under the auspices of the young people's movement will be held at Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., July 15-23, 1908.

The purpose of the conference is to bring together persons interested in missionary education in the Sunday-school for nine days of uninterrupted conference and prayer. The conference will endeavor to extend its ideals and plans by the training of missionary leaders and workers in local Sunday-schools.

Officers of the various state and other Sunday-school associations, representatives of the Baraca and Philathea movements, superintendents of Sunday-schools, members of missionary committees in local Sunday-schools, teachers, young pastors, business men, state superintendents and all others interested in the growth and development of Sunday-school work should attend this conference.

It will be held at beautiful Silver Bay, on the west side of Lake George, twenty-two miles from the southern end and eight miles from the northern end.

We have not been represented at these conferences as we should have been. We have an excellent opportunity of getting in touch with a movement which means incalculable help in the practice and permanent development of our Sunday-school work.

For information concerning rates, programs, etc., write at once.

George B. Ranshaw.
Sunday-School Department, American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

A Great Children's Day.

Two months before Children's day the Bible school of the First Church at Washington, Pa., began the most aggressive campaign for this day it has ever conducted. My story shall be especially of Class 17, an Adult mixed class enrolled in the International Bible Class Association, December, 1907. N. M. Abbott is president and E. A. Cole the teacher.

At a called meeting of the officers and committees it was decided to take for our motto for Children's day, 500 scholars and $300 as a class. In order to do the most systematic work there were twenty committees chosen with five members to assist each chairman.

To inspire all to their best effort, and to enable them to see what each was doing, we secured the services of Paul C. Thielman, who, as you may easily conclude, is an artist and one not afraid of hard work, and he drew us a tree. The trunk represented the class, the large limbs, each with five branches, the twenty committees. Each member's name was upon a limb or branch. With enrolling cards saying, "I, ———, promise to attend the Children's day exercises of the First Christian Church, June 14, 1908," these workers started out. Each name signed was reported and a leaf drawn upon the branch of the person securing it. As the leaves multiplied the enthusiasm grew. The photo shows the tree as it appeared June 14. There were 710 names enrolled, and many who could not be put on at the last hour. Not only did each one get five others, but some as many as 75 and others near that number.

We secured the Salvation Army barracks across the street from the church, for our class had two special numbers, and all the regular program was also given in the main church. We had 564 in attendance and $230 offering. The main school packed our large auditorium and school room. The motto for the entire school was, 1,200 scholars and $800. We had 1,259 present, and the offering was $601. Our superintendent, B. E. Tombaugh, and the splendid corps of teachers assisting him, have led the school to its greatest victory in this Children's day attendance and offering. Our greatest problem now is to find room.

Class 17 has 180 enrolled, and for a month preceding Children's day kept above 140 in attendance. W. R. Warren, our Centennial secretary, was present and said it looked as though the Centennial was beginning and that at the right place.

When the present pastorate began (seven years ago), this Adult class had 23 enrolled. There were nine present the first Lord's day we came. It has done many other good works in the church. The moral to my story is to organize your Adult class and work the organization. Mrs. E. A. Cole.

Washington, Pa.

Iowa Adult Classes.

As far as I have been able to ascertain, the following is a full and complete list of all of the Organized Adult Classes among our people in the state of Iowa:

Class Name.	Place.	Members.
Forward Adult	Adaza	15
Training for Service	Missouri Valley	46
Berean Class	Prairie City	10
Ruth Class	Davenport	16
Twentieth Century	Davenport	22
Leader Class	Burlington	50
Mother's Round Table	Sac City	26
Bible Class	Clarinda	8
Who Do Class	Newton	32
Berean Class	Davenport	16
Inner Circle	Sac City	25
Bible Study	Clarinda	14
Ruth Class	Burlington	85
Young Men's	Wapello	36
Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip	Clarinda	35

In addition to the above classes, possibly we should number the "Baraca Classes," for they are fully organized, though they are not generally recognized as under the International Sunday-school management. Here are given the "Baraca Classes" of Iowa, as far as I have been able to know:

Place.	Secretary.	Members.
Arlington	Dale Rice	20
Cedar Rapids	Glen Holden	18
Centerville	Lester Philips	65
Clearfield	Ray Stevenson	18
Fort Dodge	Lewis P. Kopp	75
Fertile	Carlos Robinson	20
Marshalltown	A. R. Welker
Goldfield	Allan Wilson	26
Oskaloosa	Fred White	20
Panora	L. Brower	10
Vinton	Wilson Harper	15
Mason City	L. O. Newcomer
Zearing	George Guthrie	25

Now, in addition to the two lists given, I am confident that many other classes are organized somewhat, but can not be counted because they have not sent in the application. Iowa folks, ask me for the application blanks.—C. L. Organ, State Superintendent B. S.

Des Moines, Iowa.

The Englewood Church Bible school, Indianapolis, Ind., O. E. Tomes pastor and superintendent, has an organized adult class known as the "Opportunity" Bible class, now the largest class in the school. This class was regularly organized according to the International Association requirements, February 23, 1908, with an enrollment of eighteen, and now numbers fifty-two. The class is doing good work, and we are determined on one hundred members before the heated season is over. Then—well, we will report later.—A. L. and M. A. Orcutt, teachers.

A Promising Movement.

"The Adult Bible class movement has more of promise in it than anything I remember in the history of the church. We have forty in a teacher training class just organized."

The above note is from J. N. Jessup, of Little Rock, Arkansas. He has two organized Adult classes in his school besides his teacher training class. He is another of the rapidly increasing number of wide awake preachers who see the value of the organized Adult class. The teacher training movement and the Adult Bible class movement are the two notable things in the Bible school world.

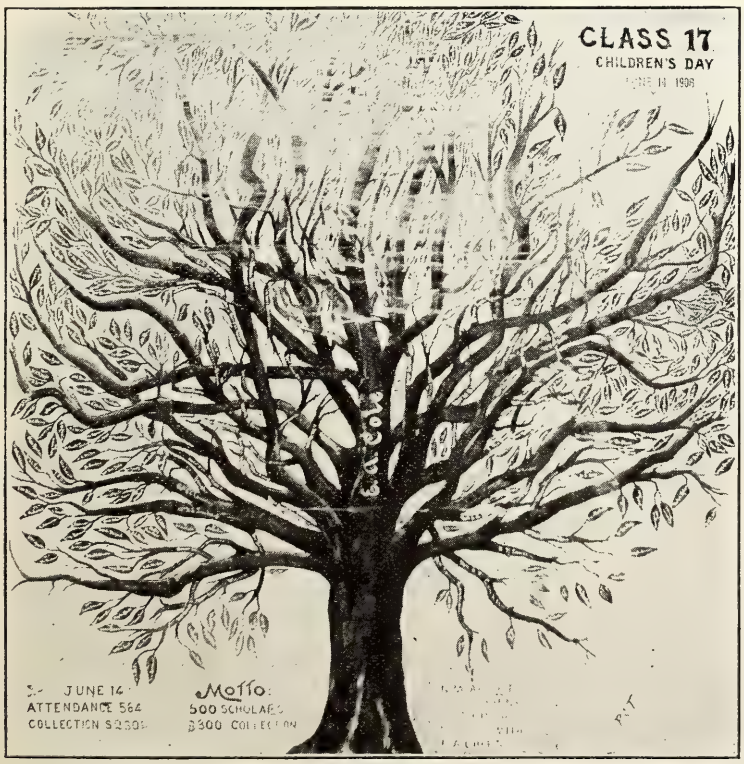
A Large Class in a Small Town.

The class of young men in the Christian Sunday-school at Kansas, Ill., has organized itself into a class, ready to work for Christ, with D. H. Ross as teacher. It has a president, secretary and treasurer and three committees. May 3 there were 73 young men in the class. Kansas has a population of 1,400, with three churches. This is the largest young men's class known of for the size of the town.—Mrs. Cleo Brown.

A Helpful Visit.

In the pressure of business and the desire to carefully observe results, I did not write you concerning the visit of Brother Stevenson. Our Bible school has increased forty in regular attendance since he was here. We have enrolled 120 in teacher training, making now 150, which is the largest in any church in Pennsylvania. His visit emphasized Bible study, in its importance and the ease by which it may be undertaken among the people here, as never before. He did our teachers and officers great good in bringing them to understand the graded school. Our hearts are filled with gratitude for his aid in our work.—Howard Cramblet.

McKeesport, Pa.



A Class Tree for Enlisting New Members.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Hiram Home-Coming and Commencement.

If perfect harmony means music, then there was much music at Hiram at the home-coming and commencement time. Everybody was in best of spirits, enthusiastically hopeful, and best of all, ready to work for Hiram as never before. The attendance was large. The estimate for home-coming day was 1,200 to 1,500. Many more came for commencement day the day after. Sunday, June 21, marked the baccalaureate sermon by President Bates. At night was the anniversary of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. Monday night was the commencement exercises of the literary societies. Tuesday night the Hiram Society gave a fine musical program, "The Prodigal Son," under the direction of Professor Sadlier.

At the forenoon session on Wednesday—home-coming day—Mr. Clinton Young gave a talk on, "Pioneer Days in Hiram." Professor Wakefield read a paper on "Early History of Hiram." C. C. Smith was at his best, when he told of "The Days of the Old Eclectic." These three addresses will be published in the "Garrettsville Journal" and can be had for 5 cents per copy. On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Jessie B. Pounds read a poem, "The Voice of Yesterday." It was characteristic of the authoress and greatly enjoyed. Professor Paul spoke on "Some Hiram Ideals." He is always interesting, but this was one of his very best efforts. President Bates briefly told of "The Call of the Future." It was a clear, definite note that showed him to be a man who had a program and a way to bring it to pass. The reception given him was practically an ovation. Many brought just a word of greeting during the day, among whom were J. H. Mohorter, W. H. C. Newington, G. W. Brown, of India; Henry Derthick, Professor Treudley, Hon. A. H. Pettibone, et al. The music was furnished by the Vocal Society, the Glee Club, Professor Sadlier, Mrs. Allie Dean Waldo and Mrs. Ellis. Miss Claudia Page, a granddaughter of President Zollars, charmed all by her wonderful execution on the violin. On Wednesday night the Hesperian Society gave "She Stoops to Conquer" to an audience of 1,200 people. It was a faultless piece of work.

Thursday was commencement day. How much that means to so many of us! The weather was ideal. At 10 a. m. the tabernacle was jammed full. The class did no speaking. Prof. W. M. Forrest, '94, now of the University of Virginia Bible chair, made the address. It was a great address, worthy in every way of the man and the occasion. The theme was "The Student's Obligation." Three things were mentioned: 1. The obligation of reverence toward the Alma Mater. 2. The obligation to scholarship and literature. 3. The obligation to society and the body politic. A happy custom at Hiram is for each class to have a class professor who becomes an advisor to the class in a special way. The class of '08 chose Prof. E. E. Snoddy for this relationship to them. He made a short but very excellent address to the class. President Bates then conferred degrees on twenty-seven graduates.

Thursday afternoon was given to a short meeting of the Educational Society and the alumni meeting, at which George A. McFarlan, of South Dakota, made the address, and the alumni banquet. It was not the writer's privilege to stay for these, so I can not report them definitely. Thursday night the Alethian Society gave a good entertainment.

President Thomson, of the State University, sent a representative to attend the commencement in the person of Professor Vivian, who made a very happy speech and commended Hiram and her work very highly. Among other things he said, "Get all you can at Hiram first. We do only technical work."

There are many things at such a gathering as this outside of the regular program that are as interesting as the main program. Society reunions were very happy occasions. Then the class reunions. On every hand one might hear the sounds of a class yell from a group of people representing some class. Then, of course, all the old escapades and jokes had to be rehearsed. What would college life be without them? Several classes took $50 annual scholarships by which a student can be kept in school and render a service to compensate the fund. One of the most interesting things was to see those who had brought the children comparing and counting. At least two, "Jake" Baxter and Dr. "Nibbs" Calvin agreed with the Ohio man that his flock of three took the sweepstakes. The people came from everywhere, north, east, south and west. Mrs. Garfield and Mrs. Hinsdale were guests of honor. The hospitality of the Hiram people was all that could be asked.

A. G. Webb, of Cleveland, and Superintendent J. K. Baxter, of Canton, were elected as trustees. Three immediate and vital needs were emphasized by President Bates in address and pamphlet: 1. The early completion of the $100,000 of new endowment. 2. One hundred new students for next year. 3. Fifty annual scholarships of $50 each. Hiram never looked into a brighter future. Never was there a more hearty and unanimous support by alumni, students and the church constituency. Ohio Disciples, if you can take a $50 scholarship individually, as a church, as a Sunday-school, as an Endeavor society, write President Bates. If you know a young man or woman that ought to go to Hiram, write President Bates.

C. A. Freer.

A Good Meeting at Greenville, Texas.

Our pastor, W. T. Hilton, has just closed a very successful revival meeting for his home congregation. There were 91 additions. Leonard Daugherty had charge of the music and proved himself a most capable leader.

This is the second revival meeting Brother Hilton has held since becoming our pastor, a little more than a year ago, and the loyalty of the membership of the church and great audiences that attended the services attest his ability and popularity as both pastor and evangelist. Both he and Sister Hilton strive by precept and example to lead us into greater usefulness in the Master's service.

Mrs. T. A. Smith.

Yeuell in San Francisco.

On June 21 we closed the Yeuell meeting at the West Side Church. It continued 36 days, and 205 persons responded to the invitation. A few of these may not identify with our congregation,—perhaps not with any of our churches. A number came by letter, statement, or reclamation,—many of them from other bodies. But the great majority were by confession and baptism. Not a dozen of the 205 were under 16 years of age, even fewer between 16 and 20. Four-fifths of the entire number were full-grown men and women—and the men were in the majority. A number of both sexes were people over 45 years of age—a few even over 60.

As nearly as we can estimate, our resident membership has been increased 60 per cent and the real working force of the church doubled in number. The growth of pastor and people in faith and love, in wisdom and zeal, none can measure. Two things, however, are plain facts: Before the meeting it was impossible to make any large part of the church confidently expect even half as great a meeting; now they unanimously declare that we can do all things through Christ, who strengthens us.

Our time was brief for preparation, but events proclaim the wisdom and thoroughness of that which we made. While due regard was had to local conditions, our chief concern was to prepare the field for the special reapers we had called to leadership. Yeuell and I had never met, but each knew the other through correspondence and careful investigation. In him I was in nowise mistaken except that he is a brainier, broader, better preacher and a more earnest, fearless, consecrated man than I even thought him to be. His character and conduct are unexceptionable. Never have I seen rare power and real humility, compelling confidence and sincere modesty, more happily blended. Our personal relations from the beginning were intimate, our conversation frank, our understanding cordial. In public and private, before my people and the general community, he upheld me and my work, the church and its officers, and to the end of life he will credit us with a larger share in the success of the meeting than our most loyal friends would claim.

Ralph Boileau sang his own sweet, cheerful, Christian spirit of sacrificial service into every heart. The character of our church music, and the lives of our singers especially, must always be brighter and better for his work among us.

We are already planning to have them back again in two years, when we will pray and work for two thousand souls in two months.

Robert Lord Cave.

Michigan Disciples.

At Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, Disciples met in the fortieth annual convention June 8-12. A splendid attendance and interest marked every session. Over 140 delegates represented the churches of the state. Muskegon was opened with R. E. Stevenson in charge. The addresses were all of a high order and were especially appropriate. G. W. Muckley and Dr. Guy, Mrs. Harlan and H. A. Denton all lifted our thoughts and spirits to the noble and the stimulating.

Then, from our own state, C. J. Tanner, J. T. McGarvey, J. A. Canby, O. W. Winter, C. E. Pickett, G. W. Moore and others did noble service.

J. O. Walton and wife, with the people of Mt. Pleasant, entertained the convention in a charming way. Brother Walton pronounced it the best convention he had ever attended, and having been a worker in Illinois, that meant a great deal. We meet in Dowagiac next year.

F. P. Arthur, Cor. Sec.

Degree Courses at Home concerning the Bible, History, Evidences, Languages, Service and Philosophy. Terms easy. Catalog free. Write Pres. Chas. J. Burton, Ph. B., Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS

in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them

PLEASE MENTION THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

Some Historical Works

Historical Documents (edited by C. A. Young) $1.00
Christian Union (J. H. Garrison). 1.00
Dawn of the Reformation in Missouri (T. P. Haley..... 1.00
History of the Christian Church (Fisher) 3.50

Sent post paid by Christian Publishing Company St. Louis, Mo.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905

A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.

For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

Nebraska.

The Whiston-Longman-Wilson combination at Sterling have encountered bad weather in that it has rained so steadily that they did not put up the tent the first week at all. Now that the weather has apparently cleared they hope to get things swinging steadily toward a fine outcome. Let the brethren in the state pray that Sterling may have a revival indeed, and that this effort may bring about a complete re-establishment of the cause in that city.——Samuel Gregg closed the Rising City meeting and his nine months' work for the state board as J. H. Currie's living link. It has been a good year with his work, though this last meeting was practically rained out. The present board has recommended that the new board will employ Brother Gregg again as state evangelist. He is in a meeting at Curtis with John Olmsted as singer, and it is hoped that a new organization will result there. He will hold a meeting at Prosser in August.——R. D. McCance is hard at work on his new field at Sargent and an outlying point or two. A building committee has been named in Sargent and matters will be pushed toward a new building.——It is with deep regret that we shall say good-by to Brother H. C. Holmes. He has been so long identified with our whole state in several ways and his work has been so pleasant and so efficient that we shall miss him greatly. The church at Fairbury has done great things under his leadership. Yet we would not be selfish, and thus we bid him God-speed in his new work. Just who will lead the ministerial association to its annual bath at the Sulpho-Saline, is a question. But doubtless some one can be found brave enough to undertake it. Indeed it may not be as difficult as it once was. It is reported that at least Doward, and possibly Harmon, have been in the water since last July.——The Third District had a fine convention at Ashland in spite of the floods. The attendance was excellent and the spirit and grace of the meeting was practically faultless. The district voted to seek to put an evangelist in the field under the state board as a living link. If the arrangements can be made and the money pledged it will be undertaken.

There are a number of vacant church houses in that district and it is especially needy at this time. The South Omaha work was reported in excellent working order; 46 were received during the Coombs-Dawdy meeting in the Tabernacle. The rains so interfered that the hearing was limited. However, the church is meeting in the Tabernacle regularly and the Bible school has practically multiplied itself by three. F. T. Ray is pushing toward a new house.——District officers elected are: S. D. Dutcher, president; F. T. Ray, vice-president; J. E. Chase, secretary-treasurer; H. J. Kirschstein, corresponding secretary; C. W. Fuller, Jr., Bible school superintendent; I. H. Fuller, Fremont, Christian Endeavor superintendent.——The secretary spoke at the First Church, Lincoln, for state missions on June 21, and at Bethany on June 28. This will close the campaign for the current year practically, and what will have been written by June 30 will be the record for the year. Thus far the returns from the last appeals sent out have been meager. At the present rate the close of the year will find us in debt. This, too, in the face of a very conservative outline of work for the year. Once more we appeal to the delinquent churches to come to the rescue and line themselves up with the other churches that have stood by this work through the year. Many of the pledges made at the convention last year are yet delinquent, which practically throws back upon the board the shortage at that time, including as it did nearly $300 of Tabernacle debt. This does not properly belong to general expense account. There is yet time after reading this to send in the pledges and help out with this matter.——Edward Clutter supplied at Vesta on June 21 for R. G. Aylsworth.——Chancellor Aylsworth will preach at the University Church at the morning hour during Pastor Pritchard's absence during July and part of August. Brother Pritchard will return in time to attend the state convention.

W. A. Baldwin.

Ohio.

Geo. B. Evans is the new parson at Chagrin Falls, having come from Big Run, Pa. We bid him a most hearty welcome to the Buckeye fellowship and pray for his success at the Falls.—S. C. Pierce now occupies the new parsonage at Hebron. He will find here a royal people. He has served well at Lynchburg and Fair View.—Clarence Mitchell, one of our Ohio evangelists, has shown himself to be a wise man in that he has taken unto himself a wife. The happy bride was Miss Bertha Sprague, daughter of Chester Sprague, pastor at East Liberty. All who know Miss Bertha will heartily congratulate Brother Mitchell, as she is one of earth's choicest characters. The wedding took place at Gloucester, Mass., at the home of an old schoolmate of the bride. The honeymoon will be spent in Prince Edward's Island, where Brother Mitchell is in a meeting.—The Cleveland preachers held their annual picnic at Wade Park, June 22. It was an exceedingly hot day, but all had a royal good time.—The next quarterly meeting of the United Auxiliaries of the Cleveland District will be held at Bedford, Monday, July 13. There will be a sermon in the forenoon and the C. W. B. M. session in the afternoon.—We approach that time of the year when there is much talk of vacation. Everybody who works hard at one task for a year ought to have a vacation. But is it not becoming somewhat of a fad? Is it not approaching dissipation rather than recreation in some instances? Christian people ought to seek spiritual upbuilding as well as physical. If you will send a post card to Stephen J. Corey, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio, and ask him for circulars on the Alliance, Ohio Missionary Conference, August 11-19, you will find one of the best places on earth for a Christian to spend his vacation. Some of the foremost missionary leaders of the world will be there. Moving pictures will tell of the story of actual work on the fields. The spiritual tonic will be rich indeed. Go to Alliance.—This letter is written on the eve of departing for the Home-Coming and Commencement at Hiram. Look out for a full report in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the doings there.—Union of Baptists and Disciples is in the air at Bedford, Ohio. Committees have been appointed to find a basis for union. What the harvest will be, deponent saith not at this time. Brethren, pray for us.

C. A. Freer.

Northern California's Convention.

All over Northern California the clans are gathering for the greatest convention in the history of Northern California. The rallying place will be delightful Santa Cruz by the sea. The time is July 28 to August 9. George Hamilton Combs, of Kansas City, will be the principal speaker. Charles S. Medbury, of Des Moines; Louise C. Kelley, of Kansas; Charles C. Chapman and Frank M. Dowling, of Southern California; J. J. Haley, now of Lodi, California, and I. N. McCash, of Berkeley, wil be among the speakers. The year, notwithstanding all the obstacles, has been the greatest in the history of Northern California. Herbert Yeuell and S. M. Martin, J. A. Brown, S. T. Martin and others have held great meetings. Many conversions have resulted. Seven or eight new churches have been built. Shirley Shaw will lead the music, assisted by a splendid chorus. Let no one miss this greatest of our conventions. The Business Men's Banquet alone promises to be worth going to Santa Cruz to attend.

P. C. Macfarlane.

Changes.

Darsie, Lloyd—Hiram, O., to Chautauqua, N. Y.
Growden, A. M.—McMinnville, Tenn., to Siloam Springs, Ark.
Head, T. J.—West Plains, Mo., to Mountain View, Mo., box 33.
Matthews, George B.—Chandler, Okla., to Perkins, Okla.
Nance, Thomas G.—Barton, Texas, to Texico, New Mexico.
Oathout, John F.—Cedar Rapids, to Kinross, Ia.
Priest, Edwin S.—Des Moines, Ia., to Defiance, Iowa.
Stephens, W. O.—from Mineral Wells, Texas, to 405 East Twenty-second street, Austin, Tex.
Stivers, John T.—1343 West Twenty-second street, to Kenwood Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

GULF COAST.—If persons wanting reliable information about the gulf coast country of Texas will write to me, enclosing stamp, I will gladly answer. Edwin D. Hamner, pastor Christian Church, Bay City, Texas.

Church Supplies, Etc.

HAS IT for less. All church and Bible school supplies. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelist sand Ministers..

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

I AM READY to make engagements for meetings this fall and winter. Will join evangelist for permanent work. Frank E. Meharry, singer, 111 East Main st., Danville, Ill. References: Jesse Van Camp (with Scoville), M. B. Ainsworth, minister, Danville, Ill.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write HINNERS ORGAN COMPANY, PEKIN, ILLINOIS, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

THIRTY-SIX DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS plus 25 1-2 hours a week pays for all the privileges of an up-to-date school. Catalogue free. Address School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Summer Resorts.

BETHANY BEACH, Delaware; an ideal Seashore Resort. Famous for its Scenery, Surf, Bathing, Fishing, Crabbing, Boating and Ocean Breezes. Being "next to Nature's heart" makes it a charming place for old and young. THE BELLEVUE (formerly Hotel Atlantic), enlarged, remodeled and modernized. Delightfully situated on the front. Cement porches, Homelike comforts, Select patronage. July 20 to Sept. 15th. Boat runs daily from Rehoboth, Dela.—R. R. Bulgin, Proprietor.

Typewriters.

OLIVER TYPEWRITER.—Good as new. Absolutely first-class order. Bargain price. C., care of Christian-Evangelist.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Illinois.

Marion, June 29.—I closed my work here yesterday, there being large audiences and 15 additions. Twelve will be baptized Tuesday. I begin at Blue Mound, Ill., Lord's day, July 5.—W. W. Weedon.

Mattoon, July 1.—We have just closed a three-weeks' meeting with home forces. There were 43 additions. The unique features of the meeting were two union baptisms—one with the Methodist minister and the other with the Presbyterian. I am in my third year in this work, which is in the best condition since I came. T. J. Clark, of Bloomington, Ind,, and I exchanged pulpits last Lord's day. Brother Clark is greatly loved by all his members.—D. N. Wetzel.

Indiana.

La Fontaine, July 1.—We have had one confession, a young man.—O. L. Martin.

Kansas.

Abilene, June 29.—Four added—three by statement and one confession. We are in a union meeting with Pratt and Briscen, of Kansas City.—C. A. Cole.

Galena, June 30.—Three additions last Sunday—one reclaimed, one from the Baptists, and one confession. Two others by letter during the month, making five for June. Our audiences are good, the Bible school growing, and we have a training class with 38 enrolled. The prayer-meetings are well attended.—R. H. Love, minister.

Minnesota.

Pleasant Grove and Simpson.—On June 28 I baptized two young women and an old gentleman, the latter, father of O. V. Geer, an elder of the church at Simpson. He confessed his faith in Christ at the baptismal services, and was immersed straightway in the River Root.—Richard Dobson, pastor.

Mississippi.

Corinth, July 3.—We closed a meeting of ten days, in which there were 15 accessions. R. L. Mobley, of Dyersburg, Tenn., did the preaching in an able manner. Our cause is awakening here. The churches are prospering where they have a regular ministry. Brother Mobley is a splendid young preacher with a message for today. He won many friends among the best informed people of different communions. Mississippi needs men of his vision and power. I have been with this church a year, but only seven months in residence, and for full time. We have had 42 additions to the congregation, and are planning for larger things.—W. O. Wagoner.

Missouri.

Flat River, June 30.—One addition at regular service. The Y. P. S. C. E. observed "Inland Empire Day" last Sunday and raised $10 for that great district.—J. W. Van Dewalker.

Sparta, July 1.—Our meeting at Sparta closed with 52 confessions and 18 otherwise.—E. H. Williamson and wife, evangelists.

Kansas City, June 29.—There were two confessions at Highland Church, Livingston county, June 21, and two at West Line, Mo.—J. W. Monser.

Higginsville, June 30.—Three by statement and letter June 21, and one baptism last Sunday.—James N. Crutcher.

Nebraska.

Falls City, June 29.—One added by statement yesterday and one by baptism not reported.—D. L. Dunkleberger.

Oklahoma.

Guthrie, June 30.—Six added last Lord's day.—T. L. Noblitt.

Frederick, June 29.—In a revival seven miles east of here in the big pasture; only two members to start with. I would like to hear from small churches—will come for freewill offerings.—Charles P. Murphy.

Oregon.

Half Way, June 22.—Meeting is progressing nicely despite opposition. There have been 23 additions—15 baptisms—six reclaimed and two from other religious bodies; of the number 13 are young men with whom Brother Titus seems to have special power.—Leon Myers.

Pennsylvania.

Washington, June 28.—Three confessions from class 17, which is the minister's class, this morning.—Mrs. E. A. Cole.

Tennessee.

Nashville, July 1.—W. P. Crouch closed a fine meeting at the Nineteenth Street Church recently. About 20 persons were added, half of whom made the good confession. Despite the political campaign, hot weather and other attractions, the interest was good to the close. No man has made a better impression upon the people here than Brother Crouch.—J. T. McKissick.

Clarksville, June 30.—Decision day resulted in eight baptisms and one added by letter. The work looks very promising and the congregation soon expects to have a new pastor. I return to St. Louis and Columbia for a few weeks rest, and then back to the Golden West.—Dan A. Trundle.

New Mexico.

Deming, July 1.—Three months spent at Albuquerque resulted in 16 additions—five by baptism, the election of several officers and the call of W. E. Bryson as minister of the church. I am now at Deming, organizing a church.—Frederick F. Grim, corresponding secretary.

Texas.

San Marcos, July 1.—Five additions last Sunday—three by baptism. I go north this week for my vacation.—A. M. Harral.

Waxahachie, June 15.—Three added yesterday—two by confession and one by statement. There was one confession following last sermon at the state convention at Thorp Springs.—J. B. Boen.

Dallas, July 1.—Cephas Shelburne reports seven additions to the East Dallas Church last Sunday, making 11 since his last report, and 27 since he took charge of the work.

Cleveland, July 1.—During the past six months I organized at Batson with 15 members, at Cleveland with 13 members, at Silsby with 18 members, at Devers with 13 members. There were five baptisms, eight restorations and 10 came from other religious bodies. This is a vacated section. The people are poor, and many are uncultured. My home for the present is Cleveland.—J. N. Gibson.

Fort Worth, June 29.—I have just closed a good, short meeting at Elgin. I begin at Cooper next Sunday, and I am to do the preaching at Fentress camp-meeting, near San Marcos, beginning July 29. I have a good singer and can arrange for an October meeting.—A. E. Dubber.

Utah.

Salt Lake City, June 22.—Two added June 14 and one confession yesterday.—Dr. Albert Buxton, preacher.

Virginia.

Portsmouth, June 27.—In a ten-days' meeting at Oak Grove, Matthews county, five were added to the church—three by baptism.—William Burleigh.

Richmond, June 22.—There were two additions at our regular service yesterday at the Third Christian Church. I closed a meeting with the Fairmount Christian Church last week. There were four additions.—Gerald Culberson.

Ministerial Exchange.

Singing Evangelist H. S. Saxton will hold a meeting in July or August. Address Troy, O.

Allen T. Shaw, minister at Pontiac, Ill., would like to exchange meetings in the autumn with some evangelistic pastor. His church will pay liberally in addition to the regular salary.

Guy L. Zerby, of Tampico, Ill., writes us that an efficient young minister of four years' experience, with the best of references, will consider a call from a good church, preferably in Illinois. He will probably close his present work August 1.

D. D. Dick and wife are ready for evangelistic engagements. Their terms are entertainment and offerings. They may be addressed at Cuyahoga Falls, O.

F. F. Dawdy has an open date as singing evangelist for July. Address him 317 Lake street, Topeka, Kan.

David Music, of 1228½ McGee street, Kansas City, Mo., desires correspondence with some one who has a stereoptican outfit for rent to an evangelist who may need it from August 1 to January or longer. He could use a medium size tent also.

V. E. Ridenour has an open date for July, as either pastor or evangelist. Address 920 Buchanan Street, Topeka, Kan.

F. M. Morgan will be ready after September 1 to hold meetings, or would locate with a good church. Is at present at Toluca, Ill., L. B. 431.

Mart Gary Smith writes that the church at Walter, Okla., needs a good minister. A married man preferred. Salary about $900. Write Brother Smith.

Wanted—A preacher. I can get the right man a splendid work among some four or five different congregations, in close touch with each other, three of them on the Santa Fe railroad, in northwest Oklahoma. Write Ed. S. McKinney.

Wanted—The address of all preachers who use the stereopticon. I have something of interest for you in return for post card address. R. H. Sawyer, Carrollton, Mo

The church at Payson, Ill., wants a minister for full time. Salary $600; also parsonage. Address Dr. W. L. Hollembeak.

Carr-Burdette College.

In loving remembrance of its founder and donor, Mrs. O. A. Carr, the faculty and students of Carr-Burdette College have devoted themselves anew to the accomplishment of her last request, "Let the college go right on with its work."

She conceived and planned and executed: there is not an idea in the college building, appointment and equipments that is not hers. This "Child of her brain and heart" will be tenderly cared for. It has a goodly heritage. Important improvements are being made this summer. Prof. A. O. Riall, an able teacher of long experience, who formerly was in charge of a college for young women, became identified with Carr-Burdette, and I feel that I have in him an efficient counsellor and co-laborer. I assure parents that their daughters will be properly cared for; and I hope they will continue to show their appreciation of my effort and give me their support that Carr-Burdette may continue to be Mrs. O. A. Carr's ideal, as it is now her monument.

Sherman, Texas. O. A. Carr.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

Bible Lesson Picture Roll

Each leaf, 27x37 inches, containing a picture, beautifully colored, illustrating the lessons.

These rolls are well mounted, strong and durable. Thirteen leaves in each roll—a leaf for each lesson in the quarter. PRICE, prepaid, 75c.

Picture Lesson Cards,

A reduced fac-simile of the above; put up in sets containing one card for each Sunday; size 2 3-4x4 inches, PRICE for set, for quarter, 2 1-2c.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Sunday-School

July 19, 1908.

SAMUEL'S WARNING.—1 Sam. 12:1-5, 13-25.

Memory verses, 23, 24.

Golden Text.—Only fear the Lord and serve him in truth with all your heart, for consider how great things he hath done for you.—1 Sam. 12:24.

Saul had at last been made king, by the anointing of Samuel, by the casting of lots, and by the prowess of his good right arm when the Ammonites had made their attack and the men of Jabesh had called for help. At Gilgal, where the children of Israel had crossed the Jordan and entered the promised land under Joshua three or four hundred years before, where the stones of remembrance had been set up, where the general headquarters of the tribes had been and where the ark had been kept during the first years of the conquest,—there at this sacred spot the people had gathered and made Saul king and offered sacrifices. It was on this occasion —we might call it the formal coronation of Saul, for it corresponded fairly well with that ceremony in modern times— Samuel delivered his farewell address and uttered his solemn warnings.

First of all, Samuel called all the people to witness that he had been an honest judge. Combining in himself the functions of the legislative, judicial and executive departments of government, he had had large opportunity to use his office for his own aggrandizement and enrichment. But he could defy them all to mention any instance in which a penny of any man's money had stuck to his fingers. It is worth a great deal for a man to be not only innocent but visibly and transparently honest; so honest that any accusation against him is dismissed by the public mind as preposterous. Not only evil, but even the appearance of evil is to be avoided. Samuel's record was as clear as his conscience. He had no graft investigations to fear.

It is also notable, though Samuel does not mention it, that the retiring judge made no effort to hold to his office after the people wanted to choose a king. He had been in supreme authority for many years. It is the way of kings and rulers not to give up office until they are compelled to do so. The people of Europe were surprised when Washington retired from office. They did not understand why a man who was commander-in-chief of the army and navy should yield to his successor without a struggle. Samuel retired with dignity although he believed that the new form of government was a dangerous and a backward step. It requires the graces as well as the virtues of character to enable a man to step down gracefully from a position of dignity which he has held.

It was a custom among the religious leaders of Israel to recite at frequent intervals the story of the wonderful blessings which the Lord had given to them and the marvelous deliverances through which he had led them. This recital was the basis both of the appeal to gratitude and of a prudential argument to convince the people that it was worth while to continue to serve a God who had so uniformly rewarded the fidelity and punished the defection of the tribes.

This was the burden of Samuel's appeal: Serve the Lord and it will be well with you. Sow disobedience and you will reap calamity. It may sound very trite and commonplace to us, but it has become familiar to us largely because of the effectiveness with which Samuel and men of his stamp taught it in the days when it was less commonly accepted. Even to-day there are those who profess to believe that virtue does not pay, that trickery is the royal road to success, that an honest man can not succeed in business. While it is true, as Job contended in his argument with his friends, that disaster does not always immediately follow sin and that the righteous do not always get an instant visible reward, it is abundantly true that the victory, in some form that is worth while, awaits those who work in harmony with the eternal purposes of right, and that whoever is found working against God is working toward failure.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

CONTINUING IN THE FELLOWSHIP.

Topic July 15.—Acts 3:42-47.

This simple narrative of the founding of the first church in Jerusalem has a perennial interest to all that would follow the divine pattern. "They all continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and in the fellowship, and in the breaking of bread and in prayers." It is worth while noting that "doctrine" comes first in this specification. It is put there by inspiration. Before there can be steadfastness in "fellowship" there must be a unity of faith, a common basis of belief. We are what we believe—not always what we profess; but always what we believe. So the importance of right doctrine can hardly be exaggerated. True, we may magnify molehills and minimize mountains in matters of faith and make a mess of the whole business. But real faith lies at the foundation of all character and consistency. There is no real fellowship without real faith at the bottom of it. The fellowship of faith is the only sort that will stand the test of time and trial. The old and oft repeated saying, "It don't make any difference what you believe so your heart is all right," is a delusion of the devil, or of loose thinking. In the first place, the heart can not be all right without a right faith. What is commonly called good-heartedness is not infrequently a source of evil to the person. Some of the best-hearted folks you ever knew could, on occasion, be about the biggest fools in the kingdom, or out of it. Such folks are like those of whom the apostle speaks—"always learning but never able to come to a knowledge of the truth." Such are frequently "tossed about by every wind of doctrine, after the craftiness of men wherein they lie in wait to deceive." All unity worth the having must be a "unity of the faith."

The very idea of fellowship presupposes a oneness of thought and purpose and plan. We have fellowship only as we enter heartily and sympathetically into the work in hand, whatever that may be. This is true in the church as in the lodge. The fellowship is not exhausted in eating of the ice-cream and cake. Perhaps a good many of us may have that notion of it. Somebody has to furnish the ice and the cream and the cake. How is it, any way, with "you-alls"? Do you let the other fellow furnish the cream and his wife bake the cake, while you fellowship in the eating? There are not a few folks in the churches I have known who fellowship in that way. The trouble with too many of us is that we are perfectly willing to fellowship in the eating of the ice-cream, but are rarely around when the freezer is to be turned. All of which is a parable for the summer season. But the truth of it is good for all the year 'round.

The "fellowship" includes more than the breaking of bread from house to house. Indeed the fellowship has to do with providing the bread. If you want to know what is meant by "fellowship" read: "And sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all, as every man had need." The fellowship was in the common spirit of self-sacrifice and giving. "All that believed were together and had all things common." Out of this common faith and common possession grew the beautiful fellowship of the apostolic church. The fellowship was but the expression of the spirit of brotherhood which prevailed. Must we then, in order to have this fellowship and continue therein, have this common possession? It is a perplexing problem. We must, at any rate, have the spirit of self-giving and the disposition to spend and be spent for the sake of others. This is the very spirit of the Christ. And if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. He came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many. "He gave himself up freely." "He saved others, himself he could not save"—and be the world's Saviour. God spared not his own Son. Our fellowship is with them in self-giving.

ESTEY
ORGANS AND PIANOS
—THEY EXCEL—
In every quality necessary to make A PERFECT INSTRUMENT. Call or send for catalogues and full particulars.
THE ESTEY CO.,
1116 Olive St. - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

REVIVAL SERMONS
—BY—
JOHN L. BRANDT, LL. D.

This is our latest and one of our VERY BEST BOOKS

Thousands have been brought to the Master through the preaching of these sermons. They do not consist of mere anecdotes and scare heads, but of such interpretations of the Scriptures as thrill and win the hearts and lives of men.

This first edition, by special arrangement with the author, will be sold for
$1.00 A COPY
Subsequent editions will be $1.50.

The Christian Publishing Company
2712 Pine Street, St. Louis

Christian Endeavor

July 19, 1908.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

DAILY READINGS.

M.	Appeal to Civic Motives.	Prov. 31:1-5.
T.	The Example of the Nazarites.	Num. 6:1-3.
W.	Denying Lusts.	Rom. 6:12-14.
T.	Christ's Example.	Matt. 4:8-10.
F.	For Better Warfare.	2 Tim. 2:3-5.
S.	Surrendering Lawful Things.	1 Cor. 10:23-29.
S.	Topic.

The Christian soon becomes conscious of an inner struggle between two opposite dispositions. In the case of the apostle Paul it was so fierce that he cried out in agony, and in his quieter moments he was conscious that evil was ever present in him and frequently defeated his purposes to do good. This experience of Paul is written at length in the seventh chapter of Romans, and appeals to every man who, like Paul, is trying to walk after the Spirit.

The Christian is one who had been living after the desires of his flesh. He had sought to please himself, and had consulted his own wishes first of all. But he has, as a Christian, accepted a new philosophy of life and submitted himself to other ideals and pledged himself to their pursuit. At once he finds himself in turmoil. The old life insists upon having its old-time recognition and proposes to fight for it. This is the demand of the flesh.

The Christian man recognizes the power of a new life within himself, and has accepted its ideals. He begins to recognize the power of the new life to make its way, if he will allow it to do so and if he will co-operate. This is the meaning of the exhortation of Paul in the lesson portion indicated.

"Walk by the Spirit." How can we do that? First of all, we must recognize that for a professed Christian it is the only rational and safe thing to do. We must commit ourselves thoroughly to its necessity and value. Then we must learn how.

To many Christians "walking by the Spirit" is an obedience to a mysterious impulse which is accepted as an inner voice. One who has that idea can never be sure what the Spirit will say, and can not be sure that he has been following the Spirit rather than the promptings of his own judgment.

It will help us to know that the Holy Spirit has left us very definite instructions in regard to following him as he leads us in the new way. Thus we can enjoy uniform and unmistakable instructions and can proceed with confidence. These instructions are in the word of God, especially as relates to the Christian life, in the New Testament. The lesson portion is an example of plain and unmistakable instructions to those who wish to walk after the Spirit.

Note first of all the warning in reference to the tendencies of the flesh in verse 17. "Forewarned is forearmed." Who desires to become a bondman? Yet such is the inevitable consequence of yielding to the flesh.

"The works of the flesh are manifest," Paul says, in verses 19-21. No man need be in doubt as to whether he is walking after the flesh if he will read and believe those three verses. And from his own observation he may know that such things bring men into bondage, and more to be dreaded—they shut men out of the kingdom of God.

The difference between walking after the flesh and after the Spirit is the difference between bondage and fruit. Only a fool would prefer bondage to fruit.

We may know when we are walking by the Spirit by the fruit which appears in our lives. A beautiful cluster is named in verses 22 and 23. How many of this cluster are found in your life? Beginning with love, trace your progress in the life of the Spirit.

The African's Faith in God.

In the June number of the "Journal of the Royal Geographical Society" there is a very interesting lecture by Rev. Thomas Lewis, F. R. G. S., on "The Old Kingdom of Kongo." His position in reference to the African religion will be of the greatest interest to the missionary as well as to the student of comparative religion. According to this eminent author, the most important thing to the savage is his religion. It is a matter of life and death to him, and I pity the superior and more enlightened man who laughs him to scorn and holds his superstitious rites up to ridicule.

The author now uses language that affords much food for reflection: "I have satisfied myself, after twenty-five years among them, that at the bottom of African fetishism there is the fundamental belief in the existence of God and in the reality of the human soul. No missionary has yet, to my knowledge, been compelled to introduce the name of God into any of the Bantu languages. The name 'Nzambi,' for 'Supreme Spirit,' is of native origin, and not introduced by the Portuguese, and has been adopted for 'God' by all missionaries in their literature."

The following statement will attract attention: "The oft-repeated statement made by missionaries and travelers that the untaught native has no idea of the existence of God is not correct; what they mean to say is that he has no knowledge of what God is, which is quite a different matter. The lack of this knowledge about God, while firmly believing that God is, accounts for the wonderful and complex system which we, in our ignorance of the inward meaning of it all, call 'fetishism.'"

After all, it appears to be the most natural thing to man to ever live in the presence of the supernatural.

J. W. Lowber.

Austin, Texas.

FOR INDIGESTION

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Especially recommended for the relief of obstinate indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF

ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES

No matter what you want, write to us about it.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

The Gospel Call

A Choice Collection of Standard Hymns and Popular Gospel Songs

Suitable for regular church services, Christian Endeavor, Sunday-school, revival services, and all other services of a religious nature.

Compiled by W. E. M. Hackleman, assisted by J. V. Coombs

The Combined Edition Contains 48 Pages of Responsive Readings, and 401 Songs—All Good and Easy to Sing.

Part I and Part II Contain, Each, 48 Pages of Responsive Readings and About 200 Songs.

EDITIONS AND PRICES.

	Postpaid Per Copy	Not prepaid Per Dozen	Not prepaid Per Hundred
Cloth, combining Parts I and II	65c.	$6.50	$50.00
Boards, combining Parts I and II	50c.	5.00	40.00
Boards, Part I or Part II	25c.	2.50	20.00
Limp, Part I or Part II	25c.	2.00	15.00

Any church not desiring a dignified and stately church hymnal, but rather, a book of pleasing songs, easy to sing and full of melody, can do no better than to order this book.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

ST. LOUIS, MO.

People's Forum

"What Does It Mean?"

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I have just read the editorial in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of June 25, intimating that Bethany Assembly ought to explain its attitude with regard to a movement looking toward injuring the organized missionary work of the Christian Church.

It seems that some friend has sent the Editor two circulars, one from Brother Moninger and one from Brother Coombs, and that these circulars indicate that Bethany Assembly is working to destroy our organized missionary work.

We desire in the most emphatic way possible to assure Brother Garrison and his friend, as well as the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that their fears are wholly groundless as far as Bethany Assembly is concerned. The simple facts are these: Each year Bethany Assembly invites the Indiana State Missionary Society, the State Sunday-school Association, the State Y. P. S. C. E., the State C. W. B. M., the State Ministerial Association, the Educational Society, etc., to hold their annual conventions at Bethany Park during the sessions of the Assembly. Each society furnishes its own program, pays its own speakers and conducts its business without any interference on the part of the Assembly. This year our board invited Brother Moninger to hold his evangelistic and teacher training institute at the park during our assembly, they to come on the same conditions as all the conventions come. He accepted, so the arrangements were made for the holding of these institutes. Had there been the slightest intimation on his part that he was trying to organize a movement to injure our organized missionary work, Bethany Assembly would not have consented, or even considered, the holding of these institutes during our meetings, or at any other time, on our grounds. We do not believe that Brother Moninger ever dreamed of such a movement. We are sure that both these institutes are for the purposes announced—evangelistic and teacher training—and that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may dismiss its fears of any such movement as all of us would greatly deprecate. We can not conceive that such brethren as Marion Lawrance, J. W. McGarvey, M. M. Davis, F. M. Rains, J. H. Hardin, or any other person on the program of these institutes could be induced for one moment to be made a party to such a movement.

As for the managers of Bethany Assembly, the president of the assembly has hanging in his library a certificate of membership in the American Christian Missionary Society, nearly fifty years old, signed by Alexander Campbell, president, and D. S. Burnett, secretary. For fifty years he has attended the national conventions, when not so far away that he could not afford the expense. He helped organize the Foreign Missionary Society, and was the first person to take a life membership in it. For many years he has been a life director. If any one doubts its loyalty to it he refers him to A. McLean. For years he was the state evangelist of the Indiana State Missionary Society and the State Sunday-school Association. A. L. Orcutt, the president and general manager of the ministerial fund, and A. B. Philputt, one of our most devoted workers in our missionary organizations, are both members of the Bethany board, while the other eleven members of the board are just as devoted to our missionary organizations as the four named. How any one can conceive how these brethren could arrange any exercise to injure our organized work is more than we can conceive. Bethany Assembly always has been, is now, and, as long as the present management controls it, always will be true to our organized work. Bethany Assembly boasts of two things: First, supreme loyalty to the old gospel, the gospel that was revealed by the Holy Spirit and first preached by men whose tongues were fired with the inspiration of God; second, unshaken and unalterable devotion to the organized missionary work of the church—national, state, district and county. Brother Garrison, you and the friend that you speak of come over to Bethany July 17 and stay until August 17, and if you find heresy cropping out let us know and we will stamp it out.

L. L. Carpenter,
President of Bethany Assembly.

Wabash, Ind.

[For comment on this letter see "Notes and Comments." Also read carefully, in the light of further development, the editorial, "A Work of Disintegration."—EDITOR.]

Obituaries

Notices of deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the mouey with the copy.

NORTON.

Dr. Richarl C. Norton was born at Hiram, O., June 16, 1840. He died at Trenton, Mo., May 18, 1908. His early life was spent in the country where he attended the public schools, but at a later date he graduated from Hiram College, then under the presidency of James A. Garfield. He began teaching when he was only 16 years of age, his first work being done in his native state. He was married in 1864 to Mariah L. Mason, who survives him. Soon after his marriage he moved to Trenton, Mo., where he organized the public schools of that place and spent ten years of his life immediately following. In 1875 he was called to a chair in the State Normal school at Warrensburg, Mo., where he gave special attention to the teaching of natural science subjects. Here he established himself as a skillful instructor and a wise and efficient educator of youth. After remaining here for five or six years he accepted the presidency of the State Normal school at Cape Girardeau, Mo. He served in this position until 1894, making an enviable record for wise management and exhibiting a broad view of the educational needs of the state. The school grew in popularity with the people of that section of the state, and soon took rank with the best normal schools in this part of the country. Dr. Norton was a good speaker on educational subjects and his addresses before educational bodies and before other assemblies of the citizens of the state, did much to bring about a fuller appreciation of the needs and importance of a correct training for the teachers of the commonwealth.

In the summer of 1894 Dr. Norton resigned the presidency at Cape Girardeau and returned to Trenton, where he had real estate and other interests, with a view to looking after his investments. But after a few months, at the solicitation of leading citizens of the place, he accepted a chair in the State Normal school at Kirksville, Mo., and a few years after he again retired to his home at Trenton, where he remained until the time of his death. Dr. Norton's standards of conduct and character were high. In all of his school work he kept before the pupils exalted ideals of manhood and womanhood and he was always watchful of the best moral interests of those committed to his care. He took a lively interest in the young, as many can testify whom he has helped to better things.

He was long a member of the Christian Church and he always held some important post as an officer in the congregation. While he was an unostentatious giver yet he contributed to many of the departments of the church. When he made his will he remembered the church of his home town with a good sized contribution. J. U. B.

THOMAS.

Mrs. Amanda Ellen Thomas, wife of John O. Thomas, of Rushville, Ind., passed into life eternal Lord's day, May 10, 1908, aged 54 years. She was born near Rushville and when about 4 years old lost both her parents. She made her home for many years with Brother and Sister L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., who loved and treated her as their own child. December 4, 1868, she confessed her Saviour and remained a faithful member of his church until her death. Besides the husband two sons and a daughter mourn her departure. The funeral services were conducted by L. L. Carpenter, assisted by J. W. Conner, W. S. Smith and the writer. Mrs. Thomas was loved by all for her noble life of Christly spirit and service.

R. W. Abberley.

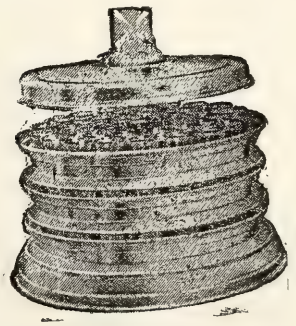
Rushville, Ind.

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING
IN THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS
Two Cents per word, per insertion.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICES

Of Different Styles, Grades and Prices.

Beautiful and Durable.



Hygienic and Popular.

A Beautiful Illustrated and Descriptive Catalogue

Sent Free on Application.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Home Department

The Glorious Fifth.

BY JESSE T. CRAIG.

A weary wight was the medical gent,
(Oh, the sun was low in the sky,)
Yet work well done bringeth sweet content,
And weariness fits with a day well spent,
(And the day was Fifth, July).

"I am not averse to the natal day
Of this government," said he,
"It liketh me well when the bands do play,
When flags are bright and streamers gay,
Yet the Fifth is the day for me.

"On the Fourth let the bald bird of Freedom brush
The milky-way with his wings;
By mountain peaks let him wheel and rush,
Be the torrents mute, let the thunders hush,
While he sings, and sings, and sings!

"For that is the day when the patriot bold
Swings high the exultant hat:
But the Fifth is the day of the compress cold,
Of the soothing lengths of the lint unrolled,
When science comes to bat.

O day of the splint and adhesive patch,
(May the tetanus germ pass by!)
When the dread pyaemia meets its match!
(Ho! ambulance, bring us another batch!)
Hail! Fifth of the great July!

How Robert Fulton Helped on the Celebration of July 4, 1778.

It was mid-afternoon on July 3, 1778. A group of a dozen boys sat in the long grass that grew close down to the banks of the narrow, twisting Conestoga River, in eastern Pennsylvania. All of the boys were hard at work engaged in a mysterious occupation. By the side of one of them lay a great pile of narrow pasteboard tubes, each about two feet long, and in front of this small boy stood a keg filled with what looked like black sand. Each of the group was busy working with one of the pasteboard tubes, stopping one end tightly with paper and then pouring in handfuls of the "sand" from the keg and from time to time dropping small colored balls into the tubes at various layers of the sand. These balls came from a box that was guarded by the same boy who had charge of the tubes and the keg, and he dealt them out to the others with continual words of caution.

"Be very careful of that one, George," he said, handing him one of the colored balls, "those red ones were very hard to make, and I haven't many of them, but they'll burn splendidly and make a great show when they go off."

"How do you stop the candle when all the balls and powder are in, Rob?" asked another boy.

"See, this way," said the young instructor, and he slipped a short fuse into the tube and fastened the end with paper and a piece of twine.

"There's something 'll let folks know tomorrow's the Fourth of July," he added proudly, as he laid the rocket beside the keg of powder.

"What made you think of them, Rob?" asked one of the boys, looking admiringly at the lad of 14 who had just spoken.

"I knew something had to be done," said Robert, "as soon as I heard they weren't going to let us burn any candles to-morrow night 'cause candles were so scarce. I knew we had to do something to show how proud we were that they had signed the Declaration of Independence two years ago, and so I thought things over last night and worked out a way of making these rockets. They'll be much grander than last year's candle parade. They wouldn't let us light the streets, so we'll light the skies."

"I wish the Britishers could see them!" said one of the group; another added, "I wish Gen. Washington could be in Lancaster to-morrow night!"

Just before the warm sun dropped behind the tops of the walnut grove beyond the river the work was done, and a great pile of rockets lay on the grass. Then, as though moved by one impulse, all the boys stripped off their clothes and plunged into the cool pool of the river, where it made a great circle under the maples. They had all been born and brought up near the winding Conestoga, and had fished in it and swam in it ever since they could remember.

The next evening the boys of Lancaster sprang a surprise on that quiet but patriotic town. The authorities had forbidden the burning of candles on account of the scarcity caused by the war of independence, and every one expected the second Fourth of July to pass off as quietly as any other day. But at dusk all the boys gathered at Rob Fulton's house, just outside town, and as soon as it was really dark proceeded to the town square, their arms full of mysterious packages. It took only a few minutes to gather enough wood in the center of the square for a gigantic bonfire, and when all the people of Lancaster were drawn into the square by the blaze the boys started their display of fireworks. The astonished people heard one dull thudding report after another, saw a ball of colored fire naming high in the air, then a burst of myriad sparks and a rain of stars. They were not used to seeing skyrockets, most of them had never heard that there were such things, but they were delighted with them, and hurrahed and cheered at each fresh burst. This was indeed a great surprise.

"What are they? Where did they come from? How did the boys get them?" were the questions that went through the watching crowds, and it was not long before the answer traveled from mouth to mouth: "It's one of Rob Fulton's inventions. He read about making them in some book."

The father of one of Robert's friends nodded his head when he heard this news, and said to his wife: "I might have known it was young Rob; I've never known such a boy for making things. His schoolmaster told me the other day that when he was only ten he made his own lead pencils, picking up any bits of sheet lead which happened to come his way, and hammering the lead out of them and making pencils that were as good as any in the school."

The fireworks were a great success; for the better part of an hour they held the attention of Lancaster, and when the last rocket had shot out its stars every boy there felt that the Fourth of July had been splendidly kept. For a day or two Rob Fulton was an important personage, then he dropped back into the ranks with his schoolmates again.—From Rupert Sargent Holland's "Historic Boyhoods," in July St. Nicholas.

Two little youngsters shambled penitently into the classroom long after the school had opened for the morning session. "Boys, come to my desk immediately," said the teacher. The meek little lads walked to the teacher's desk and stood looking helplessly at their feet. "Tommy, why are you late this morning?" asked the teacher. "I overslept myself, ma'am," began Tommy. "You see, teacher, I dreamed I was going to take a railroad trip. I just got to the station when I woke up an' found it was 'way past school time." "Freddy, why were you late?" inquired the teacher, turning to the other boy. "Please, ma'am," replied the trembling Freddy, "I went to the station to see Tommy off."—The Circle.

Dwell Deep.

Dwell deep! The little things that chafe and fret,
O waste not golden hours to give them heed!
The slight, the thoughtless wrong, do thou forget;
Be self forgot in serving others' need.
Thou faith in God through love for man shalt keep.
Dwell deep, my soul, dwell deep!

Dwell deep! Forego the pleasure if it bring
Neglect of duty; consecrate each thought;
Believe thou in the good of everything,
And trust that all unto the wisest end is wrought.
Bring thou this comfort unto all who weep;
Dwell deep, my soul, dwell deep!

—James Buckham.

It is easy to fail. All it needs is the inability to say, "No."

There is a subtle leakage of power in a man who is inconsistent with his best self. He may not show it, he may seem as devoted and earnest as possible, but there is a loss of the dynamics of spiritual force, and the devil knows it and says, "I need not worry; his sins are sufficient antidote for his work."—F. B. Meyer.

A minister in Florida had been laboring hard to raise money for a church. Finally a friend from the North sent him the last $100 needed, and the day he received it he was presented with a son and heir. The Sunday following the congregation shook with suppressed laughter when the poor man, thinking only of the donation, thanked God for the small succor that had just arrived.—W. H. McElroy.

Church Furnishings and Supplies

THE NEW
PRAISE HYMNAL
The Latest and Greatest Church Music Book
Prices $50 and $70, per one hundred copies
Returnable copies mailed for examination
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE,
528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O., or 41-43 Bible House, N.Y

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Why not use this cleanly method in your church? To prove the merits of our service we will send outfit to be used on trial before purchasing. Over 4500 churches now use. Bread Plates and Collection Plates in several styles. Address, THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150, Lima, Ohio.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only
C-131 Church Furn'ture | S-131 School Desks
L-131 Lodge Furniture | O-131 Opera Chairs
B-131 Bank Furniture | D-131 Office Desks
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References. Correspondence Solicited.

THREE RULES OF HAPPINESS.

When Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer was living in the peaceful retreat at Boxford, Mass., almost every week through the hot summer she went to Boston to talk to children in the slums at a vacation school. The children bring the babies of their homes with them, and many could not come otherwise. Here is the story as Mrs. Palmer told it, and as it is given in the story of her wonderful life published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.:

"One July morning," wrote Mrs. Palmer, "I took an early train. It was a day that gave promise of being very, very hot, even in the country, and what in the city! When I reached my destination I found a great many girls in the room, but more babies than girls, it seemed. Each girl was holding one, and there were a few to spare. 'Now,' I said, 'what shall I talk to you about this morning, girls?' 'Talk about life,' said one girl. Imagine! 'I am afraid that is too big a subject for such a short time,' I said.

"Then up spoke a small, pale-faced, heavy-eyed child, with a great fat baby on her knee: 'Tell us how to be happy! * * And the rest took up the word and echoed, 'Yes, tell us how to be happy.'

"'Well,' I said, 'I will give you my three rules for being happy; but mind, you must all promise to keep them for a week, and not skip a single day, for they won't work if you skip one single day.' So they all faithfully and solemnly promised that they wouldn't skip a single day.

"'The first rule is that you will commit something to memory every day, something good. It needn't be much, three or four words will do, just a pretty bit of a poem or a Bible verse. Do you understand?' I was afraid they wouldn't, but one little girl with flashing black eyes jumped up from the corner of the room and cried, 'I know; you want us to learn something we'd be glad to remember if we went blind.' 'That's it, exactly!' I said, 'something you would like to remember if you went blind.' And they all promised that they would, and not skip a single day.

"'The second rule is: Look for something pretty every day; and don't skip a day, or it won't work. A leaf, a flower, a cloud—you can all find something. Isn't there a park somewhere near here that you can all walk to? (Yes, there was one.) And stop long enough before the pretty thing that you have spied and say, "Isn't it beautiful!" Drink in every detail and see the loveliness all through. Can you do it?' They promised, to a girl.

"'My third rule is— now mind, don't skip a day—do something for somebody every day.' 'Oh, that's easy!' they said, though I thought it would be the hardest thing of all. Just think, that is what those children said, 'Oh, that's easy!' 'Didn't they have to tend babies and run errands every day, and wasn't that doing something for somebody?'

"'Yes,' I answered them, 'it was.'

"At the end of the week, the day being hotter than the last, if possible, I was wending my way along a very narrow street, when suddenly I was literally grabbed by the arm and a little voice said, 'I done it!' 'Did what?' I exclaimed, looking down and seeing at my side a tiny girl with the proverbial fat baby asleep in her arms. * * * 'What you told us to, and I never skipped a day, neither,' returned the child in a rather hurt tone. 'Oh,' I said, 'now I know what you mean. Put down the baby and let's talk about it.' So down on the sidewalk she deposited the sleeping infant, and she and I stood over it and talked.

"'Well,' she said, 'I never skipped a day, but it was awful hard. It was all right when I could go to the park, but one day it rained and rained, and the baby had a cold, and I just couldn't go out, and I thought sure I was going to skip, and I was standin' at the window, 'most cryin', and I saw'—here her little face brightened up with a radiant smile—'I saw a sparrow takin' a bath in the gutter that goes round the top of the house, and he had on a black necktie, and he was handsome.' It was the first time I had heard an English sparrow called handsome, but I tell you it wasn't laughable a bit—no, not a bit.

"'And then, there was another day,' she went on, 'and I thought I should have to skip it, sure. There wasn't another thing to look at in the house. The baby was sick, and I couldn't go out, and I was feelin' terrible, when'—here she caught me by both hands, and the most radiant look came to her face—'I saw the baby's hair!' 'Saw the baby's hair!' I echoed. 'Yes, a little bit of sun came in the window, and I saw his hair, an' I'll never be lonesome any more.' And catching up the baby from the sidewalk, she said, as the sun played on this baby's hair, 'Isn't it beautiful?' she asked. 'Yes, it is beautiful,' I answered. You have heard of artists raving over Titian hair. Well, as the sun played on this baby's hair, there were the browns, the reds, the golds, which make up the Titian hair. Yes, it was truly beautiful. 'Now shall we go on?' I said, taking the heavy baby from her.'"

HIRAM COLLEGE

HIRAM, OHIO.

From articles by Hiram students in Hiram College Advance.

"I came to Hiram as the result of a deliberate choice. As I learned more of the school, I came to feel that Hiram was truly an ideal among small colleges. Its size, its standing among large schools, the spirit of its students and the peculiar devotion of its Faculty, all impressed me most favorably. I have not been disappointed."

The "Home-Coming" issue of the Advance, containing this and other articles of students, the inaugural address of President Bates, poem by Jessie Brown Pounds, articles by Judge F. A. Henry, and Professors E. B. Wakefield, B. S. Dean and G. H. Colton, sent free on application, also catalog. Address J. O. Newcomb, Secretary, Hiram, Ohio.

Mention "The Christian-Evangelist."

Pimples on the Face

Those annoying and unsightly pimples that mar the beauty of face and complexion will soon disappear with the use of warm water and that wonderful skin beautifier,

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Sold by all druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY

NO POSITION, NO PAY

Largest and Best Equipped School in the West; 5 teachers of railroad experience. Students employed on 52 roads. Attendance doubled last year. Many states represented. Attend on credit. Car fare paid. Write for Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE TELEGRAPHY COLLEGE, 754 Irving Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

The Randolph-Macon System of Endowed Colleges and Correlated Schools

Educates men and women, boys and girls not together but in Five Separate Institutions under one management. The combination enables us to offer the best advantages and to

Save Time and Money

For particulars, address, stating age and sex of student.

Chancellor WM. W. SMITH, A.M., LL.D. College Park, Lynchburg, Va.

William Woods College

For Young Women

Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.

J. B. Jones, Pres. Fulton, Mo.

A RELATIVE QUESTION.

By Stella Dysart.

"Aunt Mary is just impossible, that's all," Mildred declared. "We're entirely uncongenial, for one thing. I can not sit comfortably and listen to her talk about chickens and kinfolks, and kinfolks and chickens, for five minutes at a time, let alone being shut up in the same house with her for nine months of the year."

"But you wouldn't exactly be shut up in the house with her," remarked the gentle mother, who, withal, had a sense of humor.

"The cows and chickens will not be in the house."

"And cows and chickens are just about as interesting to me," said Mildred, "as Aunt Mary herself."

"Of course, I know, dear," said Mrs. Hayes, "that it would be very hard for you to go and live with Aunt Mary, and help her; but it seems to be the only way for you to go to high school. I wish you did not have to work your way. Perhaps we can pay your expenses in a year or two, but you should start now."

"Mother, dear," Mildred exclaimed, "don't I know how much you'd like to send me through school without the help of Aunt Mary and her chickens, and how hard it is for you and father to keep all of us children, without paying school expenses? I suppose I ought to feel glad of this opportunity, but I'm not. I don't believe I could stand it. I just hate chickens! And think of helping to take care of hundreds of them! And then to milk every night and every morning! I do believe I would carry the smell of the barnyard to school with me in spite of scrubbing."

"Well, daughter, I do not want you to go unless you feel that you could be contented," Mrs. Hayes said presently. "Your Aunt Mary has failings, but I would feel that you were in good hands with her."

Mildred did not say anything. She turned away to the window to hide the tears that would come at the thought of giving up going to high school.

"I think," her mother went on, "that aside from your board being cheaper than a chore boy's wages, your aunt really wants you to come. She is a very lonely old woman who has always loved to be with her relatives."

Mildred was seized with the fear that if she listened to mother any longer she would yield and go to Aunt Mary's.

"If she only would talk about something besides chickens and kinfolks," she protested defensively. "And she thinks girls ought to be just like they were twenty years ago—and I—I should be just miserable," she ended rather weakly.

Mildred's mother looked at her attentively for a moment. "Very well," she said, "we will write Aunt Mary that you do not care to come."

But after all it was Mildred herself who carried the message to her Aunt Mary. It was a bright afternoon, scarcely a week later, that she tripped gayly up Aunt Mary's flower-bordered walk to where that lady sat in her little front porch.

"I've the greatest news," she called, "and mother said I must come right out and tell you about it as soon as I got to Asheville."

Mildred felt like she wanted to hug somebody. Even Aunt Mary might do at a pinch.

"Did you come to stay, already?" asked Aunt Mary, with a little nervous emphasis on the "already." Aunt Mary liked to be prepared for things—even kinfolks. And school was not to begin for two weeks.

"Oh, no," said Mildred quickly. "I didn't come to stay at all—not here. I have a position in town as relief girl at the telephone office, and I just came out to tell you about it. Jennie got it for me. You know Jennie Blair who works there."

"But I thought you wanted to go to high school," said Aunt Mary.

"And that is just what I'm going to do," cried Mildred, airily. "And going like a real lady, too. No dirty drudgery about it. There is a regular day girl and night boy beside me at Central," she went on more soberly. "I only relieve them. My hours are from six to nine mornings and evenings, and a half hour at noon; and I get four dollars per week for it."

"And your mother and father consented to this plan?" questioned Aunt Mary.

Mildred's pretty face flushed. "Oh, yes," she said, and added after a moment, "mother thought it would be pretty hard for me with the school work, but I am sure that I will like it."

"If there were only some of the relatives for you to stay with," said Aunt Mary, considering. "I suppose it would be too far for you to come away out here, and do the telephone work."

"Oh, yes, indeed," said Mildred quickly. "I am to stay at the boarding house with Jennie. What I make at the 'phone will just pay expenses there."

"It would be so much better," Aunt Mary persisted, "if you could be with your own kin. And I don't see," she continued energetically, "how anyone could choose to sit with both ears fastened to a telephone and 'hello' for hours at a time, rather than be out in the fresh of the country helping about chickens."

"Oh, well," rejoined Mildred, "it depends upon the way one thinks about it. I don't like poultry." Then she added, with the assurance of sixteen, "And I don't believe in thinking any more of people just because they are related to you."

"Child, child," said Aunt Mary, "you shouldn't say that. Blood is thicker than water. You'll think differently when you get older."

Mildred was silent. It was irritating to her that Aunt Mary—yes, and even mother regarded her as such a child. Well, Aunt Mary should see how nicely she, Mildred, could manage her own affairs!

"How is your mother?" her aunt asked after a moment. "Tell me about the folks."

So the girl told her of the details of the home life since her last visit to them, while the afternoon slipped quickly away.

Before Mildred went back to town, Aunt Mary took her out to show her some new chickens. "It seems to me," she said, as she showed off their merits, "that there are few things so interesting as chickens. You're making a mistake, Mildred, in not coming here where you can have country air and food and healthful work, and be with your own folks like your mother would like to have you."

But Mildred did not think so. It seemed to her that there was a silly fuss made over the mere accident of being related. She did not say this, but she listened to Aunt Mary and looked at the Barred Plymouth Rocks with a distinctly bored expression, and as soon as she could get away, hurried back to Jenny and the boarding house and the new duties at the office.

Mildred never knew before how much it is possible to enjoy school. The tasks accomplished, the friendships formed, and the delightful opening up before her of new and broader visions, enriched each day.

Among Mildred Hayes' new school friends there were two who took special places in her heart. Annie Green, one of her classmates, was one, and Maud Stacy, an upper class girl, was the other.

It was not strange that Mildred should have been drawn to Maud Stacy. Maud was a general favorite. She was a girl possessed of rare accomplishments and personal charms, and she belonged to one of the best families in Asheville. She was the impersonation of Mildred's ideal.

But Lucy was Mildred's familiar companion. She was an orphan who had recently been left all alone by the death of an aunt; and during the school term she was working for her board at the house where Mildred stayed. Perhaps it was a

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN

Sixt'eth Session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture, New Laboratories. Splendid Campus, Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on request.
E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

BETHANY COLLEGE

Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environments well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET, Bethany, W. Va.

DRAKE UNIVERSITY
DES MOINES
IOWA

A well-equipped co-educational school, located in the Capital City of Iowa. Enrollment this year exceeds 1,850. Ten well-equipped University Buildings. More than one hundred trained teachers in the faculty. Excellent Library facilities.

COLLEGES AND SCHOOLS; Liberal Arts, Bible, Law, Medical, Music, Education, High School.

THE COLLEGE OF EDUCATION offers courses for teachers in all departments of our public schools from the kindergarten to the high school, including courses for supervisors of music and drawing.

THE UNIVERSITY HIGH SCHOOL offers the usual preparatory courses, and thorough courses in all business subjects, including shorthand and typewriting.

Send for announcement of department in which you are interested.
SUMMER TERM OPENS JUNE 20. FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 14.

mutual bond between Mildred and Lucy that they were the only girls in school who were working their way; or perhaps it is true that like attracts unlike, and that this was why quiet, shy Lucy and gay, impulsive Mildred were fast friends before they had known each other for a week.

For the first few weeks the telephone work went on very pleasantly, but after that it began to drag a little. It was hard for Mildred to drive herself down to work every day as soon as she was through dinner in the evening, and to rise at five so that she might be at the office on time. She had led an active life on the farm, and sometimes when she had walked the few blocks that lay between the boarding house and the telephone office, she felt that she would give a great deal to be free to walk on and on far out into the country. Her cheeks lost some of their color under the confinement of her double duties, and her appetite was not so keen as it had been out home. But who would not have an appetite for such cooking as mother's? And as for red cheeks, Mildred had always considered a pale complexion more artistic looking. Still, she was not quite ready to wholly give up comfort for artistic effect. And after all, it must be confessed, that dark rings under the eyes are even less artistic than rosy cheeks.

Oh, well! There was always school upon which to fasten one's thoughts if one got a bit of down-hearted and lonely. In the delight of study there or in the joyous relaxation of laughter and play at intermission, Mildred never thought of being tired or remembered that she had not been able to eat a bite of her lamplight breakfast.

And the Christmas visit home! Mildred began thinking about this before Thanksgiving. How she would tramp through country lanes then, and eat of mother's cooking! And how good it would be not to sit with one's ear to the 'phone from school time till bed time, and then from rising until school time again!

One afternoon, a few days before Thanksgiving, Mildred was one of a large group of girls that left school together. She usually walked home with Lucy, but Lucy had not been well for several days, and on this day had been unable to come to school at all. Maud Stacy was in the group, walking a little way before taking the car for her beautiful suburban nome, and an animated discussion of her recent election as president of a school society was going on.

As the group paused at the crossing to wait for Maud's car, a queer little farm wagon with a huge hen-coop in the back came slowly toward them. It was driven by a woman in a big sun-bonnet, and its coming was announced by a sudden cackling and squawking from the coop which caused all the girls to look toward it at the same time. A little ripple of amusement ran round the group.

"A rural concert in a box; no charge for admission," cried one.

"I don't seem to catch the tune," laughed another.

Mildred flushed. The woman might have been Aunt Mary, except that Aunt Mary did not own a horse and wagon.

The noise in the coop increased and the woman drew up her horse and peered back anxiously. As she did so Maud Stacy started forward.

"Why, it's Mrs. Weber," she cried, and in a moment was out in the street beside the wagon. Most of the girls followed, a little curiously. Maud was peering into the coop as anxiously as the owner herself.

"This is Mrs. Weber, girls, who lives next door to us," she called gayly, "and the inhabitants of this box have been friends of mine since they were little balls of fuzz."

"Can you see anything the matter?" questioned Mrs. Weber, after a brief nod to the girls.

Maud stepped around the box, peering

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

A Christian Home and High Grade College for Girls and Young Women

College Preparatory, Full College and Special Courses. Faculty of experienced specialists. Superior advantages in Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science and Physical Training. If you want good care, culture, thoroughness and satisfactory results, investigate.

For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. W. T. MOORE, President.

200 College Place, Columbia, Mo.

"IN THE HEART OF THE BLUE GRASS."

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

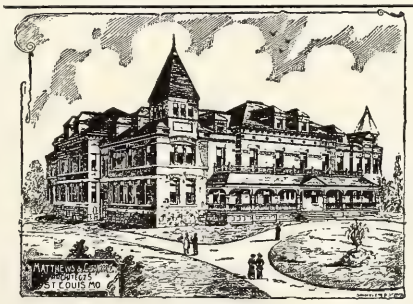
Attend Transylvania University. A standard institution with elective courses, modern conveniences, scholarly surroundings, fine moral influences. Expenses reasonable. Students from twenty-seven states and seven foreign countries. First term begins September 14th, 1908. Write for catalog to-day.

President' Transylvania University, Lexington,

BUTLER COLLEGE

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.



CARR-BURDETTE COLLEGE

AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, ART AND EXPRESSION

In location, building, climate and health conditions, home furnishings, department equipments and faculty Carr-Burdette is the peer of any Young Ladies' Boarding School North or South. Experienced educators have so adjudged it. It is select and limited in number. Building and grounds deeded to the Church free from debt. Bible taught every day. Write at once for catalogue and read for yourself, or visit us and see for yourself. Address,

SECRETARY, CARR-BURDETTE,
Sherman, Texas.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

CANTON, MO.

A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.

Send for free illustrated Catalog.

Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

FORTIETH YEAR.

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.

Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address

MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.

Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.

through the cracks and reaching her fingers in here and there with the daintiness and precision that characterized her. The squawking had quieted down now.

"No, Auntie," she said at last, "I don't believe anything is the matter. Perhaps they got an inkling of what is coming."

With an affectionate "Thank you, dear," the woman drove on.

"She lets me help her with her poultry," Maud said, looking after her. "Sometimes she has hundreds of soft, downy, little chickens at a time; and she is showing me how to feed them."

In a few minutes the girls had separated, but the little incident came into Mildred's mind again and again during the evening. How interested Maud had seemed in the coop of chickens! Maud Stacy, of all girls! It has a lonely, depressing effect to find something unexpected in one's ideal. It made Mildred fairly homesick. She heartily wished that Thanksgiving were past, for it made the home-going seem so far away. She was glad when she found on coming home from the office at nine o'clock that Jennie, who shared her room, was dressed to go out; for Mildred wanted to be alone.

"We almost gave up going," Jennie explained as she pulled on her gloves. "We thought it would be too stormy. We're awfully late." Nevertheless she stopped at the door to say in a lowered voice, "The doctor has been in to see Lucy since you went to the office, Mildred, and he says that she has typhoid. They will send her to the hospital to-morrow. Poor girl! I'd have gone in to see her if I had had time." Then Jennie was gone.

Mildred had time. Within five minutes she had bathed her face and rearranged her hair, and was on her way to Lucy's little room at the top of the house. She met Mrs. Besner, the landlady, on the way. "How is Lucy?" she asked; and in the same breath, "May I go in to see her?"

"I don't suppose there would be any harm done by your going in," Mrs. Bresner answered. "I've just been in and fixed her for the night. She doctor said she wasn't to be excited," she added.

Mildred knocked softly at the door. "It is I, Mildred," she called. "May I come in?"

"Oh, yes," answered Lucy's voice and there was a glad welcome in the two words.

A dim light was burning in the room and by it Mildred could see Lucy half rise on her bed as she entered. She went up to the bedside and took the sick girl's hot hands in her own. "I'm so sorry you are sick," she said.

Lucy squeezed the hands that clasped hers. Her usual cheerful smile reassured Mildred. "I don't feel very bad," she said. "Please turn up the light and draw the chair up close to the bed. I'm hungry to talk to you."

"I think you shouldn't talk much," Mildred ventured. But she did as Lucy asked. She began to wonder whether Lucy knew that she was very ill, and that she was to be sent away to the hospital to-morrow. A hospital seemed a terrible place to Mildred. Lucy's next words enlightened her.

"Isn't it kind of Doctor Dunlap to take me to the hospital?" she asked.

"Oh, you want to go!" Mildred exclaimed, relief and wonder in her tones. "I thought—" But she stopped suddenly at the look in Lucy's face. "You don't. I know you don't!" she cried. "I don't understand."

Lucy lay back among the pillows breathing quickly. Her eyes were very bright, but now suddenly they dimmed, and she put up both hands to draw Mildred's face closer. Then her arms fell limply beside her. But the face that looked up into Mildred's put on its own sweet smile.

"I am glad to have some place to go," Lucy said. "Ever since I have felt that I should be quite sick I have been so afraid that poor Mrs. Besner would have me on her hands."

"But—but isn't there some place else?" Mildred faltered, "or someone we could send for? Why, you have so many friends here, Lucy!"

"But I couldn't be a burden to friends," said Lucy quickly, a shade of reserve in her voice. Then she added quite simply, "Besides, there is no one who would want me. Friends are not like your own folks."

Mildred was silent. She had come to comfort, and she feared she had only distressed.

"I have always had Auntie when I was sick before," Lucy went on after a moment. "I think that has spoiled me. I miss her so. It's very hard not to have your own folks when you're sick."

"I am coming to the hospital to see you often," Mildred said, "and so will the other girls."

"Oh, you are all so good!" cried Lucy. "I know you will. And I'll have good care there and may be well very soon and back into school again. I hate missing school. Auntie was always so anxious for me to keep in school."

"I hope you can be back soon," Mildred said soothingly. She could see that the flush on Lucy's cheeks was brighter and that her breath was coming faster. "You mustn't worry about missing, though. You will catch up all right. I can help you. But you are to keep quiet and get well first, you know."

She went over and turned down the light, and came and laid her cool hand on Lucy's hot forehead. "I am going now," she said, "so that you can sleep. But I will be in again at midnight to see if you need anything. Good night."

"Good night," answered Lucy weakly.

Mildred went out with a cheerful, noiseless step, and closed the door softly behind her. But once in her own room she cried a little. It did seem too bad for anyone to be sick and to be without home or kindred. Mildred picked up her alarm clock to set it at twelve, and there beneath it, in the usual place for Jennie to leave Mildred's mail when she brought it up, was a letter. Mildred hastily picked it up and turned it over. Her first thought was that it was from home. The writing was much like mother's, but Mildred knew in a moment that it belonged to another. The letter was from her Aunt Mary. She opened it with a curious warmth in her heart.

"In a few days Thanksgiving will be here," it read, "and I hope you can get out to spend the day with me. It is a day when kinfolks ought to get together, and be thankful for each other."

There was more of the letter, but Mildred did not read any more for a little while. She sat looking at the letter. It was strange how like mother's the writing was—and the love. Mildred felt that there was little Aunt Mary could find about her to be thankful for. But she would go. She did not go to the office at the noon hour on holidays, and that would give her almost the whole day. Somehow she did not dread a whole day with the Aunt Mary she was thinking about now—the Aunt Mary who was thankful for her, because she was mother's daughter. Mildred fell to thinking about Lucy and the aunt that Lucy loved. This was Lucy's first Thanksgiving without her.

Mildred did not need the alarm to awaken her at twelve o'clock that night, for when it rang out she was still awake.

Thanksgiving day dawned bright and beautiful. There was no snow, but the air was clear and cold, with the sting in it that makes brisk walks and cosy firesides enjoyable. Mildred's walk out into the country was delightful. She went by the hospital to inquire about Lucy, and was rejoiced to learn that the doctor thought hers would be a light case of the fever. The keen air put a color into Mildred's cheeks that was in harmony with her bright eyes and buoyant step. She felt as if she were going home. And when one has been away for months—and for the first time, too—going home means something.

Aunt Mary was out at the front gate watching for her. Really, there was something about Aunt Mary, at a little distance, that was wonderfully like mother. Mildred had never noticed it before. But of course they should look alike; they were sisters. Aunt Mary was ten years older than mother, and Mildred knew that she had often waited at this very gate for mother to come home from school.

Perhaps Aunt Mary was thinking of those times, too, for there was a more tender look on her face than usual, and it did not seem at all strange to either of the two, when they met, that they should find themselves in each other's arms.

"It's going to be a beautiful day," Aunt Mary said. And so it was.

Mildred petted the cow, and insisted on looking at all the chickens; although it must be confessed that while she did so her attention was divided between listening to what Aunt Mary was saying about them, and watching with her mind's eye a face, beautiful, refined—an ideal face—alight with interest in—a coop of chickens!

Well, there was one chicken that was of absorbing interest to Mildred for a time that day; and that was the well-browned and stuffed one that came to the dinner table. Aunt Mary was like mother in more ways than one. Mildred had not eaten with such relish for weeks. And such a jolly dinner as it was! Aunt Mary was good company when one was hungry for home; and many interesting things may be said about kinsfolk by one who remembers the good and forgets the bad. Mildred added some of her school experiences to Aunt Mary's stock in trade, and when she told of Lucy it was a bond between the one who told the tale and the one who listened, that Aunt Mary had known ever so lightly the aunt that Lucy loved.

After dinner, when they had put away the dishes, they looked through Aunt Mary's family photograph album, with many a pause at faces caught and held on paper in their youth and beauty, that long since had grown old and faded, or had been covered with the dust of earth from sight; and Aunt Mary told the girl more family history than she had heard in all her life before. Then Mildred played on Aunt Mary's old organ and sang hymns and school songs while Aunt Mary listened and praised as kinsfolk can. They were both surprised when the clock struck five.

"I must go," Mildred said, and, as she put on her hat and wraps a silence fell between them.

Aunt Mary broke it at last. "Can't you come back," she asked, "some Sunday, and spend the day again?"

Then it was that Mildred unburdened herself of something of which she had been thinking for several days.

"Oh, Aunt Mary!" she cried. "I want to come and stay, and help you if you will let me."

The look on Aunt Mary's face was good to see. "I'll be glad to have you," she said. "I've wanted you all along."

But the change could not be made in a moment. Of course, Aunt Mary's chore boy could stay on for a while after Mildred came, but they must be given a week's notice at the telephone office before she left.

Down at the gate, after they had talked it over, Mildred said, with a sudden softening of her gay voice, "It's the prodigal coming back, Aunt Mary. I've been wasteful of the privileges of kinship."

Aunt Mary smiled fondly. "Your mother will be glad you're coming," she said. "And here's where you should be; kinfolks are kinfolks."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Poor Felix! You don't know how sorry I am for that cat! If he just knew that we are going on a visit up to his native town, the town in which he was born, in which he played as a kitten, strayed as a nameless quadruped, and finally drifted into our haven to be called "Felix"—that town where they won't have waterworks, and where the papers won't print who go to dances for fear of offending somebody's kinfolks—Let me begin this again. I say, if Felix knew that on this very day my father, mother and I (please notice that I do not say "myself" as if I thought I were a piece of merchandise)—I say, if he knew, this cat Felix, that we three are going to Plattsburg, Mo., wouldn't he stop purring and rubbing his old-gold hair off on my coat, and want to be put into his box and carried northward? We are going among all his old friends, those who were glad to see him leave, and those who were sorry, the birds he didn't catch, and the people who used to gaze upon him, and say, "What a large cat!" "What a handsome cat!" "I never saw so large a cat in my life," etc. And we will be among his old haunts; the cottage in which he lived, the church that he used to look at, across the street, the prayer-meeting that he attended fully as regularly as some of the old members who knew all about baptism, the streets (the unsprinkled streets, unsprinkled, I mean, save by the heavens) he used to prowl athwart. I just now turned to Felix and said to him, "Oh, yes, old Felix, we're going to Plattsburg, to-day, don't you wish you were going too?" Old Felix said, "Yih!"

As we will have to spend the day at Gravette, which is only a few miles from Bentonville,—in order to get articulated with Kansas City—in leaving Bentonville, one is usually provided with a nice day's waiting at some little town up the road, a lay-over, that you buy with your ticket—I'll take along some Advance Society letters to beguile the hours. When I went to Mexico, I had the privilege of staying at Gravette some thirteen hours, and though I remember the rush and roar of traffic there—when a freight train comes in—and the excitement along the broad streets—when that livery stable dog seized upon Morton's trousers—in which was Morton—still, one must not put in all the time enjoying such novelties. If I let the turmoil of city life pall upon me here, I'll not get my money's worth in Kansas City.

Here is a letter that simply fills me with glee and triumph. I want you to notice it, from Esther Vale Secrest, Marfa, Texas: "We live way down in Texas, right on the border of Mexico. There are more Mexicans than Americans here. That story about 'Agnes' and 'Clem' was certainly fine. Write another one like it!" (Is that a dare? Do you think I can't do it?) "How is Felix getting along? I have a cat named Smokie; he has so much curiosity in him, I don't know what to do with him." (Why not let it out? That's what we do, when it gets too smoky. Now we come to the part of the letter that makes me laugh with delight)—"I saw your picture in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; you are certainly good looking." (After that, what care I for the rebuffs of fortune and the criticisms of friends!) "I send 25 cents for Charlie, and the same for Drusie." (Don't tell me Gravette is a dull little town; I'm having a fine time.)

"Dallas News," Texas: "Here is $5 for Drusie. Tell Felix that the next President of the United States will attend the Elks' Convention at Dallas, this month. We invite the old-gold cat to come to see him. Taft will be glad to shake his paw." (I delivered the message. Felix listened with a broad grin till I reached the last sentence, but when I said "Taft," he nearly fell off of his chair. I think he had in mind a name that begins farther up in the alphabet.

S. A. Seat, Hematite, Mo.: "25 cents in stamps for missionary Drusie."

Erville Olsen, Sunny Side Stock Farm, Ivanhoe, Minn.: "I send my first Av. S. report. I find in the society work remarkable instruction, and enjoy the Av. S. letters greatly. I expect to send some money for Drusie soon." (Remember our Ten Cent Shower!)

Ruth W. Munger, Watonga, Okla.: "I have read the Av. S. letters for a long time, and have decided to join. We organized an Advance Society of five members here, two weeks ago. The club meets Wednesdays, and the members make their reports. Then we read the Av. S. Letters, and 'Tales from Shakespeare.' How is the weather in Bentonville? It has been very hot here, and cyclones have been unusually frequent. I watched two near here, and then went to the cellar. I stood on the steps and watched another. I think Felix is a very interesting cat. We have an interesting dog, named Rudolph." (If he were here, Felix would be doubly interesting, and you could see a fourth cyclone. Our weather here is variable. It quickly gets hot, when interesting dogs drift across our sky.)

Earl R. Brown, Danville, Ill.: "When I sent in my eighth report, I called it the seventh, by mistake. I intended sending a quarter then, but Myrtle and Dorothy were sending their reports in the same envelope, and in some way, the letter got mailed before the money was put into it. I enclose one now which you may use for the Av. S. as you think best." (Hurrah for this faithful band of three—Earl and Myrtle and Dorothy!)

Raritan, Ill.: "Some time ago I sent $1 for Drusie; now I send two more. You speak of wishing to keep Drusie in clothes. I would be one to help, if there are any others to help. While I can't promise much, I would do what I could. Please don't print my name." (We may speak of this at another time. In the meantime, if any one has anything to say in that connection, let's hear it. And don't forget the Ten Cent Shower, August 12.)

Mrs. Buena Vista Roth, Nonchalanta, Kans.: "I believe the Av. S. can support Drusie in China. I send fifty cents, my first offering. My son is a minister of the Gospel; I wish to aid in good works. We feel very poor out here in Western Kansas, as the drought was not broken until May 31. Our wheat had about all perished. This sounds strange, when the country east was deluged with water. I hope the Av. S. letters will come pouring in, and the money also. I never fail to read the Av. S. department." (I omitted the line from Esther Vale's letter, stating that she is the daughter of a Christian minister. Glad to have two preachers' families represented this week. I like preachers. A card came to tell me that my old preacher at Plattsburg, Mo.—J. P. Pinkerton—has gone on a visit to Kentucky; so I won't get to see him; too bad!)

There are other interesting Av. S. letters received, but this is all I have brought with me to Gravette, so I suppose the rest of this article must be devoted to a brief sketch of my trip. I should have told you that Felix is in good hands. The daughter of Congressman Peel lives on one side of our Bentonville house, the daughter of Senator Berry lives on the other, and both have promised to see that Felix is cared for. They are almost as illustrious, in their way, as Felix is in his, and of unquestionable democracy. As for Felix's conveniences, we have a box on the back porch with a rug in it, where the rain hardly ever comes. If there is a storm, he can crawl under the house or go to the barn, where there's plenty of nice soft hay in the loft.

There's the hack—here we go! Toot, toot! Interesting pear orchards on the way to Gravette—the glossy trees look like so many green whiskbrooms with their handles stuck in the ground. The wheels groan and sing, each one in a key of its own, and all out of time. Perhaps it would be better to have a choir among the best-oiled wheels and keep the others from joining in. At Gravette we go to the hotel, but we have brought such a delightful lunch with us, and I have such a melancholy recollection of the hotel meals that I decide to carry off my lunch somewhere and eat it. Thus, also, will I save fifty cents. About supper time, I steal away with my fried chicken, veal loaf and apple pie, desirous of getting out of range of the hotel clerk. I stop, at last, breathless, before an old frame building, a church, with a strip of green in front. There the flies and I fought it out till seven o'clock. Someone told me that the house was the Christian church, and I thought the footworn doorsill, broken windowpane, and knife-hacked fence-rail, all assumed a homely smile of welcome. Did some religious instinct lead me to that spot instead of to some other? I know, at least, that I couldn't have felt more at home any other place. When I sneaked back to the hotel where my parents were maintaining respectability, the hotel force gave me a cold eye and no longer offered the daily papers.

On the train for Kansas City we met a stranger who, learning who we were, immediately wanted to know what had become of Felix. At Joplin the mines were hidden by the darkness, and at Pittsburg, Kan., the fat woman got off. At Kansas City we saw the river's overflow playing in the rooms of deserted houses, and as our train for Plattsburg carried us farther and farther from Felix, we saw more bluegrass running wild, than ever we saw caught and tamed in Arkansas. But the corn looked wet.

For they have had many showers here, and here started the Ten Cent Shower for Drusie. It was in this way. We three are out at Chas. Scearce's farm where we catch plain fish and crawfish, also frogs, and have sure enough ice cream; here we were visited by Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Johnston who have long been friends of the Av. S., and they started the rain with fifty cents for our missionary.

There is a cat out here on the farm that I feel sorry for, it has such a poor spirit. It hasn't any name, but it doesn't need one, for it is just cat. One ear is gone, but I can't see that it does much good with the one it has. I say "it," for really it is not individual enough to call for more particular reference. There is a dog here, also, and that cat will let the dog kiss it, which the dog does every once in a while. I'd like to see any dog kiss Felix! If I were a cat I should want to be a cat all over, shedding my hair and unkissed by dogs. But not being a cat, I don't dread water; I enjoy showers; and I hope we'll have a heavy one for Drusie. We have only about a month until August 12. Continue to address me at Bentonville, Ark.

AULT & WIBORG
COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS OF PRINTING INKS
CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, NEW YORK, ST. LOUIS.
This Paper Printed with Ault & Wiborg Ink

THE WORLD-FAMOUS

Tissot Bible Pictures

A collection of 120 from the Old Testament and 120 from the New Testament

Size 5x6 and beautifully colored. Each collection in a convenient portfolio.

EVERY CHRISTIAN HOME SHOULD HAVE THESE PICTURES

And having made special arrangements with the publishers, we are in position to suppiy them at the remarkably low price of

$1.00 FOR EACH COLLECTION

Upon receipt of $1.00 we will send by mail, postpaid, either the Old Testament or New Testament collection,---the selection to be made by the purchaser.

OR

We will send these pictures to subscribers to "The Christian-Evangelist'

ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE

UPON THE FOLLOWING TERMS AND CONDITIONS:

1. A portfolio containing the full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $3.00 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full amount, $3.00, to pay the subscription for a period of two years. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are now paid.

2. The same offer as above to any subscriber who sends in $3.00—one-half of this amount to apply on his or her own subscription, and one-half for a new subscriber for one year.

3. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $1.50 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full $1.50, to pay the subscription for a period of one year. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears, or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are paid.

4. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any NEW subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist", sending us $1.50 for one year's subscription.

5. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any of our present subscribers who send us a new subscriber under the terms set forth in the preceding paragraph (No. 4). That is, we will send a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the new subscriber, and also a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the old subscriber sending us the new subscription.

6. A portfolio containing full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us two new subscriptions, accompanied by $3.00 to pay for same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old Testament or New Testament studies.

SPECIAL AND EXTRAORDINARY

7. Two portfolios, one containing the full collection of 120 pictures of Old Testament studies, and one collection containing 120 pictures of New Testament studies, both free of charge and postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us three new subscriptions, accompanied by $4.50, to pay for the same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old or New Testament studies.

We reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time, without notice.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

VOLUME XLV. NUMBER 29.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, JULY 16, 1908.

MY FUTURE

CHARLES BLANCHARD.

WHY should I be envious of the little fame
That clusters 'round another's place and name?
'T is but a little while—the world is brief—
The end of gladness is the end of grief.

No matter! I forget it, let it pass—
As I forget the shadow on the grass
I walked on yesterday. To-day for me
Is a new future! I will hope and be
What yesterday I dreamed of! What to-day
I hold is worthless but to throw away!

Love lives forever in the rosy dawn—
I greet my future! Let the past be gone!

The Christian-Evangelist.

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER,
B. B. TYLER,
W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 899
Editorial—
The Religious Newspaper for the Times 900
Paul Revised 901
What Defiles a Man—Or a Church?..901
Notes and Comments.....901
Current Religious Thought 902
Editor's Easy Chair.....903
Contributed Articles—
The Glorious Liberty of the Children of God. W. Daviess Pittman.....904
What One Railroad Is Doing for Its Men. Arthur Holmes.....905
The Church Out of Doors. William Henry Meredith 906
As Seen from the Dome. F. D. Power.907
Our Co-operative Work. J. H. O. Smith 908
Our Budget 909
Adult Bible Class 913
News from Many Fields.....915
Evangelistic 918
Midweek Prayer-Meeting 919
Christian Endeavor 919
Sunday-school 920
People's Forum 921
Obituaries 921
The Home Department 922

The New Orleans Convention
OCTOBER, 1908
—VIA—
ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD

Leaving St. Louis Oct. 7th, at 1.50 P. M.
Arriving at New Orleans next day at 10.30 A. M.

RAILROAD FARE--round trip, - -	$18.25
Sleeping car (single berth) both ways,	4.50
" " (double berth) " "	9.00
St. Charles Hotel (European) per day,	1.00

In the matter of board at New Orleans, the delegates may go to the St. Charles Hotel at $1.00 and up per day, or may find much cheaper lodging elsewhere. Full particulars sent on application, but let us urge those who intend to take over the

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD

to send to us their names and addresses so that we may keep them fully advised, and otherwise keep in touch with them.

Sincerely,
W. Daviess Pittman
Business Manager.

Bible Lesson Picture Roll

Each Leaf 27 x 37 Inches,

Containing a picture, beautifully colored, illustrating the lessons.
These rolls are well mounted, strong and durable. Thirteen leaves in each roll a leaf for each lesson in the quarter.

PRICE, prepaid, 75 cents.

Picture Lesson Cards.

Size 2¾x4 Inches.

A reduced fac-simile of the above; put up in sets containing one card for each Sunday.

PRICE for set, per quarter, 2½ cents.

Of all Bible school helps for the little folks, this roll and these cards are the best.

Bright colors catch the infant eyes at once, and the lesson is learned through the eyes of the little ones before the teacher can explain by word of mouth.

If you have never used them, do so beginning with next quarter; but, NOW IS THE TIME TO ORDER from us, so we will get them to you by the last Sunday of this quarter.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, JULY 16, 1908. Number 29.

Current Events

The only event of the past week was the Democratic convention and the nomination—perhaps one should say the renomination — of Mr. Bryan as the Democracy's presidential candidate. It was impossible to appreciate, until the actual moment of the nomination came, how complete was Mr. Bryan's hold upon the party, and how futile and artificial were the movements in opposition to him and in behalf of other candidates. Any one who is still prepared to claim that Mr. Bryan was forced upon the party, must be willing to credit him and his allies with a degree of political genius unparalleled in the annals of politics. Any one who has the ability to get himself so overwhelmingly nominated, ought to be his party's choice even if he were not. But there can be no reasonable doubt in any unbiased mind but that the selection of "Nebraska's gifted son," represents the actual wish of the vast majority of the Democratic party. The nomination was reached on the first ballot, after an unsuccessful attempt to stampede the convention into a unanimous nomination by acclamation before the platform had been reported by the committee. The vote stood: Bryan, 892; Gray, 60; Johnson, 46. Johnson carried no entire delegation except that from his own state, in addition to which he had scattering votes from Connecticut, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island. Judge Gray got the entire vote of his own state (Delaware) and also of New Jersey, most of the vote of Georgia, and a few votes from Pennsylvania. The nomination of Mr. Bryan intensifies his unique distinction of being the most popular defeated leader that any party in this country has ever had.

Bryan Nominated.

The platform-makers experienced all the difficulty that was anticipated in framing a political creed which would present a clear-cut issue with the policies proposed in the Republican platform.

The Democratic Platform.

There is a timely denunciation of extravagance in federal expenditures and of the despotic power of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Attention is called to the failure of the Republican platform to take a stand for publicity of campaign contributions or against contributions from corporations. The tariff plank is not particularly radical, demanding only the removal of the protective tariff upon trust-made articles, the free admission of paper-pulp and the materials used in its manufacture (as recommended by President Roosevelt) and the gradual reduction of duties to a revenue basis. The injunction plank provides that "injunctions should not be issued in any cases in which injunctions would not issue if no industrial dispute were involved." There is no provision for jury-trial in applications for injunctions.

John W. Kern, of Indianapolis, is the Democratic nominee for Vice-President. (As a memory exercise, try to recall who the defeated candidates for that office in the first and second Bryan campaigns were. If that is too hard, try to think of the names of the successful candidates for the vice-presidency in 1896 and 1900). His nomination was undoubtedly dictated by a feeling of the expediency of placing on the ticket a man from a doubtful and possibly pivotal state. It has been doubtful whether it is proper to consider Indiana a doubtful state, but if the negro vote is lined up against Taft by an ingenious appeal to prejudice based on the Brownsville episode, Indiana may easily slip into the doubtful column or beyond. Her large negro vote may easily wield a balance of power in a fairly close contest. Mr. Kern is a graduate of the University of Michigan, class of 1869, and his nomination completes the quartette of candidates, every one of whom is a college graduate.

The Vice-Presidential Nomination.

About a month ago we made note of the fact that Mr. Hearst had won a final favorable decision in his long legal fight to have a recount of the votes cast in the election for mayor of New York two years ago. On the face of the returns, Mr. Hearst was rather badly beaten by Mr. McClellan. Mr. Hearst claimed that there was fraud, and that there had been a false count of the ballots. He has been fighting for a recount under conditions which would insure an honest and accurate count, and this fight he has won. The votes have been counted again, and it is found that the former returns were substantially correct. So on this point Mr. Hearst loses. Still, the issue leaves him in a much better position than Mayor McClellan. Hearst always claimed that he was not fighting for the office of mayor, but for a fair count to determine whether or not he had been elected. He was not claiming the office, but he was claiming a right to have a fair count of the votes. In so far he was both correct and successful. Mayor McClellan's persistent opposition to the recount, which he obstructed by every known legal device and managed to postpone nearly two years, seemed to indicate a secret belief that the election returns would not bear looking into. It would have been rather a handsome thing—and entirely safe thing, as it has turned out—if, when Hearst called for a recount, McClellan had said: "By all means let us have the boxes opened and the votes recounted again if there is any doubt about it, for I do not want this office unless I have been honestly elected to it." Instead of that, he did everything possible to prevent a recount, and being defeated in that contest it can not be that he finds very great satisfaction in knowing now that he might just as well have courted investigation as to have obstructed it.

The Recount in New York.

The announcement of the death of Blind Tom will come as a surprise. Most of those who knew something about him have believed him dead many years, while the younger generation will wonder who he was. A Georgia slave, he was an idiot from childhood. But he was a human phonograph. He had the faculty of reproducing sounds which he heard. Especially remarkable was his ability to reproduce on a piano any music he heard. The expert musician might notice defects of omission or variation but the general effect was reproduced in a remarkable way. And it was not the simple strains of popular music that he remembered; he would imitate the difficult productions of Handel or Beethoven. And the notable thing is that he was always an idiot. His mind apparently had no development, and after a magnificent rendering of sublime music the performer would grimace and leaping from the piano stool applaud himself, seemingly just because the audience was applauding. One of the romances of life is that a blind, idiotic babe, considered of no value when his mother was bought as a slave, should bring to himself such fame and to a family large fortune.

Blind Tom.

Editorial

The Religious Newspaper for the Times.

Now that we have had a little breeze of criticism of our evangelism, which we doubt not will prove to be salubrious in the long run, it might be well to direct attention to our religious journalism, with the view of elevating its tone, and making it more efficient in accomplishing the work which it is seeking to do. We are sure that all our editors will agree with us that our journalism is far from perfect, and that it has by no means reached the true ideal—not even our own ideal. Not only is this true, but we feel equally sure that there is a strong desire on the part of those who are conducting our religious journals to make them better, and that they will welcome any suggestion looking to that end. What are some of the faults of our religious journalism?

We can imagine that some one occupying an independent position, so that he would be in no danger of incriminating himself by his criticism, and looking dispassionately at our religious newspapers from the point of view of the best interests of our Cause, and of the kingdom of God, might, in the spirit of perfect fairness, and even of kindness, point out some such faults as the following:

1. It is too limited in its scope. Nothing that has to do with the welfare of humanity should be foreign to the religious newspaper. It should take in the whole wide field of moral and religious activity, and all the great movements that have to do with human progress and human welfare. Our religious newspapers are too exclusively religious, in the narrowest sense of that word, and lack in human interest. Then, again, they are too exclusively concerned with that special type of religion, or with the special religious movement, which they represent, and they do not give their readers a sufficiently broad outlook of what is being done by all the forces of righteousness for the redemption of the world.

2. Very closely allied to the above is the next criticism, viz: that the spirit of our religious journals is not sufficiently broad, catholic and charitable; that they look too much each on its own things, and not sufficiently on the things of others; that they are not always willing to attribute equal honesty of purpose and sincerity of motive to those who differ from them in their religious convictions or theological conclusions. There is, therefore, sometimes, if not so much as formerly, yet too much even yet, a tendency to present others in a wrong light, or, at least, in the most unfavorable light, and to fail to give them due credit for the good they are doing in the world.

3. Then, again, our independent critic might say, there is often lacking that devout, reverential and deeply religious spirit that people have a right to look for in a religious journal. In spite of being too religious, as has been intimated, in the narrower sense of the term, that is, as dealing too exclusively with subjects called religious, they are lacking often in that real devotional spirit, when treating religious topics, which many readers find necessary to their spiritual life. The spirit of religion should pervade the discussion of all topics, whether known as secular or religious.

4. Religious newspapers do not have the appearance, to an independent observer, of being sufficiently divorced in their spirit and policy from the control of the counting room; in other words, commercialism seems to invade even the religious press, and one is often led to doubt whether the zeal manifested in behalf of a given movement is purely for the advancement of the Kingdom or has beneath it, as a controlling motive, financial considerations.

5. Again, says our independent onlooker, there is apparent a lack of the highest religious culture and the best theological training, even in the editorial writings of our journals. Their editorials do not grapple with the great living questions of the day in a manner that shows that the writers are acquainted with the best thought of the times upon these questions. If the religious press of to-day is to command the confidence of thinking people, it must show an acquaintanceship with the conclusions of the world's best scholarship, and thus deal in an enlightened manner with those problems which are challenging the attention of thoughtful men.

6. Finally, says our critic, our religious papers are not sufficiently popular. They do not reach, all of them together, perhaps more than half our membership. There are members by the scores in almost every church that take no religious paper. Besides, no religious journal ought to be content to secure only church members for its subscribers. It ought to go into hundreds and thousands of homes where the parents, though not religious themselves, are more or less interested in what is being done in the religious world, and feel the need of such literature for their children. Our editors, therefore, should popularize their papers, giving sufficient variety to make them attractive to a large class of readers who will want the paper because of what they find in it and will not have to be continually solicited to subscribe and then to renew their subscription.

These are some of the criticisms, stated very briefly, which we can imagine an intelligent and independent observer and reader of our religious journals might make. We confess, at the outset, that we believe there is truth in every one of them. And yet, looking at the problem from the inside, and in the light of long experience, we might say many things in extenuation of these faults on the part of our editors and publishers. It is one thing to have a great and splendid ideal of what a religious paper should be, and quite another, and much more difficult thing, to realize that ideal under actual existing conditions. For instance, do the people whom these religious papers represent want an ideal religious journal? People generally get what they want. Would it not require an ideal religious body to demand and support an ideal religious paper? These questions bring our heads out of the skies at once, and cause us to face actual conditions. Of one thing, however, we are sure, and that is that a religious paper should lead, and should constantly create a demand for a higher type of religious journalism, as well as a higher type of religious life, for it is the latter that controls the former.

Both our editors and publishers are especially interested in the last criticism mentioned above, viz: that our papers do not command a sufficiently wide patronage. That means, we suppose, that they are not sufficiently popular. How to popularize them without pauperizing them, religiously, is the problem. It does not suffice to point to journals that have attained popularity that make no pretensions to being religious. Some of these are filling useful fields, and are accomplishing good, but they do not answer the purpose of a religious journal. The moment a paper becomes religious in its character, it takes on certain unavoidable limitations. And yet we believe there is much to be done in popularizing religion, but chiefly in the way of making the people see that religion is a common, human interest, and has to do with our common, human nature; that all men have a religious nature, and that the cultivation of this nature is essential to the highest happiness, and the best development of every rational human being. This is one of the tasks of religious journalism, and of the pulpit. Meanwhile religious journalism has to face the prejudice and misjudgment of those who look upon religion as something foreign to their nature or interest.

But we are far more interested in correcting these faults, so far as it is possible to do so, than we are in extenuating them. Therefore, our gratitude will be due to any of our readers who, not in any spirit of faultfinding, but in the spirit of helpfulness, will tell us how we may make THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a more worthy representative of the religion of Jesus Christ, and a more efficient advocate in these days of a return to the Christianity of Christ with all its pristine purity and power.

"It is a popular delusion," says the Hon. Champ Clark, "that any one can run a newspaper or keep a hotel." Yet no real newspaper man feels that he "knows it all." As Walter B. Stevens, one of the most noted of these, says: "To err is as journalistic as it is human." But believing with Vice-President Fairbanks, that "it is impossible to exaggerate the value of the contribution to the progress of any community, large or small, which is made by a newspaper honestly and intelligently conducted," we are ready to do what we can, with the co-operation of our readers, to be more helpful. Fearless and without favor we go forward in service.

Paul Revised.

In his letter to the Corinthians Paul rebukes the church in Corinth for its divisions, in which one was saying, "I of Paul; and I of Apollos; I of Cephas; and I of Christ." He said these divisions came of their carnality and exhorted them to be "in the same mind and in the same judgment." In his Ephesian letter he exhorted the brethren to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," and then proceeds to mention the great unities of the church which make it one. He also likened the church in another place to the human body, with its different members co-operating under one head. So should the members of Christ's body co-operate under him, who is its living head.

So much for Paul; but now comes the "Christian Instructor," of Philadelphia, and instructs us differently. After referring to the different divisions in the church, it says:

"So we can not but think that this rivalry under proper control is very helpful to the progress of mankind in spiritual things. The great Head of the Church is making no mistake in permitting these things to exist in the church any more than rivalry and struggles in worldly things. 'Competition is the life of trade.' Where Rome rules with absolute power, progress is at an end."

This was not Paul's idea, as we have seen. Nor was it the idea of Jesus, who prayed that his followers might be one. "The great head of the church" is doing what he can, in view of our poor human nature, to heal these divisions and unite his divided church. All who believe on him should co-operate with him in bringing about this end. For the church to compete with itself would be about as sensible as a business house to compete with itself.

It is an old and outgrown apology for our divisions to refer to the despotism of Rome, as if there were but two alternatives —either a divided and competing Protestantism, or the absolute despotism of Rome. But too may Christians have caught a vision of something better than either a divided Protestantism or Romish despotism to ever be satisfied with either. We suggest that "The Christian Instructor" revise its view to harmonize with Paul, rather than to seek to revise Paul.

What Defiles a Man—Or a Church?

Jesus gave great offense to the Pharisees of his day by telling them that, "Not that which entereth into the mouth defileth the man, but that which proceedeth out of the mouth, this defileth the man." Even Peter was puzzled by the statement and asked an explanation. To him Jesus said: "Are ye also, even yet, without understanding? Perceive ye not that whatsoever goeth into the mouth passeth into the belly and is cast out into the draught? But the things which proceed out of the mouth come forth out of the heart; and they defile a man. For out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, railings: these are the things which defile the man."

It is the author of "Ecce Homo," we believe, who says that this distinction of Jesus alone is sufficient to mark him as vastly superior to all the religious teachers of his time.

This was a lesson on the inwardness of his religion, as having to do with the motives and purposes of the heart, which the Church has been slow to learn. There are yet those who would feel themselves "defiled" by eating meat on Friday, or during Lent, or in neglecting some other ceremonial requirement of the Church, who would not feel defiled by drunkenness, profanity and false dealing with their neighbors. Few of us have learned the importance of guarding the mind and heart against evil desires and thoughts, as the source of all sinful action.

We are led to wonder sometimes if we are not in danger of making the same kind of a mistake as to what defiles or brings into disrepute a religious body. Some good people resist all honest, frank self-criticism as likely to injure our cause. It is a club, they say, put into the hands of our enemies, by which they can do frightful damage to us. We wonder if Jesus would not say to such, "Not those evils which are condemned by a religious body, defile it or injure its standing with others, but those evils which are condoned, and which are looked upon with complacency, these defile and injure a church or religious body."

All honor to the man who has the courage to condemn his own shortcomings and errors. All honor to the political party or to the Church that closes not its eyes to its own faults, but seeks in the spirit of humility to point them out and then correct them. It is not the mere existence of faults either in the individual or in an organization that brings discredit, for we are all human and liable to err; it is the attitude of the individual, or of the organization, toward the faults that determines their character, standing, and destiny. To condone the evil, to lack the courage to point it out, to fail to see its evil consequences, these are the things that defile a church or a religious movement.

The eulogies which have been passed upon the late ex-President Grover Cleveland since his death, regardless of party lines, are another reminder that the tombs of the prophets are often builded by the sons of those who stoned them to death. But Mr. Cleveland did not have to wait so long for his vindication. Even before his death, but after he was out of politics, he enjoyed the confidence of the people of the country generally in his courage and honesty. This must have been some consolation to him, in his last days, for the bitter war that was made upon him, both within and without his own party. After all, it does not matter so much what one's contemporaries may think of him, as what is to be the final verdict of history as to his character and place in the world. It is character that lives and registers itself in the memory of mankind, when all else is forgotten.

Notes and Comments

"The Standard" (Baptist), of Chicago, has a significant comment on the action of the Northern Baptist Convention in its appointment of a commission to investigate the conditions and needs of the religious press of the denomination. It says:

"It is a rather significant fact that as soon as the Baptists at Oklahoma City realized that they had actually organized the denomination, and the Northen Baptist Convention was a reality, they began to consider by what means the denomination could express itself. Naturally, the convention turned to the religious press. One of the most noteworthy actions of the convention was the vote to appoint a commission to study the condition and needs of the denominational papers and to point out methods by which they can be made more prosperous and hence more useful. The convention also recognized the practical helpfulness of the denominational press by distributing the hundreds of copies of the papers containing the reports of the convention—and paying for them! If the commission, which has not yet been appointed, shall be rightly constituted and give the matter that careful investigation and consideration which the problem demands, and shall be able to suggest practical means for improvement, it will have performed a most needed and useful service for the denomination."

The only thing concerning which no religious body that values its reputation and its mission in the world can afford to be indifferent, is its religious press. The Baptists have acted wisely in appointing this commission. The Disciples of Christ did practically the same thing at their last annual convention in the appointment of a committee of twenty-five, though the scope of its action is a little wider.

Our same contemporary, from which we make the foregoing extract, is not wholly reconciled to the union which has been effected between the Memorial Baptist Church of its city and the First Christian Church. It thinks it has been accomplished with "undue haste," and that the "denominational relationship of the new church is not well defined." It fears that "a new denomination may be born which is both Disciple and Baptist, but neither Disciple nor Baptist." Well, if denominationalism is a good thing, what objection is there to a new denomination? If it is an evil which we are trying to get rid of, why not rejoice that these brethren have subordinated denominationalism to the best interests of the kingdom? And then the editor of the "Standard" (Baptist) is concerned to know "what relation our friend, the new pastor of the united churches, will bear to the Baptist denomination." "Does he become, by reason of his office, a Baptist, while he still remains dean of the Disciple Divinity School, and editor of the 'Christian Century'? Does he remain a Disciple?" These questions are based on the idea that we must keep up the distinction permanently between the two religious bodies hitherto known as Baptists and Disciples of Christ. If they are one in the essential things, why should we concern ourselves about such questions? If they are not one in essentials no union is possible. The one lesson we all need to learn is, to "seek first the kingdom of God," and let denominationalism take care of itself.

Current Religious Thought

"The next generation of preachers must be magnificently religious. Sin has decked itself in rich and superb costumes. Iniquity is jeweled and haughty. Nothing else can bear down upon the arrogant foe but a truly magnificent Christianity. This means that preachers should be girded and equipped as soldiers of the royal Christ. The pulpit has already made its failure when it has gone into competition with any factory for the production of pious essays, discussions of sociological schemes and even the maintenance of purely theological positions. The object of religion is God as revealed in Jesus Christ, commanding, wooing, warning, loving, saving."—Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus.

"Some folks are afraid to come out in favor of certain much-needed reforms, because they think it will hurt them. It will not do, they say, to imperil business. Social standing must be maintained. They are willing to forfeit their self-respect, but can not endure adverse criticism.

"Well, it never pays to do wrong: and it always pays to do right. When a man does his duty he is saving his life from destruction. Faithlessness to duty is what eats the heart out of many men. They know what is right, but will not commit themselves to the doing of it. The result is that their own character suffers, and the advancement of righteousness is hindered. Governor Hanly puts it in this wise: 'No man ever yet injured himself by getting on the right side of a moral question.'"—Epworth Herald.

In a recent address before the American Neurological Association, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, who had just been elected president, had this to say of Eddyism:

"Although Eddyism, in one form or another, is as old as civilization, I am amazed that the disciplined minds of Americans, usually so skeptical, should be taken in in such increasing numbers by an elderly woman with a smile.

"It is not against psychotherapy that I charge you," the doctor went on, "but against the proneness to overstate its claims as an available remedy. No organic disease was ever cured by it, and its legitimate uses are circumscribed. The rational employment of it in some cases is without doubt of incalculable benefit, but its wanton misuse is inexcusable.

"I would not be understood as discrediting in any way the practice by influence on the mind. I knew of a woman who was obsessed with the idea that she could not eat and who when she was told that she was getting thin and ugly promptly recovered her appetite and her health. But there is nothing of Eddyism in these instances. These one might classify as 'imperative suggestion.'"

Apropos of an editorial on another page the following is illuminating. Under the title of "A Thing Impossible," the editor of "Word and Way" says: "If the editor were required to please all the readers of his paper he would have on his hands a hopeless task. Think of the variety of tastes among 150,000 men and women. Think of all the angularities, peculiarities, preferences, prejudices, standards, likes and dislikes. Please them all? Impossible! Some like doctrine and lots of it; others just can't endure doctrine. One wants a big per cent of poetry; another can't imagine why the editor should waste space with such stuff. The mind of one runs on missions. Another would have the paper filled with Sunday-school matter. And here is another who complains because more space is not given to moral reform. One takes the editor to task for allowing a given thing in the paper, and before the editor can recover from this drubbing, another dear reader flies into him for something he kept out.

"Subscribers have written to the editors of the "Word and Way," criticising the paper for being too strict in its exploitation of Baptist doctrine and practice. Others have cancelled their subscriptions because the paper did not come out strong enough on Baptist doctrine. We have had subscribers to order their papers stopped short because of some article that displeased them, while others were so pleased with the article that they induced their friends to subscribe on the strength of it.

"The editor has poured on him blessing and cursing, enough of blessing to inspire gratitude and courage, and enough of cursing to require a great measure of divine grace and keep him humble.

"The editor is glad when his readers are pleased and sorry when they are displeased, but he can not afford to try to please anybody. He knows how impossible it is to please everybody, so he has to make sure of his motives, risk his best judgment and bravely go ahead."

"The churches can save only those who want to be saved. And they stand ever ready to do that. They are constantly seeking sinners in the highways and byways, but they can not change the law that has endowed all men with free will and force salvation upon them in spite of themselves."—The Pittsburg Leader.

"The sharp debate on church union in the Canadian General Assembly this year was almost wholly monopolized by the opponents of union, but fortunately their speeches appear to have had little or no effect. The Assembly, as soon as the debate was closed, rejected by a vote of 156 to 32 an amendment that aimed to substitute the idea of fraternal co-operation for the pending plan of organic union with the Methodist and Congregational denominations. It then adopted a vigorous resolution expressing joy at learning that "in the judgment of the committee, so far as they have prosecuted their labors, the proposed union appears to be practicable." The committee was instructed to proceed with its negotiations. While this outcome is a pleasing testimony to the breadth of mind and earnestness with which the majority of Canadian Presbyterians have gone into this great effort at Protestant unification, the interested onlooker can not escape a sense of depression at the outbreak of even so much anti-unionism in a church which at one time seemed moving solidly into this splendid combination. It is exceedingly disappointing to find men of power and prominence in Presbyterianism alleging as arguments against union selfish and sectarian tendencies in themselves which they ought to be ashamed of rather than to glory in. In view of the quality of the arguments offered by objectors, we are obliged to conclude that the opposition to the union movement in Canada springs from a set preference for separation and division rather than for unity of God's people. We launch no reproach at any man for questioning whether a given plan for union is feasible. But when a man, industriously magnifying trifles, makes it his deliberate labor to erect new obstacles in the pathway by which different denominations are drawing nearer to common understanding, we dare to bring against him the solemn reproach of pleasing not God and being contrary to the best hopes of the kingdom of Christ."—The Interior.

"Bad boys can not be made good by giving them taffy. The more you give them the more they demand. Some men are like bad boys in this respect. Better withhold the 'taffy.'"—Religious Telescope.

"We do not share the opinion which we find expressed here and there that negotiations with the Methodist Protestants, United Brethren and Free Baptists have been fruitless because they have not reached the point of organic union and seem for the moment to be postponed in favor of perhaps more obvious proposals of alliance. We, for our part, have broadened our horizon in the process of negotiation. And we are assured that there has grown up in all these bodies a kindly feeling of sympathy toward us which we as cordially reciprocate and which will count for much in the future. Nor do we despair of a turn of affairs which may renew the hopes of a union. The reunion of all American Methodism on terms which will suit the convictions of the smaller bodies seems to us remote—more remote, indeed, than the renewal of the negotiations which were retarded by the action of the Cleveland Council. The opposition of many Free Baptists to absorption by the larger body of Regular Baptists in many cases, we are sure, leaves the way open for sympathetic consideration of the claims of brotherhood with the Free Congregational churches. We are at a moment when we must wait for the manifestation of God's purposes. But in this moment we should develop our own work diligently and cultivate a special feeling of sympathy and co-operation toward those who for one reason or other are nearest to us. There is a spirit of provincialism which is the enemy of all union. We shall do well to rid ourselves of that, while at the same time we deliver our own special message to the world."—Congregationalist.

Ernest C. Mobley, one of our young preachers, with a Southern training, but who in late years has had some opportunity to see how big is the world, writing to the Texas "Christian Courier," says:

"I used to spurn that statement: 'A disappearing brotherhood,' but since preaching in the leading cities of England, where denominational lines are minimized rather than magnified, and since studying the conditions in Canada where all evangelical bodies are tending towards union, I am thoroughly convinced that as these bodies come nearer the Christ and the New Testament ideal, we as a distinctive brotherhood must disappear. That is as it should be if we are really unsectarian. May God hasten the day when all of his people are one."

"The 'Congregationalist' gives an account of the seventy-ninth anniversary of the annual parade of the Brooklyn Sunday-schools. The public schools were granted a holiday. Half a million or more people lined the gaily decorated streets, while 317 Sunday-schools poured out in twenty-four sections of the city column after column of scholars, numbering all together almost 120,000, not including the endless array on sidewalks of cradle-roll babies, parents and others not able to participate in the marching. Gov. Hughes was whirled about the city to see different sections of the children's army, and said that he was exhilarated at the moral value of such a fine spectacle."—Central Christian Advocate.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

At this early hour the household in "The Pioneer" cottage slumbers, except the Easy Chair, which is up early to have a chat with its readers. The air is fresh and cool, and the swish of the waves has in it the spirit of soothing restfulness, so gently does the morning breeze stir the great lake that lies before our door. The past week has been an almost ideal one from the point of view of the resorter. The weather has been mild enough for us to sit upon the porch in the evening without wraps. The blueberries have been ripe on the hills, and the fish have been running in the lakes—aye, and biting, too. Ask Dr. Moore, the sage of Columbia, whose arrival during the past week has struck terror to the whole finny tribe in these parts, to tell you about the two six-pound pickerel he captured on one expedition, not to mention the string of silver, or white bass. These fish, we venture to say, will not shrink an ounce in weight under his recital of the story. Speaking of arrivals, a whole bevy of young ladies from St. Louis, professional nurses from St. Luke's Hospital, including a niece of the Editor's wife, blew in on us across the lake suddenly, one day this week, on one of the strong breezes from the southwest. Something has been doing since they landed. When a company of good-looking young women go to a summer resort, even as quiet as Garrison Park, in search of a good time, they are sure to find it. How they enjoy these hills and lakes, and the bathing, and the rowing, and strolling along the shore of the murmuring lake on these moonlight nights! Surely none deserve this change and outing more than these young women, who devote their lives to caring for the sick, the wounded and the suffering. To get away from the atmosphere of the sick room, where absolute quietness is required, to the fresh air and ozone of this lake region, where they can laugh, and even shout as loud as they please, without disturbing the serenity of the hills is, for them, a most happy change.

Referring to the work of these trained nurses, recalls a train of thought in which the Easy Chair has been indulging recently with regard to the different callings of life. The train of thought was superinduced by a feeling of weariness from the grinding and exacting toil of an Editor's life together with its responsibility and the criticism to which it necessarily subjects one. Why not choose an easier vocation? In the first place, one does not have in his own hands, altogether, the choosing of a vocation. If he be conscientious, and follows what seems to him the path of duty, there are circumstances and influences which determine the question very largely for him. Then again, why should one seek an easy calling? Is there not a certain satisfaction, and perhaps the deepest satisfaction of life, in feeling that one is doing his full share of the world's work, and bearing his part of the world's suffering and sorrow? How else can we account for the joy of those who serve the Lord in foreign lands as missionaries, or who, in our own land, give themselves to ministries among the poor and lowly? It is a great mistake to suppose that those who give their lives to the welfare of others in less fortunate conditions, and who sacrifice many of the things which others cherish so highly in order to render such service, are objects of our pity and commiseration. They have a joy in life, and a consciousness of its dignity and value, which those who seek lives of ease and comfort never know. What shall we say then of those who are seeking easy places, and who turn aside, even from the path of duty, when that path seems to be beset with perils, with hardships and with unremunerated toil? They are making the mistake, so common among men, of seeking happiness and pleasure as an end, and who are always disappointed in the search. Happiness is a by-product of honest, earnest effort in accomplishing some worthy end of life.

Some one who reads the foregoing may ask, Why does not the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, then, resign his position and take up work among the poor in some social settlement, or work with the Salvation Army, or become a missionary to the slums in some of our great cities where he may minister directly to the needy and to the outcasts of society? The question is worth asking. He has asked it of himself. If he knows his own heart, he would gladly enter into any of these fields of service, and find joy in doing so, if he felt that that was the work to which God had called him, and that in doing so he could do most to glorify God and to bless humanity. While it would involve the sacrifice of certain things he now enjoys, it would, also, bring immunity from many things which are harder to endure than the hardships which would be involved in such service as we have described. In other words, he would not exchange his present position for that of a slum-worker with any view of getting a more difficult post of duty. On the contrary, it would be a much easier one. Who that has lived a public life and sought to serve the public good, has not at times felt oppressed with the burden of responsibility, and wounded with shafts of criticism, until he literally longs for the shades of obscurity and freedom from responsibility where he might rest and be at peace? So the psalmist must have felt when he exclaimed:

> "Oh, that I had wings like a dove!
> Then would I fly away and be at rest.
> Lo, then would I wander afar off,
> I would lodge in the wilderness.
> I would haste me to a shelter
> From the stormy wind and tempest."

So men in public life often feel, but if they are brave men they do not yield to such feeling, but stand at their post of duty until their work is done.

Last week we spoke of an anniversary. This week we have had another one, one which concerned the mistress of the household. Mrs. Eddy advises against observing birthday anniversaries, but we are not disciples of Mrs. Eddy, and as our custom is, made some slight recognition of this birthday anniversary. There was a little dinner party at the clubhouse in the evening at which fourteen of our friends, in and near the clubhouse, sat down at a common table in honor of the occasion. There were a few gifts from immediate friends, and a loving message by telegram from children far away, and at the close, though not on the program, W. T. Moore, out of the goodness of his heart, volunteered some words of appreciation of the good woman in whose honor the party was convened, which at least one of those at the table heartily indorsed, and all seemed to approve. The informal dinner party then adjourned, most of them to "The Pioneer" cottage, where the evening was spent very delightfully as indicated in one of the songs of Garrison Park:

> "There at eve upon the broad veranda,
> When the moon shines bright,
> We sit and sing the old songs softly
> Far into the moonlit night."

It was not noisy singing, but of that soft, gentle type, in which the heart feels more than the lips utter. The south wind, blowing softly through the pines and hemlocks, seemed to chime in with the low, sweet melodies of the songs of long ago. And the lake, too, joined in the refrain, as its wavelets broke upon the smooth surface of the beach. The half-full moon lent its softening influence to the occasion, as through the rifts of floating clouds, its beams fell upon lake and woods. Yes, we do well to mark these anniversary days, which, in one brief human life, are all too few. Too soon the time comes when these anniversaries must cease, and then it is good to remember that while our loved ones were yet with us, we paused in life's hurried march to celebrate the day in which God gave them to us.

We are writing this at the close of the week. To-morrow is the Lord's day. May it be a day of rich spiritual blessing to all the churches! May the spirit of God brood over all the assembled congregations, and over all the scattered saints with his life-giving and sanctifying energy! May the spirit of peace, of unity, of reverence and of worship, pervade all our churches, and may those who speak, speak with the power of the indwelling Christ, and those who hear, realize his presence in their midst, saying, as he did of old to the waves of Galilee, "Peace, be still!" Just now we seem to need the silence of thoughtfulness and of awe, as, in the presence of God, we think of our relations to him and to each other. We are sure that all of the readers of the Easy Chair will join us in the inspired prayer: "God be merciful unto us and bless us and cause his face to shine upon us and give us peace!" It was our privilege to speak to the little band of Disciples here, and a number of resorters, on last Lord's day, and we are hoping to have Brother Moore speak to us to-morrow. A Methodist brother has just called to request a union meeting in the absence of their pastor, and to this we readily consented.

The Glorious Liberty of the Children of God!

Romans 8:21.

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage Galatians 5:1.

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed—John 8:36.

A BRIEF CONSPECTUS OF A SERMON PREACHED BY W. DAVIESS PITTMAN AT THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY, JULY 5TH, 1908.

Liberty, freedom, independence, is naturally the subject of the hour. Within the past twenty-four hours it has been shot into our ears, dazzled into our eyes, and burned into our souls, and I realize that I would do the occasion violence if I did not speak upon the theme now upon our hearts and minds.

Our national independence means much to every true American, and the Fourth of July, celebrating as it does the signing of that immortal document, The Declaration of Independence, ought to be fitly observed. The valorous deeds of our forefathers during those eventful days that tried men's souls, ought to be gratefully remembered by us who enjoy the glorious heritage of the sons of liberty. They sealed with their blood their noble resolve to throw off the galling yoke of bondage, and because of their heroic struggle and final victory, "Old Glory" now proudly floats o'er "the land of the free and the home of the brave!"

Our glorious liberty as the children of God is of still higher and greater importance, and it is to this phase of LIBERTY that I desire to direct your careful attention. "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." This is the freedom worth while, and it should be the ardent desire of all Christians to appreciate and appropriate this glorious freedom that was bought with the price of the blood of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Let us parallel our condition with that of the early colonists, and, as they threw off the yoke of bondage, let us see if we may not do so, in somewhat the same way. Instead of George III, who oppressed and harassed our forefathers, we will substitute SATAN, who is "the prince of this world," and as a reigning monarch, is tyrannical, despotic and relentless in his cruel sway over mankind. His personality, his power and his influence over his subjects is a reality we sometimes fail to take into consideration. The Kingdom of Satan is just as real as the Kingdom of God, and ofttimes many of us are so attracted by the allurements of the tinsel and show of his deceptions, that we become his abject subjects. He reigns supreme over our lives; we are completely under his dominion and power, and we do his bidding, even to the extent of going out to get others to join us in our obedience to his mandates. Our condition is even worse than our forefathers' plight, and there is just one way to escape the baleful influence and blight of his Satanic Majesty, and that is Rebellion, rebellion, rebellion, and the first act of rebelling from his tyrannical reign over us is to write and sign a "Declaration of Independence" similar to the one herein printed, and then to seal that signed document with our noblest and best endeavor. At Trenton, Brandywine and Valley Forge, our early patriots fought and suffered after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and at Yorktown they finally triumphed over their hated enemy. Even so we will have our battles after signing our Declaration of Independence, but the Captain of our Salvation never lost a battle, and he fought a hand to hand conflict with Satan himself, both at the beginning of his ministry, on the mountain, and at its close, in the tomb; but he triumphed over the archenemy to mankind and is now able to succor all who put their trust in Him, and follow His leadership. This is a glorious thought, that we may follow One who has never known defeat.

A DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for a people to dissolve the bands which have connected them with a power unwholesome, tyrannical, despotic, and degrading; it seems but right and proper that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights, governments are ordained among men, and that whenever any government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to throw off such government and come under another which will provide new guards for their future security.

Such is the case with the government of Satan, and is now the necessity which constrains them to throw off his government. The history of his Satanic Majesty is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over his subjects. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has polluted the hearts of men, so that they hate, envy, scorn, curse, decry, lust, evilly surmise, and think all evil.

He has caused wars to extend over the face of the earth, bringing in their wake the sobs of the orphans, the wail of the widows, and the blight of the land.

He has caused selfishness to abound so that the unscrupulous prey upon their weaker fellow men, and grind out of them their very life's blood, for their own benefit and profit.

He has caused the ruin and downfall of countless thousands of men and women by that curse of all curses,—the drink habit. He has led our sons and daughters astray and into by and forbidden paths.

He has caused us all to sin and sin repeatedly, and filled our hearts with remorse and sorrow, and as a consequence of our sins, the death penalty has been passed upon all mankind.

For these, and a thousand other reasons and causes, we must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity which demands our separation.

We, therefore, children of our Heavenly Father, to whom we appeal for the rectitude of our intentions, do hereby solemnly publish and declare that we of right ought to be free; that we are absolved from all allegiance to the Kingdom of Satan, and that all connection between us is and ought to be totally dissolved.

And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

To proclaim liberty to the captives was the reason Jesus came into this world, and to help us in our struggle against Satan and his hosts. This was prophesied by Isaiah, and Jesus himself, reading this prophecy in the temple, declared that it was fulfilled in His coming.

The Apostle Paul, that old battle-scarred veteran of the cross, knew how to overcome the evil one, because he had met him in many a conflict; and in writing to the Ephesian brethren he sounded along the lines of Christian soldiery these thrilling words: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the DEVIL. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

In the midst of the battle's roar, when the conflict is pressing hard, let us hear anew the same old warrior's note of assurance, as he cries aloud in these words: "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the VICTORY through our Lord Jesus Christ."

"We must fight;" I repeat it, sir, we must fight. I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!" These were the cyclonic words of Patrick Henry that fanned the spark of rebellion into a glowing, consuming fire, which melted the chains of tyranny and oppression.

In the same spirit, Paul wrote to young Timothy: "Fight the good fight of faith!" No victory without a fight, and if we truly appreciate our situation, and follow the example and admonition of such illustrious and worthy men of blood and iron, we will be able to say with Paul, the most conspicuous hero that ever fought under the bloodstained banner of the Cross:

"I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course: I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Our forefathers fought an unequal fight, under many discomforts and disadvantages, but with a firm reliance upon God for ultimate victory; and their faith and courage pleased the eyes of the Infinite and He led them on to victories, even as he did Israel of old.

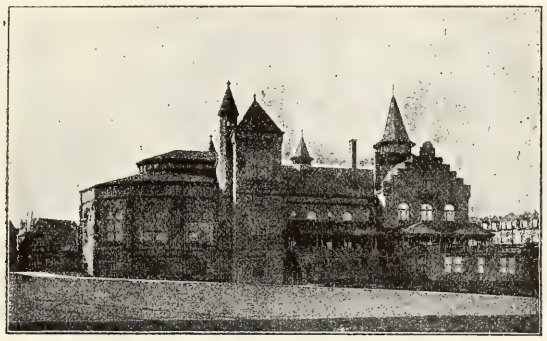
Are we worthy children of our gallant sires? Have we courage and faith equal to theirs? Ours is a righteous cause. God still lives and rules in the affairs of men, and He can help us to be "more than conquerors" if we follow closely our great Leader as He leads us on into the thick of the fight against the tyrannical, despotic Satan and his rulers of the darkness of this world.

With such a record behind us, as sinks the golden sun behind the western hills and the days of our years have been spent as a tale that is told, we will know more and more the true significance of the apostle's words when he refers to "The glorious LIBERTY of the children of God."

What One Railroad is Doing for Its Men

By Arthur Holmes

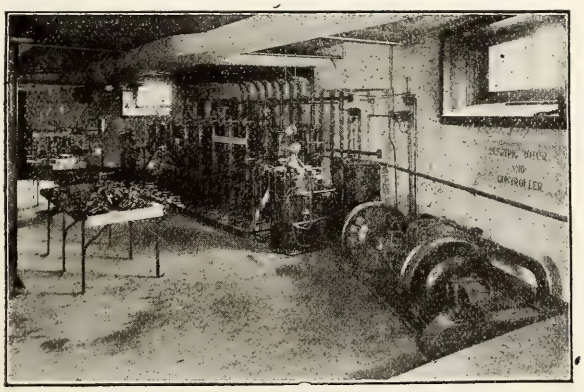
Automatic railroad devices all have practical limitations. At some point sooner or later, operation depends upon a man. The responsibility of this man increases as the automaticity of the operation increases. In other days, men applied hand-brakes. Now the engineer shoves an eight-inch lever one inch and every brake on the train grips its wheel immediately. Formerly, a minute's delay might not be unimportant. Now, a second may decide the difference between a safe stop and a pile of broken cars and mangled bodies.



Main Building, R. R. Y. M. C. A.

Understanding the ultimate importance of men, railroaders are wisely turning their attention to the improvement of this most important part of the equipment. The Young Men's Christian Association has been found to embody most of the elements going to make a practical, steady, efficient organization for developing the highest type of railroad men.

The Philadelphia Association has long been in the front ranks of such institutions. Its main building is a model club house, costing with its equipment about $175,000. Besides this, the Department has an athletic field, a club house at the seashore, another in the country, and a well-furnished branch on the top floor of an office building at Broad Street Station. The normal average membership is about 1,800. The equipment includes all the usual association appliances.



Air Brake Room, Pennsylvania Railroad.

The work naturally falls under heads: social, physical, educational, and religious.

Besides, the general atmosphere of sociability and games, series of social events with music, vaudeville, speeches, and eatables are arranged, at which 800 men sometimes may be found. Thirty-five hundred people entered the building last New Year's day. The president of the road has twice attended socials this winter.

The regular indoor gymnasium work is no longer a mere trap to catch the unwary, otherwise invulnerable to religious influences, nor yet a developer of specialists in athletics. Its mission is to the everyday worker, and it seeks to bring him to his highest efficiency in the work he is doing.

Summer work is divided between the athletic field and the seashore club house. Just how much the latter means to the youngsters can best be judged by seeing fifty of them turned loose on the sands or dumped into the rolling Atlantic, or, best of all, ranged around the tables in the dining room after an entire morning's unbroken romp.

As in most large Associations the physical director is a wide-awake graduate of a medical school, his office becomes a dispensary of advice for preserving health as well as regaining it. Young fellows learn how to care for wounds, how to eat, sleep, and that there is no forgiveness in heaven or on earth for the desecrator of the temple of the Holy Spirit. The bond between the physical director and the young man is so close and so valuable for the latter's moral well-being, that any minister might envy the potentialities for good thus placed in the hands of the man who pre eminently controls the ideals of these youths.

The educational activities cover a multitude of studies. Telegraphy and electricity are demanding increasing attention. Transportation problems have been treated by heads of departments themselves. Frequent trips are made to points of interest in the road and actual operations studied, like those in freight yards, terminals, New York tunnels, and electric power-houses. A complete air-brake plant, equivalent to thirty cars, is installed and ready for inspection and illustration. A steam-valve motion, motor and electrical apparatus is always on the ground. In one month the attendance in all classes runs up to 1,200, or about 5,000 for the active season, with an enrollment of about 750. Correspondence courses are also conducted.

Distinct activities for the development of men's religious natures are prominent. The Bible Department stands first. Clubs and classes are held in and out of the building. The shops have been invaded and men can be found, day and night, at their lunch-hour, studying under the direction of their comrades or ministers. Lessons are sent by mail to 275 men weekly. In the shanties along the tracks, in the night-vigils in the moving cabooses, men are studying the life of the greatest man who ever lived. Whiskey-drinking and card-playing are disappearing from such places, and men can now be found ready to utter a last prayer for a comrade caught in a wreck. Imagine the fortitude of that engineer, pinned three hours under his engine, comforting and sustaining his soul by reading the Testament sent him in connection with these lessons. The man who runs the course was once a drunkard.

A Bible study club for clerks includes four suppers and four lectures for $1.50. Dr. A. T. Clay, of the University of Pennsylvania, lectured on "Babylonian Excavations" this winter. Seventy men attended.

Sunday meetings are held in the building. Shop meetings are most popular. The men take part; reading, singing solos, playing the organ, and sometimes doing the speaking. A brakeman will run in from the yard-engine and give the music, a machinist will pass the books, a Roman Catholic blacksmith will sometimes sing a solo, a clergyman, doctor, business man, or evangelist will speak for ten or fifteen minutes. Men stand around, sit on benches, eat part of their lunches and smoke their pipes. The foremen, who are the best judges of the effects, are loudest in their praises.

Altogether 20 meetings and classes are held weekly, attended by 8,500 in Bible study and about 22,246 in meetings, or a total of 30,790 men annually.

Whoever thinks of the railroad associations as merely a bunk-house or lunch-room with a religious supplement, needs to revise his opinion. Here is a great institution with an equipment costing $200,000, with 1,800 members, touching 5,000 more, affecting the lives of railroaders from vice-presidents down to track-laborers, with 25 paid officers, with a school of 18 different courses of study, employing 50 lecturers and teachers, with a religious department reaching 2,000 weekly, with a physical department building up the bodies of 1,000 more, with 500 attending the rooms daily and with a committee force of 575 volunteers.

A Shop Meeting.

After all, its real work can not be stated statistically. The effect upon men can be observed only by those who mark the advances toward sobriety, steadiness, thrift, and efficiency as the years go by. The best evidence of such advance is the increasing willingness of railroad companies to put money into an enterprise which has demonstrated its usefulness in doing the noblest work on earth—that of making men.

Class for Studying Ticket Agent's Business.

The Church Out of Doors By William Henry Meredith

The open-air treatment is the popular and efficient remedy for consumption. Many a New Englander, smitten with this white plague, has been amazed on discovering what there is in the air, as a specific for that fell disease, so prevalent on that coast. Portable beds on piazzas and tents in gardens are frequently in evidence. "Live out of doors as much as you can," we are hearing on all sides. Not only the sick, but the well are taking this advice. The sick for healing, the well as preventive, believing that prevention is better and more economic than cure.

We claim to be an optimist of the optimists. The discovery of one drop of pessimism in our circulation would send us at once to the blood-letter's, but the fact remains that too many churches are smitten with consumption, and are in a wasting condition, growing weaker and weaker. Sometimes a glow is seen for a while, during special seasons, but it proves to be but the hectic flush of that baleful disease which slays its thousands. The beauty is not the beauty of holiness, but is the evidence which sometimes attends decay. After a while the feet grow too tired to walk to the church services, the hands too weak to do its work, the heart of the body too weak to send life currents into every member of the body. Public services are maintained with icy regularity, church bills are often promptly paid, but consumption is doing its deadly work in the body. The absorptions are gaining in the secretions, the body is necessarily weakening even unto death. The light under the bushel is being extinguished by its own smoke. It must have an outlet, or it will go out. At a wedding party awhile ago, we were suddenly brought almost into darkness. The lamps were going out. Some guests wondered, but the hostess at once opened doors and windows for awhile. The foul air went out, the fresh air came in, the lamps again shone brightly, and the guests rejoiced in the light. Some local churches are going into darkness because they have no outlets. Self-concerned, they are becoming self-consumed. "We won't pay for heating up all out doors," said a penurious school committeeman to a young teacher in a country school, who had the windows open to let in the good air, and to let out the bad. The local church which does not do its part to heat up out-of-doors home and foreign missions and other benevolences will soon suffer suffocation.

The local church should not only send out its light and heat to the ends of the earth; it should also carry them out into its own community. It should get out of doors, out into the open with its glad evangel!

How pitiful and painful is the frequent sight in our cities in the summer, to see only a small few in the congregation, and these mostly church members and Christians, whilst multitudes of the unsaved are surging past the church doors, or along adjacent streets! The classes are inside the churches, the masses are outside. How shall these be brought together to hear the saving Gospel? Said a successful merchant, in my hearing, to a young man who had just opened a store: "You must learn to draw the people through the glass" (windows). If the church can not draw the masses through its doors, she should go out of doors to them. If some half-empty city churches only knew "what is in the air!" Why not get out onto the front steps, if space will allow? Why not get a permit to go out onto the street corner, and hold forth the word of life, and there give forth the invitation to the house of the Lord? Why not go out into the near-by open square, or public park, and preach and sing the Gospel to the people where they are, and as they are? Many a dying church has been revived by such open-air treatment. Does the pastor say, "I am no kind of an open-air preacher." Did you ever try to be one? Try it, brother, and see how it agrees with you and with your church. Be an open-air preacher, not merely an open-air exhorter or testifier. Not only exhortation, and not only testimony is enough to gather and hold an open-air audience, but studied and specially prepared preaching and singing will do the business. Choose the right spot, where the fish abound, before you throw out your line. Have your singers well trained in Gospel hymns, mostly old-timers, which will awaken memories of past years in the hearers. Observe the way of the wind and stand so that it will carry your message to the people. Have a wall back of you if possible. Choose practical subjects, and clothe the very best thoughts in the simplest language, the language of the people, of the man in the street, not his slang, but his current speech. Be prepared for interruptions, and when they come, keep sweet, and try and turn them to good account. Be sure and see that some burrs, which will stick, are thrown out in the sermon. This kind of man-fishery needs barbed hooks. If the preacher has to "flog his brains" to produce sermons for out of doors, he must not be surprised. To extemporize in the open is very risky business, even, and especially for the naturally ready speaker.

The average man in the street thinks that the church, especially what he calls the "toney church," doesn't care for him, nor for his. He regards church-going as a luxury for the well-to-do, or as a pastime for the poorer. To see a "toney church" actually come out into the street, after him, to give him the benefit of their talented pastor and singers will convince him that the church cares for him and seeks his good, and not his goods. That preachers and people are doing things for him for which they are not paid to do, will have a good moral effect upon him. The English are far ahead of us in this matter of out-of-door preaching. Not only do the Free churches, but also the Anglican Churches and their ministers throw themselves heartily into this kind of work.

The Rt. Rev. Edmund Knox, D. D., bishop of Manchester, is famed throughout the north of England for his open-air preaching. He has conducted some very successful missions on Blackpool sands, and is immensely popular with the rough-and-ready natives of Lancashire. He is a tremendous worker, as indeed he needs to be, for Bishop Gore once said that he believed there was no single diocese in the Church of England where the work was so arduous as at Manchester. Although Dr. Knox is one of the hardest worked bishops in England, the good people of his diocese do not always realize this. During one of his recent missions on Blackpool Beach, two Lancashire mill girls were discussing the situation. "Who's that?" asked one, as the bishop got up to speak. "That's the Bishop of Manchester," was the reply. "Nay, lass," said the first speaker, "no bishop 'ud do that." "But it is the bishop, I tell 'ee." "Well, if it really is the bishop, let's go and 'ear 'im, for I thowt as bishops did nowt but draw their brass."

We saw some Anglican churches had out-of-door pulpits built into the walls of their city churches. We heard them preach from these to the crowds in the church yards, both before and after the indoor services. English cities and towns are busy hives of open-air workers, especially on Sundays. In classical Cambridge we followed a preacher and his people from the indoor evening services to "Parker's Place," an open space where people congregated; there they held services. A transparency told the crowd who they were, and where they carried on the regular business of preaching and worship. It also invited them to come to the church. The preacher was one of the front-rank preachers of his denomination. Although our city populations are not so homogeneous as are the English, yet good work may be done out of doors. A few concrete cases shall close this article. The pastor of a Massachusetts city church, with a few workers, went out into a popular resort, more than a mile from their church, and held an out-door service. Weeks after a man appeared at the church door, who had not been inside a church for worship for nearly forty years. The only sermon he had heard during that time was the out-of-door sermon of the pastor of that church. He became a member of that church and after years of Christian life and service the same pastor yoked up with a Swedish pastor of that city. He left his beautiful church, one of the finest in the city, and just before evening worship, they went out into a park not far off. They preached in both languages, and the Swede sang Swedish hymns, much to the spiritual profit of the strangers in the strange land, who, there, in their own tongue, heard the Gospel preached and sung. A good Swedish church soon became a necessity there, and the stately New England pile of the other pastor had 2 larger congregations, because of those preliminary open-air services.

In another city, where French people abounded, the same pastor yoked up with a French mission pastor. A teamster mem-

DIFFERENT NOW

Athlete Finds Better Training Food.

It was formerly the belief that to become strong, athletes must eat plenty of meat.

This is all out of date now, and many trainers feed athletes on the well-known food, Grape-Nuts, made of wheat and barley, and cut the meat down to a small portion, once a day.

"Three years ago," writes a Mich. man, "Having become interested in athletics, I found I would have to stop eating pastry and some other kinds of food.

"I got some Grape-Nuts and was soon eating the food at every meal, for I found that when I went on the track, I felt more lively and active.

"Later, I began also to drink Postum in place of coffee and the way I gained muscle and strength on this diet was certainly great. On the day of a field meet in June I weighed 124 lbs. On the opening of the football season in Sept. I weighed 140. I attributed my fine condition and good work to the discontinuation of improper food and coffee, and the using of Grape-Nuts and Postum, my principal diet during training season being Grape-Nuts.

"Before I used Grape-Nuts I never felt right in the morning—always kind of 'out of sorts' with my stomach. But now when I rise I feel good, and after a breakfast largely of Grape-Nuts with cream, and a cup of Postum, I feel like a new man." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

ber gave the use of a large wagon. A small organ and a choir filled it. On the corner of two main streets of that city services were held in both languages, and the church and French Mission of that city were greatly invigorated by the open-air treatment.

Many of the people who throng the streets and surge past the church doors are ex-Sunday-school scholars. Not a few had Christian parents. The most of them have more than enough of thee Bible and of good Gospel hymns in their memories to save them, if they could only be moved to do as well as they know how to do.

Absent treatment will never bring them to decision. Out-of-door contact with sacred things and tactful open-air religious services may be blest to them, so that what they know they ought to do they will do, and they will say: "I will arise and go unto my father." Souls may be saved and churches also may be saved by getting out-of-doors. Bible preaching, in both testaments, is nearly all open-air preaching. Jesus was a matchless open-air preacher and teacher. Apostolic successes were gained out in the open. The church which brings the truth of God down from the stars into the streets, is a truly apostolic church. Let consumptive churches and pastors try the open-air treatment, and the healthy use this prophylactic method.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Once a year generally I preach for the dumb animals. My last text was Jonah 4:11. I shall let the newspaper man report the sermon in part. Its lesson is specially needed in these canicular days:

"One of the hopeful signs of the times," the preacher said, "is the revival of interest in natural history. People have read about animals in the last two or three years who never before took the slightest interest in the subject. President Roosevelt's influence, no doubt, will give a mighty impulse to this awakening to the beauties of nature and the fascinating study of our fellow-mortals of the field, the forest and the stream. Bear and panther, lynx, hare and moose, dogs, wolves and foxes, horse and ox, crows and meadow larks, robins and sparrows, even the snake and the toad, the spider and the bug, are having their place in God's great temple recognized.

"The duty of man to the dumb creation is one acknowledged from the oldest history. 'Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn,' is a word of Moses, which Paul quotes again and again. 'A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast,' says Solomon. 'Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy,' is a beatitude of Jesus, which reiterates the teaching of Moses and the prophets.

"The Bible is clear upon this subject, as upon all human obligations. The great lesson of Holy Scripture is the lesson of mercy. God is love. The gospel is for 'every creature.' In the perfection of the Kingdom the wolf shall also dwell with the lamb and the leopard lie down with the kid.

"Christianity is kindness, love fulfilling the law. Cruelty hardens the heart and is unlike God, whose tender mercy is over all his works.

"Atrocities perpetrated on defenseless creatures, fashionable cruelties to horses, birds, dogs and cats; starving, beating, overworking and needless whipping of domestic animals, are causes of crime, are in themselves crimes that call for the interposition of every disciple of the compassionate Christ.

"What do we see to-day in the animal world? Fish of the sea, birds of the air, beasts of the field, creeping things of the earth are all serving their heaven-given purpose, are full of life—happy, stirring, useful life. Where it is necessary for food or for protection to sacrifice this life man has the right to take it; but when God gave man dominion over all the works of his hand he did not mean the wholesale slaughter which we see for purposes of sport or fashion. Roosevelt and Cleveland may be named among true sportsmen, and they would not countenance the wanton slaughter of animals for the brutal pleasure of killing; but it is easy to find such examples. What of the wholesale butchery of buffalo on our western plains or the destruction of millions of song birds to decorate the hats of our women!

"Four men went out hunting quail. Each day before starting a heavy wager was made as to the number of kills each would make during the day. Quail were plentiful and the bag of each day became larger. The wages increased, and of course the bags were more troublesome to carry. Finally each man decided to wring the head from the bird as it was brought in by the dogs and toss the body aside. When the day's slaughter was over heads were easily counted, and, of course, the bags did not weigh so much. These men would feel affronted if told they were not sportsmen. They would feel still more affronted if pronounced butchers and blackguards who deserved ten years each in the county jail.

"Yes, an animal has the right to live and be happy in its brief life. Animals also are endowed with feelings and affections as other mortals. Who has not been touched by the joys and sorrows of our dumb friends? A barn was recently burned in Virginia. Some of those present noticed a dog's head sticking out from under the building. The owner of the barn tried to persuade her to come out.

"She turned appealing eyes to him and started back. Presently she came to the opening again, looked out as if for help, and again went back. Several times this act was repeated. Her puppies were under the barn and she wanted some one to fetch them out. Finally the flames were down to the first floor of the building, and the owner of the dog began to worry because she would not come out, and tried all manner of means to get her to leave her little ones, but she would not. At last she went back and came out no more, and when the fire was over they found her dead body beside the charred bodies of her offspring. When she found she could not get them out she determined to die with them. What a picture of maternal devotion!

"Go up to some disreputable-looking old horse, some cowed and beaten dog, and speak kindly to him, and see if he has not feelings like your own. See if he does not say, as plainly as words can speak: 'Thank you; you have made me happy!' Whatever has the capacity for loving has the capacity for suffering.

"The human animal in his egotism torments the cat to give pleasure to his great and lofty mightiness; the cat is nobler. He kicks the dog because it dares approach his sacred person; the dog is a finer creature. He subjects his horse to the cruel overcheck rein, the blacksnake whip, the Mexican bit, or the barbarous docking because it ministers to the ill-temper, the vanity and selfishness of his severe highness. He rebukes and crushes his wife or his child in the same spirit because they are not careful of his comfort. A man who would be cruel to animals is dangerous to his family; he is a menace to the community in which he lives.

"Animals are helpers and friends of man, and as such deserve kindness. To accept indispensable services from the horse, invaluable food from the cow, clothing from the sheep, and inestimable service from the birds, while refusing to protect them from the neglect and abuse of the ignorant, cruel, and avaricious, is not only shameful ingratitude, but repudiation of the cardinal principles of Christianity—justice, mercy and truth.

"Why not ask of yourself when you consider these dumb servants of yours, How would you like the treatment you accord to them? How would you like starvation? How would you enjoy a kick from one stronger than yourself? How would you like the lashing you gave your horse or your child yesterday? How would you like to be vivisected and left for days bleeding, bound and dying? How would you like to be a victim of the barbarism and injustice and insane temper which you mete out to this weaker and voiceless fellow-creature? Put yourself in his place.

"Our humane societies are to teach those who have not learned that the principles of righteousness and justice, of charity and mercy, are to govern here as in all the relations of life. But is there need of such teaching in this advanced age of enlightened and Christian civilization? Read the Washington society's report. Five hundred and sixty-one cases of cruelty to children and more than 3,000 cases of cruelty to animals! We are learning. A little while ago we retired a horse on a pension in this city. Bird day is kept by millions of children in the land, and bands of mercy in our city schools have over 20,000 members. President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, asked that special provision be made for cavalry and artillery horses "worn out in the long performance of duty," and Congress passed a law against docking the tails of horses. Great states like Massachusetts have prohibited by law the sale of dead birds

MADE RIGHT

It Won the Banker.

"At the age of seventeen I was thrown on my own resources," writes the cashier of a Western bank, "and being low in finances I lived at a cheap boarding house where they served black coffee three times a day.

"At first my very nature rebelled, but I soon became accustomed to it, and after a while thought I could not get along without it.

"I worked hard during each school term (I was attending college) and taught country school between times.

"At the end of three years I had finished my course—my nerves, too, and I went back to the farm to rest up. This did me some good, but I kept on drinking coffee, not realizing that it caused my trouble, and later accepted a position in a bank.

"About this time I was married, and my acquaintances called me 'Slim.' On the advice of a friend, my wife began to serve Postum, and she made it right from the start (boiled it fifteen minutes after boiling actually starts). I liked it and have used it exclusively for three years. I am no longer dubbed slim, my weight has increased 60 pounds and I have nerves to stand any strain without a flinch. And I have increased my salary and shares of bank stock. I can work 15 hours a day, sleep soundly and get up feeling like a healthy boy." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

for millinery purposes, and there is some indication that lovely woman will stop the slaughter of sea swallows and bobolinks to gratify her vanity.

"We may not feel that Tray and Towser, Beauty and Blossom, Bucephalus and Traveler have immortal souls, but we are learning that creatures with souls can not treat with cruelty their weaker fellow-creatures without disgrace and injury to themselves; that we should walk carefully among all creatures that can see and hear and feel and love and think and die; that dumb animals have rights which those with the divine gift of speech must be ready to recognize."

Our Co-Operative Work

By J. H. O. Smith

In the early days of our missionary work very few churches could be enlisted, and individuals assembled in voluntary mass conventions, pledged their money and selected men to administer the funds. Most of our people at that time were not only indifferent but hostile to any general organization, the fear of ecclesiasticism overshadowing the desire for the systematic extension of the kingdom. The American Christian Missionary Society, realizing the need of a better method of administering our co-operative work, has invited a discussion of this very important and urgent problem.

What I have to say is not intended as a reflection upon the men who are charged with the responsibility of conducting our general enterprises, for I believe they have done about all that could be done under the present system. For twenty years I have thought that our work should be placed upon a spiritual, scriptural and business basis, and not upon a basis of money. The solution seems simple. In the New Testament church each congregation is a unit and must be represented in any organization which will receive the unanimous and hearty support of those who are intelligently striving to restore New Testament Christianity.

At present our conventions are representative only of those who attend, the attendance being determined by the locality in which the convention is held and assembled by inspirational methods. We are all familiar with representative assemblies. The political parties could not be induced to submit to such a method as ours. The initiative and referendum belongs to the churches. They make the contributions, the work is theirs and they would give more and do more if the whole responsibility was laid upon them.

Twenty years ago, as corresponding secretary and state evangelist of Indiana, I made a careful study of this problem and though I was then young, the convictions formed have been strengthened with subsequent experience and observation. I found the society in debt and the third year, after inaugurating what I have always believed was a scriptural plan, we raised $55,000 through the district organizations, grouped churches and assisted in locating preachers, had sixteen evangelists at work with over 3,000 conversions, organized churches and built houses and by wise council adjusted troubles in local congregations. I did not do this work, no one man could. I secured some one in the district to visit all the churches, to present the needs and ask the brethren if they were willing to co-operate with their brethren in the district and state. If they voted in the affirmative, as they did, they were asked to elect one of their best representatives to act with those elected from other churches on the district board. Pledges were taken. When the canvass was completed these representatives were called together and they organized for work. The action of this board was accepted by the churches as binding as is the transaction of a church board and for the same reason. We began with the churches and organized up instead of beginning with the secretary and organizing down. Many of the so-called anti-missionary churches joined us. The next year after my retirement, the state board doubled the districts in size, virtually asked the districts to disband, and asked the churches to send all contributions to the state board. Of course the money was not sent. If we trust the people they will trust us.

Any live secretary, after experience in the state, knows more than any one else about the needs of the field, but he does not know more than all others. All the brethren are wiser than any one of the brethren.

The state secretaries are opposing merging the state organizations into the American Christian Missionary Society on the ground that it would weaken the state and would not strengthen the general society. So merging the district work into the state work has practically eliminated the districts and the state work is struggling to exist. Our splendid state secretary in Indiana has for several years been showing up and down the state the picture of an eagle, the right wing representing foreign missions, and the left wing American missions, while the tail represented state missions. In the picture shown the tail feathers are pretty well all gone and the eagle practically bobtailed. Now the churches represent the eagle and when nature has its way there will be feathers enough to go all round.

There is as much scriptural authority for 3,000 or 3,000,000 people co-operating for the spread of the gospel and conserving the interests of the kingdom as there is for 300.

The Baptist held their first representative national convention in this city recently, having always transacted business upon the plan we have. They made it plain that the convention had no jurisdiction over the faith or practice of the churches and was simply a co-operation of the churches for missionary enterprise.

There would be no more danger of an ecclesiasticism with the churches represented in our assemblies than there is of a monarchy in America. Indeed the danger lies in the concentration rather than the distribution of power. I have not space to give the details of the organization. The brethren will work out the details when they have the opportunity. The state board could be elected by the districts, each district having a representative, the general board could be elected by the states and one board could transact all the business. The time has fully come to put our work on a scriptural and business basis. At present the pyramid is standing on the apex.

Oklahoma City.

[We agree with the writer of the foregoing that the time has come when our co-operative work should be based on the local churches co-operating, rather than upon individual members, which seemed to be a necessity at first. In our state conventions, at least, each local church that believes in co-operation and does what it can, should be entitled to representation in the convention which is held in the interest of that work. In national conventions, the same principle holds good, but a direct representation of all the churches would probably make too large a congregation to be serviceable or practical. Here the representation might be through the appointment of delegates by state conventions, and as these conventions represent all the co-operating churches, so the delegates appointed by them would be representative of the churches in that state.

We agree with Brother Smith, too, that the Baptists have done wisely in forming a national convention of Baptists that represents the entire body, to which the various missionary organizations report as parts of one common cause. This is the end toward which we are moving, and the sooner we arrive there, the better it will be for our co-operative work.—Editor.]

Centennial Bible Schools

CENTENNIAL AIM: All the Church and as many more in the Bible School.

Impossible as this goal appears, it had been left far behind by the church at Bolenge, Africa, before the aim was announced. Shortly afterward the Tabernacle Church, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., where W. C. Bower ministers, reported that it had reached the aim. In this apostolic church it is taken, as a matter of course, that one who comes into the church will want to be in the school of the church, and so immediately after baptism he is enrolled in the proper department. At the same time he makes a subscription to the current expenses of the church and receives his bunch of weekly envelopes.

In the course of last year's journeys I discovered that Bellefontaine, Ohio, and Santa Clara, Cal., were up to the mark, and recently, at the New York state convention, it developed that the Rowland Street Church, Syracuse, and the Third Church, Brooklyn, have reached it. Alexandria, Ind., passed it last winter, with 600 in the school, while the church numbers only 251. Then came the Fourth Church, Akron, O., and Cameron, W. Va.

Probably there are many others in the brotherhood that have not reported. We should like to have information at once regarding all such. We know of a number that are nearly up to the standard in spite of their large church membership. It is much easier for the young churches whose members have not become confirmed in indifference to the church's teaching service.

In its simplest terms, the aim is to make the Bible school roll twice as large as the church roll. The home department and cradle roll may be counted. Earnest and persistent effort should be made to enlist every church member, and to send him after some one else. It is astonishing how easy this apparently impossible task can be accomplished when we begin to work definitely for it with intelligence, enthusiasm and perseverance.

A great many of our schools should reach this aim before we come up to Pittsburg next year. Some of those that are near by will attend in a body as a living exhibit in the great celebration.

W. R. Warren, Centennial Sec.

Pittsburg, Pa.

Our Budget

—Some time ago floods
—and complaints.

—But now—

How beautiful is the rain!
After the dust and heat,
In the broad and fiery street,
How beautiful is the rain!

—Are you planning to go to school or send some one to get an education? Write for the catalogs of our colleges. These will give you fuller information than the advertisements.

—The religious paper ought to be a matter of interest to its readers. If it has any reason for existing this is to serve God's cause. You may contribute to the success. Read our leading editorial and if you have any suggestions we will be glad to hear them.

❖ ❖ ❖

—There is a growth at Plainville, Kan., under Clifton E. Rash.

—Jasper Bogue goes from Des Moines to Grand Junction, Colo.

—The excavation for the church at Bethany, Neb., has been finished.

—William Irelan, after several weeks' illness, is able to be out again.

—A minister will be wanted for half time at Indianapolis, Ia., after September 1.

—We regret to learn that A. R. Moore, of Birmingham, Ala., has been quite ill.

—We regret to learn that W. B. Berry, of the "Pacific Christian," has been ill.

—Robert Lyle Finch has taken charge of the work at 9th and Shaw Streets, Des Moines, Ia.

—B. S. Denny is to dedicate a church at West Side, Council Bluffs this month, and later at Ira, Ia.

—W. P. Bently gives a splendid report of the work and prospects of our California Oriental Mission.

—The church at Irving Park, Chicago, will celebrate its anniversary in September with special services.

—Late word from DeForest Austin indicates that his condition is very serious, dropsy having set in.

—C. C. S. Rush, of Canton, Mo., has accepted work with the Wythe (Warsaw), and La Crosse, Ill., churches.

—Dean A. M. Haggard, of the Bible College, Drake University, is spending his summer in the mountains.

—A. J. Bush is on a vacation. He will visit some of his children and enjoy the bathing at Corpus Christi.

—H. O. Breeden recently held an excellent meeting of eight days at Creston, Iowa, which resulted in 44 additions.

—Our Mexican Mission has entered upon a campaign for the re-establishment of our work in San Antonio, Tex.

—Prof. H. T. Sutton has moved to Eugene, Oreg., and will be a lecturer in the Divinity School there next year.

—C. G. Stout has been enjoying a visit to his home at Des Moines, after an evangelistic tour lasting many weeks.

—E. S. Bledsoe has resigned at Italy, Texas, which needs a preacher, and has entered upon the work at Big Springs.

—The brethren at Mackinaw, Ill., are building a handsome church home which is to be completed in the early autumn.

—E. Everett Hollingworth has given up his work at Conyers, Ga. We believe he has not yet decided upon his future plans.

—The church at What Cheer, Ia., has unanimously decided to have A. F. Van Slyke for full time after September 1. An addition to the church building is contemplated.

—I. H. Teel reports that every congregation of Disciples in his portion of California seems to be making steady progress.

—F. M. Rains dedicated the Third Church at Louisville, Ky., July 5, and the new building at Paragould, Ark., last Lord's day.

—Graham McMurray has associated with him Elmore Lucey for some special evangelistic work, while Roland A. Nichols is resting.

—A beautiful house of worship is to be dedicated some time in September at Paonia, Col., where J. K. Hester is doing a fine work.

—J. C. Howell has resigned at Thayer to take effect July 26. Brother and Sister Howell will make Hartshorn, Okla., their future home.

—As a result of a good meeting held at Tallassee, Ala., it is expected that there will have to be an enlargement of the church house.

—A training class has been organized at Pontiac, Ill., with over 50 members. All departments are prospering there under Allen T. Shaw.

—Improvements are being made on the church at Russell, Ia., and a meeting is planned for the fall. A. F. de Gafferelly is the minister.

—Perry J. Rice, of Minneapolis, is to occupy the pulpit of the University Church, Des Moines, during Brother Medbury's visit to the Coast.

Ranold McDonald is now at his former home, Athens, Tex., for a brief rest, after which he will be open to a call. He recently resigned work at Kaufman after two years of successful service.

—On the motion of P. J. Macfarlane, the Disciples' Ministerial Association of greater San Francisco expressed its appreciation of Herbert Yeuell's work.

—Milligan Earnest believes that at no distant day we will have a good modern church-building and a strong membership at North Birmingham, Ala.

—The work at Montgomery, Ala., gives S. P. Spiegel reason to feel that there is a great future for us in the capital city. At present we have only 22 members.

—Our little band at Fuente, Mex., is busily engaged in building their new house. From the pastor down to the children, all are taking part in the work.

—The church at Marysville, Cal., has found it necessary to enlarge its house of worship. It is no less a difficult field than others, but Brother Rhodes is succeeding.

—There is a union out-of-door evening service at Wellsville, O. Homer E. Sala, minister of the Christian church, preached the first sermon to about a thousand people.

—We received the program of the dedicatory service of the First Christian Church at Paragould, Ark. The date was July 12. F. M. Rains was leader on this occasion.

—Our American congregation at Monterey, Mex., has inaugurated Sunday night meetings, the first time it has ever been tried. The attendance has been beyond expectations.

—D. A. Russell, the corresponding secretary for Northern California, is supplying for the Tenth Avenue Christian Church, San Francisco, until a regular minister takes this work.

—All departments of the work seem to be thriving at Hollister, Cal., where Herbert F. Jones is glad to recognize the good work in building up the congregation done by Brother Meeker.

—News reaches us of the marriage of Walter M. Jordan to Mrs. Jeannie E. Coe, at Billings, Mont., on June 13. They are to be at home there after August 1. Our congratulations!

—Adam Byerly, lately ordained to our ministry, preached for Rochester Irwin's congregation at Washburn, Ill. L. B. Pickerill, of De Land, occupied the pulpit on the following Sunday.

—Harvey H. Harmon, of the First Christian Church, Lincoln, Neb., has been asked by the Centennial campaign committee to deliver an address on "Evangelism" at the New Orleans Convention.

—There is only one Christian church in the great state of Utah. This is at Salt Lake City, and is under the care of Dr. Albert Buxton. Ogden, with 35,000 people, has no Christian church.

—F. A. Ross has been called to serve the congregation at Elkton, Ore., for half time. This will be his first pastorate, but E. C. Wigmore believes that he will have a very successful ministry.

—The State Convention of Iowa, following the suggestion of the Missouri Board, recommended that all of the conventions—county, district, and state—next year partake of the centennial features.

—At Craig, Neb., G. H. Schleh has been unanimously called for another year. There were about 25 additions by baptism, and a few by letter. The church will strive to support all our co-operative work.

—Our congregation of 40 members at San Luisito, Mex., has purchased property for a church. This is the first time property has been bought for religious purposes in this town for any evangelical body.

—The church at San Jose, Cal., was ready to break ground, and probably now has, for the new building. M. W. Harkins leads the brethren there. This church was one of those seriously injured by the earthquake.

—We are glad to learn that M. M. Davis is slowly recovering from his serious illness and it is hoped that he may be removed North, to a cooler climate before long, in order to facilitate his restoration to health.

—The Centennial Class at Wellsville, O., of which H. E. Sala is the teacher, gave him recently a happy surprise, some hundred of the members going to the parsonage, bringing with them a handsome writing desk. Of course, there were refreshments.

—Chas. G. Stout hopes to see at least 100 young men in the ministry and 100 young women in the foreign field as the contribution of his life to the Lord's cause. Since the last convention, 15 young people have openly committed themselves in this way under his ministry.

—J. O. Shelburne, the evangelist, of Toledo, O., recently visited his cousin, Cephas, and preached for the East Dallas church in the evening and for M. M. Davis' congregation in the morning. Brother Shelburne is now engaged in a meeting at Fort Dodge, Ia.

—We regret to learn of the death of Andrew M. Sweany, who was formerly a minister of the Gospel in Nebraska. He died at his home in Eugene, Oreg.

—J. P. Childs stopped off on his eastern evangelistic trip to minister to the people at Primghar, Ia., where there is at present no pastor. He will return about the middle of the month to Hepler, Kan., and his work at Farlington Church. J. H. Reeves has been supplying for him during his absence. A new bell has recently been installed there through the efforts of the ladies of the church.

—The Indiana state convention meets at Bethany Park, near Indianapolis, July 20-26.

—The churches in Fulton county, Ohio, expect to combine their offerings and be able to become a living link in the Foreign Society. They hope to support W. B. Alexander in India.

—During the last five years J. M. Monroe, of Oklahoma City, has dedicated 99 churches in Oklahoma. Four of these—Bison, Tuttle, Kremlin and Dewey—have been dedicated within the last few weeks.

—George T. Smith has taken the temporary pastorate of the Fourth Christian Church, Vermilion Heights, Danville, Ill. He will be located there until September, when he opens the Pastors' College, at Champaign, Ill.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first seven days of July amounted to $11,875, a gain over the corresponding time last year of $3,989. There was also a gain of thirty-one contributing churches and 161 Sunday-schools.

—Dr. S. T. Willis, of the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street Church, New York, recently underwent a surgical operation for throat trouble. While he is rapidly recovering from its effects, physicians warn him against preaching until the autumn.

—F. S. White sees good work under his administration at Platte Valley, Neb. On Children's Day $60 was given for missions. Since March 1 a good parsonage has been erected. The Bible school is in a healthy condition and there have been regular additions to the church.

—I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., will accept the invitation to address the National Baptist Congress, which is to be held in Chicago November 10-12, upon the subject of what definite steps should be taken toward the union of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ.

—John T. Stivers is taking a few months' rest from the exacting work of an evangelist. His meeting at Santa Paula, Cal., resulted in 34 additions, 21 of whom were baptized. Brother Stivers has purchased a beautiful home in Los Angeles, and will make that his permanent address.

—Good work is being done at Elliott, Ia., where J. Edward Cressmer is minister. The semi-annual missionary offering amounted to $150. The Bible school is well organized, the Endeavor Society enthusiastic and plans for a revival in September, under the leadership of W. S. Johnson, are being carefully made.

—During July and August the Portland Avenue Christian Church and the Central Baptist Church of Minneapolis, Minn., are uniting in services while the two pastors are away. The cause of union between the two bodies in this state has moved forward a step by resolutions adopted looking toward closer co-operation.

—W. S. Johnson, evangelist under the Iowa State Board, reports the work at Estherville moving along well. The church there, he says, wants to employ a regular minister, beginning August 16, or soon thereafter. It is a good field for a good man. The stipend is about $800 per year. Send recommendations and applications to Brother Johnson.

—W. A. Baldwin, corresponding secretary of the Nebraska Missionary Society, was commended highly in a resolution passed by the Ninth District Convention at Norfolk, Neb. The same convention rejoiced in the erection of the house of God, in which they met, and expressed appreciation of the heroic efforts of Brother Stine, the devout pastor, and his self-denying flock.

—W. B. Alexander, of the East Side Church, Toledo, Ohio, will go out to India in September, as a missionary of the Foreign Society, instead of to China, as was announced. The imperative need in India at this time, on account of the death of E. M. Gordon, seems to make this step necessary.

—A large part of the $50,000 pledged a year ago by Mr. Robert Stockton, for a new building for the Christian Orphans' Home, St. Louis, has been paid to the contractors. The building is fast approaching completion, and altogether the cost will be about $100,000. It ought to be the pride of the whole brotherhood.

—Walter Mansel's work at the Fourth Avenue Church, Columbus, O., goes along well. The best year's work of the men's club was recently closed. Additions are frequent. There were 532 in the Bible school on children's day. An orchestra of twelve pieces plays at the evening service during the summer. Brother Mansell has been in demand for special addresses.

—We present herewith the likeness of F. A. Sword, one of our excellent young evangelists, located at Polo, Ill., who is working on the living-link plan, being partially supported by Daniel Berkey, of New Bedford. He is privileged to go anywhere, but when congregations are able, they are expected to pay him full salary. His time is taken until January 1909, but he will be glad to make dates for meetings in the new year. Brother Sword has had marked success, and is a young man of lovable character and clean life.

—M. J. Grable has announced his resignation of the work at Steubenville, O., to take effect October 1. He has been there three years, and had good records of seven years with the church at Salem and eight years with the church at Durham Avenue, Cleveland, before going to Steubenville. We believe Brother Grable has no definite plans, as yet, about his future work, so that there may be an opportunity for some church to secure his services.

—Dr. H. H. Guy paid a visit to his living link church, the Central, at Des Moines, Ia., recently. Brother and Sister Guy went out to Japan as the representatives of this church, we believe, in 1893, and for fifteen years have labored faithfully. It was a source of deep regret that Sister Guy could not be present with her husband on the occasion of this visit. It is hoped that she will shortly be restored to health and that they may be permitted to go to their chosen field again.

—"Other Bells than School Bells" was a rather unique title of an address given by Howard T. Cree, of the First Church, Augusta, Ga., in the Opera House of that city on the occasion of the commencement exercises of the Tubman High School, so named in honor of Mrs. Emily H. Tubman, a prominent member of our church, who gave the property. The address was published in full in the papers of the city, and widely commended for the uniqueness of its theme, the manner of its treatment, and the strength of its delivery.

—The corner stone of a granite church-building was laid at Marble Falls in the middle of June. Rapid work has been done on the church. It will be the only granite church building in Texas. The movement to permanently establish a congregation here began on June 6, 1906, when D. H. Walsh began preaching, using the Methodist church, which was at the disposal of the few of our brethren. He has continued to give some of his time to the little band, which were greatly helped by two meetings held by Spicer and Douthit.

—In a letter from Brother and Sister L. C. Stow, of the S. L. W. ranch, Greeley, Colo., referring to their new church building, they say: "Some one has sent you notice of the dedication services of our little church, but they haven't told you how happy we all are and how many sacrifices the dear people have made to present it free from debt." They also send the sermon preached by Bro. J. E. Lynn, of Warren, Ohio, on the occasion, which we hope later to be able to publish.

—E. T. McFarland has been longer resident in St. Louis than any of the brethren now holding pastorates here. On July 5 he began his tenth year with the Fourth Church. During his nine years of ministry there have been 820 accessions, and 210 in Brother McFarland's evangelistic meetings elsewhere. Four young men from the congregation have given themselves to the public ministry of the Gospel, and one young woman has gone to the foreign field, as a living link of the church, under the direction of the C. W. B. M. This is by no means an even well-to-do congregation, yet it has contributed over $6,000 to our various missionary and benevolent enterprises. As Brother McFarland says, "the devotion, loyalty and appreciation of this splendid people are to be commended. They go forward with favorable prospects." There were two confessions on this anniversary occasion. On the following Tuesday evening there was a gathering of the membership to make recognition of this event, and the appreciation in which Brother and Sister McFarland are held.

—About five months ago J. P. Rowlison accepted the pastorate at North Vernon, Ind., and at once began urging the remodeling and beautifying of the building. As a result of this agitation, handsome opera chairs and art glass windows have been installed. The vestibule, with its pillars, has given place to a Colonial porch, approached by a broad flight of steps. Instead of stoves, furnace heat is to be used. The new building has just been rededicated—the pastor preaching to a rejoicing congregation, while there was a union service at night, participated in by the different Protestant churches of the city and their pastors. Dr. D. R. Saunders, the church clerk, writes: "It seems to us that a brighter day is dawning for the work here. If we can succeed in meeting our obligations to the pastor, all will be well. The congregation is poor and is being taxed to the utmost and we may have to solicit outside help to succeed."

The New Hope
Is the Best Remedy for the Drug and Liquor habits
HOME TREATMENT can be administered
J. H. GARRISON, President
Correspondence invited. Address New Hope Treatment Co., 2712 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.

—Among the speakers at the Nebraska State Convention, which meets August 21-31, will be Marion Stevenson, of the Christian Publishing Company, who is to give three morning institutes and two special addresses; H. A. Denton, who will have charge of "methods" and will deliver two addresses on C. E. work; H. O. Pritchard, a talented young preacher, who has recently taken charge of the University Church at Bethany; Oliver W. Stewart, a national figure in temperance and reform work; and C. C. Smith, a specialist in the work among negroes.

—There is a prospect that two of our churches in Ft. Worth, which have been almost within a stone's throw of each other, will have a different spirit in the future and a different sphere of work. Just how it came to pass that their buildings are so close together, we do not recall, but probably it was some church misunderstanding or uncharitable spirit in the past that ought not to continue to exist. Soon after J. J. Morgan went to Ft. Worth some union meetings were held, and now, under him and Edward M. Waites there is a prospect that the property of the Tabernacle Church will be sold and a new and handsome house erected for that congregation in another part of the city.

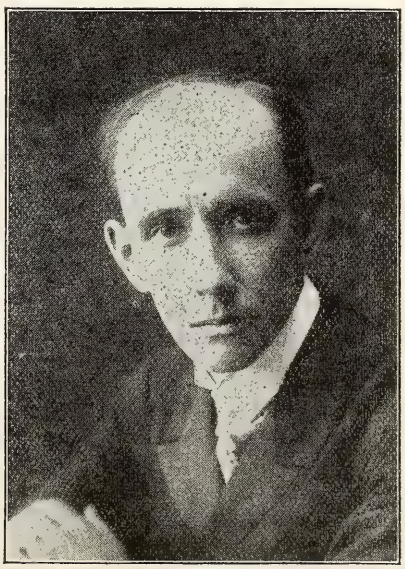
—The Las Vegas (N. M.) "Daily Optic" contains a highly eulogistic editorial on the retiring president of the Normal University in that city, W. E. Garrison, and members of the board of regents have published the following statement: "It is with profound regret that we accept the resignation of Dr. W. E. Garrison. He has been everything that was desirable as president of Normal university, and as a progressive and respected citizen of Las Vegas. We know we will never be able to obtain a better or more satisfactory president for the institution, but we would not presume to stand in the way of Dr. Garrison when he has opportunity to accept a better position."

—We have received two of the college annuals. "Kodak for 1900," tells us a great deal about Bethany, W. Va., and our oldest college, which is located there. One of the first illustrations will appeal to all those who can sing about the "Banks of the Buffalo," for its subject is "On Biz." The book is abundantly illustrated. In addition to pictures of the faculty, there are good likenesses of some of Bethany's representative alumni, besides the student body. It may be of interest also to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to know that there are some excellent views, some of which were especially made for our columns, but which print very much better on the glazed paper of the "Kodak." The picture of Mr. Campbell, which appeared on our front page last week, is included in this "Kodak." The price of the annual is $1.50, and it may be secured from the College Book Store, Bethany, W. Va. The other annual is "The Crimson," which is by the Senior Class of Kentucky University and the College of the Bible. It is a little larger than the "Kodak," but is of the same character. Those collecting photographs or drawings of our distinguished men, ought to be sure to include a caricature of President McGarvey and Prof. Loos, which adorns one of the pages of "The Crimson."

—We have received official confirmation of the announcement made in our last week's issue of the election of R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., to the presidency of Transylvania University, at Lexington. Brother Crossfield is at present in a meeting at Princeton, Ky. He has had great success in his occasional evangelistic efforts outside of his own church work. He feels much encouraged over the favorable prospects of a large student body at the university this autumn. We believe that this preacher, so widely and favorably known throughout the state and the brotherhood, with his evident gift of organization, will do much for the university, which has now reassumed its historic name. A word of commendation ought not to be omitted for the excellent work done by Dr. McCartney, who has been acting-president since the resignation of President Jenkins.

R. H. Crossfield, the new President of Transylvania University.

—The historic First Church, of St. Louis, is to have a new pastor, who will enter upon his work some time in September. Since the resignation of John L. Brandt, who is devoting his energies to the evangelistic field, the question of a man to take charge of this field has given the officers much thought. The situation is a peculiar one, and many a man who would make a great success in some other city church might fail in this field; but after much consideration the choice of the officers and congregation fell upon Earle Wilfley, who, for five years, has been pastor of one of the largest congregations in Indiana—that at Crawfordsville. When the call came to him it was a matter of difficulty for the preacher to decide. His own congregation made every inducement to retain him, but after careful deliberation, recognizing the greatness and the peculiar needs of the St. Louis field, Brother Wilfley felt that he could not decline to give to it his earnest and energetic support. Brother Wilfley is a graduate of Bethany College, of the class of '94. He has had a broad education, traveled extensively, and has had a thorough platform training for popular work. He has spoken four times in three years at the famous Y. M. C. A. at English's Opera House, Indianapolis, and he has not been able to meet all the demands for his lectures. Crawfordsville, where the net membership of our church has been increased more than 50 per cent, and the Bible school more than doubled during his ministry, is a college town. The debt of over $7,000 which he found has been entirely covered, and his regular audiences have been double those of any other in the city. We shall welcome Brother Wilfley to this great city. None is more in need of the simple message of Jesus Christ, which he can deliver so forcefully.



Earle Wilfley, who has Accepted a Call to The First Christian Church, St. Louis.

—As announced in our last issue, L. E. Sellers has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Central Christian Church at Terre Haute, Ind., to take effect September 1. Brother Sellers made this announcement at the close of a most impressive sermon, and to the great regret of his congregation. It is his growing conviction that evangelism is the chief business of the church and her ministry that has caused this decision. Brother Sellers has done some fine work in this field and it has become a passion with him. He believes it is a divine call, and he has already made arrangements for meetings from September to March, in response to calls that came to him before he made the announcement of leaving the pastorate for the general field. With his family, he has taken a vacation trip to Colorado, stopping at Emporia, Kans., a former pastorate. He will resume his pastoral work during August, after which he will remove his family to Indianapolis which is central to the fields in which he will work. He has associated with him, as a song leader, Le Roy St. John. At the beginning of Brother Sellers' pastorate in Terre Haute, the church had a membership of about 500. During his nine years with them, more than 1,300 members have been received, while the present enrollment is about 1,200. His church has one of the largest Sunday-schools in the city and is systematically graded in its work. The church has developed a strong missionary spirit and has maintained Alexander Paul in Central China, in addition to contributing to other benevolent and missionary enterprises. One other undertaking ought to be noted. It is a regret of Brother Sellers' that he leaves the field before the completion of a new building. Within the last few weeks a committee has been appointed to procure final plans, and it is the intention of the building committee to complete the work as rapidly as possible. At a recent meeting of the officers, a letter was signed by 25 of these, certifying in strong terms the esteem in which Brother Sellers is held.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
CHURCH GOODS
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis

Send for our Catalogue.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

—J. W. Ellis is the pastor of the Christian Church at Bentonville, Ark., where he entered upon the work November 1, 1906. The brethren were then and had been for some time before in a migratory state—that is, they had sold their old frame structure, had bought one of the most desirable lots in the city, and the new building, now the pride and ornament of Bentonville, was already in process of erection. It is the finest church in the city, with the largest auditorium. When all had been done, it seemed, that could be done, there was a debt of $4,000! Of this amount $3,000 had been borrowed from the Extension Board, yet from a confused and wandering flock, discouraged, but yet true to the Gospel, the membership to-day is nearly two hundred strong, harmoniously united, earnestly contending for the one faith with no ill will towards others, but with love towards all. A more devoted, royal, loyal membership it would be hard to find. Dr. Ellis is the father of J. Breckenridge Ellis, our regular contributor, who lives with his father.

Dr. Dye's Campaign.

Dr. Dye's visit among our churches is awakening an interest in the world's evangelization without a parallel in the history of our people. He is a voice of a John the Baptist. Men and churches, and, indeed, whole communities, are being aroused that were never before touched with the thrilling story of the gospel's beneficent power over pagan lives. The mighty deeds being done at Bolenge, Africa, is the history of the Acts of the Apostles repeated again. The conquests of Uganda and of Burmah and of the Fijis are paralleled in the marvelous history being made by our missionaries on the Upper Congo.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye are now on the Pacific Coast. They are visiting the churches and conventions in Idaho, Washington, Oregon and California. Wherever they go, the reports are the same. New converts are being made to the mission cause, indifferent churches and preachers are being born to a new and larger life, and the most interested are made to feel a fresh and larger interest. New living link churches are being made, a large number of volunteers have been enlisted, and a spirit of liberality quickened that has never before been witnessed in all that region. For example, we have just received, at the office of the Foreign Society, a telegram from Eugene, Oregon, announcing gifts aggregating $15,000 for a mission steamer on the Upper Congo. This is a vital need. We had not dared to hope for such gifts for this purpose at this time. But our poor faith has been rebuked by the vision and liberality of our brethren in Oregon. We are thrilled with joy over the news.

The simple and artless story of Dr. Dye wins all hearts. Free from cant, free from even a suggestion of egotism, free from pietism, the straightforward recital of the simple facts of what has been done in the field to which he has consecrated his life sounds like the victories of the gospel in the first century. His great speeches remind one of the early labors of Robert Moffat in Africa.

Wherever Dr. Dye goes they want him to return, and the calls for his visits are far beyond his time and strength to meet.

When he returns to Bolenge he will carry with him the prayers and best wishes and material support of thousands of new friends.

F. M. Rains,
S. J. Corey,
Secretaries.

Inland Empire Notes.

Good reports continue to come in from Inland Empire day. Many of the societies report that it was a great day in the history of their missionary forces.

From reports sent in, we find that just at the time of the meeting a storm broke on a great many of the societies in Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska. The indications are that there was a general rainstorm over those states on the night of June 28. Some societies reported a decreased offering on account of it, some reported a deferred offering, and, in some instances, no offering at all. Let all societies, that were in any way put out by the bad weather, plan to overcome the difficulties by appointing a committee to raise an additional sum, or by observing the day at some other time, say the last Sunday in July, which is a place for another home missionary topic.

A good many societies pledged to observe the day, and ordered supplies, but they have for some reason or other delayed to report results. The department is anxious to have reports from all societies, so gather up the fragments, report the offering and send in the results just as soon as possible.

All societies that have contributed $10 or over will receive a Centennial Certificate. These certificates are to be signed by the president of the board, the corresponding secretary, the field secretary and the Centennial secretary. The corresponding secretary has been out of the office for some time, and we have to await his return for his signature, but the certificates will be sent out some time during July. When your certificate comes, show it to the church, as well as to the Endeavor Society, and have it framed and hung in the Endeavor room.

Now is the time to follow up the interest in Inland Empire day and secure the largest possible results. We must work if we reach that $10,000 aim. The societies, so far, have not averaged $10 per society; therefore, we are going to need more than a thousand societies to reach the $10,000 aim. Let us have the loyal support of every Endeavor society.

H. A. Denton.
Supt. Young People's Department, American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

As We Go to Press.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Louisville, Ky., July 13.—Our little 4-year-old son, George Robert, passed into the arms of Jesus this morning at 7:15.—G. W. Nutter.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Princeton, Ky., July 13.—Thirty-nine first week. Record breaking audiences; Sunday-school yesterday largest in its history. Chas. W. Barnes is beloved as minister. This is our second meeting here.—Crossfield and Sturgis.

National C. E. Conference and Rally.

Here is the program for the National Christian Endeavor conference and rally to be held at Bethany Park, Ind., Friday, August 7. Claude E. Hill, Mobile, Ala., national superintendent, is to be chairman and the music will be in charge of W. E. M. Hackleman:

Morning, 9 o'clock—General subject, Christian Endeavor and the local church. Devotional services, led by W. H. Book, Columbus, O. Introductory remarks, Claude E. Hill, national superintendent, Mobile. Address, "The Present Status of the Christian Endeavor Movement," by A. B. Philputt, Indianapolis, Ind., pastor of Central Christian Church and trustee of United Society of Christian Endeavor. "Christian Endeavor as a Training School for Young Christians," by Elmer Ward Cole, Huntington, Ind., pastor of Central Christian Church; "Christian Endeavor as an Evangelizing Force in the Local Church," by O. E. Tomes, state superintendent for Indiana, and pastor of the Inglewood Christian Church; "Christian Endeavor as a Means of Promoting Christian Union," by R. H. Waggoner, Cincinnati, O., formerly national superintendent. Address by John E. Pounds, Hiram, O., formerly national superintendent.

Afternoon, 2 o'clock—General subject—"Christian Endeavor and Christian Missions," J. L. Deming, superintendent for Ohio, presiding. Song and prayer. "Children's Work in Foreign Lands," by Miss Mattie Pounds, national Junior and Intermediate superintendent, Indianapolis, Ind.; "Christian Endeavor and American Missions," by H. A. Denton, secretary of the A. C. M. S., Cincinnati, O.; "Christian Endeavor Named Loan Fund," by George W. Muckley, secretary of the board of church extension, Kansas City, Mo.; "Christian Endeavor and the Foreign Field," by Stephen J. Corey, secretary F. C. M. S., Cincinnati, O.; "Christian Endeavor and the Centennial," by W. R. Warren, centennial secretary, Pittsburg, Pa.

Evening, 7:30 o'clock—Great service of song led by W. E. M. Hackleman; address, Earl Wilfley, Crawfordsville, Ind. Address, "First Place by 1909," by Claude E. Hill, national superintendent, Mobile, Ala.

Ministerial Exchange.

Arthur Stout has open dates for revivals during October and November. Address Artesia, New Mexico.

Joel Brown has open dates after November. May be addressed at Wyocena, Wis., where he is in a meeting.

Charles P. Murphy, of Frederick, Okla., can hold meetings. During the past two years and a half he received into the church 350 members and organized three congregations. He goes for freewill offerings.

The First Christian Church of Los Angeles, Cal., wishes to secure the services of an assistant pastor to begin work about October 1, 1908. A man with a well trained voice who can conduct a high grade quartette and who has had successful experience in Sunday-school work is desired. A capable man who can fill with satisfaction this position will be paid a good salary. Address with particulars the pastor, A. C. Smither, 1500 West Adams street.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

To the Brethren of Missouri.

The Kansas City convention ordered me away from all work and care that I might get well. I am slowly, but I hope surely, gaining strength here by the lakeside. I am able to do almost nothing; barely able to scrawl these few words. Meantime my heart is in Missouri, and I am praying the work of our Bible School Association may not seriously suffer. J. H. Bryan, my son in the ministry and an experienced man, is in leadership of the work till I get back to my post, and I ask for him the same kind co-operation always accorded me.

Let me thank all the dear friends who are writing, and assure them I appreciate their love and sympathy, but I can not answer their letters for lack of strength.

Let all who have made pledges send the first quarter, which was due July 1. It is needed now. Send to me, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, and it will be taken care of. J. H. Hardin, State Supt.

Macatawa, Mich., July 3.

✣ ✣ ✣

Teacher Training at the Twelfth International Sunday-School Convention.

As was to be expected, the subject of Teacher Training received large and earnest attention at the great Louisville convention. The following extracts from the report of W. C. Pearce, International Superintendent of Teacher Training, will be interesting and informing:

At the time of the appointment of the Committee on Education, in August, 1903, twenty-eight associations were doing organized teacher training work. At the present time sixty-one associations have approved Teacher Training Departments according to the standard of the International Association. This means that they have either especially appointed teacher training superintendents, or teacher training committees who supervise this department of work. It also means that the courses of study used have been approved by the Committee on Education, that the examinations are conducted in writing without help, and that their graduates are required to make a grade of at least seventy per cent.

At Denver in 1902—28 Associations reported 1,424 teacher training classes; 13,762 students, and 1,402 graduates.

At Toronto, in 1905—46 Associations reported 2,431 classes; 34,211 students, and 4,157 graduates.

For the Past Triennium—48 Associations report 6,704 classes, 79,086 students, and 10,016 graduates.

At Toronto, Mexico had just begun their teacher training work. They now report 250 students. The West Indies work was not begun until 1906. They now report 196 students. On January 1, 1908, the Trinidad and Tobago Association reported 30 graduates.

Eleven Associations report over 3,000 students each; 6 report between 1,000 and 3,000; 24 report between 100 and 1,000. Fifteen Associations report over 100 and 2 over 1,000 graduates each.

Several denominations are doing teacher training work whose requirements are equal to those of the International Association. Those reporting are Baptist South, Methodist Episcopal South, Presbyterian South, and the United Brethren. As the reports were not made by states and provinces, they could not be included in the regular tables nor shown upon the maps. Their reports are as follows:

	Students.	Graduates.
Baptist South	5,000	500
M. E. South	3,500	600
Presbyterian South	1,901	121
United Brethren	1,590	305
4 Denominations	11,991	1,526
48 Associations	79,086	10,016
Totals	91,077	11,542

Associations in order of the largest number of teacher training students enrolled during this triennium:

Pennsylvania	14,268	Iowa	375
Ohio	8,563	Rhode Island	373
New York	5,571	Washington, East	360
Kansas	5,000	Louisiana	350
Minnesota	4,200	North Dakota	328
Kentucky	4,096	Missouri	322
Indiana	4,000	Arkansas	263
Massachusetts	3,778	Idaho	250
Illinois	3,477	Mexico	250
Ontario	3,250	West Indies	196
Nova Scotia and Bermuda	3,000	Wyoming	165
Nebraska	2,500	Vermont	156
Colorado	2,430	Maine	150
West Virginia	1,820	Tennessee	142
California, South	1,198	Washington, West	127
Manitoba	1,163	Arizona	107
Oklahoma	1,100	Hawaii	90
Michigan	862	District of Columbia	89
Oregon	820	New Hampshire	75
New Bruns., and P. E. Is.	800	South Dakota	60
Delaware	743	Virginia	55
California, North	624	Utah	27
Texas	600	South Carolina	15
New Jersey	461	Total	79,086
Maryland	437

NONE REPORTED.—Alabama, Alaska, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Philippines, Porto Rico, Newfoundland, Alberta British Columbia, East; British Columbia, West; Saskatchewan, Quebec, Wisconsin.

Associations in order of the largest number of teacher training graduates during this triennium:

Pennsylvania	3,476	Colorado	46
Ohio	2,035	New Jersey	40
Indiana	707	New Hampshire	35
Illinois	476	Hawaii	30
Kansas	390	West Indies	30
Minnesota	386	Michigan	30
Kentucky	308	Arkansas	29
Rhode Island	256	Missouri	28
Nebraska	240	North Dakota	26
West Virginia	219	California, North	25
Nova Scotia and Bermuda	215	Maine	25
Iowa	180	Oregon	23
Delaware	146	Virginia	18
New Bruns and P. E. Is.	138	Washington, West	18
California, South	123	Manitoba	17
Maryland	76	South Dakota	15
Ontario	73	Vermont	6
Washington, East	68	New York	5
Oklahoma	58	Total	10,016

NONE REPORTED.—Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Wisconsin, Wyoming, Philippines, Porto Rico, Mexico, Newfoundland, Alberta, British Columbia, East; British Columbia, West; Quebec, Saskatchewan.

The above report is of special interest to us as a Bible school people. During the last ten months, according to published reports from many states, we had enrolled not less than 80,000 teacher training students in our own schools. The report of Mr. Pearce shows 91,077 students enrolled from all denominations up to June 1st, 1908. It is very evident that a very large number of our enrolled students were never reported to the state superintendents of teacher-training. It is to be regretted that the repeated and definite instructions to enroll have not been heeded, so that our strength in this movement might have appeared on the International record. It is now too late to enroll for this past report, but the teacher training report at San Francisco in 1911 should show that we as a people are "in it." Report your class now.

Mr. Pearce's report shows only 11,542 graduates. A glance down the list of states shows that we have very few graduates in some of the states which report our largest enrollment. This can be explained by remembering that many classes have not been at the work long enough to graduate, and their report will appear in the San Francisco report in 1911. But another fact is evident: that very many begin the teacher-training work and do not complete it. Many large classes report a large loss when the class begins the study of the lessons directly concerned with the problems and principles of the Bible school. No pains should be spared to persuade larger numbers to complete the whole course and receive the diploma.

Three things are before us as a people: First, to have a class in connection with every Bible school for the training of teachers; second, the enrollment of the class with the State Superintendent of teacher training; third, the graduation of larger classes. While we have done great things along the teacher training line, the work has just begun. It must continue as long as there are pupils to teach and teachers to train.

✣ ✣ ✣

The President's Letter About Missouri's New Plans for This Year.

Dear Fellow Workers: The Kansas City state convention urged better methods in our Bible schools, emphasizing "teacher training" and the Adult Bible class movement as the present imperative demands. Our religious papers are stressing the same things. Fortunately, in J. H. Hardin, and now J. H. Bryan, we have at our command two of the best equipped men in our brotherhood to give direction to these departments. On account of illness, largely produced by heavy work, the convention granted Brother Hardin a month's rest, and the board called J. H. Bryan, of Iowa, for the summer months to lead the forces and to more thoroughly introduce the Adult Bible class idea. This he is now doing with such efficiency, and meeting with such reception in a few days' time at Kansas City and Sedalia, that the board desires to retain his services for a year. Missouri must keep pace with our sister states. The convention and the board are united in this desire. We now have the men. We come to you for the money, hence this personal letter.

Brother Hardin has sent a card soliciting the pledge of each school, but I feared you would not understand our pressing need. If we retain Brother Bryan's services we must know we have the means, and that within a few weeks. Make your pledge and send in the card to the office at once. Do not delay. The board can do no more than authorized to do. Your liberal pledge at once will help to adjust this matter.

Yours for a great year's work among the children and the church of Missouri in the study of the Word.

A. W. Kokendoffer, Prest.

Sedalia, Mo., July 1, 1908.

✣ ✣ ✣

Watch this page next week for a stirring announcement from Missouri which will make all the other states sit up and take notice. Hardin and Bryan are a great team.

Some Open Air Work.

Growing out of the open air campaign conducted by the Humboldt Street Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., last summer, the evangelical churches of this section (17th ward) have united in a summer's campaign in the open air. Four open air meetings are held each week, three on each Sunday night in different places, and one large mass meeting on each Monday night. This is the first united effort put forth by the churches of this ward and it is proving of great value to the church. The fact of sin is forcing us to forget our differences and emphasize our common faith in Christ as the Saviour of men. The Humboldt Street Church will keep an "open door" through the summer, holding all her regular services. If visiting the city, we shall be glad to have you visit us and give us a helping hand.

The 17th ward is becoming a great manufacturing center of this city. The population is growing, and in the near future we shall equal the congested sections of Manhattan. Here is an opportunity for the Disciples of Christ. Who is willing to make possible a work such a section demands? The Humboldt Street Church, few in members, poor in this world's good, but rich in faith, is doing her best to discharge her obligation to the masses flocking to this section. Has not the Church of Christ in the Central west, rich and strong, some responsibility! Here is a task that challenges your faith. Appeals have been made to our national C. W. B. M., also our A. C. M. S. to come to our help. They answer, "Impossible for lack of funds."

We have, as a church, proved our faith and devotion to the cause of Christ during the past five or six years. By the help of God we fully intend to forge ahead, doing our best to give the Gospel to the people. I am quite sure, however, it is not the will of God, that we be left alone to this task. If you are interested, write.

Three have been added to the church since last report. Jos. Keevil.

704 Humboldt Street.

Baptists and Disciples.

In and around the little town of Wyocena, Wis., there live a few families of Disciples, who are worshiping with the Baptists and Congregational churches of that place. In May I was asked by them and the Baptists to hold a meeting with a view of forming some sort of a working basis. I eagerly accepted the invitation and arrived here July 4 to begin. But in the mean time someone got busy; it is rumored it was the Baptist state secretary. So I was allowed to preach but three sermons, when I was asked to quit. The sermons were "Fruit-bearing," a plea for more consecrated work for God, "Jacob," a character sketch, and "Is there a God and how may we know Him?"—none of them at all doctrinal. But there was on the field a young Englishman educated in the Moody School of Theology, who was so ignorant of us as to state that we practiced foot-washing, and dipped three times in baptism. Such ignorance, together with the circulation of "The Inter-State Christian Herald," of July 4, in which appears an article from the pen of Geo. Sutherland, D.D., of Grand Island, Neb., urging the Baptists to resist the approaches for union on the part of the "Campbellites," are suffficient reasons for the shut-out. An ignorant preacher and a narrow newspaper tell the tale.

In the article referred to by Mr. Sutherland, he states that the Disciples attribute to baptism a "magical effect securing forgiveness." It takes one back to his childhood; such statements were perhaps excusable when there was a scarcity of literature, but to-day, when one may know with such little effort, it is hard to believe that a D. D. would make such a statement in ignorance. It is refreshing to believe that such conditions are not characteristic of the Baptists.

I hired the town hall and am preaching the best I can to an appreciative audience, urging a careful and prayerful study of God's word that we may know his will. I will report the outcome at the close of my stay here. Joel Brown.

Wyocena, Wis.

The International Convention.

Perhaps hundreds and thousands who read this paper are looking forward to that day in October when they shall turn their backs for the time upon the familiar sights and sounds of home, and make real a dream they have long cherished of paying a visit to Louisiana, the land of romance.

Great indeed is the pleasure in store for those fortunate ones who shall journey across this historic state to that "City of Wonders"—New Orleans. Not all the pleasures of the visitor will be found in the great spiritual uplift and the sweet fellowship of the convention: the addresses which we shall hear there; the music of that great chorus a thousand strong; these things will be so indelibly impressed upon our memories that time can never erase them. Yet aside from these things there will be seen and heard by those who come from afar such sights and sounds as they have never dreamed of even in the hours when fancy was most active in picturing unseen delights.

Immediately upon entering the state, you will pass through Lake Charles, one of the prettiest cities in our country. Situated on the lake from which it takes its name, and connected with the Gulf of Mexico by the Calcasieu River, it enjoys commercial relations with the world by water and by rail. Here you will see steamers, sail boats, and innumerable motor boats skimming over the surface of the water, beautiful homes, immense manufacturing plants and every enterprise known to a prosperous city of 18,000 people.

From here the train will bear you through the beautiful "Rice Belt," with its intricate canal system, through the cotton belt with its hordes of singing darkies as they pick the fleecy snow-white product of the plant, through great sugar plantations with their stately mansions, the homes of the planters. You can also see the oil fields, the salt mines, the sulphur mines, the oyster fisheries, each of these industries offering new and strange attractions to interest the visitor.

After seeing all these things and enjoying the forests of pine and cypress, your train will carry you into sight of the "Crescent City"—a city of ancient grandeur and of modern beauty. Here is the city of which such marvelous tales have been told; where one breathes the very air of romance and mystery; where the old portion of the city lives its life in harmony with the traditions of centuries gone, and the newer portion reveals the results of modern energy and enterprise.

Volumes could be written—have been written—describing the wonders of this, the only city of its kind in the world, but to know New Orleans one must see it. Thousands of our brothers and sisters will be there in October, and great will be the rejoicing of the brotherhood in Louisiana. The New Orleans Church is jubilant over the responses which are pouring in, accepting her invitation, and every church in the state is rallying to her support in providing for the success and entertainment of this great convention.

The churches of Louisiana will be there in force, the South will unite in assuring its success, and we feel confident of the co-operation of every section of the country in making this a fit forerunner of "Pittsburg, 1909."

Come, brethren, partake of our hospitality, share with us the wisdom of your experience, and may the associations of this convention bind our hearts closer than ever together in the love of Christ Jesus our Lord. Otis Hawkins, Minister First Christian Church.

Lake Charles, La.

Good Training Work.

We graduated 77 in our teacher training class at Bethany, Neb. We had a special program for the occasion. There was an address on the subject, "The Bible A Library," by the minister of the church, and the diplomas were presented by Prof. W. R. Jackson, the State Superintendent of teacher training. Prof. Jackson in his remarks stated that this was the largest class of graduates in the state of Nebraska.

This work was in charge of J. Z. Briscoe, Mrs. M. E. King and Prof. J. W. Hilton. Mr. Briscoe had the largest class, his graduates numbering 47; of these over 20 made a grade of 100 per cent. Mr. Briscoe is a man of seventy years of age and has taught young people's Bible classes for many years. All of these teachers did most excellent work. Brother Hilton's class was taught during the midweek for those who could not take it on Sunday. Mr. Clyde Cordner, a student of Cotner University, is our efficient superintendent. We hope to have many more graduates next year.

H. O. Pritchard.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

WE HAVE an actual gold mine in operation at Rawhide, Nevada, machinery installed and taking out ore. All Christian men, we need a little more money to secure returns from the smelters; will let you in on the ground floor with us and tre atoyu right. L. W. Klinker, Los Angeles, California.

Church Supplies, Etc.

HAS IT for less. All church and Bible school supplies. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelists and Ministers.

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

D. H. SHANKLIN, evangelist, Normal, Ill., uses stereopticon, charts and furnishes singer if desired.

M. R. SHANKS, of Geary, Oklahoma, after a three-years' pastorate at that place, has resigned for the purpose of entering the evangelistic field. He would be glad to correspond with churches needing meetings. Address him at Geary, Oklahoma.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write Hinners Organ Company, Pekin, Illinois, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

THIRTY-SIX DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS plus 25 1-2 hours a week pays for all the privileges of an up-to-date school. Catalogue free. Address School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Typewriters.

OLIVER TYPEWRITER.—Good as new. Absolutely first-class order. Bargain price. C., care of Christian-Evangelist.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Pomona College Commencement.

Wednesday, June 24, was commencement day at Pomona College—our college.

This is the school which most generously opened wide its gates to the fellowship of the Disciples some two years since. This experiment is proving a most happy experience to both parties. As acquaintance with the men, life and atmosphere of this splendid Christian college develops, the Disciples are gradually awakening to the fact that they have a vital connection with the best college on the coast, a real voice and vote in the management of an educational equipment represented by a plant worth $250,000 and by an endowment of $350,000, a faculty of forty professors and instructors and an attendance of 300 students in collegiate courses.

At the commencement exercises we were happy to note the attendance of as many preachers from among the Disciples as those of the Congregational body. This year the graduating class numbered 48 young men and women. The high quality of work done by the institution was evidenced in the thoughtful addresses delivered by the graduates.

That this college is fulfilling its mission to develop Christian character, and living up to the high ideal expressed in its motto, "Our Tribute to Christian Civilization," is evidenced by the subjects chosen, as well as the spirit in which they were considered by the graduates. They are worthy of mention here: "Citizenship and the Christian College"; "The Debt of the Church to Early Latin Hymns"; "Our Political Duty to Our State"; "The Trend of Evolution"; "Modern Architecture."

On the board of directors the Disciples have five members: C. C. Chapman, F. M. Dowling, John Fleming, W. L. Porterfield and A. C. Smither.

The greatest educational need among all Christian Churches of Southern California is to realize this day of their opportunity. We need to know Pomona College for our own good. It is another case of "Information, Inspiration, Realization."

Grant K. Lewis, Secretary.

Southern California and Arizona.

J. P. Conder, of Oregon, has taken hold of the situation at Tucson with a firm grasp. He reports good audiences and the people greatly encouraged. Having established two other churches in great cities on the coast, he writes that this opportunity is the best he has ever met in his work in the West.——W. T. Adams, our pastor at Corona, saw the fruit of his labors in the dedication of the new building at that place. C. C. Chapman was present and raised $1,100, which enabled the house to be dedicated free from debt. ——Levi McCash, the efficient man at Ontario, recently greatly enlarged our plant there and called upon F. M. Dowling to dedicate the building, June 21.——Charles Reign Scoville and his company of evangelists are, at this writing, beginning a meeting with our Pasadena church. This is said to be the finest building of our brotherhood in the West. Its cost is represented by $80,000. This building will be dedicated at the close of the series of meetings now begun.——John Cronenberger has accepted a call to the church at Santa Ana, and is already busy in the new field. His pulpit recently resigned at Santa Barbara will be supplied during the summer by C. A. Young.——An effort is being made to enlist a number of churches in an evangelistic campaign this coming season under the leadership of George L. Snively. Beginning in Colorado in the fall, and coming through Arizona, he will be ready for meetings in Southern California about the last of November. Write to the secretary for terms and dates.—— Mrs. Princess Long, from the United States, recently paid a hurried visit to her Southern California home. Arrangements are about perfected for her return to the coast for permanent residence. We anticipate her presence for our Long Beach convention.——John T. Stivers, evangelist, who labored most successfully this past year in Southern California, has secured a home in Los Angeles at No. 2728 Kenwood street. This betokens his presence and his work among our churches for a time. He will find plenty to do.——DeForest Austin, until recently of Nebraska, the editor of the state paper, has located in Southern California. His home is at Inglewood, Los Angeles.—— W. H. Hanna, of the Philippines, where for six years he has labored under our foreign board, arrived in Los Angeles last week. He is home on a furlough. Our churches will not let him rest long; we are hungry for the message he will bring us of the victories of the cross following the flag.——J. R. Jolly has resigned his work at Huntington Beach to become assistant pastor of the Sterling Place Church, New York City. He expects to enter Union Theological Seminary. T. L. Young, of Arkansas, has been called to succeed him. ——Remember the date of the Long Beach convention, August 5-16. C. S. Medbury is chief speaker. Royal J. Dye and wife, of Bolenge, Africa, will be present. For information and programs write to Grant K. Lewis, Secretary.

Western Washington Convention.

The fourth annual convention of the Western Washington Christian Missionary Society was held in the First Church, Tacoma, June 18-21. While there has been no evangelist in the field during the past year the convention was up to the usual standard, and the reports of the year's work were excellent.

About 175 regular delegates were in attendance, and in addition to this, we were favored with the presence of W. J. Wright, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Emporia, Kan., and Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye, of Bolenge, Africa. Each spoke, stirring the convention with the great needs in their respective fields of labor.

On account of a change in the date of the convention this year the reports covered a period of only nine months, and taking with this the fact that several of the churches failed to return the blanks sent them, the reports were most gratifying. Sunday-school work, especially, has made great strides forward, and since W. A. Moore, our corresponding secretary, is a splendid Sunday-school man, we may expect great things for the future. The First Church, of which Brother Moore is pastor, only recently won over Seattle, Portland, Spokane and other Western cities, in an exciting attendance contest, the First Church having, on Easter Sunday, an attendance of 1402. There are twelve teacher training classes in Eastern Washington, with an enrollment of 334. Our total Sunday-school enrollment is 4,869, representing a gain of 265 in the nine months. The C. W. B. M. report showed a membership of 609, sixteen auxiliaries, and a total offering of $1,209.32 in nine months.

The total number of Disciples of Christ in Western Washington is 5,286, showing a gain of 653. Since the last convention $21,000 was paid by the churches to ministers on salary, $5,400 for incidentals and collected for state work $406. The total valuation of our property is $225,000.

J. W. Baker, of Neosho, Mo., has been called as state evangelist, to begin September 1.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, U. E. Harmon; first vice-president, T. J. Shuey, Seattle; second vice-president, F. H. Groom, Tacoma; third vice-president, M. L. Rose, North Yakima; recording secretary, J. L. Garvin, Seattle; corresponding secretary, W. A. Moore, Tacoma; superintendent of Sunday-school work, Ralph Sargent, Ellensburg; treasurer, J. T. Eshelman, Tacoma.

U. E. Harmon was also indorsed by the convention as a trustee of the Eugene Divinity School.

Among the important plans for the new year, as outlined by the committee on future work, are: The immediate collection of all outstanding pledges for state work, the taking of new pledges immediately, and co-operation of all the churches with Brother Baker in the work of planting new congregations in this great and promising country. Each congregation is asked to lend its minister for one month to the state board for a mission meeting.

The next convention will be held in Seattle in June, 1909. F. H. Groom, Pastor Central Christian Church, Tacoma.

Texas Convention.

At Thorp Spring, June 9-17, the attendance was not as large as usual, largely owing to the recent floods of rain and washouts on the railways. Farmers were so behind with their work that they must work. In results, spirit and liberality we have never had a better convention. In round numbers $35,000 was raised for state missions last year. This includes the cash raised for state mission work, houses and lots, all by the men employed by the churches co-operating through the state board. Nine hundred and seventy-seven persons confessed Christ. One hundred and twenty-two came from the denominations. Over 2,000 persons were added to our Texas churches by the Texas missionaries.

E. M. Waits, president, set the pace for fine addresses. George L. Bush, A. C. Parker, Dr. Clinton Lockhart, Cephas Shelburne, J. B. Holmes and others followed, giving the convention a rich feast rarely excelled. J. C. Mason, corresponding secretary, delivered an address which the convention ordered published in tract form. Twenty-nine new churches and twenty-two new Bible schools were planted during the year by Texas missionaries. C. G. Brelos, our German evangelist, made a fine impression. The convention ordered that one more German evangelist be employed.

Some twenty of the state missionaries were introduced to the convention and made short talks. They were cordially given the Chautauqua salute. Permanent work and care for the weak churches were keynotes of all reports and this was heartily approved by the convention. A summer campaign was launched with vigor. Already a half dozen evangelistic teams are in the field doing mission work. Six county seats in the great West Texas will have meetings held this summer and fall. Other parts of the state will fare as well. The next convention goes to Corsicana. J. C. Mason was re-elected corresponding secretary and begins his sixth year with the brightest of prospects. In his five years' service he has secured a number of reliable and successful helpers. Fifty thousand dollars for Texas missions is the new year's motto.

J. C. Mason.

BORDENS
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED MILK
Proven the Best for NURSERY & HOUSEHOLD

Georgia.

I spent from June 13-26 at McRae preaching to our young preacherless church in that good town of 2,000 people. I did not go there to hold a "protracted meeting," but to encourage the members and to arrange, if possible, for regular preaching. J. A. Perdue, of Eastman, will preach for them and I am sure will do a fine work for and with that most noble band. I baptized one young lady and had two additions by statement. The people gave me a cordial welcome and my stay with them was quite pleasant.—— I began a meeting at Nashville, the county-seat of Berrien, Sunday, June 28. It is our first effort in this town of 1,500 people. We are holding services in the opera house and our beginning is quite satisfactory. I will report results.—— E. R. Clarkson is now in a meeting at Green Valley, this county. He is laboring under the direction of the state board. ——David Arnold, of Hampton, who has been a student at Drake University for several years and preaching for a church nearby, will spend the summer in Georgia. He can be secured to hold meetings and he is too good in the pulpit to be idle. Keep him busy. Address him Hampton, Ga. E. L. Shelnutt.

Acworth.

The Amarillo Meeting.

The church at Amarillo, Texas, has just enjoyed one of the best meetings in her history, which was conducted by Fife and son, of Kansas City, Mo. Let me make mention of a few facts concerning both the church and of the evangelists:

The church had made great preparation, was united in effort and all were agreed, taking for their motto, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." The church had prayed for the meeting for one whole year and much personal work was done. The church had taken the census of the city, and the pastor knew nearly every man, woman and child before they came into the church. Many of their names were on the pastor's prayer list before the meeting. A large tabernacle was prepared which would seat 1,200 people, and the audiences were large from the very first; sometimes on Sunday nights our ushers would turn people away. The people seemed hungry to hear the word, and they did not complain at the length of the service although the nights were short. The results of the four weeks' campaign were as follows: By confession, 63; by letter, 10; by statement, 55, making a total of 128. Four of this number went to the other churches. The meeting was satisfactory to both pastor and church.

Now, a few words about the evangelists. I do not want to overdraw the picture. I think we do our evangelists harm sometimes by trying to flatter them through the press. Their standard was 1 Cor. 2:1, 2, and that standard was maintained throughout the entire meeting. They never compromised God's word, they were fearless speaking in the name of the Lord Jesus, yet always working in the spirit of Christ. Their method of work is fine. They do not try to burden the church with all the methods, but they have a few simple ones and they are pushed with great vigor. Do a few things and do them well, is their motto. They have a great power over men and succeed admirably in getting men to commit themselves to the Lord and his work. They strive to build up every department of the church; not merely to get "additions," but to put the work on a substantial basis. They seek to build up the pastor in the estimation of his own people, and their work is not only practical but helpful to the pastor after they have gone. Finally, these men conducted themselves as becometh servants of God. We did not have to apologize for their conduct after they were gone. Let all evangelists take note of this. Nothing hurts the cause of Christ worse than for a minister, be he an evangelist or pastor, to go "daffy" over some woman. These men were clean in their lives, and never did I hear them criticised for one act. They were prompt at all their services and prompt at all their meals, which, by the way, is a good lesson for all evangelists to learn, and I feel sure that we shall reap much fruit from their labors yet in days to come. We are still worshiping under our big tabernacle, and shall strive to commence our new church building this fall. Our church was greatly strengthened by the meeting in every way.

Jewell Howard, pastor.

Our New Mountain School.

Beckley Institute, located at Beckley, W. Va., is the third mountain school to be organized and supported by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. A magnificent gift of land, buildings, and money, amounting in all to $41,500, induced the launching of this new enterprise. The first session under this management has just ended. The total enrollment for the year was 360. The capacity of the school was taxed to the utmost. A dormitory to cost $15,000 is to be erected this summer. The site for the proposed new buildings is a most beautiful one.

The closing exercises occurred June 21-25. Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, of Indianapolis, was present with earnest, inspiring words for students and citizens. Professor E. W. McDiarmid came from Bethany College to be present during the closing week to take permanent charge of the school as its principal. He has located at Beckley, and will spend the summer looking after the interests of the work.

A summer session for teachers is now being conducted by Professor D. H. Holbrook, of Kentucky. This will continue until July 25. Ritchie Ware, minister of the Christian church, has been of inestimable service throughout the session. His Bible courses have been popular and helpful.

This work of bringing Christian education within reach of the young men and women of Appalachian America, appeals strongly to all who have made themselves conversant with its value. Friends are needed. Letters of inquiry addressed to the principal will receive prompt answer.

Building Up the Cause in Texas.

Among those that attended the dedication of our new church at Sweetwater, Texas, were a few who, together with the writer, met and prayerfully planned to enter Hamlin and there plant the cause of New Testament Christianity. June 3 found me in Hamlin with the support of a godly band of Christian women who had secured the Methodist house for the meeting. Hamlin is not yet three years old, and has 3,800 population, being the largest town of its age in the state. Like all of these Western cities of rapid growth, the panic hit it hard, still its prosperity is assured. The Baptists and Methodists, and Presbyterians are well "housed," but for those people who desire to be known as Christians there was no house, no location, and no money. To-day we have the best location in Hamlin, a corner lot on the opposite corner from the Methodists, who paid $1,500 for theirs. For our location we paid largely in Christian love, friendship and helpfulness, God's currency. Also we have in cash and good pledges $1,100 and a working congregation of some 35 saints, earnest, loving and working. The writer baptized six, one came from the Baptists—seven additions. It is such women as Sister Wren and those who rallied to her support that lend strength to the work, and inspire the preacher to sacrifice and toil on. Everywhere I go I find a few faithful, earnest, and deeply spiritual women that suggest Rev. 2:10; Mark 13:13; Jude 3. My visit at Hamlin has given me greater, deeper and higher ideas of our great plea and the godly men and women who are standing for all that it means. By unanimous vote I was "commanded" to return and dedicate the new church-house, finish the financial canvass and hold a short meeting in the auditorium. Under the strong leadership of Brother Thad Huffman there is a good working Bible school with a future big with possibilities for good to church and community. I begin at Blevens, Ark., July 22, from there to Okolona, Ark., then to Alpine, Texas. If you have a hard field and want a meeting, write me at 613 W. Macon street, San Antonio, Texas.

Percy G. Cross.

BIBLES and New Testaments

Send for Catalogue and Prices.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
St. Louis, Mo.

FOR NERVOUSNESS

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Its use is especially valuable in the treatment of weak nerves, disordered digestion and constipation.

When You and the Crowd are racking your brains to think of the most delicious and enjoyable drink at the soda fountain, you will settle the question easiest and please everybody most by ordering

Coca-Cola

Sparkling—harmless as water, and crisp as frost. The satisfactory beverage. Liked by and good for all classes, ages and sexes.

Delicious—Refreshing—Wholesome—Thirst-Quenching

GET THE GENUINE

5c. Everywhere

THE MONTH OF ROSES AND KENTUCKY MISSIONS.

June is not the most favorable month for our work in Kentucky, from any point of view. The commencements and Children's Day occupy the thoughts of the young, and therefore those who are older are concerned about the same matter. Then it is a busy month on the farms, and that hinders both the work of the men and prevents attention to the matter of meeting financial obligations.———Wm. J. Evans, who comes to us from Indiana, and most highly commended by E. B. Scofield, has undertaken the work at Lebanon Junction. We hope that he may be able to advance the cause in that difficult field. One added by statement. Indications hopeful.——— J. B. Flinchum reports 17 added in Breathitt County and some money raised for church building that is on hand.———D. G. Combs reports seven reclaimed from the world. He has been for most of the month at Hazel Green. So many places are pleading with him to help them that he is restive under regular work.———Three added by J. W. Masters. He gave little time to the field. The sickness and death of his mother forbade that. He is now in Harlan courthouse, seeking to put the finishing touches on the house of worship just built there. ———Latonia closed whirlwind campaign and raised about $500. Five added—three by confession and baptism and two by letter or statement. H. C. Runyon reports work doing well in all departments.——— Louis A. Kohler has succeeded J. P. Bornwasser at Bromley and is hopeful.——— W. L. Lacy is trying hard to bring up the work in his territory and hopes to be able to make a good report at the annual meeting.———Eight baptisms in Laurel County by H. L. Morgan, and two other additions. A more active campaign will soon be inaugurated by him.———Munfordville has the service of J. K. Reid, and he says the work is progressing fairly well. ———C. M. Summers suffered the great sorrow of losing the little child just born to them.———Bardstown had the services of J. B. Briney two Sundays and matters are about as usual.———Edw. B. Richey says the whirlwind campaign for South Louisville debt closes July 12. They will realize about $500 from the effort.——— W. J. Cocke held a meeting at Dry Ridge, in Grant County. He had eleven additions during the month—four of those by baptism. He is now at Hillsboro, Fleming County, for a meeting. Thos. B. Howe is the preacher there.———Paintsville and the Big Sandy Valley are fortunate in having A. Sanders located at the town just named. The secretary was there and the progress being made on the house and the work generally is very gratifying. The last improvement is on the house. A Solomon's porch—10x30 feet—is being built in front of the house and a baptistry is put in the porch. You have to go through the baptistry to get into the church, and that is about right. He is also seeking to establish the cause at Louisa, county seat of Lawrence County. We have there about twenty people—no house.———H. W. Elliott was busy all the month visiting about twelve different places and speaking about twenty times. He was present at several conventions, urging the needs of Kentucky missions.———Officers were ordained at Quincy, Lewis County, where J. P. Bornwasser has done a splendid work. The receipts for the month amounted to $345.91. This is not enough to meet the obligations of the month. We urge all the friends of the work to bestir themselves that we may go to Hopkinsville with our obligations met. Every church failing to pay the apportionment contributes to a possible defeat. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

A GREAT WEEK IN SEATTLE.

The city of Seattle entertained Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye for one week, beginning June 21, and closing with a farewell reception on Monday evening, June 29. Mrs. Louise Kelley, the national representative of the C. W. B. M., was a guest of honor at the reception.

Our churches have been stirred to their depths and not only has the First Church raised $950 for Dr. Dye's support, but the Queen Anne Church, J. L. Greenwell, pastor, raised $750 at the morning service Sunday, and has become a living link.

Elaborate plans were made and carried out to the letter for the entertainment of our African representatives. Too much commendation can not be uttered in behalf of these consecrated missionaries. Their lives, their message, their humility and their ceaseless enthusiasm quicken and awaken all with whom they come in contact.

Every day brought new features to the front. Sunday morning, June 21, Mrs. Dye spoke at the First Church and won the appreciation of all her hearers. Tuesday and Wednesday Dr. Dye met the Christian business men of the city during lunch hour at the Y. M. C. A. building. Plans were discussed for the enlargement of the Bolenge work, and those hours will ever be remembered. Strong men wept under the impassioned appeal of the speaker. Wednesday evening witnessed the greatest social event the churches of Seattle ever witnessed. A banquet was tendered Dr. and Mrs. Dye at which representatives from all the churches of the city were present. One hundred and twenty-five covers were laid. The spirit of fellowship and co-operation rose to high tide. Following the banquet at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. building, Dr. Dye delivered his stereopticon lecture on "The Cry from the Heart of Africa," to an enthusiastic audience. Tuesday morning the W. W. G. girls of the First Church entertained the missionaries at a picnic. These young girls, about 25 in number, have pledged $25 a year to Dr. Dye's support. Dr. and Mrs. Dye and Hermon P. Williams, missionary to the Philippines, who returned on the steamer Aki Maru, June 25, were the center of attraction at the Sunday-school picnic at Woodland Park Friday. The week culminated in a spiritual awakening in all the churches on Sunday. Dr. Dye spoke at the First church, Mrs. Dye at the Queen Anne Church and Mrs. Kelley at the University Church in the morning. At 3 o'clock p. m. there was a mass meeting of the churches under the auspices of the C. W. B. M. women at the First Church. Mrs. J. C. McGinness, president of the Western Washington C. W. B. M., presided. Mrs. Kelley gave the formal address. Brother and Sister Dye spoke also. In the evening Dr. Dye gave a farewell address at the First Church and Mrs. Kelley spoke at the Fremont Church.

The results are far-reaching. All the churches have taken on new life. They are moving forward under a larger vision. The Northwest will be permanently benefited by the visit of these powerful God-guided servants. Mission study classes will be organized this winter and all along the line definite steps for consistent progress will be taken. We, one and all, pray the richest blessings of our Father to be with Dr. and Mrs. Dye and Mrs. Kelley in the great work they are doing, and hope to do such a work for him in our turn as will help our brotherhood to larger and happier participation in this great work in the years to come.

Joseph L. Garvin,
Minister Seattle First Church.

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING
IN THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS
Two Cents per word, per insertion.

Some Historical Works

Historical Documents (edited by C. A. Young) $1.00
Christian Union (J. H. Garrison). 1.00
Dawn of the Reformation in Missouri (T. P. Haley..... 1.00
History of the Christian Church (Fisher) 3.50

Sent post paid by
Christian Publishing Company
St. Louis, Mo.

THE
TEACHER TRAINING HANDBOOK
By MARION STEVENSON

YOU WANT IT

1. Because it is the most complete teacher-training book published.
2. Because it will teach your class how to study the Bible.
3. Because it teaches the class the Bible rather than something about the Bible.
4. Because it makes the most thorough work possible.
5. Because it has been adopted as a college text book.
6. Because it gives a true view of Old and New Testament History.
7. Because it is the only teacher-training book published which gives New Testament Institutions.
8. Because it gives a working knowledge of Bible Geography.
9. Because it is up to date on Bible School organization, and pedagogy.
10. Because it received the unanimous approval of the International Committee.

Manilla binding, 224 pages.
Single copy, 30c, prepaid. Five or more copies, not prepaid, 25c each.
Limp cloth, 40c each.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Choctaw, July 8.—Beginning a meeting here. Twelve added last three days—ten of them being baptisms.—D. T. Stanley, evangelist.

Newport, July 9.—J. H. McCarty and daughter have just closed a successful meeting of two weeks, in which there were 22 added, and our membership much revived. Brother McCarty has done us good in many ways, and with his daughter they make a fine team for evangelistic work. They hold a meeting at Harrison, Ark., following this, and their permanent address is 900 West Fifth street, Little Rock. J. W. B. Smith takes the work here for the time being, and we expect a rapid growth. We have just completed an $8,000 church building, which is the finest in this part of the state.—J. D. Cawell.

Georgia.

Atlanta, July 9.—Seven more received into our fellowship last evening. Two had been affiliated with the Presbyterians for many years. "Sunshine" Shaw's visit has been a great blessing. His address is 172 Rawson street, Atlanta. Our church is united and happy, and has undertaken the support of little Nellie Holland, at the Baldwin Orphanage.—Dean L. Bond, minister.

Illinois.

Hoopeston, July 9.—Two additions by letter on Lord's day.—Louis R. Hotaling.

Iowa.

Clearfield, July 8.—One added by letter last Lord's day. Our church has given $54.68 to missions this last quarter, making $186.35 for the year so far.—S. R. Reynolds.

Kansas.

Plainville, July 8.—The work here progresses nicely. Since I last reported there have been two baptisms, making 27 since the beginning of the year. The Bible-school grows, and the training class is doing good work. The people seem to be much interested.—Clifton E. Rash.

Kentucky.

Mt. Sterling, July 3.—We began a meeting with the Salt Lick Church on June 8, closing June 24. Beginning on June 15 we conducted a Bible study each afternoon. There were 60 confessions and baptisms, 23 reclaimed, 20 united by letter, 4 coming from other religious bodies. The church seemed much interested, and very hopeful for the future. A training class was organized with 50 members. The official board reorganized and enlarged. N. C. Carpenter, a student of Mt. Sterling Collegiate Institute, is the minister of this church. He is a young man, faithful and true in life and work.—William H. Cord.

Ohio.

Wellsville, July 6.—One added at the morning service yesterday.—H. E. Sala, Ore.

Halfway, July 1.—Evangelist D. B. Titus has just closed a successful meeting here, in which there were 50 additions—30 by baptism; 25 of them were men. The church is in good financial circumstances; 23 tithers were secured, besides $60 per month in pledges. We rejoice over the victory.—Leon Myers.

Gladstone, July 6.—A Church of Christ of 58 members has just been organized here. We expect to have 70 on the list very soon. Gladstone is to be a busy place for the next two weeks, by reason of the Chautauqua. For the first time, we shall be represented by headquarters of the Church of Christ. Some of our literature will be on display.—A. H. Mulkey.

Oklahoma.

Claremore, July 3.—I held a short meeting at Carney the 1st of May, resulting in 13 additions, and the last of June I held a meeting in Broken Arrow, resulting in 14 additions. I give the first two Lord's days in each month to the church at Claremore, which is prospering. At regular services in June we had five confessions and three added by letter.—Oscar Ingold.

Porto Rico.

Bayamon, June 30.—Two more baptisms in Hato-Tejas and two in Comerio Falls last Lord's day. The zeal and earnestness of the little band up there in the hills is marvelous. The distance they will walk over the rough hill trails to attend services is certainly inspiring. Having forsaken the superstitions of Romanism they are "looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith." Truly is the gospel the power of God unto salvation.—Dr. W. A. Alton.

Texas.

Plano, July 10.—Richard Martin is in a good meeting, with E. H. Holmes. He goes next to Van Alstyne to be with E. F. Bradford during August.

Marlin, July 4.—L. D. Parnell and I are in a good meeting in what is considered to be a hard place. We can not seat our crowds, and have been trying to secure a larger building. Parnell is an excellent chorus leader, having his work well in hand. We organized a church of 40 members at the old, historic town of Nacogdoches last month.—D. A. Leak.

Fort Worth, July 3.—I just closed a delightful meeting of two weeks at the little village of Aledo, 18 miles from here. There were 48 additions, of which 36 were baptized. It was a hard fought battle for the truth. There are some choice spirits who are breaking away from antiism. The congregation was about doubled by the meeting. I go to Brady next.—R. R. Hamlin.

Lufkin, July 7.—One accession since last report. We had a fine children's day service with an offering larger than the apportionment.—F. Douglass Wharton and wife.

Sylvester, July 7.—We have had a good meeting here. I preached nine sermons. The town population is 400. There were four baptisms and five added from other organizations. We secured a corner lot and organized a church of 21 members. We will be in position to build from the start. Much of the credit is due to Brother Anderson. I am to return in the fall. I go next to Blevens, Ark.—Percy G. Cross.

Lampases, July 11.—For eighteen days I had the pleasure of working with H. M. Bandy, of Coleman. Twenty-three united with the church—16 by confession and baptism—six by letter and statement and one from the Baptists. The results were due largely to the work of Brother Bandy and his excellent Christian wife.—Ernest J. Bradley.

Eagle Lake, July 8.—Spicer and Douthit assisted me in a short meeting at this place. The meeting overcame some bad conditions and was a success. There were 18 additions—eight by confession and baptism and 10 otherwise. We had strong preaching and good singing and the church will now, we believe, move steadily forward. My work is with the Second Christian Church, Houston, but I am watching over the flock at Eagle Lake for a few months until we can make some provision for them.—G. J. Massey.

Utah.

Salt Lake City, July 5.—Two confessions, one baptism, and seven other additions since last report.—Dr. Albert Buxton.

Virginia.

Richmond, July 1.—The work at the Third Church moves onward evenly. We report two additions at regular services. The pastor, Gerald Culberson, closed a meeting with the Fairmount Christian Church and there were four additions. He made many friends.

Indiana State Convention.

The Missionary Society of Churches of Christ in Indiana will hold its sixty-ninth annual convention at Bethany Park, Ind., beginning July 20 and closing July 26. The general announcements of Bethany Assembly program of which our state convention is the second week, have been so widely made that we need only to emphasize the state program. It will consist of state ministerial association, state missionary society, state Sunday-school association, state Christian Endeavor society and state educational association. The C. W. B. M. state convention, by special arrangement of that department of the work of the church, is placed later, on August 11 and 12. The program has been arranged to cover as nearly as possible every phase of co-operative departments in our state work. The speakers are among our best talent and are drawn from every district of the state with some from other states. We have been greatly blessed of God in the growth of the work this year in spite of "financial depression." The receipts have been an increase over any year in our history and the regular evangelistic force has been doubled. We are placing special emphasis on unity in co-operative mission work with the watchword, "A state loyalty and a state pride in state work." Every member of the Church of Christ in Indiana and his neighbor is invited. The churches are especially urged to appoint and send delegates from each department of your congregation. We plead for loyalty in our united co-operative missionary work in Indiana. Come, and let us rejoice together and plan together in the best state convention in our history.

J. O. Rose,
Corresponding Secretary, 120 East Market street, Indianapolis, Ind.

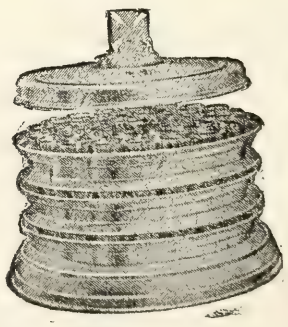
Changes.

Allison, C. V.—Mound City, Mo., to Albia, Ia.
Bartle, W. D. Sheridan to Corydon, Ind.
Bell, J. E.—Fowler to Yosemite Valley, Cal.
Brant, John—232 U. P. Sta., Des Moines, Ia., to Holly, Colo.
Caldwell, H. W.—Bethany, W. Va., to Silver Bay, N. Y.
Carter, M. O.—615 N. New Jersey street, Indianapolis, Ind., to 1486 Penn avenue, Columbus, O.
Connelly, H. G.—New Haven to Avon, Conn.
Corwine, Herbert J.—Columbia to Olean, Mo.
Endres, W. D.—5826 Ingleside avenue, Chicago, to 15415 Lexington avenue, Harvey, Ill.
Grimes, John M.—Des Moines, Ia., to Tarkio, Missouri.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICES

Of Different Styles, Grades and Prices.

Beautiful and Durable.



Hygienic and Popular.

A Beautiful Illustrated and Descriptive Catalogue

Sent Free on Application.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS.

Topic July 22.—Luke 16:9-13; 12:15, 29-31.

This parable of the "Unjust Steward," which led to the teaching concerning the mammon of unrighteousness, is an application of what is commonly called worldly wisdom to spiritual things. "The children of this world are wiser than the children of light." And it is true, pathetically, provokingly so, sometimes. This unjust steward is commended for making provisions for the future. The methods he used are not commended, as shown by the term "unjust" which is applied to him. What Jesus teaches is that from a worldly, purely business point of view, apart from the ethics of the thing, he was acting wisely in "feathering his own nest," thus providing for the days when he should be out of a job, and with no means of support. It is not far-fetched to say that it is every man's business to provide something for the future. While it is true that the scriptures do not say anything about laying by something for a rainy day, there is good sense in so doing. It is to the credit of few folks in this world that they make no provision for the rainy days. In all too many cases it is reckless extravagance or wicked wastefulness. Jesus does not offer any premiums for laziness or shiftlessness. "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," is the way he answers the cavils of his enemies and protests of his friends. His activity was spiritual. And he would teach us that we are to be as active and forehanded in spiritual things as the wisest and most energetic and even unscrupulous money-getter.

The Bible offers no chromos to fools, financial or otherwise. It is an eminently sensible book. The ethics of Jesus, in spite of much neglect and foolish misapplication, are sensible and workable, if we were only wise enough to seriously try them. The "Golden Rule" of Jesus would solve most of the troubles, social and financial, of this work-a-day world, and wrong no men nor set of men. It is the only sensible sort of socialism I have ever run across. It respects the rights of individuals and the rights of person and property. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them" would wrong no man. It is spiritual common sense.

"Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." The point is well taken, in view of several considerations. The man who would have friends must show himself friendly; in other words, he must make friends. One of the best resources in every man's business is his ability to make friends and keep them. And this is one of the richest of all spiritual assets. Paul was rich in his friendships, as his letters show. It was this faculty of making fast friends that helped largely to make him the chiefest of the apostles. His writings, which have so wonderfully enriched the church and the world, grew out of friendships for individuals and groups of individuals, bound together into congregations in widely separated places. What a host of heavenly friends Paul made while he went from place to place preaching the gospel, or wrought at tent-making, or languished in prison. Like John Bunyan in old Bedford jail, he made the world his debtor and the saints of all the ages his friends by writing of things of human and eternal interest. He made heavenly friends of earthly. And this is the true wisdom. It is the heart of the Master's teaching.

We are bound to fail in this world, no matter how successful we may be from a worldly standpoint. The great captains of industry, the merchant princes, the leaders of political parties, the plumed knights of the tumultuous crowd—the Washingtons, Lincolns, Garfields, McKinleys, Roosevelts, Tafts, Bryans—all fail. "The tumult and the shouting dies." And they die. Their names are soon musty on the pages of even current history. We pause but a moment in our hurry when it is said, "Grover Cleveland is dead," a man that was twice president of the United States. And now the strife of politics shifts to Denver, where the man that has been twice defeated in the race for the presidential chair is making another stand for the privilege of being the standard-bearer of his party. We admire his character and like him because he is a fighter, as Roosevelt, and has the courage to stand for convictions, even in defeat. Yet Bryan is bound to fail though he win the nomination and the coveted honor of being the President of the United States. "When ye fail"—then what? That's the sober question that fronts every soul. How about the friends we have made? Where are they waiting to receive us? Heaven or hell will be where our friends are. It is not a place. It is a character, a condition, a companionship. The kind of friends we have made in this world will determine our happiness in the world to come. Jesus says so. "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail (and fail we must) they may receive you into everlasting habitations." Not money, but friends.

Christian Endeavor

July 26, 1908.

HOME-MISSION SCHOOLS—2 Chron. 17:1-9.

DAILY READINGS.

M. The Value of Early Education. Prov. 22:1-6.
T. The Value of the Teacher. Ex. 18:19-21.
W. Personal Contact. Prov. 19:20, 25, 29.
T. Faithful Teachers. Col. 3:23-25.
F. The School of the Doctors. Luke 2:42-50.
S. Schools of Prophets. 2 Kings 2:3-5.
S. Topic.

One of the best-known Home Mission schools among us is located at Morehead, Ky. It was founded about twenty years ago by a consecrated woman, Mrs. Phoebe Button. The school opened with one pupil. Mrs. Button persevered and was soon joined by her son F. C. Button, a graduate of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. The school grew steadily under the care of these two consecrated people. Mrs. Button was called to her heavenly reward, and the care of the school devolved upon her worthy son. Under his care it has grown to be one of the largest schools in the mission field. Hundreds of hungry hearted young people crowd the school every year and go to their life task to serve as Christian men and women.

Another school equally well known and also under the care of the C. W. B. M. is located at Hazel Green, Ky. Both these schools are in the mountain counties of Kentucky, among a class of people who are of the purest American blood. The teaching of the Bible is a prominent factor in the work of these schools.

A third school of the same grade will be opened this coming September in Beckley, W. Va. This school will be situated in the beautiful West Virginia hills and will reach a large population of young people who otherwise would have no opportunity of Christian education.

At Louisville, Ky., the C. W. B. M. support a Bible college for the education of colored men who desire to preach the gospel. This school is under the care of the veteran educator, A. J. Thompson.

Another celebrated school supported by the C. W. B. M. is described in the following extract from the Christian Endeavor Quarterly. It is located in Edwards, Mississippi.

"The plant includes thirteen hundred acres of land, with ample buildings for dormitories and school work. The valuation of that land, buildings and equipment is seventy-five thousand dollars. Industrial training forms a large part of the course of instruction. The boys are taught carpentry, factory woodwork, printing, farming, gardening and broom making, while the girls are instructed in sewing, laundering, cooking and general housework. Since the opening of the school more than fifteen hundred students have been in attendance."

It is impossible to estimate the far reach of the Christian influence of such schools. From them go men and women with higher ideas of life to work strongly and true in their daily lot. From these quiet schools go teachers, men and women, to teach in communities which wait for them to bring light and truth. Preachers for home fields and workers for all fields are trained here also. It may be the good fortune of some Christian Endeavorers who read these words to have a part in the work of such schools.

Advanced Courses at Home leading to degrees. The Classics, Philosophy and Theology. Terms easy. Catalog free. Write Pres. Chas. J. Burton, Ph. B., Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS

in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them

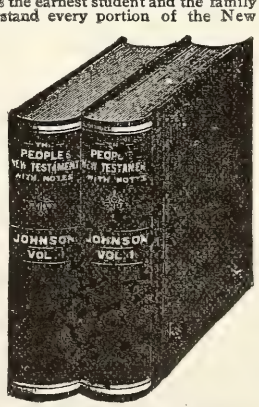
PLEASE MENTION THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

The People's New Testament With Notes

By B. W. JOHNSON

A complete commentary of the New Testament in two volumes. Contains the Common and Revised Versions, with references, explanatory notes and colored maps. It makes clear every difficult passage and enables the earnest student and the family circle to understand every portion of the New Testament.

The most Satisfactory Work of its kind ever published.



Vol. I., The Four Gospels and Acts of Apostles.
Vol. II., The Epistles and Revelation.
Cloth, per vol., $2 00 | Sheep, per vol., $2 75
Half morocco, per vol., $3 00
The volumes can be had separately.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
2712 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.

Sunday-School

July 26, 1908.

SAUL REJECTED BY THE LORD.—1 Sam. 15:13-23.

Memory verse, 22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord our God will we serve and his voice will we obey.—Josh. 24:24.

Saul became king of Israel at the age of thirty, in the full strength and pride of his youth. From the start he was headstrong. In more than one incident is shown his ungovernable desire to have his own way. He was apparently temperamentally incapable of doing just what he was told to do by those whose authority he recognized. He realized that Samuel spoke to him with the voice of authority, and interpreted to him the will of Jehovah. He did not question the validity of the commands which came to him in that way; but he did not scrupulously obey them. In an emergency he was willing to put his own judgment against a command which he recognized as coming from God.

For example, Saul was about to go out to fight the Philistines at one time. The people were gathered together to perform the sacrifice which they all considered as an indispensable preliminary to the battle. But Samuel did not come. As a military commander, Saul saw that the time was a critical one and that further delay might be dangerous. So he performed the sacrifice himself, although it was contrary to the law for an unauthorized person to offer a sacrifice. It is not a question as to whether a sacrifice offered to God by unpriestly hands can be acceptable. But the current belief of that time was that priestly ordination was absolutely necessary to acceptable sacrifice. Saul himself shared in that view. In usurping the priestly office he was doing what his own religious belief condemned. He was making the commandment of God, as he understood it, a secondary consideration, and subordinating it to his military judgment. We may think what we please about the rule that sacrifices should be offered only by those authorized to do so. As a matter of fact, the restriction has an historical justification. But, however that may be, Saul knew and accepted the rule, and yet in an emergency he would rather trust his own judgment than follow a command which he really believed to be from God.

It was after this incident that the first warning was given to Saul that the kingdom should not continue in his family. "Now thy kingdom shall not continue" (13:14).

A still more decisive break between the self-will of Saul and the authority of Jehovah as represented by Samuel occurred at the time of the conquest of the Amalekites. There came to Saul a command to destroy the Amalekites, men, women and children, to take no spoil of slaves or cattle, to show mercy to neither youth nor age, but to kill every living thing among them. All this was to be done because the ancestors of the Amalekites had hindered the march of the children of Israel when they came up out of Egypt about five hundred years before this time. There has been a vast amount of quibbling and evasion to get around or away from the obvious cruelty and barbarism of such a slaughter which is in the record attributed to the command of Jehovah. Any theory which makes God directly responsible for such acts is an immoral and destructive theory. Jesus taught us some things about God which were not known in the days of Samuel. He taught us that he is a loving Father, whose interest and care are not limited to one little company of chosen people. No theory about the Scriptures can be half so dangerous as a theory about God which makes him capable of commanding a slaughter of the innocents on no other ground than that their ancestors five centuries ago had opposed the passage of a wandering host through their territory.

But Saul accepted the command and the commission as coming straight from Jehovah. It was a bloody age, and to him there was nothing surprising in the suggestion that such a wholesale murder should be carried out in the name of God. And, having accepted it, he sinned, just as he had done before, by opposing his own individual will to what he understood to be the divine plan. As a matter of fact, it happened that he erred in the direction in which a more enlightened view of God would have carried him. But he did not err in that direction because he had a more enlightened view of God, but because he happened to get hold of an idea which he liked because it was his own. It occurred to him that it would be a fine thing to bring home the finest of the cattle of the Amalekites to use in a great sacrifice to Jehovah, and that it would add luster to his triumph to bring home a living captive king, instead of slaying him upon the battlefield. So he ignored what he believed to be the command of God and carried out his own plan.

"To obey is better than sacrifice." It is a great day in the religious life of any people when it comes to a realization of that fact. The favor of God is not to be bought by sacrifice. Perhaps the practice of sacrifice originates in the belief that God needs the things that are offered, and that his good-will can be purchased by gifts, regardless of the character of him who presents them. But Israel, as represented by all of its better teachers, passed far beyond that primitive notion. No outward performance can be a substitute for the right attitude of the soul to God.

Some of the primitive peoples, who have not had the light of revelation, have gotten a glimpse of that important idea. The Zuni Indians have a legend which tells of a visit paid by one of their heroes to the island home of the Sun-Father in the great western sea. The hero found the father sorting over great heaps of pearls and opals, and throwing many of them away. He noticed that some which were thrown away were among the largest and most beautiful gems, and some which were carefully kept were small and broken. When he asked the meaning of this, he was told that the gems were the prayers and sacrifices of the faithful. The beautiful and large ones were those which had been made in fine speech, and with rich gifts and all proper ceremonies, and the small and broken ones were those which had been made with rude and ignorant words and with a small offering or none at all. But the ones which were kept were those which had been offered with a pure heart and in humility and truth, and those which were thrown away were those which, however rich and beautiful they might be, had been given in pride or insolence, or in the hope of a selfish advantage.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

Church Furnishings and Supplies

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Made of several materials and in many designs
Send for full particulars and catalogue No. 27. Give the number of communicants and name of church.
"The Lord's Supper takes on a new dignity and beauty by the use of the individual cup"—J. K. WILSON, D. D.
GEO. H. SPRINGER, Manager,
256-258 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

BELLS BUCKEYE BELLS, CHIMES and PEALS are known the world over for their full rich tone, durability and low prices. Write for catalog and estimate. Established 1837.
The E. W. Vanduzen Co., 419 E. 2d St., Cincinnati, O.

New S. S. Songs for 1908
Joy and Praise
By Wm. J. Kirkpatrick and J. H. Fillmore
Up-to-date in ideas. The best ever. FREE sample pages. Returnable book mailed.
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE, 528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.
or 41-43 Bible House, New York.

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References. Correspondence Solicited

Bible Lesson Picture Roll

Each leaf, 27x37 inches, containing a picture, beautifully colored, illustrating the lessons.

These rolls are well mounted, strong and durable. Thirteen leaves in each roll—a leaf for each lesson in the quarter. PRICE, prepaid, 75c.

Picture Lesson Cards,

A reduced fac-simile of the above put up in sets containing one card for each Sunday; size 2 3-4x4 inches, PRICE for set, for quarter, 2 1-2c.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIS.
By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905
A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.
For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

People's Forum

Todd-Yeuell.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Allow me to express my profound appreciation of the masterly address of Earle Marion Todd on "Evangelism for the Times," published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; also of Herbert Yeuell's answer to the same in "The Christian Standard." They should have both appeared in the same journal, so that the readers who do not take both could have read both sides. These addresses are both strong, and while partisans will be satisfied with neither, they are both very wholesome if not full of comfort. Being acquainted personally with the writers, and, of course, intimately with my brother, and knowing their histories and points of view adds to my interest in the subjects discussed and their treatment of them. I regret to observe the hysteria that has been stirred up, yet realize that this is inevitable. Some folks have "gotten it in the neck," yet they need hardly "bat around like chickens with their heads off," because their heads are on. They have received a blow that will bring them to their senses, if they have any—that is all. The calm complacency of evangelists and pastors would be amusing were it not saddening, and these lightning flashes and thunder crashes are designed to disturb and dissipate the smug self-satisfaction and conceit that is a plague on both our houses. "Higher Cynicism" as well as "Higher Criticism" needs to be well aired. The vulgarian needs to be well curried. Some sand-papering will help the virtuous. Todd and Yeuell are well equipped for this work, and I for one say, "Lay on, Macduff," to both of them and am quite willing to take my share of the treatment without a whimper. Being something of a pastor and an evangelist I need all that's coming my way.

Payne, Ala. ClarisYeuell.

Cornelius and the Holy Spirit.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

If I may be allowed the privilege, I am desirous of offering additional criticisms to Brother Wight's position concerning "Cornelius and the Holy Spirit." I am more than "sorry that I am compelled to correct him in so many things."

Brother Wight first protests "against calling the event at Caesarea a miracle." Why, I do not know, for against him are all the commentators that I know anything about, and if speaking with tongues, other than their own, is not a miracle, then Pentecost is not.

He next says, "God operates miraculously upon things, and even on a dumb brute to rebuke a prophet, but never upon a human heart." Whether upon hearts or upon tongues God did operate upon the house of Cornelius. And there is no question but what the coming of the Spirit at that juncture was the deciding issue that made Peter challenge any one to forbid the baptism of the recipients. For he says, "Who can forbid water that these should not be baptized who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?"

Dean Plumptre says of this:—"The exceptional gift was bestowed in this instance to remove the scruples which 'those of the circumcision' might otherwise have felt as to admitting Gentiles, as such, to baptism."

You say, brother Wight, "how easy it would have been for the Spirit to have spoken to Peter as he did in Acts 10:19, 20, 'to baptize these believers doubting nothing', and then after which the Holy Spirit could have come upon them the same as their acceptance of God would have been as obvious to the church and the proper 'order and sequence' would have been maintained." And you are right, this is just what I maintain was done, but it was not done by the Spirit speaking directly to Peter, but through the Gentiles. And the reason is obvious. Those who accompanied Peter, and the church at Jerusalem, would have been dependent upon Peter's statement of an inward revelation to himself on this important subject. It took a good deal of instruction by miracle and by word to get Peter to the point of going to these Gentiles to speak to them the things of the gospel, and remember that he says "unto me God showed that I should not call any man common or unclean," also, "that I perceive that God is no respecter of persons," but what about the others who had had no such revelations, and those before whom Peter would be called to give an account? Do they not need some evidence, too? The very reason that all had been an inward revelation, and so much of it was necessary, to Peter alone, is the very reason why now a different course should be pursued, and was.

Another thing you forget, my brother, concerning "the proper order and sequence," and that is that the cases of this and Pentecost are the same. Peter never offered the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost until after the baptism of the Spirit. And there would be no change in order and no new precedent established to "leave a door ajar," for Peter's words—"whereby Cornelius and his house should be saved"—to put baptism for the remission of sins than where it properly belongs. He commanded baptism for the remission of sins at Pentecost, and he challenges any forbidding of baptism now, and upon the fact that "these had received the Holy Spirit as well as they." The baptism of the Holy Spirit had preceded in both cases, and the only reason in the world why he makes such a demand now is that he had been "charged to preach unto the people" the gospel that "he that believeth and is baptized should be saved."

Brother Wight, I have not found it necessary to resort to "looks of wisdom" or "to denials" to get out of "awkward positions" with my denominational friends, nor have I yet begun to interpret the Scriptures in order to leave any doors ajar that the good Lord has not already opened wide with the keys of authority, while it seems you contradict your own theorizing. You say that "Peter commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus so that God, who pardons, could forgive them according to his clearly revealed law of pardon," and yet you virtually agree with Brother Garrison in your "squinting" when he says, "neither our theory as to the 'proper order and sequence' of baptism and the gift of the Spirit, nor the facts in this case require us to believe so incredible a proposition as that Cornelius and his household received the Holy Spirit * * * with their sins unforgiven and the condemnation of God resting upon them." Why then command them to be baptized for the remission of sins? Your position reverses the order of the Holy Spirit himself, and you say baptize them because their sins are remitted, or else you have no reason for baptizing them at all. You had said it was "significant that Peter did not say that they have received all that we did," and yet in this you say they did—except the ordinance of baptism. And why, "of course are we to follow the order of baptizing believers for the remission of sins, that they may receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" when you say "a host of believers have shown in a marvelous way the presence of the Holy Spirit . . and so much of the fruit of the Spirit though in mistake and ignorance they have gone in through the door you say God left ajar? The cases then and now are not parallel, and you have the door wide open when there was not the least danger of any one being mistaken or of being left in ignorance. If you would follow a correct exegesis and would put this incident and that of Pentecost together and harmonize them instead of differentiating them you would not need to be corrected in so many things. You have the Spirit contradict Peter's first statement that upon repentance and baptism the Pentecostians should have the remission, when that statement was made by Peter "speaking as the Spirit gave him utterance." "Through his name" is the promise that they shall receive the remission of sins," and the belief on Jesus brings the believer into obedience when baptism is commanded "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ," and the true relation of the Holy Spirit to this incident lies in the fact that they are to be "baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

If the record that follows after the miracle of tongues is said to have come has any force whatever it lies in the fact that Peter had not finished telling all the words by which they were to be saved, and therefore he commands them to be baptized. The Holy Spirit had not interfered nor does Peter recognize the right of man to interfere as he shows by asking "who can forbid water, that these should not be baptized?"

Just a word in closing as to my "having Peter make the absurd statement, 'Repent and be baptized unto the remission of your sins and you shall receive the remission of your sins.'" I will attend to this matter if I may be allowed the privilege of submitting an article on this subject. But let the good will of the Editor and the requests of others settle this. I have not studied this subject for the last seven years to then incidentally use an expression that I could not substantiate with scriptural reasons. And, my good brother, let me say that you have in repudiating this statement of mine utterly confounded two classes of references that have no relation whatever to each other. R. H. Lampkin.

Obituaries

Notices of deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the money with the copy.

ATKINSON.

On June 15 J. M. Atkinson, while sitting by his wife, was suddenly called home. With her name on his lips they were sealed. Born in Calloway county almost 79 years ago, he was a pioneer, one of the honest, sturdy kind. His life was exemplary. Being a Baptist for many years, removing to Mexico, under the writer's pastorate he became a Christian only, and was happy in his church relationship. He was our friend, and his life and mind so pure that he was a friend of God and, like unto Enoch of old, God took him. He leaves the wife, three sons, one brother and two sisters. Would that all lived such lives, that, like him, they would be prepared for any summons from above. Walter M. White, present pastor at Mexico, conducted the funeral services.

Sedalia, Mo. A. W. Kokendoffer.

RICE.

Mrs. Eliza Jane Rice was born in Tennessee, February 29, 1824; died April 15, 1908. She was married to William Rice in 1847, and came to Saratoga, Cal., in 1847, where she had since lived. One son, W. A. Rice, of Saratoga, survives her. Frank E. Boren.

Saratoga, Cal.

ROGERS.

In the passing away of Eli Rogers Wednesday morning, July 1, the Central Church in Syracuse, N. Y., lost one of her most loyal members and a faithful disciple. He had been a member of the Central some 30 years—coming from the church in his boyhood home in Brewerton, N. Y. Brother Rogers was early elected a deacon in the Central congregation and for the last years of his life was the senior officer. Born November 7, 1844, in Lee Center, N. Y., he had worked nearly 64 years when he was called away from his earthly life. His boyhood was placed in humble surroundings and his life has been one of toil and hardship but of victory. He was married at an early age to Miss Immogene Phillips, of Brewerton. Many of our prominent men of the brotherhood have been entertained in their inviting home. Brothers Rogers was true to his convictions. He was a generous man, but his benevolences to the poor were known only to the few. In business he was connected with one of the largest industries in Syracuse and was the owner and superintendent of its transportation facilities. Besides Mrs. Rogers, a son, H. L., of Detroit, Mich., and a daughter, Miss Lena, survive. He was laid to rest in beautiful Woodlawn Cemetery. C. G. V. W.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

Sunday-School

CLASS BOOKS,
ENVELOPES
RECORDS,
BLACK BOARDS,
MAPS, CARDS
AND OTHER

Up-To-Date Supplies

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

The Home Department

The Tender Thought.

Harry is 6 years old. "Pa," he asked one day, "if I get married will I have a wife like ma?"

"Very likely," replied his father.

"And if I don't get married, will I have to be an old bachelor like Uncle Tom?"

"Very likely."

"Well, pa," he said, after a moment of deep thought, "it's a mighty tough world for us men, ain't it?"

Good Rules.

Say nothing you would not like God to hear.

Do nothing you would not like God to see.

Write nothing you would not like God to read.

Go to no place where you would not like God to find you.

Read no book of which you would not like God to say, "Show it to me."

Never spend your time in such a way that you would not like God to say, "What art thou doing?"—Morning Light.

Home, Sweet Home.

The wife of a naval officer attached to the Academy at Annapolis has in her employ an Irish servant, who recently gave evidence of nostalgia.

"You ought to be contented and not pine for your old home, Bridget," said the lady of the house. "You are earning good wages, your work is light, every one is kind to you, and you have lots of friends here."

"Yis, mum," sadly replied Bridget; "but it's not the place where I be; it is the place where I don't be."—Lippincott's.

Who Did?

One of our subscribers writes us that William Balfour Ker's picture, "The First Spank," reminds him of the following story: A little fellow who had just felt the hard side of the slipper, when the tears had dried somewhat, turned to his mother. "Mother," he asked, "did grandpa spank father when he was a little boy?"

"Yes," answered his mother impressively.

"And did his father whip him when he was little?"

"Yes."

"And did his father spank him?"

"Yes."

A pause.

"Well, who started this thing, anyway?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Sentence Sermons.

The heart of all reforms is the reform of the heart.

What you are when no one is looking, is what you are.

If you would lead, you must be willing to be lonesome at times.

The value of your religion depends upon how much of yourself is invested in it.

The heart is best nourished when we are ministering to the needs of our neighbors.

If you find gladness, you must play life's great game with eagerness and fairness.

Silence will end almost any quarrel.

A man's age depends upon the ideals he still cherishes.

Living for others is an imperative of the higher life.

Your foes will not fear you as long as you fret over them.

He who follows duty ever may find danger often, but defeat never.—Chicago Tribune.

"UNCLE REMUS."

[The following beautiful poem is clipped from the "Maryland Musings" in the "Sun" of Baltimore, and sent to us by B. A. Abbott. The writer is Mr. Folger McKinsey, the "Bentztown Bard." It is true poetry and is about a noble American and one of our greatest writers—Joel Chandler Harris—who has just passed from us.]

Bre'er Rabbit's face is grave and sad today—
A great, good friend of his has passed away!
And Farmer Snapbean in the shadow feels
A voiceless grief that o'er his spirit steals;
The blooms are bowed along the Southern lane,
And old familiar bird-friends try in vain
To flute their happy beings loud and long
In sheer delight of living—something's wrong!

Bre'er B'ar is grumpy, and on Bre'er Wolf's face
A solemn darkness dwells in laughter's place;
Tar Baby falters at the crape-hung door
Whence his old friend will issue nevermore,
Except when Sorrow bears him forth to lie
Beneath the lilies of the Southern sky,
Greenly companioned with the vine that grows
On shores of sleep and valleys of the rose.

Out of the heart of childhood echoing clear
A voice of wailing—in child eyes a tear;
Through all the world of children, little lips
Quivering that death hath bound in death's eclipse
Those eyes that looked on childhood with such gleam
Of joy in lives so sweet with dance and dream;
A clear, far-seeing heart, that held its youth,
And lived in love, and loved with childlike truth!

A sane philosopher, who looked on life
With equal patience for its joy and strife;
Preaching the gentle doctrine—with fine art—
Of human feeling and the neighbor-heart;
Brother to little creatures, insect, bird,
Gifted with fairy vision, fragrant word—
O, large, sweet soul, the heart of time is sad
That thou shalt come no more to make it glad!

Human as old humanity, and born
To simple sweetness of the fields, the morn,
The bloomy, jasmine places, and the vales
Where legend lives in recreated tales
Of white folk, black folk—with a touch that knew
The sweetness of odd fancy, ringing true
To nature and to knowledge, and the best
That beats through life in every human breast!

All hearts are heavy for him, and for thought
Of that lost art in which he deftly wrought
The foibles and the weakness and the wine
Of all love brings to life of true and fine:
Gather, Bre'er Rabbit, while with arm in arm
We go in loneliness to Snapbean Farm,
To lay our roses—kissed with teardrops sweet—
Among the tributes at his head and feet!

Business Economy in Smoke Prevention.

Assuming that in the case of the grate fire the smoke did not cease to appear until the volatile matter had entirely escaped, the prevention of smoke becomes at once a matter of tremendous importance to a concern which burns an enormous amount of coal per day. If these big coal consumers purchased a low-grade coal which was high in volatile matter, and used fire-hold methods which would permit all of this volatile matter to go off in the form of smoke, it is very easy to see that they could lose anywhere from 25 to 60 per cent of their coal through the smokestack without getting a particle of benefit from it. This, of course, does not take into consideration the irreparable damage that is done to the household furniture, to valuable tapestries and libraries, and to the public health by these poisonous gases being discharged into the air which is admitted into the homes and into the human lungs. It was not consideration for the public health or consideration for other people's property which caused the manufacturing concerns to begin the study of the complete combustion of coal. The best ideas which have been introduced and which have been made practicable were given their first complete test, as far as Chicago is concerned, in the plant of the Commonwealth Edison Company, at the Harrison street station in Chicago. The design of the firebox and the location of the boilers were arrived at after a prolonged series of experiments based upon this simple principle series of experiments based upon this simple principle: It takes a certain amount of space between the bed of the fire and the boiler for this volatile matter or gas to be completely consumed.—From "A Practical Campaign for Smoke Prevention," by George H. Cushing, in the American Review of Reviews for July.

Editor "Perfect Ladies' Companion": Dear Sir—Would you be good enough to print the enclosed poem in your esteemed publication at your usual rates? Respectfully, A. J. Poet. A. J. Poet, Esq. Dear Sir—I would be, but the poem isn't. Respectfully, The Editor.—Judge.

From a Woman's Window.

"Why has that woman had so much trouble in her life?" Well, I think I can give you one explanation of it. I have known her from girlhood, and in one thing her conduct was marked—she ignored conventionalities; I might put it stronger; she was quite given to defying them.

"But didn't that show her independence of character or a resolute will?" You may think so; no doubt she thought so, but you see how it has worked out. She has had more troubles than she was entitled to, either by birth or bringing up. She turns the corner on one and at the next corner meets another.

"Then a woman's safety consists in sticking to the conventionalities?" I did not quite say that, but two straight rails are good for a railroad train, and a highway is good for a traveler, and bridges for people who must cross streams. Pioneers who have to travel over roadless prairies or through pathless woods usually have a hard time of it. And so with the people who are always pioneering in social life or home life, or in their own private life. They are in danger of taking the wrong direction and of getting into a tanglewood or a swamp, or up against a high hill. Plain paths are safer.

"DOWN IN OLD MISSOURI"

By S. S. LAPPIN.

CHAPTER V.

On the Long Trail.

Uncle David lived on Wash Branch, which flows into Dry Fork, which flows into Skillet Fork, which flows into Little Wabash, which flows into Big Wabash, celebrated in story and song. It was a shock to me when I learned in school how many miles the waters of our little branch must flow to reach the smallest streams named on the maps. I know now, and smile as I think of it, that, in condition and prospect, we were fully as far from the real world we were one day to join as were the headwaters of Wash Branch from the "Banks of the Wabash far away." Farther, in fact, for we lived on White Oak, a tiny tributary of Wash Branch; and, in addition to the handicap common to our neighbors of living next to no place, we had the further disadvantage and, to us, unpleasant distinction of having next to nothing to live with.

The two ponies, one of which never could be harnessed until he had been worked a day or two, a worn-out wagon, with what few household goods we had been able to bring from Missouri, constituted our entire possession when we began to live anew. We did manage to get a cow some way; I think Uncle David must have been back of that; maybe we made part payment in cash, for I have heard my mother say that out of the $7 given her by the kindly group of men at Springfield, she had $5 when she drew up at Uncle David's gate. Now think of that, will you! Talk about making money go a long way! Here is the record so far as I have heard: Four hundred miles for the four of us, with an invalid half the way, a death in the family with funeral and incidental expenses, and all on $7 capital, leaving a surplus on hand of $5. This is the bare fact, and while it may give evidence of a woman's ability to manage, it certainly is also a most eloquent testimonial to the benevolence and hospitality of the Missouri people among whom our lot was cast.

Some few rude farming implements—a harrow, a double-shovel plow and an old "nigger" hoe with a handle that wouldn't stay in—were given us by neighbors who had better ones. Garden vegetables and a patch of corn were put in, and, almost before we knew it, we were started on the long trail. The long trail—who, of all those who travel its length, can tell how long it is? Its windings were so devious we could not guess its length, or if it had another end, or where it led. Its slopes were so frequent and so varied we could not know whether the general course was up or down. But traveling this route is a strenuous job, and we spent no time in speculation but went on down the road. Looked at from this end, or where we turned off into more inviting paths, it seems long enough and to spare, but its incline is upward by a gradual slant. Hear this, ye tired travelers who follow, and be of good cheer.

I could not tell all the windings of the covered way in which we walked if I would, and heaven knows I would not if I could. One thing distresses me no little as I look over these sketches. It is the frequent use of the first personal pronoun I. How I wish it could have been eliminated entirely. Had its use been calculated to call attention to, or claim credit for, the writer, I should have omitted it or kept silent. Perhaps it will be possible for me presently to stand at a distance and take a more general view of the little panorama, and, through it, of the life of which it is a small representative part.

About this time I enjoyed a long and unexpected visit at Uncle David's. They called for me early one morning and bundled me off breakfastless and befuddled to spend the entire day clambering about the haymows and hunting bird's nests in the orchard. Such unceremonious hospitality struck me as rather unusual; but, since it seemed to be meant kindly, I submitted in silence. Late that evening the elder brother came for me, and we rode home together on the back of old Charley. As we jogged along he told me in curious, hesitating words that two aunts we had never seen had come that day to make us a visit. When I had time to reflect on this, he added that each of them had brought a boy baby with her. I was a full week pondering the situation, and it was only when the aunts were preparing to take leave that I learned the babies had come to stay, and swallowed the lump that had been rising in my throat. And so the babies were soon toddling with us on the long trail. If their short legs retarded our progress somewhat, and made the way seem longer, their blithe and guileless presence brought brightness to us all, and in due time they were able to have their part in the heat and burden of the dragging days.

Through the misty film that time has stretched on this side of the retreating past, forms and faces come to view and the tragedies and farces of that simple life are re-enacted before me by individuals whose looks and acts so stir me at times that I want to rise and shout their names, and ask to be given my part and place with them. And then it comes to me, as when reality displaces a fading dream, that neither they nor I are back there, nor ever can be again. We are out on the stern marches of life, each following his own course, and that, too, on routes separated by ever widening angles. When the stretches of earthly pathways have been traversed perhaps we shall become as children again, and go back, in memory, to romp over the grassy slopes of youth; and then, as shadows softly steal about us, we shall gather, all of us, I trust, and be at home once more.

Who can work out the puzzle of lives that have been broken and embittered by misfortune not of their own making? Not I, certainly, and why should I try? It is the old problem of the purpose of trouble, over which the wisest and most patient of every generation have vexed themselves in vain. The world, as it presents itself to each generation, is like a tangle of wild woodland. Tree, shrub, plant, flower, animal and insect sing their little songs in harmony or discord; they cling to each other to help or hurt; they woo and wed and fight out their little battles; they enwrap themselves together in death grapple and embrace of love; there is no minute but celebrates the birth of new life, the struggle for existence and the beating out of some spent heart. Yet each one fills his place and lives out the law of his little life as though by the fixedness of fate. To our poor vision much of it seems amiss; but what do we know of the past investments or the future plans of the Silent One who is over all? Down among the chaos and clashings we become critical and discontented, when, if we could see the whole process as it has gone on for ages, and must, perhaps, for ages yet to come, we would be compelled to say of all creation that it is very good. The pain and loss we suffer in our little world is great enough for us, but how small indeed when compared with the plans of the Infinite, who out of it all is bringing salvation to our kind and glory to himself.

Is it a problem that in a world where God is supreme a woman, practically blind, should be left penniless and defenseless with her group of dependent children? Well, yes; a problem and a hard one, no doubt, is measured by human rules for calculating such things. Add to this that, in the after struggles, she should often go miles on foot to do rigorous service in a farmhouse, returning at night with a pillowslip full of meal or a piece of bacon, the scant reward of her toil and the scant food for her household; that her children, the equals of any other, should be frowned upon by those, poor enough themselves, because they were poorer still and their clothes uncomely; that hungry young minds should be

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY

NO POSITION, NO PAY

Largest and Best Equipped School in the West; 5 teachers of railroad experience. Students employed on 52 roads. Attendance doubled last year. Many states represented. Attend on credit. Car fare paid. Write for Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE TELEGRAPHY COLLEGE,
754 Irving Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

WE MAKE BANKERS

POSITIONS SECURED

or Tuition refunded. The CHILLICOTHE Business College has recently placed 90 students in Banks; 31 as teachers in Business Colleges. 27 states and Mexico represented. 53 Typewriters, 10 Instructors, 7 Assistants. Attend on Credit, Car Fare Paid. Write for free Catalog.

ALLEN MOORE, Pres.,
3883 Monroe St., Chillicothe, Mo.

BIG SALARIES

FOR TEACHERS

now being paid. Attend the Chillicothe Normal for Professional Training or for University Entrance. 1200 students. 26 instructors. Conservatory of Music and Oratory. Tuition, Board and Room-rent 48 weeks $135. Attend on Credit. Car fare paid. Send for free Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE NORMAL SCHOOL,
60 Normal Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

Oklahoma Christian University

Located at Enid, Oklahoma. One of the finest railroad centers in the southwest. Elevated region, bracing atmosphere and good water; excellent climate and fine buildings. A well equipped educational plant, one of the best west of the Mississippi River. Large and experienced Faculty, extensive courses—literary and Biblical. Superior advantages for Business Training, Music, Fine Art and Oratory. The following Schools and Colleges in successful operation:

I. College of Arts and Sciences.
II. College of the Bible.
III. College of Business.
IV. College of Music.
V. School of Oratory and Expression.
VI. School of Fine Art.
VII. Elective Courses in great variety.

EXPENSES MODERATE.

There is no better place in which to be educated than in a school located as this is in the heart of this great and rapidly developing southwest that offers better opportunities to young people than any other place in the United States. Preachers, Lawyers, Doctors and Business Men by the thousand are needed.

Next session opens September 15, 1908.

Send for catalogue to Miss Emma Frances Hartshorn, Registrar, Oklahoma Christian University.

E. V. ZOLLARS, President, O. C. U.

William Woods College

For Young Women

Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.

J. B. Jones, Pres.
Fulton, Mo.

denied books and papers and such advantages for improvement as are now granted freely to the criminal and degraded; and that, worst of all, their lot should be laid where no church influence is and where schools are poor; that all this and more should have to be endured for years with no hint of hope that a better day would ever dawn—I say, put this together and you have a problem indeed.

Yet, if the product is good who shall say of the process that it is bad? There are six years I would often have torn out of the book of memory if I could—the six years on Wash Branch. Were I to be guided by my own inclinations I would tear these leaves to fragments, trample them under my feet and curse them with bitter vindictiveness. But I would be wrong in this, for there sits yonder a woman, who has exercised a faith, and accomplished a work little short of wonderful to me, and who, after the tempests of a long day are spent, smiles and waits through the twilight afterglow till it shall be time to rest. I do not know how else her life could have counted for a tithe as much as it has, nor by what other process the richness of her later years could have been attained. Hard as the way has been, I would rather our feet should press again into every separate footprint of the long trail than that we should have walked in some more favored ways I know and taken the risk of uselessness and oblivion that are always incurred by lives of ease.

I can think, too, of a man I know—the blue-eyed boy who drove us over the Ozark hills. Then, and on the longer trail, he played the part of an elder brother with faithfulness and devotion. Whoever has gone from Kansas City to Denver over one of the great railroads that cross the state of Kansas has owed something of the safety and comfort of travel to him. He is held in honor by those who know him well, and no trust committed to him has ever suffered at his hands. When I think how this can not be said of a hundred others who had every opportunity denied him, I wonder if he would not be worth less to the world had he borne less responsibility when a boy.

And when another woman, after ten blissful years of wedded life, was left a widow with the tangled threads of an estate in disorder about her, could she have taken up the double task that fell to her and brought her own little ones, well equipped, to the activities of a needy world had she not seen her mother succeed with a similar burden a hundred fold heavier?

These queries have besieged me till I have had to conclude that God gives us what is best or else helps us to make the best of what he gives us, if we will.

Ah, well, we have reached the end of the long trail now. It led us to the land of Maturity. The gates of that new country swung back with surprising readiness when we knocked. We have been inside these years—long enough to make some acquaintances among the inhabitants and form a few friendships. I know not how it may be with others, and there are a host of them, who came up the same way, but for myself, I have not forgotten the long trail. Sometimes in an hour of leisure I gather about me a little group I know and tell them of the fun and frolic we used to have, and of certain boyish triumphs and successes I like to recall, telling them as much for my own profit as for the amusement of my listeners; occasionally I have mentioned a thorn or stone I happened to discover with my bare foot, but when little brows begin to cloud I draw the curtain on the scene, for I know they could not understand.

No part of the route over which an orphaned boy has to climb from a bitter and barren past to a place of usefulness in the world is unfamiliar to me. I can shut my eyes and conjure up the scene at each turn of the road. I know the location of every snag that can stub a toe and every rock that can start a stonebruise. I know every deep hole in the creek where crawdads and mussels can be dug out of the mud at the bottom on Sunday, when a boy's clothes are not fit to wear to Sunday-school. When I see a boy crying at a curbstone in a city street, or hear the sob of a child at night time, I could stop short and mingle my tears with theirs, for the fountain of childish grief is opened up anew. For this I am devoutly thankful; if the bleak blasts that beat upon us serve no other purpose than to drive us within sympathetic reach of others in like state they have made us rich indeed.

Nevertheless I have some regrets. Early experience has disappointments which no philosophy of later life can quite console. There are two men I solemnly decided to whip when I should be grown up. One of them was a farmer who beat me out of a dollar, twice-earned, cutting two acres of sprouts with the old "nigger" hoe, and the other was an older and better-clothed boy, who used to sneer at me in the district school. They needed it badly, both of them; I knew it then and I know it now; nothing else would meet the necessities of the case; but the treatment had to be postponed too long. The man was killed by accident some years ago, and the boy, son of a rich man that he was, is a drunkard now and poorer than I—may he be pitied—while I am a preacher and would not dare square accounts with them were all things favorable. Thus, with merciless irony, has the ruthless hand of time dealt with the treasured ambitions of my far-away youth.

The Long Trail—where is it, do you ask? Why, it runs close to where I live, and maybe you might discover it near you too, if you cared to cast about a little. And it is always thronged with travelers. The story I have told is one of many, and, for aught I know, tame and tedious compared with others that might be related. Many a flower-strewn path, along which the eager feet of pleasure-seekers run, winds round a bit and falls suddenly into the Long Trail; many a highway with finger-boards that point to riches and honor intersects the Long Trail at last, leaving its ambitious wayfarers no choice but to go that way; many a first trail across the trackless plain or woodman's tree-blazed pathway through the forest finds no issue of its own and turns from sheer helplessness, as did ours, into the Long Trail.

I go out this way sometimes and scan the faces of those who pass. When I can, I like to have a word with the weary ones, for, though it may be conceit of mine, I think the wise ones take it well from one who bears in his body the marks of a similar strife. What a privilege to look into the eyes of a wan-faced woman, as she leans over the tub of steaming suds, and give the grasp and look of one who understands; of all the grips and passes I know there is none I like so well to use. What a stimulating service to drop a word of cheer to struggling lads and lasses, who battle with adverse environment, and bid them fight on, with the assurance of victory at last; better than finding a home or

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN

Sixt'eth Session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture, New Laboratories. Splendid Campus, Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on request.

E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

BETHANY COLLEGE

Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environments well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET,
Bethany, W. Va.

TEXAS CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY
WACO, TEXAS

Thirty-sixth year. Faculty from leading Universities of Europe and America. Graduates take advanced standing in the older American Universities. Music, Art and Oratory advantages unsurpassed in the Southwest. Three Grand Pianos, twenty-five new Upright Pianos and Pipe Organ in daily use. Up-to-date Practical Business College in connection, first-class Library and Reading Room, five well-equipped Laboratories, capacious Natatorium and modern Gymnasium. Athletics the best. Pure Artesian Water. Our own heat and light plans.

Box 111, CLINTON LOCKHART, Ph. D., LL. D., President.

EUREKA COLLEGE

A record of fifty-two successful years. Six substantial and convenient buildings, lighted with electricity and warmed by central heating plant. Beautiful campus shaded with natural trees. Biological and physical laboratories with modern equipment. Carefully selected library, including the best periodicals. Lida's Wood, girls' dormitory, known far and wide. Wholesome atmosphere. Eureka stands for the best. Courses offered: Collegiate, Preparatory, Sacred Literature, Public Speaking, Music, Art and Commercial.

For catalogue and further information, address ROBERT E. HIERONYMUS, President

MIAMI UNIVERSITY THE FAMOUS OLD COLLEGE OF THE CENTRAL WEST

(Supported the by State of Ohio.)

85th year opens September 16th. Free Tuition. Low cost of living. Wide range of studies. Thorough instruction. Christian influences. No saloons. A well-equipped gymnasium with specially trained physical director. Beautiful campus of sixty-five acres. Splendid buildings. Modern equipment. Write for catalogue and handsomely illustrated bulletin to the President.

GUY POTTER BENTON, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ohio.

giving a home to the earth's orphans is it to help them make homes of their own.

Occasionally as I wait by the trail I get sight of a trudging youngster different from the rest. Often I stop such an one for a good look into his eyes. I have a feeling that long ago I lost one like him, and I can't get rid of the thought that he may happen along some day, and if he does, I must speak him a word of cheer. But he does not come, though I keep watching for him. I have met many lads who looked like him, and some who had his ways, but he someway never comes; perhaps I should not know him if he did, and perhaps he has come this way once and will come no more. I do not mind the nickels I have spent and the well-meant quest for him—I am well content they should go for what good they can accomplish, just in memory of him, you know—perhaps, after all, that is as much as I shall ever be able to do for him now.

(To Be Concluded.)

The Exodus of Fox Hollow "Still."

By Thomas A. Smoot.

In the early fifties, when the first temperance agitation began to sweep our state, one after another of the distilleries of Rock County were pushed out by public sentiment, until none remained save that of Big Bill Surles, in Fox Hollow. Time was when every well-to-do farmer in the section had his own distillery. Even my grandfather, upright man that he was, had his distilling plant, the foundations of which I used to see by the cool, little run below the Big Tom spring. When father came along as successor to the Singleton estate, he had already felt the influence of the temperance movement enough to lock up the old "still" with a positive click that meant it should not be operated again. After that he set his face against the business, and was a positive factor in getting his neighbors to follow his example; though what he did was purely by moral suasion and not in the way of force.

But Big Bill Surles did not yield to the atmospheric pressure adverse to the making of ardent spirits, and continued to ply his trade so industriously that Fox Hollow, a rugged ravine three miles from my home, became the rendezvous for all the bibulous devotees for a great scope of country roundabout.

Big Bill was a man of tremendous size and of bulldozing qualities, and most people stood in awe of his physical prowess. It was known that he had beaten and maimed several persons against whom his wrath had been stirred; and rumor connected him with a mysterious tragedy of darker hue that had occurred a good many years before the time of which I write.

Knowing the giant-like bully to be such a dangerous man, father had but little to do with him; and but for chance of circumstances this denizen of Fox Hollow would probably have lived to his dying day in his neighboring stronghold, so far as the Singleton family was concerned; but these circumstances are what compose my story, the very first link in which is the fact that for some weeks preceding the events hereafter recorded, a leakage from our corn-cribs became so persistent that the disappearance of the grain was easily perceptible, and caused comment in the household. Father didn't say much; but it was discussed in a cautious manner by him and mother, none of the younger children being allowed to know of it. Only my brother Frank and I were granted the privilege of hearing their serious conversation upon the subject.

Finally, father fell upon a plan of trapping the thief. The trap was to mark the corn in some way so it could be identified in case of its being found. The marking was to be done by selecting the red ears, breaking them, and welding them together again by the use of sticks about four inches long, sharpened at both ends, and thrust firmly into the pith at each of the freshly-broken ends of the cob. Then if the stolen corn were discovered on the cob it could be claimed; if the red cob were found, the tell-tale stick within would convict the thief.

Frank and I went through the cribs with father and picked out the red ears lying upon the surface of the heaps, these numbering in ratio about one to twenty of the white variety. We were very solemn as we did it and very quiet and stealthy; the latter because we did not want any of the hands to know of our trap and the former because we thought it would be an awful thing if trusted servants were proved to be the thieves.

"Now, boys," said father seriously, when he had finished our disagreeable task, "Mum's the word. Don't cheep, don't even hint to anybody. Keep your eyes and ears open, and don't either of you make a move without first consulting me."

The following night a large haul was made upon one of the cribs, and father went to make an inspection of all of the tenement-houses on the plantation. Upon various pretexts he visited every shanty; but no clue was found.

During the evening after his search I happened to overhear him talking to mother in a low tone. I caught only a part of a sentence, but that much electrified me with excitement.

The fragment was: "I have a suspicion. . . . Big Bill. . . . Fox Hollow."

I saw mother shake her head with fear written upon her face—a kind of fear one doesn't easily forget. I carried the look with me to bed. I slept but little during the night, and no doubt it was the nervous pitch to which I worked myself up that made me spring out of bed the next morning before day and hurry off to Fox Hollow. A sort of fierce, compelling sense of an impending crisis seemed to urge me on, and I did not stop to reason or argue with myself until I had quite reached the somber ravine, more gloomy and threatening than ever by reason of the morning twilight that hung over it. I had never been to the "still," but I knew about where it was located, and soon, nervous and excited, I came to the low-pitched log structure spread out on the little branch bank.

It was just light enough for me to see, and in the hasty glance that I cast about the premises, I descried a huge pile of corn-cobs, to which I hastened. I found upon examination that the cobs were fresh, and among them I discovered, here and there, a red one. I picked up one of them, eagerly pulled its ends, and lo! they separated, showing the incriminating stick within. My heart thumped like a steam engine as I began to gather several more of the red specimens and to stuff them into my pockets. Just then I heard a gruff

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"IN THE HEART OF THE BLUE GRASS."

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

Attend Transylvania University. A standard institution with elective courses, modern conveniences, scholarly surroundings, fine moral influences. Expenses reasonable. Students from twenty-seven states and seven foreign countries. First term begins September 14th, 1908. Write for catalog to-day.

President' Transylvania University, Lexington,

FORTIETH YEAR.

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.

Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address

MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.

Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.

HIRAM COLLEGE

HIRAM, OHIO.

From articles by Hiram students in Hiram College Advance.

"I came to Hiram as the result of a deliberate choice. As I learned more of the school, I came to feel that Hiram was truly an ideal among small colleges. Its size, its standing among large schools, the spirit of its students and the peculiar devotion of its Faculty, all impressed me most favorably. I have not been disappointed."

The "Home-Coming" issue of the Advance, containing this and other articles of students, the inaugural address of President Bates, poem by Jessie Brown Pounds, articles by Judge F. A. Henry, and Professors E. B. Wakefield, B. S. Dean and G. H. Colton, sent free on application, also catalog. Address J. O. Newcomb, Secretary, Hiram, Ohio. Mention "The Christian-Evangelist."

voice call: "Hi there, villyan, what you doin' on my premises?"

I dropped the handful of cobs I held and turned in terror to face Big Bill standing near me. If I said anything, memory fails to recall it; but I have a recollection of a sense of despair that expressed itself in a wild scream. I wanted to run; Big Bill saw that I did.

"Stand still, or I'll blow a hole through you," he snarled. "You're one of that rascal Singleton's boys, eh? Sneakin' 'round like a hound dog seein' what you can see, air you? What you got in them pockets?" All the time that he spoke he was with maudlin look and fumbling fingers trying to cock an old horse-pistol, which he now held leveled at me.

"Just some corn-cobs," I stammered.

"Hand 'em here, you low-down thief," he thundered, drawing nearer and poking the pistol close to my face. I am sure he did not suspect the snare in the cobs; but knowing they represented stolen goods, he was bent on finding the nature of their testimony against him.

My wits came to me and worked fast. It was evident that he was partly intoxicated, and I knew that I could outrun him if it came to a foot race. The pistol was what bothered me. I must be rid of that, or there was no hope of escape.

I drew the cobs out of my pocket as if to hand him; but quick as a flash, using the handful for a club, I struck the old pistol such a hard lick that it was knocked out of the ruffian's grasp clear into the little brook near by. Then, turning, I fled with all of the power left me.

I gave just one backward glance, during which I saw Big Bill start after me with the cry of a madman, only to fall sprawling over the branch bank with yells and bitter oaths. In a few moments I was out of sight, and scarcely stopped until I rushed exhausted into the dining room at home, where the family were at breakfast. I still clutched two red cobs in my hand, and these I held aloft, sobbing hysterically:

"I found them, father! . . .Big Bill! . . . Fox Hollow!"

I was feverish and ill all that day, and was kept in my room. Mother tried to be cheerful, but that same distressing look of fear was underneath the surface of her smiles. She tried to keep me from talking of Big Bill, and evaded my questions as well as her frank soul would permit; but bit by bit I twisted out of her that the township constable had gone to the county-seat to get the sheriff and some deputies to help arrest the thief. I learned afterwards that the constable was unwilling to undertake the arrest alone, for fear that the stiller's accomplices might make with him a combined resistance.

The sheriff and his deputies did not reach the neighborhood until late, and it was decided that they should guard our house until morning, and then make the arrest.

When morning broke, the officers, heavily armed, proceeded to Fox Hollow. There had been wild rumors of gathering forces at the distillery, and everybody expected a fight and bloodshed; but the arresting party was destined to meet a pleasant surprise, for upon reaching the rugged rendezvous they found the "still," corn-cobs, and all, in ashes. The wary desperado had decamped to parts unknown to them, and which, happily, might not know him. Save for the babble of the cool spring branch, silence held undisturbed sway, and the whole ravine was as lonesome-looking as a graveyard.—Epworth Era.

From New Hampshire (names and dates will be furnished if called for): Infant Class Teacher (seriously and affectionately: Now, children, what must we all be to go to heaven? Little Girl (aged 5): Dead.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

A Christian Home and High Grade College for Girls and Young Women

College Preparatory, Full College and Special Courses. Faculty of experienced specialists. Superior advantages in Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science and Physical Training. If you want good care, culture, thoroughness and satisfactory results, investigate.

For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. W. T. MOORE, President.

200 College Place, Columbia, Mo.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

CANTON, MO.

A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.

Send for free illustrated Catalog.

Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

MISSOURI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

ONE YEAR FREE AT ROYAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, LEIPZIG, FOR THE HONOR GRADUATE.

Faculty of 30 graduate instructors. Vocal and Instrumental. Classes and private lessons. Languages, Oratory, Dramatic Art. Normal courses for Teachers. Boarding department for young ladies, one-half block from school. Careful supervision. Students met at train. Terms moderate. Write for Catalogue.

J. C. EISENBERG, DIRECTOR 2108 LAFAYETTE AVE. ST. LOUIS, MO.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College Lynchburg, Virginia.

Classed by the U. S. Commissioner of Education as one of the fourteen "A" colleges for women in the United States. Four Laboratories; Astronomical Observatory; Gymnasium; boating course, etc. Fifty acres in the campus. Endowment reduces cost to students to $300 a year for full literary courses. For catalogue, address WM. W. SMITH, A. M., LL. D., President.

Who Should Come TO THE College of the Bible?

Every person, man or woman, old or young, who wants a thorough knowledge of the Bible.

If you intend to be a preacher you should come.

If you are already preaching, but need a better knowledge of the Bible, you should come.

If you are a Y. M. C. A. worker or if you expect to become one, you should come.

If you are a Sunday-school worker, teacher or superintendent you should come.

If you are a Christian Endeavor worker or C. W. B. M. worker, you should come.

If you are a missionary or intend to be Home or Foreign, you should come.

If you have perplexing questions about the Bible which you need help in solving, you should come.

If you have graduated from some school where the Bible is not made more prominent than any other study, you should come.

The College of the Bible is pre-eminently a Bible school.

For complete information address,

Publicity Dept. THE COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE, Lexington, Ky.

Drink Time.

"Steadily man has been forced to the conclusion that for economic reasons he can't afford to drink," writes George C. Lawrence in "Appleton's." "In the last century the temperance clock has gone ahead more than twelve hours. The per capita consumption of spirits has steadily been decreasing in all countries which are advancing. A hundred years ago, for example, drinking among gentlemen began with rising. To-day it only begins at 5 o'clock. The very fact that former English marriages were celebrated before noon was due largely to the law's recognition of the fact that after that hour no gentleman worthy of the name was supposed to be sober enough to go through the marriage ceremony with responsibility. Ask the average man to-day about his drinking, and in the great majority of cases he will reply: 'Oh, I never take anything until after office hours!' Nothing but an economic reason will explain this arbitrary division, for morally it would seem as wrong to drink at 7 p. m. as at 7 a. m. Economically, however, the matter is different, since it is from this point of view a question of efficiency, of producing result units. And experience has shown that alcohol will not produce them."

The Frolic Room.

Paid a visit, yesterday,
To the Frolic Room:
Azure Eyes was playing horse,
Riding on a broom.

Curly Head was building blocks,
Lying on the floor;
Dimpled Fist his bottle had,
Wanting nothing more.

Azure Eyes is nearly five,
Curly Head is two;
Dimpled Fist is nothing yet—
He's so very new!

Romped with them a little while,
Then I went away;
Looking back, I saw them, still
Busy at their play.

Azure Eyes had got her doll,
Curly Head his blocks,
Dimpled Fist was quite content,
Pulling off his socks.

Took a crowded subway car,
In the noise and gloom:
What a lucky man, I said,
To have a Frolic Room!

—John M. Waring, in The Church Standard.

Reflecting Rebecca.

They called her "Rebby" and "Becca" and "Bessie" and "Reb" and "Bec" for short and for sweet. When they were very confidential with her or very grown up or very stern it was full, plain Re-bec-ca. So this day, she was sitting on the floor, her book upside down, her curls nearly upside down, too, her head hung so low, and her temper upside down, bias and contrariwise. So mother said with grave gentleness:

"Rebecca!"

Silence.

"Rebecca!"

Curls tumble about.

"Re-bec-ca? Daughter?"

At last a very slow, "Well, mother?"

"Pick up your book, darling, and spell the word aloud again, letter by letter."

"R-e-f-l-e-c-t-i-n-g."

Mother pronounced it carefully and slowly two or three times, giving the every-which-way curls time to fall into their own pretty place and the hot, cloudy little face time to clear up.

"Now can you say it?"

"Re-flec-ting," whispered pouting, rosy lips. Then there was a spring from the floor to mother's arms.

"I wish there never was—any more—ever—old hard words!"

"And mother wishes there never were—any more—ever—naughty tempers!"

"Mother, what makes them?"

"I think it is just a case of reflecting, daughter Rebecca."

"Re-flect-ing what?"

"Come here, Bessie, with me."

By this time all the clouds had cleared from Bessie's beautiful face and her mother led her across the room and in front of an oil painting that hung on the wall above a shelf where fresh flowers were always kept. It was a picture of the dear sister who just a few weeks before had left the home where mother and Bessie lived, to go to the heavenly home.

"Did you ever know sister Ethel to be cross with you or mother, dear?"

"No, mamma," whispered the little one, her blue eyes filling with tears. How she missed the absent sister!

"Do you know why? She was just a faithful little reflector of dear Jesus and he never shows us anything but goodness and sweetness to reflect. One day, kneeling by mother's side, sister Ethel gave her heart to Jesus and promised him she would always try to let her heart be a little mirror to catch the light of his loveliness and shine it out. You know how father turned the light of your little hand mirror down the dark cistern the other day to see if there was a rat in the water? That was the mirror reflecting the sun into a dark place. Now if my sweet Rebecca will let Jesus have her heart he will shine there and she can reflect that light out instead of getting caught in dark, naughty tempers and sulks. Do you understand?"

The child thought she did and her mother left her standing in front of Ethel's picture thinking—thinking about one rainy day when she had the toothache. Mother was out and Ethel had to play nurse and doctor and mother to the cross little girl and Rebecca had slapped that dear sister twice. But Ethel had just said, "Poor darling! The tooth hurts so!" and had kissed her and began a new story.

"I'll try!" whispered the child to herself, and kneeling down beside the low seat where mother had been she asked Jesus to shine in her heart and help her to reflect his gentleness and sweetness.

The next day mother was in bed sick. Rebecca had been invited to a party given at the home of her very dearest friend, Mattie Graves. But mother was shut up in her bedroom with only the doctor and papa slipping quietly in and out and no one but Katie in the kitchen to talk to, and think of the disappointed little girl. What a chance for reflecting!

"What can I do, Katie?" asked Rebecca, going into the kitchen, with a smile on her face. "Can I help you?"

"Well, now, look at that!" said Katie, glancing up from her ironing. "Look at the shine on your rosy face and it raining and no party and the mother sick. Why, it's helping you are, child, just to be round that way. You're like the reflector up there!"

"Am I, Katie, truly?" asked delighted Bessie. "Is that what you call that shiny thing behind the lamp chimney?"

"That's what it is, sure enough. And I have to be keeping it bright or it does not reflect anything but smoke and dust. Sure you can help me. Just sit down there on your little cricket by the fire and tell me a story out of one of your Sunday-school books. Then this ironing will fly!"

The next day mother was better enough so Rebecca could sit on the bed beside her and tell her the whole story something as I have told you—the simple story of a little child's victory over the naughty darkness that selfishness makes in our hearts, darkness that the light of the blessed Jesus can always shine away.—June Herald.

Keeps the Face Fair

Glenn's Sulphur Soap cleanses the skin and clears the face of pimples, blackheads, blotches, redness and roughness. Its use makes the skin healthful and the complexion clear and fresh. Sold by druggists. Always ask for

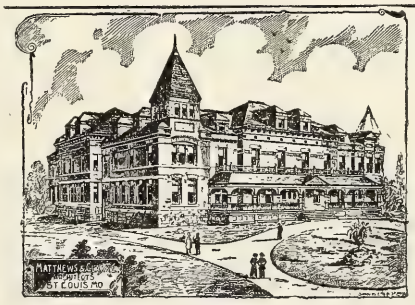
Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

Glass Telegraph Poles.

Europe is now beginning to use glass telegraph poles, and patents have been granted in Germany and other European countries, as well as in the United States, for a machine to be used in their manufacture. The poles are said to be especially valuable in countries where wooden poles are quickly destroyed by insects or by climate. The imperial post department of Germany has already ordered that these poles be used in its telegraph and telephone lines. The poles will be more sightly than the present wooden affairs, and in countries where the forests are nearly exhausted, they will lessen somewhat the great drain upon the rapidly vanishing forests.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.



CARR-BURDETTE COLLEGE

AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, ART AND EXPRESSION

In location, building, climate and health conditions, home furnishings, department equipments and faculty Carr-Burdette is the peer of any Young Ladies' Boarding School North or South. Experienced educators have so adjudged it. It is select and limited in number. Building and grounds deeded to the Church free from debt. Bible taught every day. Write at once for catalogue and read for yourself, or visit us and see for yourself. Address,

SECRETARY, CARR-BURDETTE,
Sherman, Texas.

BUTLER COLLEGE

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.

GLORIA IN EXCELSIS

A SUPERB CHURCH HYMNAL

Edited and Prepared by the 20th Century Committee, which is composed of more than Twenty of our Leading Brethren.

W. E. M. HACKLEMAN, EDITOR

UBLISHED IN A COMPLETE EDITION AND AN ABRIDGED EDITION

COMPLETE EDITION

contains

624 PAGES

and

814 HYMNS

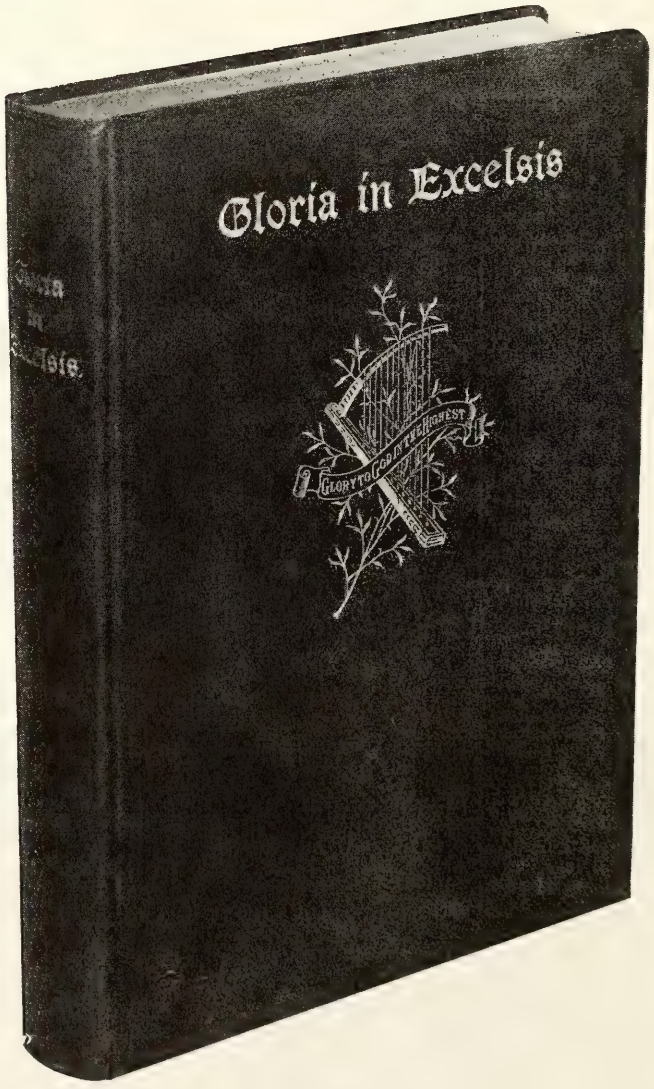
also

64 PAGES

of

RESPONSIVE

READINGS



ABRIDGED EDITION

contains

400 PAGES

and

503 HYMNS

Also

64 PAGES

of

RESPONSIVE

READINGS

EDITIONS AND PRICES.

Complete Edition.

	Postpaid Per Copy	Not prepaid Per Dozen	Not prepaid Per Hundred
Silk Cloth Binding	$1.00	$ 9.50	$75.00
Silk Cloth, Leather Back	1.25	12.00	95.00

Abridged Edition.

Board Binding	$ .55	$5.00	$40.00
Silk Cloth Binding	.65	6.50	50.00
Silk Cloth, Leather Back	.85	8.50	65.00

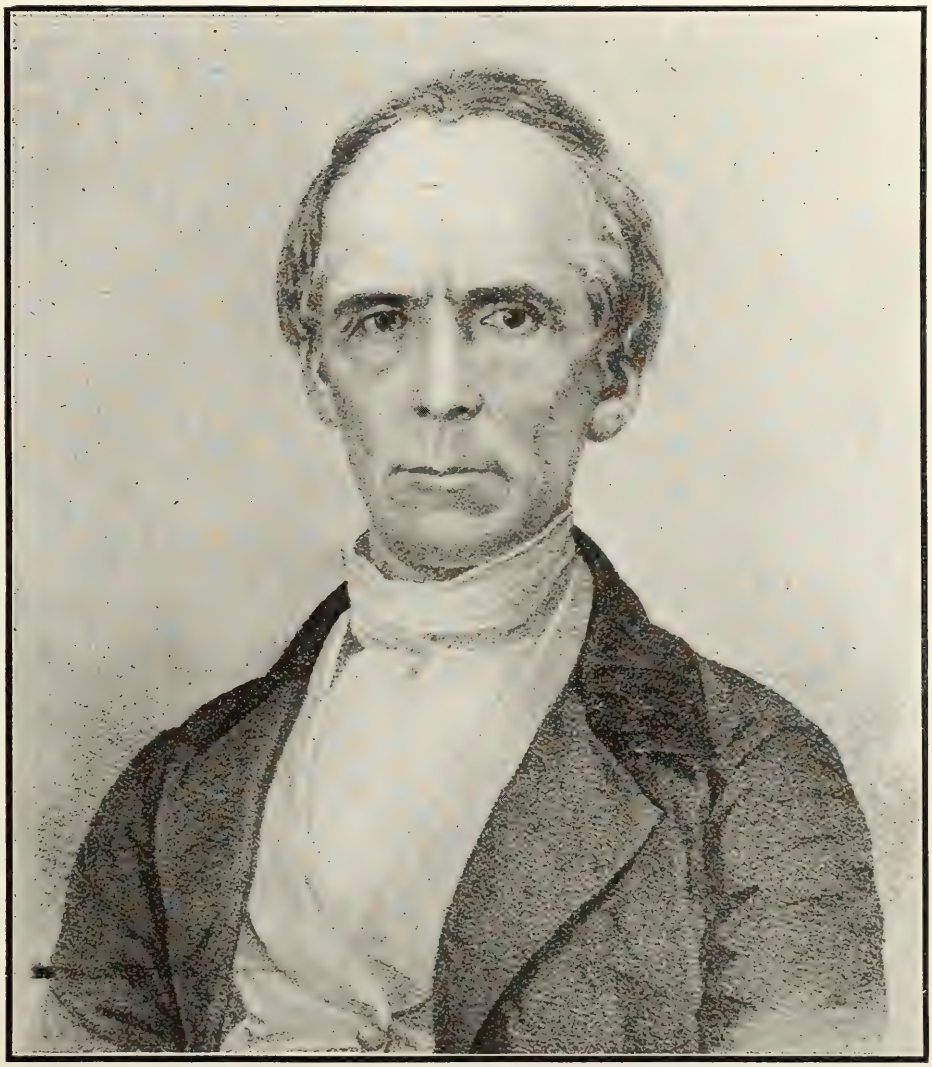
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

VOLUME XLV. NUMBER 30.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, JULY 23, 1908.



JOHN O'KANE,

A Pioneer Evangelist of the Reformation Movement. See page 945.

The Christian-Evangelist

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER, B. B. TYLER, W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

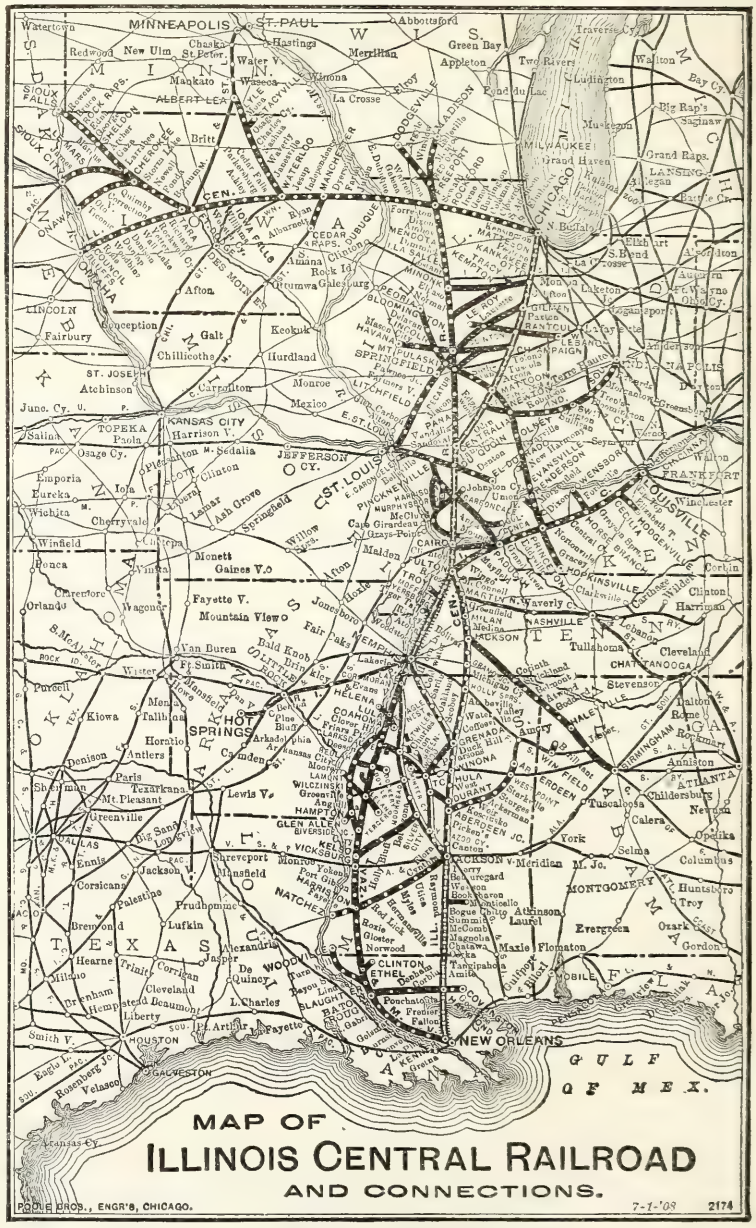
For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 931
Editorial—
Where the Blame Should Rest.....932
"Sound in Faith and in Charity"....932
A Cruel Joke.....933
Notes and Comments.....933
Current Religious Thought.....934
Editor's Easy Chair 935
Contributed Articles—
The Unshepherded Church and Ministerial Supply. G. B. Van Arsdall....936
Ante-Bellum Religion in Old Missouri. J. A. Smith 937
As Seen from the Dome. By F. D. Power 938
Salvation's Story (Poem) 938
What Are We Here For? (Poem). Thomas Curtis Clark 937
Naaman's Trust and Distrust. Prof. I. B. Grubbs 939
Our Budget 940
Adult Bible Class Movement.....943
A Diamond Anniversary 944
News from Many Fields.....949
Evangelistic 950
Sunday-school 951
Midweek Prayer-meeting 952
Christian Endeavor 952
People's Forum 953
Obituaries 953
The Home Department 954

THE QUICKEST AND BEST ROUTE TO NEW ORLEANS, LA.



"The Christian-Evangelist Special"
TO
The New Orleans Convention,
OCTOBER, 1908,
Will go over the
Illinois Central Railroad.
Write to us for particulars.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS O
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about i
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St Louis

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, JULY 23, 1908. Number 30.

Current Events

Railroads and Newspapers.

In a test case which had been brought before him, Judge Kohlsaat, of the United States Circuit Court at Chicago, has decided that it is unlawful for a railroad to accept advertising as pay for transportation. The case was brought against the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville railroad (the Monon) under the Hepburn rate law for issuing railroad tickets to the value of $500 to the publishers of "Munsey's Magazine." The claim was made by the railroad that the advertising was fully worth the price put upon it, that the road therefore received the full value of the tickets which it issued, and that the mere circumstance that no money passed in the transaction did not constitute a violation of the spirit or meaning of the law. In his decision, Judge Kohlsaat attempts to make a clear distinction between the sale of an article for money and the exchange or bartering of it for other commodities. In the first place the price obtained for the article is clear and evident upon the surface of the transaction; in the second, it depends upon the value which may be set, perhaps arbitrarily, upon the things received in exchange for it. There is no possibility of uniformity of prices or rates under a system of barter. As a matter of fact, the valuation placed upon an article for purposes of exchange is generally more than its cash selling price. So in the present case, the publishers in return for their $500 worth of advertising accepted transportation hedged about with limitations which would not have been made if they had paid the $500 in cash. Presumably, therefore, it was recognized by both parties that the $500 worth of advertising was not the full equivalent of $500 in money. The law declares that a railroad shall not accept any compensation for transportation "greater or less or different" from that named in the published schedules. By adding that word "different," the law seems to authorize the courts to pronounce against the trading of tickets for truck, without compelling them to determine whether in any given instance the commodity offered in exchange is worth more or less than the published value of the ticket. If this decision is affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, to which the case has been appealed, it will close the door at once to all the possibilities of giving transportation in exchange not only for advertising but for services of various kinds.

Collisions Impossible.

Trials are being made this week of a device which, it is claimed, will make railroad collisions absolutely impossible. Preliminary tests give promise that this rather sweeping claim will be substantiated. The device is an elaboration of the block system. Under the old block system, the road is divided into sections as short as the distance within which two trains can safely approach each other, and the entrance of a train upon a given section automatically sets a signal at each end of the section so that no other train can enter it without disregarding the danger signal. The defect of the old system is that it is entirely possible for an engineer to disregard a danger signal. It has been asserted that the schedules and regulations of some roads absolutely require engineers to disregard danger signals and enter blocks which are already occupied. The essence of the new device is that, instead of merely setting a danger signal, it throws up beside the rail a lever which strikes and sets the air-brake on any engine which may pass and so brings it to a stop. It is claimed that, with this mechanism in operation two trains approaching each other on the same track will come to a stop in time to prevent accident even if the entire crews of both trains are asleep, drunk or dead. The experiments are being made under the direction of the interstate commerce commission which was authorized by the last Congress to spend $50,000 for this purpose. Safety is certainly as important as rate regulation. It is as much the government's business to prevent murder as to prevent robbery by the railroads.

The Way of the Liar is Hard.

Twenty years ago, says Elias Nelson in the "Pacific Monthly," a man was put in jail and held under $2,000 bond on a charge of perjury for swearing that a certain piece of land was not desert and would produce crops without irrigation, and now that same land is producing thirty-five bushels of wheat to the acre by dry farming. This shows how difficult it is to tell a lie about the West which will really hold water and stand the test of time. An exaggeration is only a slight anticipation of the truth. It errs neither in subject, predicate nor modifiers, but only in the tense of the verb. This real estate agent of twenty years ago doubtless made an honest effort to lie about the land. He had every reason to believe that it was worthless. He was as painstaking and persistent a prevaricator as any contemporary promoter, and probably he died in the full assurance that he had succeeded in making an assertion which had no relation to facts either past, present or future. But it was no use. Truth travels faster than bad news in the west. Many a robust and well-intended lie has been overtaken by the growing fact and been turned into truth even before its author could be indicted for perjury.

Two Blades of Grass.

The national association of hotel proprietors, called the Hotelmen's Mutual Benefit Association, has been in session at Saratoga. A prominent member urged united action to combat temperance legislation and the "policy of destruction and negation" of the prohibition fanatics who "have never caused two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before." Perhaps they have not, but they have made one drop of rye to flow where two flowed before, and one jag to grow where two grew before. They have also made porterhouse steak and good roast beef to appear on many a table which had forgotten that there was any kind of meat except liver and soup-bones. Likewise in numerous families they have made two suits of clothes and two new dresses grow where none had grown for a long while. Oh, we are not so sure that this temperance proposition is all "destruction and negation." It depends on the point of view. For the one business of liquor selling and the one institution of the police court, it is. But for the savings banks, the grocery stores, the meat markets, the clothing and shoe stores, for the churches, for domestic happiness, for civic righteousness, we reckon that the temperance policy is meaning quite the opposite of "destruction and negation." When a set of men are interested in selling a dime's worth of booze for the ruin of a million-dollar boy, stopping the transaction may look like "destruction and negation" to those who are only after the dime, but it is a good business proposition to those who are interested in the boy.

Science or Premonition.

Attention is again called to the rather curious fact that there is no absolutely certain way of telling that a person is dead until dissolution begins. A Connecticut woman was lately pronounced dead and turned over by the doctor to the undertaker, and all preparations had been made for the funeral. Then the doctor had a sort of "feeling" or "premonition" that the case might not be quite over. So he returned and applied various processes and methods until the woman revived. The report gives great prominence to certain "visions" which the woman is said to have had during her death-like sleep—visions to which we are not ready to ascribe any significance for eschatology, though they may have some for psychology. But an interesting and rather alarming feature of the case is that it was no scientific test but only a vague and unreliable "premonition" which gave warning that the patient was not dead. We do not like the idea of depending on a doctor's premonitions in a matter of life and death.

The government made a loan of a million dollars to the Jamestown Exposition. Up to date it has received back only $102,046. It is now trying by legal process to get possession of the remaining property of the exposition to satisfy the claim as far as possible. The buildings and equipment of a last year's exposition—the value of which is comparable to that of a last year's bird's nest—are a meagre security for a debt of nine hundred thousand dollars.

Editorial

Where the Blame Should Rest.

Since the publication of Brother Todd's paper on "The Evangelism for the Times" has given occasion for criticism against our congress and the committee on program and the Campbell Institute, "the new theology," etc., the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST feels unwilling to let the matter pass without assuming the full responsibility for the reading of the paper before our congress, and for its publication. More than a year ago Brother Todd read the paper before the New York Ministerial Institute, and sent it to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for publication. On reading it, we advised its author to withhold it from publication until it had passed the ordeal of criticism in our congress, as one of the purposes of our congress is to deal with questions of this character. We promised to see if we could not secure a place for it on the program of the next congress. Later we suggested it to the committee on program, and it was given a place. It was read before our congress in Bloomington, and was received with unmistakable evidence of appreciation for its ability and timeliness. In the discussion of the paper the view was expressed that it was rather severe and caustic in its criticism—an opinion which we had expressed in returning the paper to its author—but no one interpreted the paper as meaning that all the faults enumerated were applicable to all our evangelists, or all of them to any one evangelist. But the consensus of opinion was that the paper should be published, inasmuch as it was felt there were tendencies in certain directions which needed checking. In the sincere conviction that its publication could do no harm to any worthy minister, but would possibly profit many by suggesting faults to be avoided, we decided to publish it. We are, therefore, responsible both for its appearance on the program of the congress and for its publication in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If, therefore, the publication of the article was "the greatest mistake of your (our) life," as one evangelist expresses it, or if the giving of the paper to the public in our columns was a sin, as another evangelist has suggested to us, who wrote he was praying for our forgiveness, the blame should be specifically located where it belongs. We do not wish others to suffer for any mistake or sin of ours. If it was a mistake, it was not the first one we have made, and we fear it will not be the last one. But God knows how to overrule even our mistakes for the good of his cause. We do not yet see that it was a mistake. We know, and we believe our ministers know, that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the friend of every true and worthy evangelist and pastor among us, even of those who, like ourselves, make mistakes. When it is understood, as it ought to be, that the minister who wrote the paper, and the editor who published it, were prompted by the sincerest motive, viz., by the desire to improve our evangelism, already the most successful known to modern times, all spirit of acrimony and of bitterness should be eliminated from our discussion. Time and again we have said, in public speech and in public print, that no evangelists since apostolic times have been, and can be, so successful in winning men to Christ as our own ministers, with the simple gospel message which they have to deliver. No one can be more appreciative of, or more grateful for, this fact, than ourselves. But it is vain—it is worse than vain—to shut our eyes to faults that mar the success of not a few of our ministers. He is indeed right who protests against the division of our ministers into two distinct classes. The pulpit that has no evangelism in it is practically a vacant pulpit. The criticism, therefore, does not concern the few men known as professional evangelists, but all who seek in their preaching to so present the gospel as to convict men of sin, and bring them, in faith and penitence, to the world's only Savior and Redeemer. It is vain, we say, for us to ignore the fact that our cause has suffered great injury in many localities from the mistakes of some of its advocates, both in their spirit and methods. No one will deny this fact. Ought we not, then, to seek to remedy these faults? Does the effort to do so imply any lack of appreciation of our ministers in general, or of our evangelists in particular? To seek to make such use of an honest criticism, or of the publication of such a criticism, against the man who wrote it, or the paper that published it, is the result either of ignorance or of an unworthy motive.

The Editor of this paper has been an evangelist, in his day, and has held some successful meetings, but he is conscious now of a certain disproportion of emphasis in his preaching at that time which, we believe, prevented a larger success than might otherwise have been possible. We would gladly save others, if we could, from our own earlier mistakes. And yet we know how delicate a thing it is to criticise. The man who does it should search his own heart, as with a lighted candle, to know that his motive is true and right, and then should write on his knees, metaphorically, at least, with a profound sense of humility and of love toward those he criticises. Any criticism conceived in a different spirit, while it may accomplish good, will cause unnecessary pain. But a certain sense of mortification comes to all of us when we stand face to face with our own faults, no matter how kindly they may be pointed out to us. The first feeling, perhaps, is to resent it. But the second sober thought brings us to ourselves, and we thank the man who loved us well enough to tell us our faults.

One other thing, we believe, needs to be said before we pass from this discussion. Whatever faults there may be in our ministers, whether evangelists or pastors, are but the reflection of faults which exist in our churches, for, at last, the churches get what they demand. Are there not churches which are far more concerned in increasing their membership than they are about the real spiritual renewal of those who are brought into the church? Brother Todd's paper was a criticism of the churches, no less than of the evangelists. Let us, then, all seek to profit by it, whether we be evangelists, pastors, elders, deacons, private members, editors or teachers, and seek to come to a higher appreciation of the infinite sacredness of the work of so conveying God's message to men as to win them from the love and service of sin, to the love and service of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whose blessed name be glory and dominion forever and ever!

"Sound in Faith and in Charity."

Such was Paul's exhortation to his son in the gospel. A great deal of stress has been laid on soundness in the faith throughout the history of the church, and too often soundness of the faith has been identified with conformity of one's theological views to the prevailing creed of the times. To be sound in the faith, in Paul's meaning of the phrase, was, no doubt, to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as the divine son of God, by whose incarnation, life, teaching, death, resurrection from the dead, ascension to the right hand of the Father and the sending of the Holy Spirit, provision has been made for man's redemption from sin and transformation into the image of God. He who believes on Christ, in this sense, is "sound in the faith," however much his theological opinions may vary from the prevailing views.

But how little attention has been given to soundness in charity, or love! If Paul was right in giving the supremacy to love, then it is even more important to be sound in love than to be sound in faith. What is it to be "sound in love"? Doubtless it is to love God with the whole mind and heart, and to love one's neighbor as himself. It is "to love one another even as Christ loved us," which is the "new commandment." Measured by this standard, how many of us are sound in love?

We become alarmed when a brother gives evidence of errancy in his theological opinions, but the most manifest departures from the law of love seem to awaken little concern. It is clear that in these estimates we do not have the mind of Christ, nor even that of his apostles. Certainly we do not need to condone departures from the faith, especially when there is a proper distinction between faith and opinion, but what we do need is to realize much more vividly than has been done the gravity of unsoundness in love. The heresy of the heart is worse than heresy of the head, and to hate our brother is a much greater offense in the sight of God than an honest misunderstanding of his word. Let it be our aim and ambition to be sound, that is to say, healthy and sane, both in our faith and in our love. So shall we best fulfill our mission as Disciples of Christ, seeking to bring all Christians into the unity of the faith and to bind them together in the bonds of love.

A Cruel Joke.

A recent number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST prints and makes serious comment on the following passage from an alleged letter:

"I am writing for information on missionary plans and methods. We have here in ——— a little group of men advocating the adoption of the missionary plan proposed by Russell Errett, viz.: each church select the field it desires to help and send its missionary offering direct, without passing through the hands of any missionary board. Of course, you know all about the plan. I want you to write me frankly, and as fully as you feel able, just what you think about it."

If this thing has any author outside of the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, it is surely some one bent on a practical joke. Not only is this not Russell Errett's missionary plan, but it is no plan at all. It is simply the natural and inevitable procedure, where there is no plan. You might as well talk of Russell Errett's "plan" of getting breakfast, which is to order what you want and pay for it—a "plan" that was in vogue thousands of years before Russell Errett was ever heard of. It is Russell Errett's "plan" because it is everybody's "plan." There is no plan about it.

And so of this alleged missionary "plan." It is the simple, necessary procedure, where a congregation or an individual seeks to do missionary work without a plan. It is the proper procedure, until a better way can be shown. There was missionary work long before there were plans or boards. This the men well know who perpetrate this joke, and in calling it Russell Errett's "plan" they are guilty of taking mean advantage of a very guiltless individual.

I have no missionary plan of my own to offer for anybody's adoption. I have very distinct views on the relations of our missionary and other organizations to our congegations, and their individual members, which it is my purpose to unfold in these columns at no distant day, but as these views have no connection whatever with the great concourse at Bethany, I shall have no time to give them until that is out of the way.

If there is a being on earth who can entertain for a moment the fantastic notion that I would spend all the resources at my command for months together in perhaps the most strenuous effort ever made to bring all our Christian ministers and leading Sunday-school workers together in one great free assemblage, for the purpose of trapping them into something repugnant to their good sense and feeling—I say, if there is such a one, he shall have my full and hearty endorsement for assistant editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I know of no other position on earth which he is qualified to fill.

I am confident the managers of Bethany Park, and all who have had a hand in preparing for this great event, will join with me in a most earnest invitation to all who suspect any purpose to make underhand use of the occasion, to be present and join with us to frustrate anything of the kind. We promise them our unqualified support.

Russell Errett.

The foregoing strange communication, under its singularly infelicitous title, can hardly fail to awaken both surprise and pain on the part of those who value mutual confidence between brethren, and the peace and unity of our movement, now approaching its first Centennial. Let us pass by the implied doubt whether the extract we quoted from a brother in a Western state was a real extract from a real letter, or whether it originated in the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We would fain hope that no one else but the writer of the above statement has any doubt on that point. We will only add that the brother whose letter we quoted is one who stands high on the Pacific coast for his ability, integrity and devotion to the Master's cause, in the important official position which he occupies. Other brethren have received the same letter from the same writer asking for the same information. Evidently, therefore, there has been some propaganda of what the writer calls a "missionary plan," which, instead of being one of co-operation, is a return to the disunited and non-co-operative method so antagonistic to the spirit of Christianity, and to all the impulses of brotherhood, as well as to considerations of economy and efficiency in service.

We regret beyond measure that Brother Errett's advocacy of this plan in the foregoing seems to amply justify the feeling and fear which many brethren entertain, that the paper which he controls is no longer to be an advocate and champion of our co-operative missionary work, as it was in the days of its distinguished founder, the father of Russell Errett, but is henceforth to turn the influence of the paper which it has secured largely through the renown of its illustrious founder against the very organizations which he did so much to establish and foster. It is due to the religious movement with which the "Christian Standard" claims identification, that Brother Errett state, distinctly and unequivocally, whether or not that paper in the future is to lend its influence and support to our co-operative missionary work through existing organizations, or whether it proposes to advocate the method pursued by the anti-society brethren, and urge the churches to act separately, instead of co-operating together as now. Will the "Christian Standard" have the courage of its convictions to answer this question, so that there will be no misunderstanding of its attitude toward our missionary societies? Many of us have felt for some time that this was the inevitable drift of the paper. The time has now come when it can no longer conceal its purpose from the brotherhood. The brethren will await with interest its answer to this question.

Notes and Comments

In this country we have succeeded in separating church and state so that religion may be free, but we have not succeeded yet in separating the state and the saloon, that politics may be free. That work is now in process. As the separation of church and state was necessary to the freedom of religion, so the separation of state and saloon is necessary in order to the freedom of politics from the corrupting influence of the liquor traffic. The first separation was adopted in the Constitution, in the beginning, but the union between state and saloon has continued so long that many people seem to think it a necessary relation. The question is, Can the state any longer afford such an alliance? A great many people are coming to see that it is utterly inconsistent for the state, which stands for law and order, good government and morality, to be in alliance with an institution that is essentially lawless and immoral in its character and influence.

Touching the character of the saloon, let us have the testimony of "The Wholesalers' and Retailers' Review," an organ of the whisky traffic, of San Francisco. It says:

"A man who knows the saloon well can honestly say that most of them have forfeited their right to life. The model saloon exists chiefly in the minds of liquor journals, in the imagination of a certain type of ministers, and in the mythical stories sometimes rehearsed at saloon men's campfires. Unfortunately, the average tippling house is a place of ill fame, a place of shame and of debauchery. With comparatively few exceptions, our saloons are houses of drunken men, profanity and obscenity of the vilest type."

It is enough to ask if it is proper for the state to be in alliance with an institution of this character.

We regret to notice that our Baptist contemporary of Kansas City, "The Word and Way," suggests, because of some injustice which it feels that the Baptists received at the late International Sunday-school Convention, that Drs. Mullins and Price should resign from the lesson committee, and that the Baptists should get out their own course of lessons, and have their own lesson committee. We hope that suggestion will not take well among Baptists. They are too large and liberal a body of Christians to break loose from the rest of the Christian world in the Sunday-school work because they do not have as large a representation as they feel they ought to have on the International lesson committee. We regret very much that they ever drew out from the Christian Endeavor movement and organized their young people separately. Let us learn to keep step as far as we can.

"Woe unto you when all men speak well of you!" Why is this so? Do we not like to have men speak well of us? Whence the woe. There always have been, and there always will be, men of perverse minds and hearts who will not speak well of a man who sets himself to do the will of Christ, and to promote the interests of his Kingdom. The very fact, therefore, that such men would speak well of a man would be evidence that he was not doing his full duty as a Christian, both in loving righteousness and in hating iniquity. It is just as impossible now, as it was in the day when Jesus was on earth, for a man to be a real follower of him and have all men speak well of him. If he denounces evil he will be called a "fanatic." If he recognizes the good there is in those who do not company with him, as Jesus often did, he will be charged with "unsoundness" or "disloyalty," or dubbed a "latitudinarian." One of the first things any man must learn, especially in public life, is that it is impossible for him to please all men, and that his true aim is to seek to please God and his own conscience.

You can not make your church go by talking it down.

The man who would uplift others must be uplifted himself.

Current Religious Thought

Here is the right kind of a sentiment from the resolutions of the Ninth District of Nebraska convention:

"Resolved, That we avoid, so far as consistent with our plea, apostolic Christianity, all technicalities and the attaching of undue importance to mere words and human opinions, and earnestly seek deeper spirituality and the fellowship of Christian love."

Here is a church's platform as presented at the Methodist general conference of 1908:

"For equal rights and complete justice for all men in all stations of life. For the principle of conciliation and arbitration in industrial dissensions. For the protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational diseases, injuries and mortality. For the abolition of child labor. For such regulation of the conditions of labor for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community. For the suppression of the "sweating system." For the gradual and reasonable reduction of the hours of labor to the lowest practical point, with work for all; and for that degree of leisure for all which is the condition of the highest human life. For a release from employment one day in seven. For a living wage in every industry, for the highest wage that each industry can afford, and for the most equitable division of the products of industry that can ultimately be devised. For the recognitnon of the Golden Rule, and the mind of Christ as the supreme law of society and the sure remedy for all social ills."

Prof. Henry James, the eminent psychologist, thinks there are some new religious possibilities. In an article on "Pluralism and Religion," in the "Hibbert Journal" for July, he says:

"I think it may be asserted that there are religious experiences of a specific nature, not deducible by analogy or psychological reasoning from our other sorts of experience, which point with reasonable probability to the continuity of our consciousness with a wider spiritual environment from which the ordinary prudential man (who is the only man that scientific psychology, so-called, takes cognizance of) is shut off.

"Briefly, the facts I mean can be described as experiences of an unexpected life succeeding upon death. By this I do not mean immortality, or the death of the body. I mean the deathlike termination of certain mental processes within the individual's experience, processes that run to failure, and, in some individuals at least, eventuate in despair. . . . There is a light in which all the naturally founded and currently accepted distinctions, excellence and safeguards of our characters appear as absolute childishness. Sincerely to give up one's conceit of being good is the only door to the universe's deeper reaches. These deeper reaches are familiar to evangelical Christianity and to what is nowadays known as 'mind-cure religion,' or 'new thought.' The phenomenon is that of new ranges of life succeeding on our most despairing moments. There are resources in us that naturalism, with its literal and legal virtues, never recks of—possibilities that take our breath away, of another kind of happiness and power, based on giving up our own will and letting something higher work for us; and these seem to show a world wider than either physics or philistine ethics can imagine. Here is a world in which all is well, in spite of certain forms of death, indeed because of certain forms of death—death of hope, death of strength, death of responsibility, of fear and worry, death of everything that paganism, naturalism, and legalism pin their faith on and tie their trust to.

"Reason, operating on our other experiences, even our psychological experiences, would never have inferred these specifically religious experiences in advance of their actual coming. She could not suspect their existence, for they are discontinuous with 'natural' experiences and invert their values. But as they actually come and are given to us, our possibilities widen to our view. We suspect that our natural experience, so-called, our strictly moralistic and prudential or legal experience, may only be a fragment of reality. The new experiences soften nature's outlines and open out the strangest possibilities and perspectives."

"There has been, of late, a laudable decrease in the exaggerated and fulsome descriptions of the sermons of our bishops. Not every bishop delivers 'great' and 'masterly' sermons, and none know it better than they themselves. They are frequently chosen for other qualities besides their pulpit eloquence or forensic oratory—for some executive or administrative talent, or genius for ecclesiastical law. Most of them preach acceptably and helpfully, but scores of pastors may excel some of them as preachers, and there is no imperative necessity of making out every bishop a Beecher in the pulpit, or a Cicero on the platform."—Western Christian Advocate.

Under the title of "An Interrupted Marriage," the "Watchman" (Baptist), referring to the overtures of the M. E. Church to the Methodist Protestants, says:

"The Methodist Episcopal conference seems to have been another case of Mike. Says Mike to Biddy, when he heard she was engaged to somebody else, 'Would you marry me if I askt ye?' Says Biddy, 'Do you want me, Mike?' Says Mike, 'Not unless I can't get ye.' The Methodist Episcopal Church paid no court to the Methodist Protestant Church until it seemed likely that somebody else would get her. Then love burned. And the coy Methodist Protestant maiden discovered suddenly that she loved the Methodist lover better than she loved the one with the strange name, to whom she had almost yielded her hand."

Writing of the Congregational Council which has just met in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland, and in which the relation of the Church to labor and socialism was discussed, the editor of the "British Weekly" says:

"The general feeling appears to be that this has been the most successful of the gatherings, that the speeches and discussions were on a very high level, and that the general effect has been excellent. Of course, there were a few extreme speeches, and one or two perhaps appeared beyond the limits of Congregationalism, however generously they may be interpreted. But we believe in free discussion, and do not regret this. A very pleasing feature of the meetings was the grave, serious, and appreciative way in which social reform was discussed. How great is the contrast in this respect between the present congress and that which met in London some sixteen years ago! The Congregational churches now claim unanimously that their mission is to the world and to all classes of society, and not least to the poor. They are coming to understand that if they are to speak effectively to the poor they must acquaint themselves with their thoughts, and be able to deal with what is passing in their minds. Silly sneering at socialism is now an anachronism, as it was always a blunder. The churches are bound to give socialism a fair and respectful hearing, to study the works of its recognized exponents with the utmost care, to support such practical steps as can be wisely taken, and to anticipate a future when the present terrible inequalities between the rich and the poor shall have ceased to exist. As yet, what is most wanted is study. Of hundreds who deblatterate about socialism, not ten have really studied the subject as it is. The reckless endorsement of the socialist programme by those who are not prepared to surrender a single shilling of their own means is just as mischievous, and perhaps more mischievous, than the refusal to listen to the plea which socialism makes. Does anyone believe that the speeches made in favor of socialism at the Pan-American Congress in any degree represent the mind of the Church of England, or will be confirmed by the Church at the ballot-box when the time comes? We are persuaded that socialists do not resent the criticism of particular theories if it is done fairly and with knowledge. The more socialism is studied in the authorities, the more it will appear that on many points of the gravest moment socialists are hopelessly divided."

For those who put undue stress on cleaning the outside of the platter, the editor of the "New York Observer" has this to suggest:

"There is to-day too much religion of the outside of the platter, and too little that is interior and fundamentally vital. It is comparatively easy to scour the external features of a character or life so that it conforms to the conventionalities, to the Do's and Don't's of polite society, and exhibits what is called a fair average morality. There are many people who, not going to the length of being downright hypocrites—as were the Scribes and Pharisees—consciously and deliberately pretending to be what they are not—yet deceive others and perhaps also themselves by making a fair show in the flesh, while the spirit within is yet untutored by grace and unreconciled to the will and law of God. It is not difficult, though it is dangerous, for a man to mistake his outward conformity to the laws and ordinances of the state or of society for the fulfillment of that law of spirit and of life which are in Christ Jesus, and which demand a holiness vastly superior to the correct mannerisms of the outward man. It is frequently said that "mere morality" will never save. This is true so long as we do not mean by the use of that phrase to imply that morality, in so far as a man possesses any, has no social value or influence for good. It is always better that a man should be moral than immoral, and regardful of social proprieties and amenities than reckless and rough, but such morality will never save that man, because it is not big enough nor deep enough nor pure enough nor loving enough to satisfy the demands of a perfectly holy God, nor, if it supposedly could do so for a single period of life, could it have merit or power sufficient to atone for all the sins prior to that period which the man had committed. The outside of the platter is but the outside of the platter—the really significant question is as to what is inside the dish, or to apply metaphor in the sphere of morals, as to whether corruption or grace is carried and treasured at the center of the life, in the very inmost heart of the man. If a man is not right within he is right nowhere. God desireth truth in the inward parts, and judges men by what is central and at the core in all their willing and working.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

We have recently witnessed some cloud scenes over the lake that have been truly awe-inspiring. It is always interesting to watch the movements of clouds as in infinite variety of form they move across the heavens. There are the white, floating clouds that sail high in the heavens, like immense ships sailing across the sea of immensity. There are, also, the clouds of vapor that often gather about the setting sun, and, borrowing glory from his radiance, make a splendid pageantry for his going down. These often form themselves in mountain ranges along the horizon, and assume various fantastic shapes, which the imagination can turn into all sorts of objects. But the storm-clouds, that seem to rise up out of the lake and move forward so swiftly, fill the beholder with the feeling of awe, if not of fear. There is majesty in their movements as they advance, impelled by the wind, as terrible as an army with banners. The lake, mirroring the color of the clouds above, adds to the grandeur and magnificence of the scene. Indeed, one has not seen the lake in its sublimest mood until he sees it under the storm-cloud, reflecting its variegated colors, and, together with the chariots of the clouds, forming a scene of indescribable grandeur. It is, of course, the wide range of vision which one has over the lake that adds to the magnificence of the movements of the clouds—God's messengers by which he waters the earth. When Jesus ascended, it is said that "a cloud received Him out of their sight," and it is prophesied that when He comes He will come "in the clouds of heaven." Thank God for the clouds and their gracious ministry to our needs, even the clouds of adversity, which, though always dreaded, often pour their blessings upon our heads!

The recent reported criticism of this department for its excessive optimism, and for its tendency to dwell on the bright side of life, rather than on the dark side, has brought to the Editor a number of charming letters from its readers. Here is one from Sister Damaris D. Van Meter, of Iowa, who expresses her surprise that any one should find fault with the Easy Chair, in which she has found so much comfort and enjoyment. She says that "America's strenuous life needs some oases of rest, and your Easy Chair is such an oasis in these times of religious discussion and everlasting bustle for money." But Sister Van Meter and the Editor were friends away back in our college days, and no doubt this accounts in part for her words of friendly appreciation. We are, however, in receipt of similar letters from friends we have never seen, so that we are compelled to believe that there are many of our readers who believe that a smile is better than a sigh, and a note of joy more helpful to others than a lamentation of woe, even though the latter might be a true expression of one's condition and mood. If anything bright or joyous comes into our life from our sojourn here by the lakeside, we like to share it with our readers, many of whom we know will not be permitted by circumstances to take any vacation. The other evening, while sitting on the western veranda looking out over the lake, which had been converted into an opalescent sea by the setting sun, we remarked to Dr. Moore, who was sitting by us, that, if it were in our power to picture that scene of transcendent beauty just as it was,—not an unfrequent scene either,—it would be impossible to accommodate the lovers of the beautiful that would gather here, not only for the cool breezes of the lake, but to enjoy such inspiring scenes. But, alas! no pen can describe, nor painter's brush put on canvas, the marvelous picture painted before our eyes by the divine Artist!

We have been walking over some of these hilltops to-day with Dr. Moore, whom all the brotherhood delights to honor for his long life and useful service, showing him some of the views from the crest of the hills between Lake Michigan and Pentwater, and he thinks that "the half has never been told" of the beauty and magnificence of these views. We talked together of what an ideal situation this would be for a number of congenial spirits to come together for their summer outing, where they might have communion with each other, as well as with Nature and with Nature's God, while recuperating their strength, or seeking refuge from summer heat. We have pictured an ideal community of men and women who would come here, not for fashionable society, but for rest amid the quiet scenes of nature, and with such Christian associations as would add to the charm of the place, and to the benefit of the outing. Here, in one of the deep ravines hard by the lakeside, is a natural amphitheater amid the trees, which only needs roofing over and seating to make an auditorium capable of seating a thousand people. How sweet it would be to meet here on the Lord's day afternoon for a sermon and a service in the groves, which were God's first temples, amid scenes so well calculated to inspire the heart with the feeling of gratitude and of worship! It was agreed that no miscellaneous multitude of people with conflicting tastes and ideals should gather here, but such as would have a common spirit and common aims, by which living together is made both enjoyable and profitable. Some day, if it please God, we shall see this hope realized in this summer resort here in this park. We shall seek to combine, along with all its material advantages, that intellectual quickening and spiritual sympathy and helpfulness which constitute the ideal summer resort.

The Easy Chair has found less time thus far this summer than it could desire for reading and quiet meditation, because, in addition to regular tasks, there is a wide range of correspondence that follows us even to the shores of Lake Michigan. Our readers have learned that we spare neither time nor pains to serve them in any way we can, and we do not murmur that their letters find us here by the lakeside, where we are seeking to blend a little rest with our daily stint of labor. We are glad, rather, that they feel at liberty to seek our counsel. But, none the less, we often sigh for leisure to commune with the thoughts of great men in their books which have proved a blessing to the world. How can one be continually giving out to others unless he is also receiving? Especially must one replenish his spirit from above. Jesus often found it necessary to court the solitude of the mountains, where he might, in prayer to his Father, re-enforce his spirit for his unceasing labors in ministering to men. Desirable as it may seem to have leisure for books and for meditation, we are sure that the path of duty—the path of service to one's fellowmen—must bring its own compensations to those who are willing to sacrifice this coveted boon for the sake of others. The monk in his cell, who was willing to leave his vision of the Master to minister to the poor who had come for their daily portion, found the vision awaiting him on his return, and saying: "Hadst thou stayed I must have fled." A true vision of the Master will send us out to minister to the manifold needs of men. There is no truer index to one's Christian character than his desire to serve his fellowmen.

By invitation of the Methodist brethren at Pentwater, whose pastor is absent for a few weeks, the Disciples of Christ, which meet here in a hall, held union services in the Methodist church last Lord's day, and Dr. Moore spoke most helpful words to an appreciative audience. At the close the communion service was held as usual, and all the brethren that were present, without regard to name or creed, participated in this memorial institution in honor of their common Lord. Differ as we may in the region of theological speculation, Christians can be one at the cross, where they meet their Lord face to face in this memorial institution. The Baptists have been invited to unite with us, and we hope this arrangement will be carried out, and that, during the summer season at least, we may meet and worship together for the advancement of the common cause in this village and community. "And I, if I be lifted up," said Jesus, "will draw all men unto me." In proportion as we lift up the cross of Christ and subordinate all inferior things to their proper places, Christians can come closer together and realize their unity in him who loved us and gave himself for us. We shall not be one ecclesiastically for some time to come, and perhaps never theologically one, but it is possible to come much closer together than we ordinarily do when we meet under the shadow and shelter of the Redeemer's cross. Sure we are that if we follow his leading, who is the head of the Church, he will, in his own time and way, bring us into that blessed unity for which he prayed, and for which thousands of Christ-like men and women are praying to-day. Brethren, our heart's desire and prayer to God for our own Israel is, that we may be united and study the things that make for peace, and things whereby we may edify each other.

The Unshepherded Church and Ministerial Supply

By G. B. Van Arsdall

This is the first part of a paper read before the Congress of Disciples at Bloomington, Ill.

Two distinct problems are involved in this study. First, the most effectual care of our existing churches by our present ministry, and second, the enlistment and training of a future ministry for the church. Each of these are vital present-day problems. The first is that of the wisest use of the forces we have, and the second that of increasing the number and efficiency of our forces. I need hardly take the time to set forth the importance and urgency of the most careful consideration of both of these problems. They are not speculative questions. They are among the most vital and practical issues with which the church is confronted. The relation of the ministry to the church is primary—it is fundamental. It is true of religious as well as of all other movements that their issue is primarily dependent upon their leadership. This paper is not concerned with the character of the men constituting our ministry, but rather with the problem of the wisest use of the ministry that we now have. The creation of an efficient ministry and its effective use are separate and distinct problems. There are many among us who feel that the Disciples have not given the attention to either of these problems which their vital relation to the welfare of the church demands. This is particularly true of the problem of the wisest use of the ministry we already have.

What is the Situation?

Let us consider first the care of our existing churches by our present ministry. What is the situation? In round numbers we have 10,000 or 11,000 churches, and our statistician reports an annual increase of about 150. The report of last year showed 6,619 ministers. Our statistician reports that one-fourth of our churches are without preaching, and an additional fourth have preaching only once a month, and that both of these classes are without pastoral care. This means that one-half of our churches are living only by the momentum given them in the start or are well on toward the way of decay. Some months ago A. W. Taylor, of Eureka, made a careful canvas of the state of our churches, gathering his information directly from the several states. His report shows that 22 per cent of our churches have no preaching, 50 per cent have preaching part of the time, and 28 per cent have preaching all the time. This report agrees essentially with that of Brother Hoffman. There are then probably between 2,500 and 3,000 churches that have preaching all the time. About 2,200 churches have no preaching at all. The actual value of these 2,200 churches to the cause of Christ is so meager as to scarcely be reckoned at all. Indeed, it is a question if their existence is not a detriment. In addition to the above two classes, the one representing our highest efficiency and the other our point of greatest weakness, we have about 5,000 other churches whose life and efficiency are dependent upon occasional preaching. That some of these churches are doing a large and effective service will not be questioned, but both observation and experience teach us that the sustained life of such churches is in great danger. The conditions that environ our modern life are such as to place this class of churches in greater jeopardy than was the case a century ago. The need of sustained interest and constant watch-care is greater than in an age when life was more simple. Indeed, if we should make a thoroughly conservative estimate of the number of churches among the Disciples that may be reckoned upon as a permanent asset, we would not place it far in excess of those that have preaching all the time.

Laying aside all denominational pride and candidly recognizing conditions as they exist, we must confess that the state of more than half our churches is distressing. We may indeed comfort ourselves and shield our conscience against the charge of weakness in our system with laudatory words of appreciation of the little congregation that heroically

Stands by the Plea Until it Dies.

To be sure, this is not very complimentary to the vitality of the plea, but it furnishes material for pathetic eulogies on the valor of the vanquished. A good deal of this praise might be spared if some one should turn the light on the lack of discipline of the forces constituting the system. That would perhaps be more true to the facts, but it would not sound so well for the plea. That must be saved regardless of facts. It may look well in print to magnify the virtues of a great host who hold themselves aloof and have little or no part in the activities of the age for social regeneration rather than compromise their convictions, but it certainly does not speak well for the system under which they are working. Our pride in numbers would be received with much more grace if there was linked with it a like concern that every congregation and every member of every congregation should be thoroughly equipped and actively engaged in earnest service for the kingdom. I would not have our pride in numbers less, but I would have our concern for efficiency equal to it.

It is not possible to state just what per cent, but it is clearly evident that an alarmingly large number of our churches are in process of decay, or in conditions that invite it. This, too, because they are without ministers to stimulate and direct their latent energies. Before considering what may be done for the future by an increase in our ministry, we should first answer the question,—are all the men that we now have related to the churches to the best advantage, and if not, can a more effectual plan for so relating them be devised, that will be consistent with our present church polity? Let it be understood from the outset that I do not have in mind any departure from the congregational form of church polity.

Lack of System.

Let us first consider our present system of locating ministers with churches. What elements are necessary, both on the part of the minister and the congregation, to put it into effect, and what are its advantages and disadvantages to each? The most characteristic feature of our present system is the utter lack of any system. A minister finds it necessary or expedient to change his field of work. He can proceed to hunt until he finds. The success of his quest depends upon a number of things. Necessarily and of right, the most determining element entering into it is the efficiency of his past ministry and the extent to which his work is known. This first and most essential element, however, has its temptations of subjecting him to the immodesty of magnifying his achievements. Many of our most efficient ministers are little known and consequently at great disadvantage at the time of a change of pastorate, because a becoming modesty restrains them from making known the real merits of their worth. On the other hand, not a few with an immodest passion for publicity exploit all their comings and goings, weddings, funerals, lectures, etc., and thereby gain for themselves a reputation quite out of proportion to their works.

Again, whatever a man's work may have been, his transfer to another church is conditioned upon his knowledge of vacant pulpits. This he must gain largely through the columns of our papers, and though there may be many openings to which he would be well adapted, the bugbear of a flood of applications forces many such churches to keep secret the fact that they are in need of a minister, and then the very embarrassment of offering his services and setting forth his qualifications and the record of his work are like the raspings of a saw to his sensitive soul.

It is almost indispensable to the process of relating himself in a modest and courteous fashion to the church that he would serve that he should make liberal appeal to his friends for assistance, and thus he is often led to engage in a species of wire pulling against which all his inner nature revolts.

He is on Trial.

But even after he has successfully and modestly brought his availability before the church he must suffer the embarrassment of knowing that others are probably in the same state of expectancy for the place of service. He is conscious that he is on trial, and the minutest detail, from the cut of his coat to his loyalty to the plea, is under inspection. He knows that he is ill at ease before a strange people on a single Sunday, the real heart of his passion to serve his Master is known only to those who know him and whose life he shares from day to day. Though his transfer to another church is with him at least a response to the appeal of his conscience for a larger usefulness in the Master's service, he realizes that all his past work and the consequent divine endowment of him for service may be nullified by the chance impression of one day. He also knows all too well that the real inner conditions of the church which he would serve will hardly be known to him by such an acquaintance.

All these, and more, are elements that enter in some measure into the experience of the average minister in changing his field of work according to the system in vogue among us. To be sure, in many instances some, and even all, of these are largely eliminated, but the system, or lack of system, certainly has its embarrassments and serious hindrances to the ministry. It is a real problem to him.

Limited Knowledge.

How stands the matter with the congregation? In the first place, whether the congregation secures a minister at all or not, and much more, whether the man most adapted to the work, depends wholly upon the initiative of the local church. The worse the conditions existing in the church, and consequently the greater the need of a minister, the less the probability of securing one. Here the church is under the almost overwhelming disadvantage of its limited knowledge of available men and their fitness for the position. The church is largely dependent for this upon the news columns of the papers. In the average congregation the vast majority of the members know practically nothing of our ministry in general. Their knowledge of men is largely based upon what they have read in the papers, or a chance impression from a convention address or an over-Sunday visit to friends in some other community.

These impressions, which for practical purposes are largely useless, are unfortunately often determining factors in securing a minister.

Our present system subjects the congregation to the temptation of insincerity in putting forth its brightest side to make a good impression upon the visiting minister. What man ever visited a church on trial that he did not find the choir out in full force that day and everybody optimistic of the outlook for a great work there? Of course, they may have had some minor disagreements in the past, but then these things are all forgotten now and all they need is the right man.

The Smooth Speaker's Chance.

Under our present system the congregation is at the mercy of the smooth speaker who may chance to happen along, just passing that way over Sunday to visit his wife's relatives. It is surprising to know how many of our churches, and some of them among our best, too, have been enamored of these wandering stars and taken up with them, or rather been taken in by them, to the retarding, and sometimes even wrecking, of an otherwise prosperous work. The inability of the minister to learn the real inwardness of conditions in the church is more than matched by the church's ignorance of the real character and qualifications of the minister. If the last man has in any particular signally failed, the possession of the qualities that were lacking in him is often made the one consideration in the choice of a new man, and often to the loss of weightier and more serious interests.

Time would not permit me to even name the list of evils that accrue to the account of the church in our present haphazard method of selecting ministers. I would not be understood as saying that all of these obtain in every instance, or even that there are not instances in which none of them obtain, but the system makes them possible anywhere. The competition between ministers for places, on the one hand, and on the other, the local disaffections, due to our present system, are an open shame to the name of Christ. Every element helpful to the successful issue of our present plan, both on the part of the minister and the church, if not actually productive of, at least opens the way for some violation of the Christian spirit. It need not be argued that all this of which I have been speaking may be and is in fact avoided in many of our churches. I grant the contention. This, however, is true, not because of the system, but in spite of it, and because prudent men adopt wise measures to forestall the evils normally accruing from the system. There are perhaps 500, or possibly 1,000, churches among us that adopt such measures in locating ministers as to avoid many or all of these consequences. It is not of these churches I am speaking. Five hundred or even 1,000 churches out of 10,000 are the exception and not the rule. The majority of our churches, and especially the small and medium size congregations, the ones most in danger, are all more or less subject to all the disadvantages of which I have spoken. The over-Sunday visit and trial sermon are in some measure at least a conditioning factor in their selection of a minister.

This then is

The Real Situation Before Us.

As a brotherhood we have 10,000 churches and 5,000 or 6,000 ministers, with no plan whatever for relating these to each other. A considerable number of our ministers and churches get together in happy and serviceable relation without any plan. On the other hand, the great majority of them suffer more or less seriously because of our hit or miss methods. Perhaps it may be argued that our State Secretaries have the oversight of the churches, and the ministers and churches should look to them for assistance in this matter. To be sure, both our State and National Secretaries render valuable assistance along these lines, but it is not generally accepted that our Secretaries have this responsibility. It is not a practical working principle among us. The churches do not look to them naturally for it, and the Secretaries all render such service most cautiously, with the feeling that they are in danger of embarrassing their own work.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Ante-Bellum Religion in Old Missouri.--II.

By J. A. Smith

We are still in Mercer County, but in a different place. This article will deal with the first Christian church of which I have any knowledge and with which my Christian life began. In the year 1858, my father, with a few other kindred spirits, wishing to enjoy the privileges of a church untrammelled by creeds or dogmas of any kind, met at the home of Abram Constable, who lived about half way between Princeton, Mo. and Pleasant Plains, Iowa (now Pleasanton), and after a prayerful discussion of the matter, decided to hold meetings once a week with a view to organizing a congregation of "Christians only." After a few meetings the interest became so great that it was decided to erect a meeting-house, and the plan was hardly broached until the men of the neighborhood were in the woods felling the trees for the building, which was of hewed logs and the cracks pointed with mortar. The house was about thirty-five feet by forty and was seated with rough benches of sawed lumber, and the capacity of the building was, when crowded in, about two hundred. The leaders of the movement then invited Reuben Perkins, of the Goshen Prairie church, which was a few miles south of the new church, to come and dedicate the house and hold a meeting. In due time he came and the house and all the convenient space for several yards around the building was taken. "Pleasant Hill" was the name given to the new church. How that name thrills me to this day! Well it may, for it was my Christian alma mater. After Brother Perkins had preached for a few days, Samuel Downey, of Eagleville, Harrison County, came to his assistance, and such a meeting as it was! It seemed as if the whole neighborhood had caught the inspiration and at every invitation there was a perfect rush to take the hand of the preacher to make the good confession. The weather was extremely cold, and it was necessary to cut the ice in the creek to immerse the candidate; however, the inconvenience of the thing was never considered at all. On the day the writer was baptized the ice was fully eighteen inches thick and there were eleven of us, and Brother Perkins administered the ordinance. The elders handed us down to him, and after we were baptized we remained standing on the bank of the creek until the audience was regularly dismissed.

Amongst the charter members of that church were the Strouds, the Joneses, the Constables, the Petersons, the Sinclairs, the Lushbaughs, my father's family and others whose names have been forgotten by me.

Those were days when good works were considered the prime factor in religion. If any one was sick, he was visited regularly; if in need, his necessities were met; if a member proved recreant in any way, he was sure of a visit from the elders. How often I have joined with others in a big wood-chopping for our widows or sick brethren, when the cold, chilling winds of winter were howling around the house or moaning through the leafless boughs of the trees. This kind of ministration was a joy to us, pure and simple. The hospitality of the home, when measured by the present time, was badly overworked, but was at that time an unalloyed pleasure to those who did the entertaining. The members of the church and most of the preachers of that time were "rough diamonds," but they certainly had hearts of gold. The two ministers of God, whose names I am keeping in the "inner temple" of memory have long since gone to their reward, with many of the older members. The civil war played havoc with this church, as most of the younger men went to the front and many of them found graves in the Southland, where the holly and the pine are now growing over their last resting places, while the gentle winds are sighing through the trees, a requiem for the dead patriots who gave their lives in defense of their country. Many who did return soon sought homes in the west, and old Pleasant Hill church let her light go out. I have to this day a letter of commendation given me from the church when we left Missouri, and shall keep it as a cherished memento of my early Christian life. Time rings its changes on us all in this world, and while I am living where I can hear the rolling surf as it beats incessantly on the golden shores of the Pacific, the ever changing scene and condition can never efface from my mind the early days of my life spent in "Grand Old Missouri." There my father, mother, brothers, sisters, wife and darling children, two of them, sleep in her soil, besides a mighty host of loving friends that I have known in the last fifty years. Looking back over the past, I am led to exclaim: O Memento! O mores!! Conditions have changed and the people have changed with them, and let us hope for the better; yet in some respects I am not certain that there has been much of an improvement in Christian living. I will, at any rate, say that we are not living up to our present opportunities as well as we should. If, under the untoward conditions of fifty years ago, the people did well, with the open door of the present what a mighty power for God's work is the church of to-day! There was a yesterday, there is a to-day, there may be no to-morrow; then wisdom tells us to-day is the time to perform our life's work.

San Diego, California.

WHAT ARE WE HERE FOR?

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

What are we here for?
To waste our days in aimless revelling?
To wax more rich by others' poverty?
To climb the heights, denying others place?
To stuff the mind with knowledge profitless?

This we are here for:
To make each day a step to blessedness;
To grow more rich in care for others' needs;
To climb the heights, and helping each a friend;
To fill the heart with visions fair of Him.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

This is vacation time. Uncle Sam gives every employe a month's rest and a second month's sick leave if he needs it. More than this, he gives the mules and horses a month off. "Charlie," the black horse in the service of the postoffice department, received formal permission to spend a month in the clover in Montgomery county, Maryland, and has gone. "Dick," his mate, will go on his leave a little later. How much better is a man than a mule?

Ministers need vacations. The pressure on the preacher was never so great as it is to-day. To many rest is indispensable; to all, beneficial. More work and better work will they do in ten or eleven months than twelve. The exhilaration of a mountain climb, or invigoration of a week at the seaside, means better sermons. Excess of work and lack of recreation wear out the ministerial stock fast enough. We work faster, think faster, live faster than our fathers. We must have more recreation than they were accustomed to take. And the minister more than the farmer, the business man, the mechanic, the lawyer or physician is under constant strain. His labor is not for eight hours, nor ten nor fifteen, but an unintermitting service of watchfulness and responsibility. Day and night the burden is on. His own cares and the cares of five hundred others are his. He is the most hard-worked man in all the community if he conscientiously does the work that calls him on every side. "Come ye apart and rest awhile" is as vital as "Go ye into all the world and preach."

Some people do not know how to unbend. They take even their pleasures sadly. "Is not Geneva dull?" asked a friend of Talleyrand. "Especially when they amuse themselves," was the reply. Nobody would ever think of Dante as having "a good time." Petrarch tells how one day being at Candella Scala's court and blamed for his gloom and taciturnity, he answered in no courtier-like way. Della Scala stood among his courtiers with mimes and buffoons making him merry, when turning to Dante, he said: "Is it not strange, now, that this poor fool should make himself so entertaining, while you, a wise man, sit there day after day and have nothing to amuse us with at all?" Dante answered bitterly: "No, not strange; your highness is to recollect the proverb, 'Like to like.'"

No one would ever charge Dante with smiling even, and Calvin perhaps never played leap-frog in his life, or he would have been a better theologian. Plato and Aristotle, Moses and Abraham, Mahomet and Napoleon we never think of as boys, but the world no doubt would have been better for their sojourn in it if they had taken an annual vacation. Leo Tenth spent his time at the chase, to the neglect of bulls and masses. Hartabus, king of Hircania, spent his holiday catching moles. Bias, king of Lydia, we are told, took his days off and amused himself stabbing frogs. Grover Cleveland and the Apostle Peter went fishing. Socrates played with children. Spinoza would unbend his mind setting spiders to fight each other. He observed their combats with so much interest that he was often seized with immoderate fits of laughter. Tycho Brahe diverted himself with polishing all sorts of spectacles. Petavius, the learned author of "Dogmata Theologica," at the end of every hour would twirl his chair for five minutes. Dr. Samuel Clarke found his relaxation in jumping over tables and chairs. Shelley took great pleasure in making paper boats and floating them on the water. So long as his paper lasted he remained riveted to the spot, fascinated by this peculiar amusement. He used precious letters and leaves of his books as Noah used gopher wood. One day he found himself out of paper. Not a single scrap could be found save a bank note of fifty pounds. He hesitated long, but yielded at last, twisted the note into a boat and committed it to the Serpentine River, on whose banks he was walking, but fortune favored and the costly skiff was driven by the wind back to its owner. Every man to the diversion that suits his taste. George Washington liked the fox chase; Gladstone would rest himself cutting down trees in Hawarden Park; Roosevelt takes a day off for bear, and Mr. Bryan finds recreation in making a few speeches.

Our Baltimore and Washington preachers have gotten into the vacation habit. Abbott and Ainslee are taking "a rest tour," as Peter calls it, in England and Scotland, and will be two months abroad. D. W. Ohern supplies at the Temple. The pastor of the Temple distributes pennies, with the promise of "a souvenir post card and a leaf from some historic spot in Europe" to every one who makes his penny a dollar for the church debt. The Temple pastor is a man of ideas. Nelson H. Trimble is the new pastor at Fulton Avenue. He calls his charge "the Christian Center." We have "Christian Church," "Christian Temple," "Christian Center" and "Church of Disciples" in Baltimore, a goodly variety. The Center is a sort of institutional church, and advertises itself as "without a human creed," "the church that welcomes the stranger" and "We're tremendously in earnest." Arthur Baird has taken the churches in Howard county, near Baltimore.

The capital city has had the vacation air for a month or more. Outdoor meetings are held in the parks, and only a few churches announce any evening service. "All services all summer" is our motto, and we live up to it faithfully. July 12 the thermometer was 104 in the shade, the hottest city in the country, yet we did not swerve from our practice. Instead of fighting the slump, we encourage it when we abandon our evening meetings.

George A. Miller goes West for the month of August. Walter A. Smith goes to Montana in September, and his place at Whitney Avenue is yet to be filled. George E. Dew will serve the Rockville congregation. The churches are generally prosperous and at peace. J. E. Stuart and the Vermont Avenue pastor visited Rockville, Hyattstown and Vienna recently to present the state work and confirm the brethren. Thomas Wood is the preacher at Vienna, and we succeeded in arranging for the other two pulpits. Hayes Farish will, for the present, preach at Hyattstown. The brethren in Montgomery county were much imposed upon by one J. P. Lewis, for whom the sheriff of Orange county, Fla., J. H. Vick, of Orlando, is seeking, on the charge of bigamy. When shall we be done with unworthy preachers?

W. G. Oram will leave for a visit during the month of August to his old home near Bethany. J. E. Powell will supply for Ninth Street a part of the time. He, with his gifted wife, our singing evangelist, is now located near Marshall Hall on the Potomac, a few miles from this city.

An amusing blunder just came to my notice. A preacher writes to "The Committee on Pulpit Supply, Vermont Avenue Christian Church," and the letter goes by mistake to the "Committee on Pulp and Paper, House of Representatives." What is the connection? The chairman of the house committee seemed puzzled. John McDonald Horn, of Des Moines, will fill my pulpit during the month of August. Bethany Beach next. The wild waves have something to say. The soul of the deep calls to the soul of man. Neptune's white herds, lowing o'er the deep, are in my dreams. Good night.

SALVATION'S STORY.

By Hugh Wayt.

Occupation, speculation, fluctuation, ruination,

Dissipation, degradation; reformation or damnation.

Consideration, meditation, concentration and cessation.

Declaration, information, inspiration, invitation.

Trepidation, hesitation, acceptation, restoration

By conviction and contrition and confession, and immersion.

Exultation, purification, new relation, consecration.

Education, new sensation, destination, full salvation.

Barnesville, Ohio.

BETTER THAN GOLD

Food That Rebuilds Body and Brain.

"I owe a debt of gratitude to Grape-Nuts," writes a W. Va. young lady, "and I am glad of this opportunity to pay a little interest on it, although the debt itself I can never hope to remove.

"A few years ago I broke down from over-work and improper food. I was then in a preparatory school and my fondest wish was to enter college the following year.

"But about the middle of the term my health failed, and my brain refused to grapple with the subjects presented to it. Finally, my eyesight giving way, I was taken from the school, and sent to my grandmother's in the country with orders not to open a book while I was there.

"The dear old lady tried every way to console and nurse me back to health, but it looked like failure until the day she brought back from town a box, which, had its contents been pure gold, would have been of less value to me than the little golden-brown granules which it actually contained.

"I did not care about being experimented on at first, but that was before I had tasted Grape-Nuts with Grandma's rich Jersey cream.

"Oh, it was too good to stop eating. And I never have stopped, for I still have Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"In the course of a few weeks I was back at school again, my health so entirely restored that I was almost a new girl.

"I am now in my junior year at college, president of my class and expect to take an A. M. degree next year. My good health has continued and my eyes, having been strengthened by the general build-up of my whole body, enable me to study all I wish." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

NAAMAN'S TRUST AND DISTRUST

By Prof. I. B. Grubbs

Faith in the truth of any proposition, however strong or heartfelt it may be, can not assume the form of trust unless that proposition contains a promise, or its equivalent. In such case it can only exist in the form of condition. A man might believe that a multi-millionaire is very benevolent, as well as very wealthy; but if he walks up to him and says to him, "I am trusting in you to bestow upon me a portion of your estate," he would subject himself to the suspicion that he was getting ready for an insane asylum. Suppose, however, that the millionaire had, for any reason, promised to give him an interest in his estate; there could now be abundant room for sensible trust upon the part of this man. Conviction and trust, then, are not two elements of faith, but two different forms that faith may assume, according to the relation which the believer sustains to the thing believed.

Furthermore, when a benefactor proposes to bestow any gift, and gives his instructions as to when and how that blessing may be received, there can be no rightful or intelligent trust for its actual bestowment apart from implicit compliance with those instructions. If a physician should promise restoration to health to a despairing patient, and follows it with a prescription and directions, the patient would manifest folly instead of trust by ignoring those instructions. One can not, then, have faith in the form of trust where no promise has been given, and when the promise has been coupled with conditions, there still can be no trustful expectation of its actual fulfillment in the absence of compliance with those conditions.

Let us now see how these principles are illustrated in the case of Naaman, as recorded in the fifth chapter of Second Kings. He was a leper, and came to the prophet Elisha to be healed. The prophet sent him a message, saying: "Go and wash in the Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean." What was the effect upon Naaman? "He turned and went away in a rage," saying: "Behold, I thought he would come out to me and stand and call on Jehovah his God, and wave his hand over the place, and recover the leper. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean?" Surely he did not, as yet, trust in the promise of the prophet, or in Jehovah, who spoke through the prophet. On the contrary, he manifested the highest degree of distrust. What was the matter with him? He was displeased with the instructions that had been given him, and his displeasure grew out of a misunderstanding of their true import. He evidently thought that the prophet, in requiring him to wash in the Jordan, a condition on which he would be healed, was ascribing healing efficacy to the Jordan itself. This serious blunder might find a parallel in our day as regards the way men trust divine instruction as to the way of salvation. Suppose he had carried out in practice his own suggestions, and had sought the rivers of Damascus, that he might bathe in them; or, suppose that he had gone to the Jordan and washed in its waters but once or twice, would he have been trusting in Jehovah any more than a patient would trust in the wisdom and healing power of his physician when he fails to follow his instructions.

Happily, Naaman was brought to a "sober second thought." His servants proved to be wiser than he. They suggested that if the prophet had commanded him to "do some great thing," he would have been ready to comply with the directions, and that it would be easier and safer to do the simple thing that had been enjoined. He now begins to trust Jehovah and the word of his prophet by proceeding "according to the saying of the man of God." "He went down and dipped himself seven times in the Jordan, and his flesh came again, like unto the flesh of a little child and he was clean." What more? By this result he makes the discovery that his healing came alone from the grace and power of Jehovah, while all that he had done in the case was but the divinely appointed and gracious condition on which the healing mercy of God had been bestowed upon him. So, "he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came and stood before him; and he said, Behold, I know that there is no God in all the earth but in Israel: . . . I pray thee let there be given to thy servant two mule's burden of earth, for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor sacrifice to other gods, but unto Jehovah." What a splendid lesson we have here, teaching us that rightful and intelligent trusting in God is inseparable from an implicit compliance with the conditions on which divine blessings are mercifully bestowed upon men!

Perhaps another question could be introduced here that might be conducive to profitable meditation. When Naaman had received his instructions, and had come to a correct understanding of their import, was it "essential" to his recovery that he should proceed "according to the saying of the man of God"? Would he not have died a leper if he had followed his own suggestions? And would any of his servants have been silly enough to call him a legalist, when at their suggestion he concluded to follow without modification the directions of the prophet? All must see that his obedience in the case was "essential" so long as it was required in the mind of Jehovah; while none but a simpleton would suppose that it was "essential" in the sense that God himself could not bestow the blessing apart from the Jordan and its sevenfold washing in its waters. The truth is, that this word "essential," because of its ambiguity, has no proper place in this connection. When a sophist wishes to entrap an opponent, he propounds a question in ambiguous terms, and insists on a simple yes or no as a categorical answer, when by so doing the opponent, under one construction, might be made to affirm what he does not believe; or to deny what he does believe, under another construction.

Finally, let us suppose that Elisha had embodied his instruction in this form: "Go to the Jordan and dip thyself seven times and wash away thy leprosy, calling on the name of Jehovah." Would any one find any difficulty whatever in determining the meaning of the prophet? Would not common sense see at once that Naaman could not expect to be healed until he had obeyed this requirement, and that this actual removal of his malady was simply represented in a figurative way by the use of the term "wash," in allusion to the cleansing efficacy of water? Would any one of ordinary intelligence ever suppose that the prophet, in using a mere figure of speech, must be understood as meaning that Naaman should go to the Jordan and dip himself seven times, and thus symbolize his healing as something which he had already obtained?

Lexington, Ky.

RENUNCIATION.

Thy ways have made me trust myself, dear Lord,
And all I am, completely in thy hands;
I can but be as thy great will commands;
In comfort, or in sickness, health restored
Of mind and body, rich or scanty board,
Living or dying, still thy tender bands
Bind me to thee, in these or unknown lands,
For I am thine, what more can life afford?
Then let me trust my dear ones unto thee.
If dear to me, to thee how much more dear?
If for their good seek I, who can not see,
How much more thou, with love and power untold;
Myself I give thee—small the gift;—grown bold,
I give thee those I love, without a fear.

—Sonnets by Caroline Hazard, in A Scallop Shell of Quiet.

DROPPED COFFEE

Doctor Gains 20 Pounds on Postum.

A physician of Wash., D. C., says of his coffee experience:

"For years I suffered with periodical headaches which grew more frequent until they became almost constant. So severe were they that sometimes I was almost frantic. I was sallow, constipated, irritable, sleepless; my memory was poor, I trembled and my thoughts were often confused.

"My wife, in her wisdom, believed coffee was responsible for these ills and urged me to drop it. I tried many times to do so, but was its slave.

"Finally Wife bought a package of Postum and persuaded me to try it, but she made it same as ordinary coffee and I was disgusted with the taste. (I make this emphatic because I fear many others have had the same experience.) She was distressed at her failure and we carefully read the directions, made it right, boiled it full 15 minutes after boiling commenced, and with good cream and sugar, I liked it—it invigorated and seemed to nourish me.

"That was about a year ago. Now I have no headaches, am not sallow, sleeplessness and irritability are gone, my brain clear and my hand steady. I have gained 20 lbs and feel I am a new man.

"I do not hesitate to give Postum due credit. Of course dropping coffee was the main thing, but I had dropped it before, using chocolate, cocoa and other things to no purpose.

"Postum not only seemed to act as an invigorant, but as an article of nourishment, giving me the needed phosphates and albumens. This is no imaginary tale. It can be substantiated by my wife and her sister, who both changed to Postum and are hearty women of about 70.

"I write this for the information and encouragement of others, and with a feeling of gratitude to the inventor of Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Our Budget

—We shall shortly give attention to our country churches.

—The importance of this theme will be recognized by all who study the facts presented by Brother Van Arsdall on other pages.

—His address was read at our last national congress, held at Bloomington. If any one supposes our congresses are taken up with criticism, and papers tending to pull to pieces the brotherhood, let them carefully read Brother Van Arsdall's paper. We hope to complete it in our next issue. It should not be forgotten that these addresses are always subject to criticism.

—Preparations are already being made for the Illinois State Convention, which meets with the Chicago churches August 30-September 4.

—We print this week a second article by J. A. Smith, on "Ante-Bellum Religion in Old Missouri." His name was unfortunately omitted on the publication of the first article.

—In our obituary columns will be found some notice of Simpson Ely, whose unfortunate death we recorded in our last issue. Brother Ely was a man of many good parts. We are glad to publish this account of him, written by his pastor.

—We conclude this week the series of autobiographical sketches, "Down in Old Missouri." We are sure hundreds of our readers are grateful to Brother Lappin for these pictures of the past and for this inside view of a heart and life struggle.

—There will be found in other parts of this issue—both in editorial, budget pages and "Our Forum"—remarks on the subject of Bethany Assembly and the purposes of the managers of the "Christian Standard."

—The special Evangelistic Congress follows the Indiana State Meeting, which is in session this week at Bethany Park, and the Teacher Training portion immediately follows the Evangelistic Congress. That in turn is succeeded by the gathering of Christian Endeavorers.

—We very much regret to announce the death of Mrs. Ella I. Ford, the news of which has just reached us. She was a good woman, and generous and helpful in all the work of the Christian churches. She was identified in membership with the congregation of the Central Christian Church at Detroit, Mich. We hope to give further particulars in our next issue.

—We have received a copy of the program of the annual meeting of the Christian churches of Clay county, Mo., which is to be held at Mt. Olivet, July 23-24. There are some interesting features. Among those taking part will be F. V. Loos, F. H. Smith, T. W. Cottingham, L. S. Cupp, Dr. E. H. Miller, Judge A. W. Gross, C. F. Ward, T. H. Frazier, H. W. Hunter, J. W. Bryan and Mrs. F. Snelling.

—The annual report of our church at Liberty, Mo., shows that there were 83 additions during the year, the net gain being 60. All accounts were paid and there was a small balance in the treasury. Total money raised was $4,477.89, and the amount given to missions $907.10. The Bible school, with a membership of 200, raised about $640, and the C. W. B. M., with a membership of 79, about $220; the Ladies' Aid, numbering 65, raised $480, and the church, with a membership of 427, over $3,000. R. Graham Frank is the beloved minister of this historic congregation.

—We are glad to give some account this week of the origin of our work in Indianapolis. On our front page is presented a fine likeness of one of the early pioneers who did much for our Cause in Indianapolis, while under the title of "A Diamond Anniversary" is a sketch of the seventy-five years of life of the Central Church, the mother of our work in Indianapolis, where we now have over 6,000 Disciples of Christ. Brother Philputt is recognized as one of the strong, progressive, yet steady men of our brotherhood. We congratulate him and his church on this anniversary occasion and the pleasant relationship which has existed between congregation and pastor for over ten years. He is a brother of J. M. Philputt, of the Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis.

✣ ✣ ✣

—H. F. Stevens has taken the work at Virginia, Neb.

—F. Naotaro Otsuka recently visited the old church at Wellsburg, W. Va., and participated in the services.

—Evangelist William J. Lockhart may be addressed for the remainder of the summer at Ft. Collins, Colo.

—Fred A. Nichols, of Alliance, O., and J. E. Dinger, of Chickasha, Ok., have made an exchange of pulpits for three months.

—M. A. Hart, of Columbia, Mo., recently delivered an address before the Men's Club of our church at Paris.

—Francis M. Biddle, of Wellsburg, W. Va., has been in demand for special addresses during the G. A. R. and school exercise period.

—W. L. Harris, of Lyons, Kan., gave his lecture, "The Golden Thread," at the Arkansas Valley Chautauqua to a large concourse of people.

—The Randolph (Mo.) county convention of Christian Churches will be held in Cairo on August 24-25, and a good program is being formulated for the occasion.

—Geo. H. Combs, of Kansas City, is to lecture to the evangelical churches of Alameda, Cal., after the Santa Cruz meeting. On this occasion his theme will be "The Heart of the Gospel."

—As a result of the notice of the Loyal Sons' Class at Fruitvale, Oakland, Cal., Will H. Brown has had many letters of inquiry, and a Loyal Sons' Class has been organized at Tonawanda, N. Y.

—M. C. Dutt, a recent graduate from Kentucky University, has accepted the pastorate of the church at East Las Vegas, which W. S. Bullard left some months ago, in order to take the work at Wilson, N. C.

—George L. Snively is to supply the pulpit of the East St. Louis (Ill.) Christian church during August. There were six additions under his preaching last Sunday. His evangelistic meetings will commence in September.

—H. H. Peters, field secretary of Eureka College, will, with his family, make his home at Eureka, Ill., during the present campaign. He reports his work progressing very nicely. All letters should be addressed to him at Eureka.

—G. W. Morton has closed his work at Erie, Ill. There were 22 additions at the regular services during the year, while the enrollment in the Bible school is three times as large as when Brother Morton took the work.

—Ernest J. Sias has gone on a five weeks' vacation, during which time he will fill lecture dates on the way to the Pacific Coast. He has arranged for a different speaker for every night at Frankfort, during his absence.

—O. L. Smith, on Lord's day, July 12, reached the close of three years of service as pastor of the church at El Reno, Okla. During this period there have been 359 additions. The outlook is for a steady growth in this vigorous congregation.

—Good work is being done at Havana, Ill., under O. C. Bolman. The teacher training class of 27 has completed its first term and examination. The school keeps above the 150 mark all the time. There are frequent additions to the church.

—The resignation is announced of Miss Mary Monaham, the official traveling secretary of I. C. E. Association. Miss Cora Carrithers has been selected to do the work, and is soliciting members for the Association and working for a large attendance at the college.

—The bulletin of the First Christian Church at Bethany, Mo., contains the following: "Some church members will hire a team and drive twelve miles to celebrate July 4th, but will not walk or ride one block to celebrate the death, burial and resurrection of Christ."

—A. M. Growden filled an engagement at Bethany Chautauqua. L. L. Carpenter says of this: "Both sermon and lecture were of high grade and delighted the audiences." Brother Growden, who has traveled extensively, is arranging lecture dates, and may be addressed at Silver Springs, Ark.

—Our congregation at Nunda, McHenry county, Illinois, has purchased a lot upon which they expect to build a parsonage. At present they are without a pastor, however, and desire to correspond with some good man who may locate. Address F. I. Wolk, North Crystal Lake, at the place mentioned.

—D. W. Moore sends a message from Carthage, Mo., announcing the joyful news that $12,000 has been pledged for a new building, which, with $6,000 on hand and a $6,000 lot, well located and paid for, seems to assure the erection, at no distant date, of a building costing from $30,000 to $35,000.

—James Matthews reports that for the past three weeks open air services have been held in McKinley Park Pavilion, Pittsburg, Pa., on Lord's day afternoons, conducted by F. M. Gordon. Last year much good resulted from such meetings. A large chorus choir, men's glee club and male quartet assist.

—Cal Ogburn has resigned at Bakersfield, Cal., to take effect at the end of August. He expects to go into evangelistic work again, and those desiring meetings for the autumn or winter can write to him. The Standard Publishing Company is about to issue his last book, entitled "Illustrative Talks at the Lord's Table."

—F. F. Walters, pastor of the Central Christian Church at Springfield, Mo., has been in demand this season for Bible lectures at the Chautauquas. He has just completed the first week in his home city chautauqua to a large and appreciative audience. He has calls for twelve days which he will not be able to fill.

—A. J. Adams has spent eighteen months at Wenatchee, Wash., which is known as the land of big red apples. During this period there have been nearly 150 additions to the Christian church, new pews have been installed, and the attendance has taxed the seating capacity of the building at nearly every service. With the co-operation of Waterville and Entiat, there is to be a living link evangelist in this field in the near future.

—Since the return of P. C. Macfarlane to Alameda, Cal., the church work has been going splendidly there. At the last report there had been 33 additions, 8 by letters, since November 1, with many more thinking of taking their stand with the church.

The Sunday-school is thriving, despite the vacation season. A big meeting is to be planned for next year.

—Dr. B. S. Gowen, a member of the Christian Church, and a graduate of Yale and Clark Universities, has been elected to the presidency of the New Mexico University, which is situated at Las Vegas. He takes the place of Dr. W. E. Garrison, who, as announced in last week's issue, goes to be president of the College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Mesilla Park, New Mexico.

—At Nelson, Neb., there is steady progress. The Christian Endeavor started the latter part of February with 11 members, and has increased to 93 members, 65 of them being active. A large delegation went to the district convention at Fairfield, and this organization has contributed to a number of the causes in the church, while a number will go to the state convention at Bethany Park, Lincoln.

—The dedication at Paragould, Ark., which was led by F. M. Rains, was, in every way, a success. The other churches of the town, with the exception of one of our own little organizations of the extremely conservative brethren, adjourned their own services to unite with the rejoicing congregation. The amount asked was $3,000, and $700 in excess of this was raised.

—The congregation at Mounds, Okla., is erecting a modest building at the cost of $1,500, which it is hoped will be dedicated on the first Lord's day in August, free of debt. This is a mission field, for which S. W. Marr, of Tulsa, Okla., has labored for five years. It is a worthy field, and contributions from those inclined to give are desired to help the brethren start without any incumbrances. Contributions may be sent to James H. Burns, the treasurer.

—A series of sermons which Andrew P. Johnson has been preaching during June and July to business men at Bethany, Mo., is producing most beneficial results. The town has been aroused and the largest attendance in the history of the congregation is being witnessed. The business men select the subjects to be discussed.

—During the past six months E. W. Allen's congregation, Wichita, Kan., has given $828 in missions, and there have been a large number of additions. Guy B. Williamson comes as assistant pastor August 1, a month prior to the Scoville meeting.

—A helpful contest, extending over a period of six months, has been engaged in by the Bible schools of the Christian churches at Winchester and Parker City, Ind. A definite purpose was selected by the officers at the latter place, viz., to pay off a mortgage of some $200 on the church property. A rally day was set and the mortgage burned with appropriate services. The mark for attendance was set for 200, and this was exceeded, while the offering was $210. C. H. Trout, the pastor, says the contest was a pleasant one in every way and helpful to both schools. Larger things are planned for in the future.

—On other pages of this issue will be found the names of some 250 books, which the Christian Publishing Company is offering at a discount of 30 per cent from the list price. This is a rare opportunity to get some good books at a very low price. Most of these books are late publications. Many of them are by authors which have large followings, but are not so well known, perhaps, to our readers, as they ought to be. An order should be sent in promptly before the stock is exhausted. The volumes are in good condition and not even shelf-worn. We are selling out to make room for new books coming in.

—The church at Gloversville, N. Y., has, by unanimous vote, persuaded H. H. Cushing to remain another year as their pastor. Last year they increased his salary and have added to it again this year. The number of additions has been 32, 18 by confession and baptism. A. C. W. B. M. Auxillary, organized during the year, is in a flourishing condition, while all other societies report good progress. The pastor organized a boy's brigade, and the week-day drills are always preceded by religious exercises and a ten minutes' talk, in which Brother Cushing has been assisted by other ministers of the city. He will remain with this congregation, which enters upon its year with bright prospects.

—F. E. Lumley has resigned the principalship of Sinclair College at St. Thomas, Ont., and after a summer spent in rest and study will enter Yale Divinity School to complete his work for the Ph. D. degree in sociology and education. Then he will be available for work in some of our own colleges. Quite a number of our young men will attend Yale in the autumn.

—The corner stone laying of the Sarah Davis Deterding Missionary Training School, which is under the direction of the Christian Board of Missions, will be on August 10 at Irvington, a suburb of Indianapolis, Ind. This will be the day before the state convention of the C. W. B. M., which is to be held at Bethany Assembly.

—Growing out of a difficulty in the First Church at Keokuk, Ia., which has been amicably settled, a second Christian church has been organized with about 50 charter members. A good board of officers has just been chosen, and we are informed that prospects are bright for the future. The new church is located in a residence section of the city, far from any Protestant organization. The property was secured from the Presbyterians, who turned over a mission school of 100 members with it. The building contains three well-equipped Sunday-school rooms, which can be thrown into the main auditorium, giving a total seating capacity of 400. Phil A. Parsons has taken up the work during vacation. The new organization is to be known as the Christian Church, corner of Bank and Fifteenth streets.

—Wesley Hatcher, who last month surprised his congregation at Hamilton, Ohio, by tendering his resignation, which was reluctantly accepted, has been eminently successful in his late field, going there about three years ago from Columbus. During this pastorate he has been the means of building up the work at Hamilton in a remarkable way. He is much loved by the members of his congregation, and respected by his fellow ministers and townsmen. In leaving Hamilton he is accepting a call to a great service in the hill country of Kentucky. In Morgan County of that state there are nineteen congregations, and for some time efforts have been made to secure him as superintendent of the county work. He will devote himself to organizing congregations and preparing them for a pastor. He believes a great work is to be done there, and for this reason he has, at somewhat of a sacrifice, severed his relationship with his happy, settled pastorate.

—Many are the appreciations that reach this office of our Easy Chair. It is not often that others than the writer and the editors know of these. In the absence of his chief by the lakeside, the assistant makes the following quotations from a letter just received as typical of many others that come to hand: "The Easy Chair is the first thing I read upon receipt of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It has the stimulating effect of a personal letter from a loving, helpful friend. The past year it has fallen to my lot to sit week after week by the sick bed of loved ones, and these notes came to me and mine like a fresh and invigorating breeze from God's great and beautiful world outside. My favorite passage in all the apostolic letters is, 'Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things.' Long live THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST 'Easy Chair' to help us in the cultivation of the beautiful side of life!" This cheering message is from Celesta Ball May, of Blackwell, Okla.

A Straightforward Statement.

I desire to say in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and "The Christian Standard" that I know there is absolutely nothing in the suspicion that there is any secret purpose or design in holding the great evangelistic and teacher training institute at Bethany Park, Ind., July 28-August 6. I have been familiar with the details of the work from the time the invitation came from Brother L. L. Carpenter to hold such an institute, and know whereof I speak.

This national congress and institute will be a training school, pure and simple, that those who attend may go home better equipped to do a larger service for our Master Teacher.

Herbert Moninger.

[Referring to the disclaimer of Brother Moninger, no one, we suppose, has for a moment entertained any suspicion of any ulterior motive on his part, or any knowledge of his that such motive existed. Some brethren who received the unwise circulars having the tendency if not the motive of stirring up partisan feeling among the brethren, feared a hostile demonstration toward existing organizations, and a possible inauguration of an opposition movement. We felt it our duty to give the authors of these circulars, and the Bethany Assembly managers, an opportunity to disclaim any such motive. This the Bethany Assembly, through its president, has done, and the "Christian Standard" has denied any purpose to form a new organization, but has not yet defined its attitude toward our missionary societies. This information is called for elsewhere.—EDITOR.]

What Our Congresses Discuss.

As there is an effort in some directions to make it appear that our congresses have an entirely destructive tendency, it may be of interest to recall some of the subjects that have recently been discussed in them. To go no further back than 1906, the themes were: "The Secret of Power," "Practical Measures for the Disciples in the Promotion of Christian Union To-day," "The New Testament Teaching on the Relation of Baptism to Remission of Sins and the New Birth," "What Obstacles, if any, Exist in the Way of Union Between Baptists and Disciples of Christ?" "Organized Effort of the Disciples in Behalf of our Colleges and Universities," "The Educational Expression of a Religious Movement," "Religious Life in the Light of Modern Psychology," "The Reorganization of Religious Education," "The Elements of a True Evangelism." This latter subject, by the way, was treated by H. O. Breeden, Wm. J. Wright and Archibald McLean, none of whom we believe could be classed as opposed to New Testament Evangelism. The next year, at Cincinnati, the themes discussed were: "The Relation of the Church to Men," "Things in Common Between Industry and Religion," "The Relation of the Church to Labor," "The Relation of the Church to Young People," and "Wherein all Agree, Whereto all Should Labor."

The man who classes these themes as unimportant or as destructive of the best interests of our Brotherhood, surely has a curious conception of the conditions that the churches have to meet at the beginning of this twentieth century.

NEWS FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

The work in North Carolina has been a little torn up, recently, on account of the resignation of the president and corresponding secretary of the state board, but everything is getting straightened out now and our people are settling down to hard work, with a determination to make this a great year for the cause of Christ in the old North State. We were compelled to allow A. B. Cunningham, president of the board, to leave us, but were fortunate in retaining W. G. Walker, our efficient corresponding secretary, who for two years has so earnestly and faithfully labored in North Carolina. Brother Walker is a "little Alabama coon," but he tips the scales at 256 and has a heart and brain fully as large, and we are very glad that he is to remain with us in the work here. He is a man that believes in doing things and doing them now. He is a man with plenty of courage, and tackles the hard and stony places with a vim that knows no defeat. He believes that nothing succeeds like success, so, like the old Jew, "if he don't succeed at first he keeps on succeeding until he does succeed."

Meetings have just been closed at Farmville and Fremont and one is being held at Whitakers at this writing, with several more to be held in the various fields during the latter part of July and August. Brother Walker, assisted by Prof. J. D. Bowles as singer, held the meeting at Farmville, and from all reports held one of the best meetings ever witnessed by the good people of this thriving little town. Forty-two were added to the church and those within the church were so revived and stimulated that they began the erection of a new $8,000 building as soon as the meeting closed, and they could move the old one out of the way. G. F. Cuthrell held the meeting at Fremont, and while there was no great number of additions, some substantial work was done that will amount to much in the future. Fremont is a mission point, but they have a neat little house, just completed, and a few of the most earnest, consecrated workers we ever knew, and the indications now are that the day is not far distant when Fremont will be one of our strong churches. J. W. Tyndall is holding the meeting at Whitakers and at last report was having large crowds and great interest. This is the first meeting we have ever held at Whitakers, but Brother Tyndall hopes to leave an established church when he leaves.

Brother Walker, assisted by Professor Bowles, is preparing to begin a meeting at Scotland Neck. We have no church at Scotland Neck, and the people of this community have had very few opportunities of hearing the gospel as presented by the Disciples of Christ, but we feel certain that with the proper efforts a strong church could be established. We have a few faithful members who have long been pleading with the state board for a meeting, but the proper time has just presented itself, and, deo volente, Brother Walker will open up there next Sunday, prepared to stay until something is accomplished for Christ. There are a number of towns and cities where we could establish churches if we only had the men and money to enter them properly, and to continue the work until it is self-supporting.

The work at Wilmington, our city mission, is moving along very nicely. Brother Erwin seems to be leading and the members following and working together, towards the accomplishment of one of the greatest works ever undertaken in North Carolina. Wilmington is the largest city in the state and in many ways the most important. It has a very excellent harbor and is near one of the greatest seaside resorts of the state. Our people have had a wonderful beginning there and the indications are that within a few years we will have a church in Wilmington which will not only be self-supporting, but will do much to evangelize the rest of North Carolina and the world.

The prospects for Atlantic Christian College are now brighter than they have ever been before, and we believe next year will be the greatest in the history of the college. The girls' dormitory was taxed to its utmost capacity last year, so we can not hope for much increase in the number of young ladies until we can have more buildings, but the indications are now that we will have double the number of young men next year that we had last year. J. C. Caldwell, our new president, seems to be eminently fitted, both by nature and training, for the position which he occupies. He is taking hold of the work with a spirit and a determination to win, and if the indications fail us not, the day is not far distant when Atlantic College will be one of the strongest and best small colleges of the brotherhood. The people of the state seem to be awakening to the great importance of A. C. C. and we believe that the sun of greatness is just rising upon a great and glorious day for our college and the cause of Christ in North Carolina.

President J. C. Caldwell begins a meeting at Ellenton, S. C., the third Sunday in this month. Jacob Walters, editor of the South Carolina department of the "Carolina Evangel," and one of the leading spirits of the Christian warfare in the Palmetto State, is the efficient minister at Ellenton. Brother Walters is a staunch friend of Atlantic Christian College and is very desirous of seeing the two states (North Carolina and South Carolina) unite in the building up of one college, and we believe by closer relationship and more co-operation on the part of the two states much more can be accomplished and the cause of Christ greatly strengthened in this section.

Claude C. Jones, of Washington, D. C., has just taken charge of the work at New Bern, and from all reports he is stirring things in this the most historic city of the state, having had nine additions the first month. New Bern has one of the livest, most enthusiastic Sunday-schools in the state, and now with Brother Jones there, with his zeal and earnestness and ability, presenting the old Jerusalem gospel, New Bern is destined to have a wonderful growth for the Lord.

R. V. Omer has recently taken hold of the work at Washington, and W. S. Bullard at Wilson. Good reports are coming from both places. The prayer-meeting at Wilson is the best it has ever been, both in reference to attendance and interest, while the Sunday-school is moving along very nicely. Wilson is our best and most important church in the state.

Miss Elizabeth Tesh, state organizer of the C. W. B. M., to the sorrow of the C. W. B. M. sisters, has ceased to be, and in her stead we have Mrs. Elizabeth Tesh Willingham. Miss Tesh resigned her position as state organizer a few weeks ago, without giving her full reason, and it was something of a mystery to her many friends, until Monday evening, July 6, 1908, when the drowsy afternoon nappers of the city of Kinston were disturbed from their quiet repose by the music of wedding bells, as it was sweetly wafted forth upon the still, balmy air of an ideal summer day from the silvery lips of the Christian Church bell. The happy man was Mr. T. L. Willingham, a prosperous young insurance man of Greenville, N. C., and a most earnest Christian gentleman. Miss Tesh was a consecrated Christian worker of great ability, and will be missed very much in her official capacity, while we are sure she will be a valuable addition to some local congregation. Just after the ceremony the happy couple left for their future home, Greenville, N. C.

Wilson, N. C. C. Manly Morton.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

PASTOR'S COLLEGE

Champaign, Ill.

New road to the ministry. Especially for men and women of limited education and burning zeal. Only one year in college then training while preaching. Freshness, power, time, enthusiasm conserved. Catalogue ready.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

WE HAVE an actual gold mine in operation at Rawhide, Nevada, machinery installed and taking out ore. All Christian men, we need a little more money to secure returns from the smelters; will let you in on the ground floor with us and treat you right. L. W. Klinker, Los Angeles, California.

NURSES WANTED.—By the Christian Hospital, St. Louis, Missouri. Fifteen young ladies between twenty and thirty years of age, with at least a grammar school education, and all right, morally and physically, to enter our training school for nurses. For terms address Supt. of Christian Hospital, 5881 Plymouth ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Church Supplies, Etc.

HAS IT for less. All church and Bible school supplies. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelists and Ministers.

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

D. H. SHANKLIN, evangelist, Normal, Ill., uses stereopticon, charts and furnishes singer if desired.

M. R. SHANKS, of Geary, Oklahoma, after a three-years' pastorate at that place, has resigned for the purpose of entering the evangelistic field. He would be glad to correspond with churches needing meetings. Address him at Geary, Oklahoma.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write HINNERS ORGAN COMPANY, PEKIN, ILLINOIS, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

THIRTY-SIX DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS plus 25 1-2 hours a week pays for all the privileges of an up-to-date school. Catalogue free. Address School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Send for our Catalogue.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

Missouri and Teacher Training.

At a rally in Kansas City, held in May, there were promised by the churches of greater Kansas City 1,240 pupils to enter upon the study of teacher training courses, September 29, 1908. Beginning at this date there will be time to pursue the course, stand the examinations and report before the Centennial convention in October, 1909. It has been determined, therefore, to make this Rally day, upon which to begin all classes which can not begin sooner, and the day on which Missouri is to have 10,000 people studying teacher training.

To secure this end we will wage a vigorous campaign. We want to use as much systematic effort and as much enthusiasm as Kansas and Illinois combined have done, and we expect to have 10,000 pupils, not promised, but actually studying, on October 1, 1908.

We call attention to the fact that in order to reach the 10,000 in Illinois and Kansas, the state workers received the enthusiastic support of the leading men of their states. We shall conndently count on Missouri's men to give the same kind of support.

With the sentiment what it is for teacher training, with the Centennial before us, and the example of sister states inspiring us to greater efforts, and with the greater brotherhood of Missouri to draw our pupils from, we should surely pass the 10,000 mark by October 1. J. H. Hardin, Supt.

J. H. Bryan, Associate.

Missouri and Adult Bible Classes.

It is the purpose of the Missouri Christian Bible School Association to have one thousand organized Adult Bible classes in our churches in Missouri by October 1, 1908. To do this will in no wise detract from the interest in the campaign for 10,000 teacher training pupils by the same date. When the grown folks are rallied into the Bible school they are in a good position to be won into the training class.

The special campaign for these classes was begun after the Louisville convention of the International Association, and so popular is the movement that 150 classes were promised during the first week. Besides these, we have now many classes, such as the Baraca and Philathea classes, which are organized up to international standards. These need but to be enrolled. We therefore have, with those promised the first week, about 250 classes. With this start we should reach the 1,000 all right.

What is an organized class? To reach the International standard the class must have, besides its teacher, a president, a vice-president, a secretary and a treasurer, and three committees, membership, social and devotional. Through the membership committee thousands of organized classes have more than doubled their membership, and some have grown from four or five members to 20, 40, 60, 100 and 200 members. All great Adult classes are organized classes. The social committee makes it possible to so use the personal influence of the members of the class that it will be used to draw adults into the school and to make the class "social to save."

The devotional, or spiritual, committee is the one which is to be credited with the fact that out of the original Baraca class there have been 350 men led to Christ in a little over a decade.

This minimum of organization has been decided upon after the fullest conferences with the leaders of all the organized Adult class movements and men's brotherhoods, etc., etc., in the world. Our own W. C. Pearce is the national superintendent of the Adult department.

It is the plan with us to undertake to organize up to the standards given above all classes of pupils 16 years old and over, holding that if organization is good for one class it is good for all.

The benefits of the work and the methods by which it may be made a success in the individual class will be published from time to time.

As this is a movement which proposes to furnish every preacher not one, but a dozen or more, assistant pastors, "free gratis, for nothing," we expect the heartiest co-operation on the part of our ministry in pushing this campaign. J. H. Bryan, Supt. Adult Dept. 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The Welcome Bible Class.

The Welcome Bible Class of the First Christian Church of Little Rock, Arkansas, whose picture is herewith presented, is a good example of what can be accomplished by organization.

Mr. Pray had been teaching a class of married ladies for about a year, with an average attendance of five members, when he decided to organize this class. After submitting the proposition to the class it was decided to have a social to which prospective members were to be invited and at which the organization was to be effected. This plan was carried out, and on the night of November 14, 1907, Mr. Pray's class entertained the Men's Bible Class, of which the pastor, J. N. Jessup, is teacher. A ladies' class organized with 11 charter members. A president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer were elected and constitution and by-laws adopted. The class selected for a name "The Welcome Bible Class of the First Christian Church"; for a motto, "We can best serve Christ by truly serving others."

The Welcome Class then challenged the Men's Class to a contest for membership. The penalty was that the class defeated at the end of six months should give a banquet and act as waiters for the winning class. The men's class accepted the challenge and a spirited contest began November 17. The interest of the contest was heightened by the fact that it was a neck to neck race. Sometimes the ladies' class and at other times the men's class would be in the lead. At the closing Sunday of the contest, May 15, 1908, the Welcome Class had seventy-six present and the Twentieth Century Bible Class had forty-three; the men's class being defeated by one hundred and twelve points. The result of the contest can be seen in an increased attendance and in the enthusiasm of all departments of the Sunday-school and especially the senior department.

On Easter Sunday the Welcome Class gave $80 to the building fund of the new church, and they have now started a fund for equipping a class room when the new church is completed. The teacher and class feel proud of the record they have made, considering the fact that the teacher is greatly handicapped in teaching the lesson by the crowded condition of the Sunday-school, and the members of the class, being married ladies, have the usual duties of the housewife to attend to on Sunday morning. In spite of this fact, however, a majority of the members are present on time.

The class has three working committees and is fortunate in having an earnest and conscientious president and a hard-working secretary. They also have a class sponsor, Dr. J. B. Lewis, who has aided materially in the results accomplished by the class.

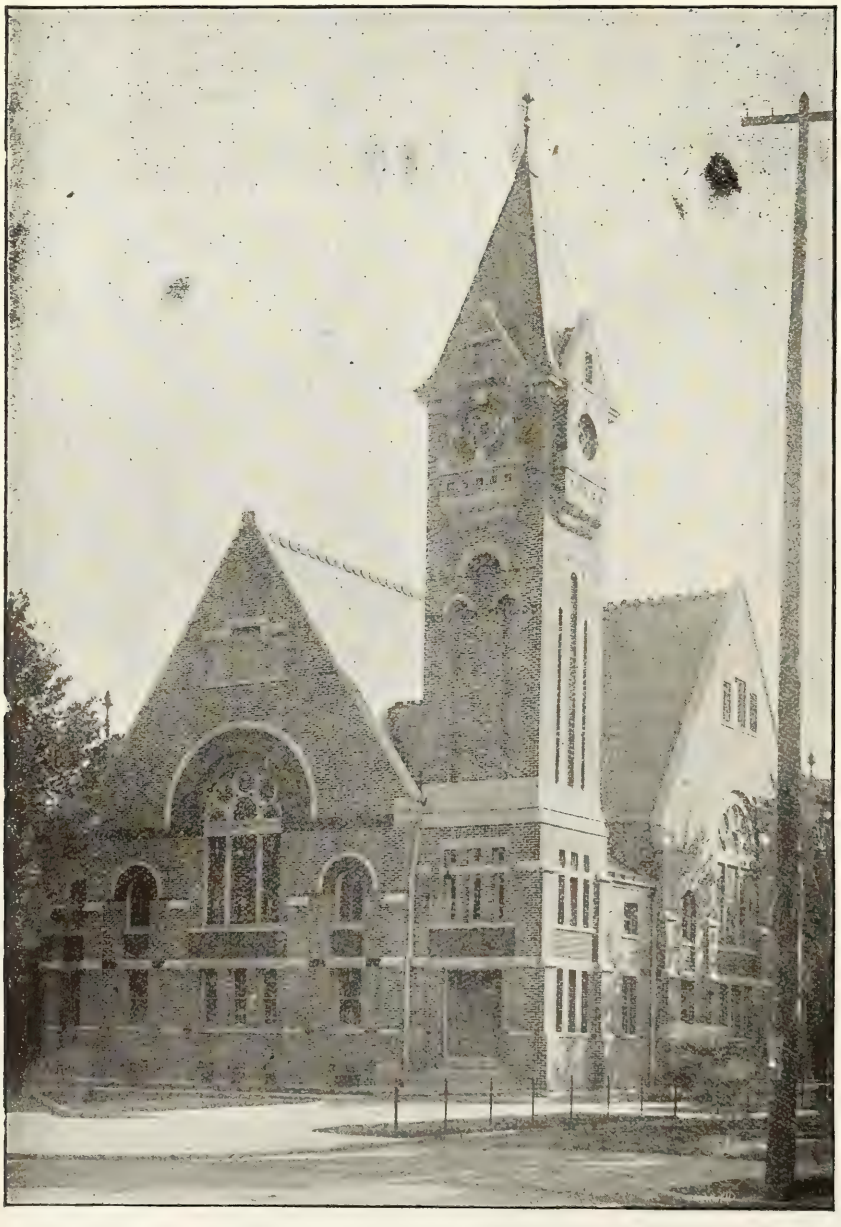
A social is held monthly as a reception for new members and to promote a social spirit among the members of the class. While the class has been fortunate in the selection of its officers, still its success has not been due to the work of a few, but to the hearty co-operation of the entire class.

The members of the Welcome Class are not satisfied with the results accomplished so far, but are planning for still greater things. They expect to more than double their present membership when they get into their new room. Their object, as stated, is Bible study and development along intellectual, spiritual and philanthropic lines. They expect their class to be a recruiting class for teachers of the Sunday-school, to be an aid to their pastor, and to quicken the spiritual life of the church by creating an interest in the study of the Bible in their homes. R. F. Pray.

R. F. Pray's "Welcome" Bible Class, Little Rock, Ark.

A DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY

We have not stopped to count just how many of our churches throughout the land have a long history behind them. Few have been brought to our notice that can go back in their records over a continuous period exceeding seventy-five years, but there are a number that have passed that anniversary, and others that are near to celebrating the seventy-fifth year of their beginning. Two such celebrations have just occurred in the state of Indiana, one at Vincennes, and the other at Indianapolis. This week we attempt to give some account of the Central Christian Church in the last named city, and will follow with an account of the church at Vincennes. For what we have to say we are indebted to the present pastors of these churches, each of whom delivered a special message on the occasion of the anniversary.



Central Christian Church, Indianapolis.

The celebration at Indianapolis was on June 12, exactly seventy-five years to the day from the first organization effected by the brethren of our Reformation in that city. Some special hymns by those intimately associated with the church, such as D. R. Lucas, L. H. Jameson, and Jessie Brown Pounds, were sung. David Walk, the preacher at the time of the fiftieth anniversary, was present to give his recollections. W. L. Hayden spoke on "Early Teachings of the Fathers," Dr. A. R. Benton on "Early Families of the Church," Dr. L. H. Jameson on "The Impressions of a Boy Nine Years Old of the Disciples' Church and its Environment in 1833," U. C. Brewer, a former pastor, on "Our Church and Education in Indiana," while A. L. Orcutt lead the devotions, and there was an open conference upon "Early Recollections of the Pioneers." The present pastor, Dr. Allen B. Philputt, read the historical sketch, and on the following Sunday preached a sermon on "The Diamond Jubilee."

Brother Philputt acknowledged his indebtedness for the history of the church, up to its fiftieth anniversary, to Love H. Jameson, who, upon the occasion of that anniversary, read a sketch which fortunately was preserved and through the kindness of David Walk filed among the archives of the church. According to this, it appears that the first preaching of the restoration principles in Indianapolis was in 1822, more than ten years before the organization of the church by one John McClung, who had come out under the preaching of Barton W. Stone, of Kentucky. He died the week following the first sermon that he preached, and his body lies buried some two miles above the city, on Fall Creek, unmarked, and now unknown. There were but a few families in those days who met around their cabins to hear some itinerant preacher from Ohio or Kentucky, who would come out to preach, and perhaps to make himself a home in the wilderness. From 1822 to 1830 a small Christian Church was organized at Old Union, in the western part of Marion county, by Jesse Frazier. This church long ago passed away, but in its immediate vicinity two churches, at Clermont and Ebenezer, exist, which were organized largely from descendants of charter members of the Old Union congregation.

It was in 1832 that Dr. John H. Sanders, of New Castle, Ky., located in Indianapolis, a deeply religious man, who had entered fully into what was then called the Reformation, before he left Kentucky. He hunted up his brethren wherever they were to be found, doing everything to encourage them to stand fast in the faith. He found cordial coadjutors in Butler K. Smith and his brother, Cary Smith.

It was in the course of the winter of 1832-33, at the instance of Dr. Sanders, that John O'Kane first came to Indianapolis. Although a man of appearance and address, the houses of public worship in the town were closed against him. He preached several nights in a small log cabin, the residence of Benjamin Roberts, on the east side of Illinois street, a few paces north of Market. On the Lord's day, however, he was able to preach to a large audience in the Court House, where the Legislature was assembled, and the people discovered that views that had been treated with derision were capable of masterly defense. The occasion of his first visit was the baptism of Miss Zerilda Sanders, daughter of Dr. Sanders, and Mrs. Rebecca Smith, the wife of Cary Smith. These two were the first fruits of the gospel in Indianapolis as declared by the Reformers. In the following spring, John O'Kane, with Michael Combs, visited Indianapolis again, and eight persons were baptized. The brethren met in Benjamin Roberts' log cabin, and organized with an enrollment of twenty "The Church of Christ in Indianapolis," taking the New Testament as their only system of practice, and agreeing to make it the rule of their lives. It is from about this time the Sunday-school dates. The records of the church were imperfectly kept, but it is known that the brethren met every Lord's day, and have done so to this present time. During the remainder of the year, O'Kane and Combs visited the church frequently, and there were other additions, a number of brethren visiting them until in 1836 steps were taken to build a house of worship. This not being completed, early in 1837 the church occupied the old Seminary Building in University Park. There is no mention in the records of the time when the little band began meeting in their own house of worship.

In June of 1839, the first state meeting was held at Indianapolis, Barton W. Stone, then living at Jacksonville, Ill., being among those present. We had in the state at that time about 150 churches, with 10,000 members. At the meeting in the following year John Smith, of Kentucky, was in attendance. It was after Love H. Jameson became pastor of the church in 1842 that the history of the congregation showed easier times. There was a membership of about 62 active workers, and 60 on the roll who were indifferent. Old troubles were forgotten, and the brethren agreed to give their pastor $300 a year and board for himself and his family, with the privilege of holding occasional meetings elsewhere. At the close of his ministry, the membership was 375, and they had never paid him to exceed $500 a year during his ten years' service. It was in 1853 that the congregation entered their own house of worship at Delaware and Ohio.

A. B. Philputt.

Samuel K. Hoshour preached the dedicatory sermon. There was a succession of ministers, and a full list is given later in this sketch. At the time of the semi-centennial David Walk was the minister, and the condition of the church then was the best in its history up to that time. John E. Pounds and Dr. Jabez Hall served for a brief period prior to the coming of Allan B. Philputt, the present minister. An editorial in the "Indianapolis News" says that Brother Philputt has established himself not only in the hearts of his congregation, but of the whole city. The present handsome building, which will have to be enlarged in some way, is on Delaware and Walnut streets.

In 1869 the Second Church, composed of colored brethren, was organized; the Third Church was organized January 1, 1869, with Elijah Goodwin as pastor; in 1867 the Fourth Church was organized, its charter members being largely from the Central Church; in 1869 Olive Branch was organized, and in 1875 the Sixth Church came into existence. At the time of the semi-centennial there were 1,500 members in the city, half of them being in the Central Church. Now our membership in Indianapolis exceeds 6,000, and the Central Church has a congregation of 1,650 on its church roll. Dr. Philputt has just had his tenth anniversary in the leadership of this church—years that have been both pleasant and productive. The church supports two missionaries in foreign lands and one in the home land. It observes all the missionary days of the church year. In the recent campaign for the endowment of Butler College the sum of $23,000 was contributed by its members. In closing this sketch the pastor said: "I dare not say that we are doing all that we ought, but this is not the time to speak of that. We rejoice to-day in the good favor of our God and can truly say, hitherto hath the Lord helped us, and here we raise our Ebenezer."

The following are the names of the pastors from the organization to the present time: Chauncy Butler, Love H. Jameson, James M. Mathes, Love H. Jameson, Elijah Goodwin, Perry Hall, O. A. Burgess, W. F. Black, Joseph B. Cleaver, Urban C. Brewer, David Walk, Edwin J. Gantz, Daniel R. Lucas, John E. Pounds, Jabez Hall (acting), Allan B. Philputt.

John O'Kane.

On the front page of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we present this week the likeness of one of the most distinguished of our pioneer evangelists, much of whose work was done in the state of Indiana, and who was intimately associated with the founding of our cause in Indianapolis and the successful planting of the church whose diamond anniversary we report above. In addition to his reputation as an evangelist, his name will be connected with the founding of North-Western Christian University, now Butler College.

John O'Kane was born in the state of Virginia, in the year 1802. He was of a tall, straight, bony, Indian-like structure, and though of Irish extraction and abundantly profuse in the effusions of the wit of his ancestry, he was distinctly, too, an American. His intellectual combinations were remarkable. He was powerful in argument, sublime in flights of fancy, quick in his witty sarcasm and ready repartee, while he had a magnetism with an audience that made him a preacher of great power.

An orthodox preacher refused to debate with him, but expressed his willingness to meet Campbell or some leader of the Reformation. Fixing his keen eye on the preacher, and pointing his long finger, after the manner of John Randolph, he exclaimed: "You? You debate with Alexander Campbell? Why, if one of his ideas should get into your head it would explode like a bomb-shell!"

Great Picnic at Havana, Ill.

On June 26, Disciples, their families and friends of Central Illinois to the number of more than two thousand gathered at Chautauqua Grounds near Havana for the second annual reunion and picnic. The day was ideal, the grounds of sixty-five acres at their best, and the committees having the affair in charge covered themselves with glory. Three railroad trains, one each from Peoria, Springfield and Jacksonville, pulled into Chautauqua station simultaneously, later trains adding to the crowds, and not an idle moment intervened between arrival and their departure about 5:30 o'clock.

An unusual array of sports, baseball, basket ball, lawn tennis, croquet, etc., on the athletic field occupied the forenoon, while immediately after dinner the large steel auditorium was filled to overflowing to listen to the splendid program. J. Fred Jones, the genial secretary of Illinois Christian Missionary Society, was master of ceremonies, and performed his task in his usual "happy go lucky" style. H. H. Peters, Field Secretary of Eureka College, talked for seven or eight minutes on "Our Centennial Aims," delivering his address in characteristic style by the shortest route—and when he arrived at his destination he stopped. President Hieronymus was moderator of a thirty minute drill-down contest between classes of Jacksonville and Springfield. Clarence Depew, the "live wire" of the Illinois Bible schools, read the questions from Moninger's book. This was a very interesting and instructive portion of the afternoon's entertainment. Music was furnished by the Havana chorus, Ladies' Quartette, Peoria, Glee Club, Lewistown, Misses Anderson, Springfield, and others. A brilliant reading was given by Miss Kate Clarkson, gold medalist of Jacksonville. Officers for the ensuing year are: President, E. E. Elliott, Peoria; 1st Vice-Pres., F. M. Rogers, Springfield; 2nd Vice-Pres., Geo. H. Harney, Jacksonville; 3rd Vice-Pres., L. F. Watson, Petersburg; Secretary, O. C. Bolman, Havana. The date and place of 1909 meeting are left to the officers. The day closed with boating and bathing in Quiver Lake and Illinois River, sports, baseball, tug of war, twenty men on a side, etc. Fine Eureka College pennants were distributed as prizes in all events. It was voted a great day for Central Illinois, Eureka College, and all the churches and Bible schools participating, and the second successful event insures another and better one the last of June, 1909.

It Can Be Done.

The C. E. Society of our church at Fort Smith, Ark., held the Inland Empire service at the morning church hour, and with the assistance of the church raised $300 for Home Missions, thus making the Fort Smith Christian Church a living-link in the Home work. The service was a very helpful and instructive one and much interest was manifested. This is certainly a great work and worthy of our best effort.

G. D. Serrill,
Chairman Missionary Com. C. E. Society.

MID-SUMMER SLAUGHTER

SALE OF BOOKS!!

30 PER CENT DISCOUNT

On any of the Books listed below, while they last, or until withdrawn.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY - - - - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

AFTER THE PRIMARY, WHAT? by Rev. A. H. McKinney, cloth. $ .75
ALL ABOUT THE BIBLE, by Sidney Collett, cloth 1.00
ALMOST A MAN, by Mary Wood-Allen, cloth 1.00
ALONE WITH THE WORD, by G. Stringer Rowe, cloth 2.25
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY BIBLE DICTIONARY (large edition), cloth 1.50
ANECDOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, paper 35c, cloth ..... .75
ANTIDOTE TO CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, THE, by James M. Gray .75
AS JESUS PASSED BY, by Gipsy Smith, paper 35c, cloth 1.00
ATONEMENT, by Newman Hall, cloth ..... .75
AUTHORSHIP OF THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY, by John W. McGarvey, cloth 2.00
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF GIPSY SMITH, by Gipsy Smith, cloth 1.00
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF SAMUEL ROGERS, cloth 1.00
BAPTISM IN SCRIPTURE AND ART, by J. T. Christian, cloth. 1.00
BELIEF OF UNBELIEFS, THE, by W. H. Fitchett, cloth 1.25
BETWEEN THE TESTAMENTS, by Rev. D. Gregg, cloth ..... .75
BIBLE CHARACTERS, by Rev. Alexander Whyte (6 vols.), per set 5.00
BIBLE DICTIONARY, by William Smith (enlarged edition), $1.50, workers' edition 1.00
BIBLE SCHOOL, THE, by A. H. McKinney, cloth ..... .60
BIBLE SCHOOL PEDAGOGY, by A. H. McKinney, cloth ..... .50
BIBLE AS GOOD READING, by A. J. Beveridge ..... .50
BIBLE STUDY POPULARIZED, by Frank T. Lee 1.50
BIBLE STUDIES FOR TEACHER TRAINING, by Charles Roads, cloth 60c, paper ..... .40
BIBLE TEACHER'S GUIDE, by James A. Worden (2 vols), set. .50
BIBLE UNDER TRIAL, THE, by James Orr, cloth 1.75
BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR, THE, by Joseph S. Excell, cloth 2.00
NEW TESTAMENT, set (29 vols), per set 30.00
OLD TESTAMENT, Set (15 vols.), per set 18.75
BLACKBOARD IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by H. T. Bailey, cloth .... .75
BLACKBOARD LESSON, by John Ritchie, cloth ..... .50
BLACKBOARD CLASS FOR SUNDAY- SCHOOL TEACHERS, by Florence H. Darnell ..... .25
BLESSED LIFE, THE, by Prof. H. J. Hofmeyer, cloth 1.00
BLOOM OF GIRLHOOD, THE, by Pauline Page, cloth ..... .25
BLUEGRASS REGION OF KENTUCKY, THE, by James L. Allen, cloth 1.50
BRIGHT IDEAS FOR ENTERTAINING, by A. B. Linscott ..... .50
CAMPAIGNING FOR CHRIST, by J. V. Coombs, cloth ..... .40
CHALK: WE CAN DO IT, by Mrs. Ella N. Wood, cloth ..... .75
CHARLES FORCE DEEMS, by Charles Force Deems, cloth 1.50
CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON, by Rev. J. J. Ellis, cloth 1.00
CHILD FOR CHRIST, by A. H. McKinney, cloth ..... .50
CHILDREN'S PRAYER, THE, by James Wells, cloth ..... .75
C. H. M'S NOTES ON THE PENTATEUCH (6 vols.), per set.. 2.50
CHINA AND AMERICA OF TO-DAY, by Rev. Arthur H. Smith, cloth 1.25
CHRIST AND PROGRESS, by David James Burrell, cloth 1.20
CHRIST'S SERVICE OF LOVE, by Rev. Hugh Black, cloth 1.25
CHRIST AND SCIENCE, by F. H. Smith, cloth 1.25
CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE, by Hannah W. Smith (Mrs. Pearsell Smith), cloth ..... .50
CHRISTIANITY'S STORM CENTER, by Charles Stelzle, cloth.. 1.00
CHRIST'S VALEDICTORY, by R. F. Sample 1.25
CHRIST FROM WITHOUT AND WITHIN, THE, by Henry W. Clark, cloth 1.25
CHRISTIAN'S RELATION TO EVOLUTION, THE, by Franklin Johnson 1.00
CHRISTIAN CHURCH HISTORY, by George P. Fisher (large crown edition) 3.50
CHRISTIAN PASTOR AND THE WORKING CHURCH, by Washington Gladden 2.50
CHURCH OF CHRIST, THE, by A Layman, cloth 1.00
CHURCH OF THE KINGDOM, THE, by Washington Gladden, cloth ..... .50
CHURCH POLICY, by W. L. Hayden, cloth 1.00
CITIZENS OF TO-MORROW, by Alice M. Guernsey, cloth 50c, paper ..... .30
CITY TEMPLE SERMONS, by R. J. Campbell 1.00
COMMENTARY ON BIBLE, by Matthew Henry (6 vols.), $8.00, half morocco 10.00
COMMENTARY ON OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT, by Jamieson Fausett and Brown, cloth $5.00, half morocco 6.00
COMMENTARY ON ACTS, by J. W. McGarvey (2 vols. in 1), cloth 1.00
COMPLETE NORMAL MANUAL FOR BIBLE STUDENTS AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS, THE, by W. J. Semelroth, cloth 50c, paper ..... .25
CONTINENT OF OPPORTUNITY, THE, by Francis E. Clark, cloth 1.50
CONCORDANCE, by A. Cruden, cloth $1.00, half leather 1.50
COURAGE OF THE COWARD, THE, by Charles F. Aked, cloth 1.25
CULTURE OF CHRISTIAN MANHOOD, THE, by W. H. Sallmon, cloth 1.50
CULTURE OF SIMPLICITY, THE, by M. I. McLeod, cloth 1.00
CRITICAL GREEK ENGLISH CONCORDANCE, A, by Charles F. Hudson, cloth 2.00
CYCLOPEDIC HANDBOOK OF THE BIBLE, THE, by Angus-Green, cloth, large ed. 1.50
DAILY ALTAR. A PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR, by J. H. Jowett ..... .25
DAUGHTER'S DANGER, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake, cloth ..... .25
DAWN AT SHANTY BAY THE, by Robert E. Knowles, cloth 1.00
DAYBREAK IN THE DARK CONTINENT, by W. S. Naylor, cloth .50
DEATH OF CHRIST, THE, by James Denney, cloth 1.50
DEITY OF JESUS CHRIST, THE, by S. W. Pratt, cloth ..... .50
DEVELOPMENT OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, THE, 1780 to 1905 Official report of the eleventh International Sunday-School Con vention 1.00
DIFFICULTIES AND ALLEGED ERRORS AND CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth ..... .50
DISCOURSES ON PHILIPPIANS, by F. A. Noble, cloth 1.00
DIVINE IN MAN, THE, by F. A. Noble, cloth 1.00
DIVINE UNITY OF THE SCRIPTURES, THE, by A. Saphir, cloth 1.50
DOWN IN WATER STREET, by S. H. Hadley, cloth 1.00
EDEN AND GETHSEMANE, by Alex Stewart and others, cloth.. 1.00
EDERSHEIM'S BIBLE HISTORY, by Alfred Edersheim (7 vols), per set, boxed, cloth 3.50
EFFICIENT CHURCH, AN, by Carl Gregg Doney, cloth 1.25
EMERSON'S POEMS, full leather binding, gilt edges 1.00
EMERSON'S ESSAYS, full leather binding, gilt edges 1.00
EMPIRE OF LOVE, THE, by W. J. Dawson, cloth 1.00
ENDEAVORERS' DAILY COMPANION, by A. R. Wells, leather 30c, paper ..... .10
ETERNAL IN MAN, THE, by James I. Vance, cloth 1.00
EVANGELISTIC NOTE, THE, by W. J. Dawson, cloth 1.25
EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY, by J. W. McGarvey, cloth.. 1.50
EXPOSITIONS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE, by Alexander MacLaren, net 7.50
First Series—Six volumes: The Book of Genesis; The Prophecies of Isaiah; The Gospel of St. Matthew (3 vols.); The Prophecies of Jeremiah.
Second Series—Six volumes: Deuteronomy; Ruth; First Kings; St. Mark (2 vols.); Leviticus; Joshua; First Samuel; Second Kings to chapter VII. Acts (vol. 1); Numbers; Judges; Second Samuel.
Third Series: Acts (vol. 2); Gospel of St. John; Second Kings, from chapter 8; Chronicles; Ezra; Nehemiah; Esther and Job; Proverbs and Ecclesiastes.
EVOLUTION OF NEW CHINA, THE, by William N. Brewster 1.25
EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE (26 vols.), per set, cloth 16.00
EXTEMPORE PRAYER, by Rev. M. P. Talling, cloth 1.25
EYE-TEACHING IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by R. W. Sindall .75
EZRA, NEHEMIAH and ESTHER, by A. H. Sayce, cloth 1.00
FACES TOWARD THE LIGHT, by S. Stall, cloth 1.00
FAIREST GIRLHOOD, by Margaret E. Sangster, cloth 1.50
FAITH AND CHARACTER, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth ..... .75
FASCINATION OF THE BOOK, THE, by E. W. Work, cloth.... 1.25
FAMOUS HYMNS OF THE WORLD, by A. Sutheriand, cloth.... 1.20
FAMOUS WOMEN, by M. B. Wharton, cloth 1.50
FIFTH GOSPEL, THE, by J. M. P. Otts, cloth 1.25
FIFTY MISSIONARY PROGRAMS, by B. M. Brain, cloth ..... .35
FIRST PRINCIPLES, by M. M. Davis, cloth 1.00
FIRST PRINCIPLES AND PERFECTION, by J. S. Lamar, cloth.. .75
FIVE-MINUTE OBJECT SERMONS TO CHILDREN, THE, by S. Stall 1.00
FORWARD MOVEMENTS OF THE LAST HALF CENTURY, by A. T. Pierson 1.50
FOUR GOSPELS TRANSLATED FROM THE GREEK, by George Campbell, cloth ..... .50
FOREIGN MISSIONARY, THE, by Arthur J. Brown, cloth 1.50
FORTUNE OF THE REPUBLIC, THE, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth 1.20
FROM FACT TO FAITH, by J. M. Gibson ..... .75
FRONT LINE OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MOVEMENT, THE, by Rev. F. N. Peloubet 1.00
GEORGE H. C. MACGREGOR, by D. C. Macgregor 1.50
GOD'S MESSAGE TO THE HUMAN SOUL, by J. Watson (Ian Maclaren), cloth 1.25
GETTING ONE'S BEARINGS, by Alexander McKenzie 1.25
GOSPEL FOR THE NEW AGE, AND OTHER SERMONS, THE, by Bishop H. C. G. Moule 1.00
GOSPEL IN ISAIAH, THE, by Charles D. Robinson 1.25
GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW, by F. N. Peloubet 1.25
GOSPEL PREACHER, THE, by Benjamin Franklin, set of 2 vols., per sent 2.00
GRACE BEFORE MEAT, by A. R. Wells, cloth ..... .25
GRADING THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by J. W. Axtell ..... .50
GROWING CHRISTIAN, by W. E. Biederwolf ..... .50
GROWING CHURCH, THE, by C. B. McAfee ..... .50
GROWING PASTOR, by J. G. McClure ..... .50
HADLEY S. H. OF WATER STREET, by J. Wilbur Chapman, cloth 1.25
HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS, A, by John H. Kerr, cloth 1.50
HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS, A, FOR HISTORICAL STUDY, by Stevens and Burton, cloth 1.50
HEART SIDE OF GOD, by A. E. Keigwin 1.00
HEART OF THE GOSPEL, THE, by Rev. James M. Campbell, cloth 1.25
HEATHENISM UNDER THE SEARCHLIGHT, by W. Remfry Hunt, cloth 1.25
HEBREW PROPHECY, by E. V. Zollars 1.00
HIGHEST CRITICS VS. THE HIGHER CRITICS, THE, by L. W. Munhall ..... .75
HIS FRIENDS, cloth ..... .25
HIS GREAT APOSTLE, by Barton and Strong, cloth ..... .25
HIS LAST WEEK, by Barton and Strong, paper ..... .07
HIS LIFE, by Barton and Strong, cloth ..... .25
HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BIBLE LAND, THE, by George Adam Smith 4.50

(Continued on Next Page.)

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, by C. A. Young, cloth..... 1.00
HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BIBLE LANDS, by J. B. Calkin, cloth 1.12
HISTORY OF SPRINKLING, by L. C. Wilson, cloth..... .50
HISTORY OF PREACHING, by Rev. J. A. Broadus, cloth..... 1.50
HOME CLASSES AND THE HOME DEPARTMENT OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Dr. M. C. Hazzard..... .55
HOLY LAND AND THE BIBLE, by Rev. C. Geikie (2 vols.), per set 5.00
HOW A MAN GROWS, by John R. T. LATHROP, cloth..... 1.25
HOW TO BRING MEN TO CHRIST, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth 75c, paper ..... .25
HOW TO CONDUCT A SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Marion Lawrance, cloth 1.25
HOW TO PLAN A LESSON, by Marion C. Brown, cloth..... .50
HOW TO PRAY, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth..... .50
HOW TO SUCCEED IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth 50c, paper..... .25
HOW TO TEACH THE LITTLE FOLKS, by B. Tyler and Mrs. Partridge ..... .25
HOW TO WORK, by A. R. Wells, cloth..... .75
HOW WE GOT OUR BIBLE, by J. Patterson Smyth, cloth..... .50
HUCK'S SYNOPSIS OF THE FIRST THREE GOSPELS, by Ross L. Finney 1.00
HUMANITY AND GOD, AND OTHER SERMONS, by Samuel Chadwick 1.50
INCARNATION AND RECENT CRITICISM, THE, by R. J. Cooke 1.00
IN DEFENSE OF THE FAITH, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, cloth..... .40
INDUSTRIAL CONFLICT, THE, by Samuel G. Smith, cloth..... 1.00
INDWELLING SPIRIT, THE, by J. M. Campbell..... .75
INTEGRITY OF THE SCRIPTURES, THE, by John Smith..... 1.25
IN THE HOUR OF SILENCE, by J. E. McFadyen, cloth..... 1.00
IN THE SECRET OF HIS PRESENCE, by G. H. Knight, cloth 1.25
INVESTMENT OF INFLUENCE, THE, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth 1.25
IS CHRISTIANITY TRUE? cloth ..... .75
ISLAM AND CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA AND THE FAR EAST, by E. M. Wherry, cloth..... 1.25
JESSE BEN DAVID, by James M. Ludlow, cloth..... 1.00
JESUS, THE MESSIAH, by Dr. A. Edersheim, cloth..... 1.00
JESUS MY SAVIOR, by J. Thompson, cloth..... .60
JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE ANOINTED OF GOD, by P. Cook, cloth ..... .75
JOHN HALL, PASTOR AND PREACHER, by John Hall, cloth.. 1.50
KEYS OF THE KINGDOM AND OTHER SERMONS, THE, by R. J. Campbell ..... .50
KINDERGARTEN BIBLE STORIES, OLD TESTAMENT, by Laura L. Gragin, cloth..... 1.25
KINDERGARTEN OF THE CHURCH, THE, by Mary J. Chisholm Foster 1.00
KINDERGARTEN SUNDAY-SCHOOL, THE, by F. Beard, cloth .75
LEGION OF HONOR: TEACHER TRAINING LESSONS, by Prof. H. M. Hamill..... .15
LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL, THE, by Rev. W. J. Conybeare and J. S. Howson..... 1.50
LIFE AND TIME OF JESUS, THE MESSIAH, by Dr. A. Edersheim (2 vols.), cloth, per set..... 2.00
LIFE AND WRITINGS OF GEORGE EDWARD FLOWER, by Isaac Errett 1.50
LIFE OF CHRIST, THE, by Frederick W. Farrar..... .85
LIFE OF CHRIST, THE, by Rev. C. Geikie, 2 vols. in one..... 1.25
LIFE OF JOSEPH PARKER, THE, by Joseph Parker..... 1.75
LIFE OF PRIVILEGE, THE, by H. W. Webb Peploe..... 1.00
LISTENING HEART, THE, by John A. Kern cloth..... 1.00
LISTENING TO GOD, THE, by Rev. Hugh Black, cloth..... 1.25
LITERARY STUDY OF THE BIBLE, THE, by Richard G. Moulton 2.00
LITTLE FOLKS BIBLE TALES, cloth 20c, boxed set of 12.... 2.40
LOOM OF PROVIDENCE, THE, by Robert MacKenzie..... 1.00
LORD'S PRAYER, THE, by Rev. A. Saphir, cloth..... 1.50
MACLAREN'S SERMONS, by Alex. Maclaren (4 vols.), cloth, per copy 1.50
MAKING OF AN AMERICAN, THE, by J. A. Riis, cloth..... .75
MAKING OF A MAN, THE, by James W. Lee 1.25
MAKING OF THE SERMON, by Rev. L. H. Pattison..... 1.50
MANHOOD'S MORNING, by I. A. Connell..... 1.00
MAN'S VALUE TO SOCIETY, A, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth 1.25
MANUAL OF THE FOUR GOSPELS, by T. H. Stokoe, cloth.... 1.25
MARKS OF A MAN, THE, by Robert E. Speer, cloth..... 1.00
MASTER'S QUESTIONS TO HIS DISCIPLES, THE, by G. H. Knight 1.50
MATERNITY WITHOUT SUFFERING, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake .50
McGARVEY'S SERMONS, by J. W. McGarvey, cloth..... 1.00
MEANINGS AND METHODS OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE, by H. W. Clark 1.00
MEMOIRS OF A. CAMPBELL, by Robert Richardson, cloth..... 2.50
MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN LIBRARY, per copy $1.00, (18 vols.) 10.00
MISSIONARY'S MANUAL, THE, by A. R. Wells, cloth..... .35
MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Martha B. Hixson, cloth ..... .50
MODERN CRISIS IN RELIGION, THE, by George C. Lorimer.. 1.00
MODERN METHODS IN CHURCH WORK, by G. W. Mead..... 1.50
MODERN METHODS IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK, by G. W. Mead 1.50
MODERN READERS' BIBLE, by R. G. Moulton, the 1 vol. edition, cloth 2.15
MODERN READERS' BIBLE, by R. G. Moulton, leather (22 vols), each 60c, cloth, each..... .50
MODERN SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT AND HIS WORK, THE, by I. W. Pepper..... .10
MODEL SUPERINTENDENT, A, by H. Clay Trumbull, cloth.... 1.25
MOSAIC LAW IN MODERN LIFE, by C. B. McAfee, cloth.... 1.00
NATURAL WAY IN NORMAL TRAINING, THE, by Patterson Du Bois, cloth..... 1.25
NEW LIFE IN THE OLD PRAYER-MEETING, by Rev. J. F. Cowan, cloth 1.00
OBJECT LESSONS FOR JUNIOR WORK, by Ella N. Wood, cloth ..... .50
OBJECT SERMONS IN OUTLINE, by Rev. C. H. Syndall, cloth.. 1.50
OLD TESTAMENT EXPOSITIONS, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, cloth.. 1.00
ON THE ROCK, by D. R. Dungan, cloth..... 1.00
OPEN CHURCH FOR THE UNCHURCHED, THE, by J. E. McCulloch, cloth..... 1.00
ORTHODOXY IN THE CIVIL COURTS, by J. H. Edwards.... .75
ORGANIZED SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by J. W. Axtell, cloth..... .50
OUR DAILY BREAD, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.. .15
OUR DAILY LIGHT, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY GUIDE, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY PORTION, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY FOOD, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY DUTY, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges..... .15
OUR MOSLEM SISTERS, by Annie Van Sommer, cloth..... 1.25
OUR REDEMPTION, by J. A. Noble, cloth..... 1.00
OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK AND HOW TO DO IT, by C. R. Blackall, cloth 25c, paper..... .10
OUTLINE HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS, by Prof. M. B. Riddle ..... .25
PACIFIC ISLANDS, by D. L. Pierson, cloth..... 1.00
PARABLE OF THE KINGDOM, THE, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan 1.00
PARLOR GAMES, by E. Hollister..... .60
PASSION FOR SOULS, THE, by J. H. Jowett, cloth..... .50
PASTOR'S COMPANION, THE, by M. R. Drury, leather..... .75
PASTORAL AND PERSONAL EVANGELISM, by Charles L. Goodell, cloth 1.00
PATHS TO THE CITY OF GOD, by Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, cloth. 1.25
PATHS TO POWER, by Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, cloth..... 1.25
PEDAGOGICAL BIBLE SCHOOL, THE, by Samuel B. Haslett, cloth 1.25
PENCIL POINTS FOR PREACHER AND TEACHER, by Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce, cloth..... 1.25
PERENNIAL REVIVAL, THE, by William B. Riley, cloth..... 1.25
PHILLIPS BROOKS, by Alexander V. G. Allen (large edition).... 2.50
PHILIPPIAN GOSPEL, OR PAULINE IDEALS, THE, by Prof. W. G. Jordan 1.25
PHILOSOPHY OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE, THE, by Henry W. Clark..... 1.25
PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION, THE, by Harold Hoffding..... 3.50
PICTURES FROM PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, by C. H. Spurgeon.. 1.00
PICTURED TRUTH, by Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce, cloth..... 1.25
PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, THE, by John Bunyan, cloth..... 1.50
PILLAR OF FIRE, THE, by J. H. Ingraham ..... .90
PLEA AND THE PIONEERS IN VIRGINIA, THE, by Frederick Arthur Hodges 1.00
PRACTISE OF PRAYER, THE, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.. .75
PRACTICAL PRIMARY PLANS, by Israel P. Black, cloth..... 1.00
PREACHER PROBLEMS, by William T. Moore, cloth..... 1.50
PREACHING N THE NEW AGE, by A. J. Lyman..... .75
PRICE OF AFRICA, by S. E. Taylor..... .50
PRINCE OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID, THE, by Rev. J. H. Ingraham ..... .90
PRINCETON SERMONS, by Joseph Parker..... 1.50
PRIMER ON TEACHING, by John Adams, paper..... .25
PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES, by F. N. Peloubet and Professor Amos R. Wells 1.25
PLEASANT EVENINGS ..... .50
POSITIVE PREACHING AND MODERN MIND, by P. T. Forsythe 1.75
POWER FOR WITNESSING, by A. F. Ballenger..... 1.00
PRACTICAL HANDBOOK ON SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK, by Rev. L. E. Peters, cloth..... .65
PRIMARY GRADUATING EXERCISE, by I. P. Black..... .10
PRIMARY TEACHERS' FRIEND, by Mrs. O. Atwood..... .20
PROBLEM OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, by James Orr..... 1.65
PROPHETIC IDEAS AND IDEALS, by Prof. W. G. Jordan, cloth 1.25
QUEENLY MOTHER, THE, by Margaret E. Sangster, cloth..... 1.50
QUESTIONS OF MODERN INQUIRY, by H. A. Stimson..... 1.25
QUIET TALKS ON JESUS, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON PERSONAL PROBLEMS, by S. D. Gordon, cloth ..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON POWER, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON PRAYER, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON SERVICE, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
RAND-McNALLY BIBLE ATLAS: HISTORICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE, ILLUSTRATED, THE, by Jesse L. Hurlburt 1.75
RELICS OF PRIMEVAL LIFE, by J. W. Dawson, cloth..... 1.50
REPRESENTATIVE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE, THE, by George Matheson 1.50
REVIVAL ADDRESSES, by R. A. Torrey, cloth..... 1.00
REVIVAL AND PASTOR, by J. O. Peck..... 1.00
ROBERT CLARK OF THE PANJAB, by Henry Martyn Clark, cloth 1.75
ROBERT GORDON, A STORY OF THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION, by J. E. Beadles, cloth..... 1.25
ROTHERHAM'S EMPHASIZED NEW TESTAMENT, by Joseph B. Rotherham 1.50
SALOON KEEPER'S LEDGER, THE, by L. A. Banks, cloth.... .75
SCENES AND SAYINGS IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST, by James H. Snowden 1.50
SCOT OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, THE, by John Watson, cloth 2.00
SECOND COMING OF CHRIST, THE, by L. G. Broughton, cloth ..... .50
SECRET PLACE: THOUGHTS ON PRAYER, THE, by R. A. Montgomery ..... .50
SELECTED STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST, by Laura H. Wild 1.00
SELFHOOD AND SERVICE, by David Beaton, cloth..... 1.00
SEVEN SORTS OF SUCCESSFUL SERVICES, by Rev. J. L. Hill, cloth 1.50
SERMON BRIEFS, by H. W. Beecher, cloth..... 1.00
SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISM, by Rev. D. M. Canright, cloth.... 1.00
SHEPHERD PSALM, THE, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, cloth..... 1.25
SHORT INTRODUCTION TO THE LITERATURE OF THE BIBLE, by R. G. Moulton..... 1.00
SIDE LIGHTS ON IMMORTALITY, by Levi Gilbert..... 1.00
SIGNS OF GOD IN THE WORLD, by John P. D. John..... 1.00
SILVER LINING, THE, by J. H. Jowett, cloth..... 1.00
SIMPLE THINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE, THE, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan..... .50
SINGULAR ACTIONS OF CONSISTENT CHRISTIANS, THE, ...
SOCIAL EVENINGS, by Amos R. Wells, cloth..... .35
SOCIAL PERIL, by S. Stall..... 1.00
SPIRITUAL LIFE OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Rev. J. W. Chapman ..... .35
SPURGEON'S PRAYERS, by C. H. Spurgeon, cloth..... .75
SPURGEON'S SERMON NOTES (4 vols.), per set..... 2.25
by William Secker 1.00
STUDENTS AND THE MODERN MISSIONARY CRUSADE.. 1.50
STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL OF JOHN, by George P. Eckman.... 1.00
STUDY OF THE PARABLE, THE, by A. R. Habershon..... 1.50
STUDY OF CHILD NATURE, by Elizabeth Harrison..... 1.00
SUNDAY-SCHOOL MOVEMENT IN AMERICA, by M. C. Brown, cloth 1.25
SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUCCESS, by Amos R. Wells, cloth, gilt top 1.25
SUNDAY-SCHOOL PROBLEMS, by Prof. Amos R. Wells, cloth.. 1.00
SUNRISE IN THE SUNRISE KINGDOM, by John De Forest, cloth .50
SUPERINTENDENT'S HANDBOOK, by J. W. Axtell, leather.... .35
SUPERINTENDENT'S HELPER, by Rev. I. L. Hurlbut..... .25
SUPERINTENDENT'S BOOK OF PRAYER, by E. W. Pell, cloth .50
SUPREME CONQUEST, THE, by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, cloth.. 1.00
SUNDAY-SCHOOL ORGANIZATIONS AND METHODS, by Rev. C. Roads ..... .35
TAKING MEN ALIVE, by C. G. Trumbull, cloth ..... .60

(Continued on Next Page.)

TARBELL'S GEOGRAPHICAL MANUAL: PALESTINE IN THE TIME OF CHRIST, by Martha Tarbell..... .25
TEACHER, CHILD, BOOK, by A. F. Schauffler, cloth..... 1.00
TEACHER'S HANDBOOK, by J. W. Axtell..... .35
TEACHER'S MEETINGS: THEIR NECESSITY AND METHODS, by H. C. Trumbull ..... .50
TEACHING PROBLEM, by J. W. Axtell..... .50
TEACHING AND TEACHERS, by H. C. Trumbull..... 1.25
TEACHINGS OF THE BOOK, THE, by Willett and Campbell.... 1.25
TEACHER'S COMMENTARY, THE, by F. N. Peloubet..... 1.25
TEACHINGS OF JESUS, THE, by Dr. George B. Stevens..... .80
TEACHINGS OF JESUS CONCERNING WEALTH, THE, by Gerald D. Heuver..... 1.00
TEACHINGS OF NATURE, THE, by Charles H. Spurgeon..... 1.00
TEACHER AND TEACHING WITH THE MASTER, by Rev. C. S. Beardslee ..... .50
TEMPTATION OF JESUS AND INTERPRETATION, THE, by A. M. Stewart..... 1.25
TESTIMONY OF CHRIST TO CHRISTIANITY, THE, by Peter Bayne ..... .75
THAT ALL MAY BE ONE, by A. R. Wells, cloth..... .75
THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE, by A. Whyte..... .40
THEOLOGY OF CHRIST'S TEACHING, THE, by John E. King 2.50
THREE YEARS WITH THE CHILDREN, by Amos R. Wells, cloth 1.25
THINGS THAT ARE SUPREME, by James G. K. McClure, cloth .75
THRONE OF DAVID, THE, by J. H. Ingraham ..... .90
THROUGH THE BIBLE WITH A GUIDE, by David L. Holbrook 1.00
TIMOTHY'S STAND-BY: THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MAN, by Joseph Clark ..... .25
TORREY AND ALEXANDER, by R. A. Torrey, cloth..... 1.00
TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST, by Frank W. Gunsaulus, cloth 1.00
TREASURY OF SACRED SONG, by F. T. Palgrave, leather, stamping in gold 1.75
TRIED BY FIRE; THE WAY INTO THE HOLIEST; CHRIST IN ISAIAH; OLD TESTAMENT HEROES, by B. Meyer, cloth, each 1.00
SAMUEL, THE PROPHET; ZECHARIAH, THE PROPHET OF HOPE; DAVID, SHEPHERD, PSALMIST KING; JEREMIAH, PRIEST AND PROPHET; JOSHUA AND THE LAND OF PROMISE; MOSES, THE SERVANT OF GOD; ABRAHAM, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH; ELIJAH AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER; ISRAEL, A PRINCE WITH GOD; JOSEPH, BELOVED, HATED, EXALTED.
TWENTIETH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT, THE, complete, cloth 1.00
TYPICAL MISSION IN CHINA, A, by W. E. Soothill, cloth.... 1.50
TYPICAL NEW TESTAMENT CONVERSIONS, by F. A. Noble 1.00
UNIVERSAL ELEMENTS OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, by Charles Cuthbert Hall 1.25
UNIVERSALITY OF JESUS, by G. A. Johnston, cloth..... .75
UNREALIZED LOGIC OF RELIGION, THE, by W. H. Fitchett 1.25
UPDIKE'S SERMONS, by J. V. Updike, cloth..... 1.00
UPLIFT OF CHINA, THE, by A. H. Smith, cloth..... .50
VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST, by James Orr..... 1.50
VISION OF CHIRST, THE, by William Miller..... .50
WAIFS OF THE SLUMS AND THEIR WAY OUT, by Leonard Benedict, cloth 1.00
WAYFARERS OF THE BIBLE, by David James Burrell, cloth.. 1.00
WAYS OF WORKING, by A. F. Schauffler, cloth..... 1.00
WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? vols. 1 and 2, per set..... 1.50
WHAT A YOUNG BOY OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall, cloth.. 1.00
WHAT A YOUNG GIRL OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mary Allen.... 1.00
WHAT A YOUNG HUSBAND OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall, cloth 1.00
WHAT A YOUNG MAN OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall.... 1.00
WHAT A MAN OF FORTY-FIVE OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall 1.00
WHAT A YOUNG WIFE OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake 1.00
WHAT A YOUNG WOMAN OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mary Allen 1.00
WHAT A WOMAN OF FORTY-FIVE OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake..... 1.00
WHERE THE BOOK SPEAKS; OR MISSION STUDIES IN THE BIBLE, by A. McLean, cloth..... 1.00
WHITE CHURCH, by A. C. Pierson, cloth..... .75
WHY IS CHRISTIANITY TRUE? by E. Y. Mullins..... 1.50
WILL THE WORLD OUTGROW CHRISTIANITY? by Robert P. Kerr 1.00
WINSOME WOMANHOOD, by Margaret E. Sangster..... 1.25
WIT AND HUMOR SERIES, cloth, pocket edition, each..... .50
American Wit and Humor; Wit and Humor of American Statesmen; English Wit and Humor; Irish Wit and Humor; Scotch Wit and Humor; French Wit and Humor; German Wit and Humor; Wit and Humor of the American Pulpit.
WITH TIBETANS IN TENT AND TEMPLE, by Dr. S. C. Rijnhart 1.50
WOMEN OF THE BIBLE, by Mrs. S. T. Martyn..... .75
WORTH OF A MAN, THE, by John P. D. John, cloth..... 1.00
YALE LECTURES ON THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by H. C. Trumbull 2.00
YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE, by Robert Young, cloth, large ed..... 5.00
YOUNG'S BIBLE TRANSLATION, by Robert Young, cloth, large edition 4.00
YOUNG MEN WHO OVERCAME, by Robert E. Speer, cloth.... 1.00

An Editorial Causerie

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have a great opportunity. If they wish to add some "books worth while" to their libraries, there is a chance to save money in the midsummer special sale announced by the Christian Publishing Company. Most of these books are late productions; the most of them are by writers of reputation; and most of these are men who, either for their special message or for their sheer ability, deserve our attention.

How many preachers of the Churches of Christ have read a book by Charles F. Aked or J. H. Jowett? It would do hundreds of them good to put on their top shelves for a time "McGarvey on Acts," or some other of our well-known publications, and take a course in Jowett, Aked or McLaren, or Alexander Whyte. This without disrespect to our standard expositors. But in these great preachers of other brotherhoods we have men of large spiritual culture, who will strengthen your faith, bring you nearer to Christ and give you the more to enjoy the beauty of your own simple belief, and stronger desire to preach it with all the power at your command.

Do you know these men? McLaren, the greatest of expository preachers; Jowett, to be named, perhaps, first among forty-year-olders; Aked, fearless though not flawless, a man who preaches a gospel in action; Alexander Whyte, the premier preacher of Scotland, whose discourses on Bible characters stand out unique in all sermonic literature.

And these are but a sample. Are you interested in missions? There is our own W. Remfrey Hunt, with a fascinating new book out on "Heathenism Under the Search Light"; and there is A. McLean's "Where the Book Speaks," full of the spirit of missions and unique in its setting; and Dr. Susie Rijnhart's thrilling story of the Tibetans; Dr. Francis Clark's "Continent of Opportunity," an interesting account of his travels in South America, and other stories of missionary heroism, faith and opportunity.

Are you troubled by the vagaries of Christian Scientists? Read Dr. Gray's little book—it's an antidote. Are you interested in the workingman and his relation to Christianity? Take a thoughtful voyage through the pages of Mr. Stelzle's "Christianity's Storm Center." It will indeed open the eyes of the unthinking man or woman. Or, for another phase of the humble life and power of Christianity on it read "Down in Water Street," a gripping story of the slum work of New York. And then there's "Taking Men Alive"; that's a good title and a live book by the man who made "The Sunday-School Times" the paper it is.

Are you interested in biography? No reading is better, when it is a great biography. Who that has read that of Phillips Brooks is not the richer man for the spending of the money and the time? Are you in touch with the pulse-beat of that genius of the English pulpit—Joseph Parker? It becomes you to be. It is a big world, and he was one of its big men.

And what is there for the young man? Dr. Stall's books will save your health and your morals if you heed his counsel. Then, too, there is "The Worth of a Man," "A Man's Value to Society," "The Making of a Man," and that really fine book—all those mentioned are "worth while"—"Getting One's Bearings." There is a birthday set for a young man, out-valuing any amount of ties and pins and gloves. These are character-builders. And for the young woman! Is there anything more charming than Mrs. Sangster's "Fairest Girlhood"? Beautiful in contents, in dress, in spirit, it is a book for every maiden's room. There are other books in the list, too.

And what great books there are for the man interested in the deep things of religion! The late Dr. Cuthbert Hall's "Universal Elements" is a book recognized by all as of great value. Then there are those books by James Orr, one of the foremost of the conservative scholars. His "Bible Under Trial," "The Problem of the Old Testament," and "The Virgin Birth of Christ" are among the strongest books published on the side of a more orthodox position. Then there is Dr. Forsythe's "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," by a great preacher and distinguished theologian. Do you want to go into things that are deep? There is Hoffding's "Philosophy of Religion," or R. J. Cooke's fine book on "The Incarnation and Recent Criticism."

And what a store of helpful literature on the Bible school! Look down the list and select for yourself. And the history of our own religious movement!

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Ohio.

Cleveland, O., is to have a sane Fourth hereafter. On July 3, a store full of fireworks was set on fire and seven lives lost. A most sweeping and drastic ordinance has been passed prohibiting all sale or use of fireworks and explosives in the city, but the city itself will provide fireworks in the parks hereafter. "The world do move."—E. B. Bagby has resigned at Franklin Circle, Cleveland. Since coming to Cleveland he has not enjoyed good health, and he will now take a two months' rest in the mountains of Virginia. We are sorry to lose him from our Cleveland fellowship. He has no definite plans for his future work at this time.—B. A. Wilson, of West Park, Cleveland, will take the church at North Eaton, August 1. On Sunday, July 12, Lathrop Cooley preached his 68th anniversary sermon at North Eaton. How many preachers have we that have been preaching sixty-eight years? These anniversary sermons of Brother Cooley's are great occasions at North Eaton, and he always has a big hearing.—Ohio loses a man whom she is loth to let go in the person of Wesley Hatcher, of Hamilton. He will go September 1 to West Liberty, Ky., and preach for the church there and act as bishop of the county. In that county we have several churches small and pastorless. Brother Hatcher will seek to develop them and group them and secure preachers for them. It is a big work, but he is used to that sort of thing. He has done remarkably well at Hamilton, and they are very sorry to lose him.—F. C. McCormick, a recent graduate of Hiram, has taken the church at Lexington.—M. S. Spear has left the Ohio river and moved to Bucyrus where he will minister to the saints.—J. L. Deming, of Norwalk, has been a victim of typhoid fever, but is recovering nicely.—Grant Waller has resigned at Galion, but nothing of his intentions are known.—President Bates spent Sunday, July 12, at Bedford to the great delight of all who heard him. Some years ago the Ohio Man and Brother Bates were quite intimately associated in work in Central Ohio, and it was, therefore, a great delight to the bishop of Bedford to be with him again for a two days' visit. The prospects for a very large increase in students at Hiram this fall grows every day.—I wish to say that this scribe is no longer a member of the pulpit supply committee in Ohio. Letters are constantly coming from men who want work in Ohio. I delight to serve all, but time will be saved by addressing the letters directly to the committee. J. P. Allison, 6415 Quinby avenue, Cleveland, is chairman of the committee. The new meeting house at Nelsonville will be dedicated July 19. A fuller account will be given later. C. A. Freer.

A Growing Church in Jacksonville, Fla.

Seven years ago devouring flames licked up about all of the city of Jacksonville, Florida. Our church was a mere handful; there was a second church, the result of a sad division; we had no house of worship; our people were poor—very poor—and seemingly Jacksonville was comparatively unimportant.

Less than half a dozen years have wrought a transformation almost, if not altogether, without a parallel. Jacksonville has a population now of about sixty thousand, the two churches are united in close, loving fraternal bonds, the work is one, and the spirit is most delightful. Not even a scar of the former rupture is visible.

The First Church has a membership of one thousand, among whom are to be found leading business and professional people. Many of the membership are the most devoted and loyal people it has ever been my good fortune to meet. A Board of officers numbering thirty-five have well in hand all of the interests of this growing work. The Sunday-school is in the neighborhood of the five hundred line, with an aim of one thousand in regular attendance.

Plans are being provided to install one or two more preachers in Jacksonville, and not less than four or five new congregations are already on the horizon. Five Sunday-schools are now pioneering their way into the hearts and confidence of the people in as many different sections of the city, and a lot has been purchased looking to another building at once.

One hindrance to a quick and large expansion has been a debt of $15,000 upon a $65,000 property of the First Church, which is centrally and splendidly located. The church asked me to aid them on Sunday, June 28, in providing the amount. The money was given with a cheerfulness and an enthusiasm that warmed the heart of even a veteran in such experiences.

Now the church expects to be a living link in the Foreign Society and in other agencies in our brotherhood before 1909. A large delegation may be expected at Pittsburg, at the Centennial Convention, sitting on the front seat, with a joy without limit, and a hope as large as the world, and all of the purposes of God! For a decade J. T. Boone has been guiding the destinies of this church with a steady nerve and a kind hand. Unity, Prosperity, and Progress are written in large letters upon every page of the splendid history which has been made.

It is a joy to visit this great church, which ranks, possibly, first in all of our beautiful Southland, but which has only entered upon the first stage of its usefulness.

F. M. Rains.

Montana Convention.

The Montana Christian Association held its annual convention at Billings, Mont., June 23-25. The attendance was very good, considering that none of the delegates from Western and Southwestern Montana could reach Billings because of washouts. A royal welcome was given the visitors by the pastor of the Billings church, Walter M. Jordan, and we were as royally entertained in the many homes of our splendid people. Billings is a beautiful city of about 12,000. The first afternoon of the convention the delegates were taken to the sugar beet factory. There was plenty of sweetness for all, as about 100,000 sacks of sugar were stored in one large warehouse. The factory is well equipped in every way, and as various processes were explained to us, we wished all of the machinery in the work for our Master might one day be as systematically arranged and as smoothly brought to perfection.

Many changes had to be made in the program, but all who were called upon to respond did so cheerfully and heartily, as Montana people know how to do. Many new plans of work were outlined, and we are confident you will hear much of Montana this year.

W. J. Wright and Sister Louise Kelley brought such messages of earnest consecration, that our hearts were stirred to nobler resolves and higher aspirations. Brother Beeman, of Billings, is the corresponding secretary of the M. C. A., and a more devoted man could not be found. His business is the King's, and he is a hardware merchant to pay expenses.

Messages were received from many absent ones, among which was one from our former State Evangelist, F. A. Groom. His work in the state was most efficient, and he will be greatly missed. Walter Smith, of Washington, D. C., was chosen as his successor, and Montana expects much of him. It is hoped he may receive the hearty support of all. The music was in charge of Lucile May Park, of Coffeyville, Kans. Her work will be in the state of Montana, beginning August 4, as Assistant State Evangelist and State Organizer of the C. W. B. M. The reports of work done in our state were very incomplete, because neither delegates nor letters could reach us from so many places. But such as were given showed an increase in all lines of work. The Bozeman church, where Milton H. Lee so ably ministers, has a young people's Bible class of over 150 and an attendance at Bible school of nearly 400.

Helena, where C. R. Neel so successfully labors, has nearly 170 in the Bible school. There are 500 in the Young Ladies' class and 45 in the Young Men's. There is no Y. M. C. A. in the city, and the young men's class has rented three large rooms in a prominent business block. This fall they expect to have more room and will put in baths, gymnasium, etc. Many other good reports could be given, but these will show our people are in earnest and mean to accomplish much in his name.

Montana's convention this year was the best ever held, and next year we all meet at Bozeman.

The following state officers were elected at the C. W. B. M. session:—President, Mrs. G. W. Houghton, Billings; Vice-President, Mrs. Laila Tryan, Butte; Secretary, Mrs. Mamie B. Mills, Bozeman; Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Mary J. Ballou, Great Falls; State Organizer, Lucile May Park; Cent. Secretary, Mrs. S. C. Kenyon, Bozeman; Superintendent Junior Work, Miss Pierce, Great Falls; Superintendent Home Department, Mrs. McIntyre, Butte.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Billings church observed Inland Empire Day and raised more than their apportionment. Percy Kendall and wife spent Sunday, June 28, in Billings and assisted in the C. E. program. Lucile May Park led the singing. The Kendalls were on their way to Seattle, Wash., to assist in two meetings. They planned to visit the Park on their way west.

Walter M. Jordan, pastor of the Billings church, and Jeanie Coe, of Woodbine, Ia., were united in marriage, June 30, O. F. McHargue officiating. Mrs. Jordan is a most efficient worker in all lines of church work and will prove a valuable helper in Montana work. The many friends of both parties bid them "God speed."

Lucile May Park, our new Assistant State Evangelist, is spending the month of July at her home in Coffeyville, Kans. She returns to Montana in August to begin a meeting August 4 at Joliet, Mont., where O. G. Shanklin ministers. Walter M. Jordan will preach during this series of meetings.

A Good Meeting in Southeast Missouri.

During June it was my pleasure to assist the church in Fredericktown, Mo., in special evangelistic meetings. This is one of the best towns in Southeast Missouri. They have recently discovered lead, cobalt and copper in large quantities near the town. If these mines prove to be a success, Fredericktown is destined to become a city of no small proportions. But best of all, it is a "dry town," in which prohibition does prohibit. Not only is it impossible to get liquor in the town, but on Sunday you can not get a cigar or an ice-cream-soda. The town is in better condition in every way than when they had saloons. They are just now beginning to put in miles of cement side-walks. Our church there is one of the oldest in the state, also one of the oldest in the brotherhood. The organization dates back to 1840. The Nifongs, Marshalls, and Anthonys were the originators, and their children are still the leaders in the work. C. D. Haskell, the minister, has a strong hold on the church and community. There were thirty-five accessions to the church during the meeting—twenty-five baptisms. I have never labored with a more loyal and devoted people and pastor.

E. T. McFarland.

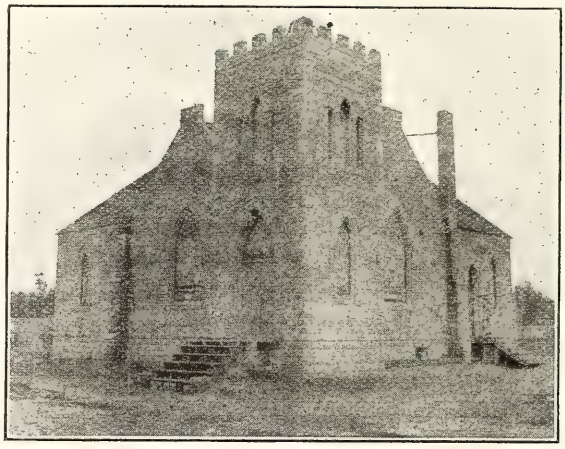
St. Louis.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

The New Church at Wheatland, Wyo.

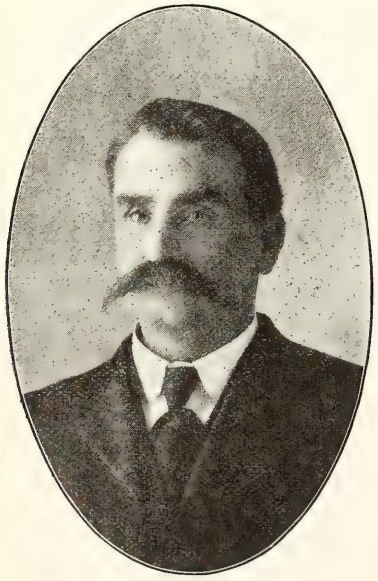
It was with a just feeling of pride that the officers, pastor and members of the Christian Church threw open the doors of the new building Lord's day, June 14, to a large congregation that came to listen to the dedicatory services conducted by Brother L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind. Brother Carpenter paid a very high compliment to our building by saying that it would be a credit to a city of 20,000 people.

Our building is a handsome concrete structure, admirably arranged and beautifully furnished. The main room is 46 feet square and will seat 450 people. The furnishings are especially to be noted, as there is nothing shoddy or cheap. The pews are large and comfortable, and are made of fine wood, and the floor elevation puts the occupants of every one in sight of the rostrum. The beautiful stained glass windows are such as one would expect to find only in a large city. The interior woodwork —everything, in fact, from the steel ceiling to the carpet that covers the floor, is of the same quality, and the whole makes a church where beauty and comfort and convenience have been amply provided. The entire cost of the building, including furnishings, was about $6,000.



Christian Church, Wheatland, Wyoming.

The music, under the direction of W. H. Morrison, was of exceptionally high order. The result was an all-day program both pleasing and appropriate. L. L. Carpenter's three sermons, morning, afternoon and evening, proved him to be a speaker of more than ordinary ability. The church at Wheatland was the seven hundred and twentieth church he has dedicated; and he has never made a failure. He has raised between two and three million dollars. May he live many years yet, is our prayer.



J. A. Banta.

When the hour came for the dedicatory address every dollar was provided to cover the indebtedness, and $500 over. Then the congregation sang that good old song, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," after which our building was dedicated to the worship of God and to the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We are hoping for a great meeting soon, and everything now points to the gratification of that ambition.

J. A. Banta, minister.

A Generous Offer.

Mrs. Russell Sage has made the offer of half a million dollars to the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, on condition that the society shall raise, before next January, the same sum, the whole of which is to be invested permanently, and the interest only used for the work of the society. This is a generous offer on the part of Mrs. Sage, and there should be no difficulty in raising the amount required to meet its conditions for a cause which is so worthy. Subscriptions for this fund should be made to Mr. William Foulke, Bible House, Astor Place, New York, and all correspondence about it addressed to the secretaries.

Some Further Echoes of Children's Day.

Some unpublished reports we have received of the Children's Day offering are as follows: At Kearney, Mo., it was $60, far surpassing all previous offerings. C. C. Atwood says: "There is joy in giving." At Abilene, Kan., $30 was raised for foreign missions, while C. A. Cole reports from the same church $27.50 as a home offering. At Denver, Ill., there was an apportionment of $25, but B. H. Cleaver's school raised $100 for heathen missions. The apportionment was passed at Washburn, Ill., where Rochester Irwin is minister. At Ravenna, O., $100 was raised. This church, with that of Hiram, forms a living link. M. E. Chatley is its minister. There was an excellent program at Fayette, Mo., where Ben Hill is the efficient superintendent and R. B. Helser is the minister. The amount raised, however, is not reported. The school is increasing in attendance and in collections. At Niantic, Ill., more than $40 was the offering. J. Will Walters is the preacher there. Four times the apportionment was the collection at Newberg, Oreg., as reported by A. W. Shaffer, the assistant pastor. There was a large audience and a delightful program. Children's Day was a happy event with the church at Leavenworth, Kan. W. A. Dodge thinks it was the best program of years past. More than $30 was raised for foreign missions and there were four confessions and five additions by letter. W. C. Allen is the splendid Bible school superintendent. W. P. Murray's congregation at Caesarea, near Lucas, O., went $4.15 beyond the apportionment. At Wayland, Mich., the work moves along at a brisk rate. The offering was $15. There is a training class of fourteen. A. R. Soay is the superintendent, and E. G. Campbell the minister. Every seat was filled at Rosalia, Wash., and the offering was over $28. J. F. Rice says there is more to come. From far-off Bisbee, Ariz., comes a message or a splendid program and a fine spirit of giving. The apportionment was $15, but the school joyfully made a surrender of $52. And this is not a great school, for it is one of our new causes, but has already an attendance of 124. There is an enrollment of 16 in the Home Department and 160 on the Cradle Roll. W. E. Spicer is now in charge of the work there. For the fifth consecutive year the school at Llano, Texas, raised its full apportionment. J. J. Cramer is the minister. The Memorial Church at Rock Island, Ill., continues a living link in foreign missions by its Children's Day offering. For it so to continue in both the home and foreign field this year is a signal victory for W. B. Clemmer and his congregation, in view of the depression that has affected this manufacturing center. "We've done it again," writes Roy O. Youtz, minister at Burlington Junction, Mo. He tells us that it felt so good to pass the apportionment as a church, that they just wanted to be sure it was not an accident, and though the school's apportionment was $8 more than it had ever given before, this year it raised more than $25 (where only $20 was expected), and twice what it gave last year. There was a splendid program at Woodward, Okla. and $20 raised for foreign missions. This is one result of five years of good work of Ed. S. McKinney in the pastorate there. Out in the mountains there is a young church that seems willing to do something for every worthy cause. The brethren at Rifle, Colo., for whom W. A. Webster has recently been preaching, took a belated March offering of $10.50. On account of their arrangements for a protracted meeting and other heavy expenses, they did not observe the regular day.

As We Go to Press.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pasadena, Cal., July 20, 1908.—We dedicated the $85,000 church here yesterday. Frank M. Dowling is the consecrated pastor leading the church up to this day of victory. We raised $2,300 more than asked for, so that the total indebtedness is provided for. There were twenty-eight converts also yesterday and 201 here in thirteen days. Undoubtedly our greatest victory on the coast.—Scoville, Ullom and Van Camp.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Fulton, Ky., July 19.—In a good meeting here; close next Sunday and on to Bethany Park. Murray, Ky., August 2.—Fife and Sons, evangelists.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Assumption, Ill., July 20.—Just closed two weeks' meeting; 61 additions—59 adults, many business and professional men. Tuckerman, my old singer, assisting. Membership more than doubled here since January 1. Will be at Bethany Park, and can hold meeting immediately after. Wire me here or meet me at Bethany.—Vawter, Pastor-Evangelist.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Princeton, Ky., July 20.—Closed two weeks' meeting last night with 80 additions —many heads of families. This was Princeton's greatest meeting. The preparation campaign was most valuable.—Crossfield and Sturgis.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Fort Dodge, Ia., July 20.—The church constructed a great tabernacle; audiences are great and many turned away; thirty-five additions in six invitations; men's meeting great; offering thirty-five dollars.—J. O. Shelburne and Helpers.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

California.

Ukiah, July 12.—The camping season is now on, but our work is keeping up well. We had three added during May and five during June—two of them baptisms. Our Faith Circle and Loyal Sons classes in the Bible school attract much attention. —O. Wilkinson.

Illinois.

Hoopeston, July 7.—Two additions by letter Sunday.—Lewis R. Hotaling.

Havana, July 14.—Additions almost every Lord's day; four confessions, three baptisms and three by letter in the past six weeks. We will hold our own meeting in January.—O. C. Bolman.

Danville, July 14.—At the Second Chuch we have had ten confessions and two baptisms since the Scoville meetings closed, among them a lady and a gentleman over three score years of age. The audiences overflow into the lecture room during our regular services.—Andrew Scott.

Erie, July 13.—G. W. Morton closed his work here yesterday with one baptism, and one made the confession who will be baptized later.

Indiana.

Frankfort, July 13.—There were eight additions to the church here yesterday. Ernest J. Sias, the minister, has now gone on his vacation.

Kansas.

Wichita, July 15.—There were six additions to the Central Church on Sunday. During the past six months there have been 58 additions at the regular services. Since November 1 there have been but three weeks without additions and the total has been 85.—E. W. Allen.

Jewell, July 13.—Five have been added since last report—two by letter—one by statement and two by primary obedience. All departments of the church are in fine condition, and we look forward to a good meeting in the fall.—B. A. Channer, pastor.

Abilene, July 13.—One of the best things that ever happened to our work here was our participation in the union meeting just closed. The Church of Christ received more members in proportion to the size of the congregation than any other church. The spirit of fellowship and unity, and a better understanding of us among the citizens of the city, will work an inestimable benefit to us here, where we have been misunderstood, partly on our own account. W. T. McLain assisted in gathering in the fruits in a short after-meeting, and 25 people have thus far united with us, and they are good people, too. We are expecting to accomplish much more from now on.—Clifford A. Cole.

Louisiana.

Lake Charles, July 13.—Good congregations and one more confession.—Otis Hawkins, minister.

Missouri.

Salisbury, July 16.—Three added here last Lord's day at the regular services.—G. H. Bassett.

Canton, July 16.—We had seventeen added in our three-weeks' meeting at Eldorado Springs—11 by confession—six by letter and statement. There were also two confessions at Coleman, Ill., on July 12. Three additions at Ozen, Mo., recently —one by confession and two by letter.—F. J. Yokley.

Bois d'Arc, July 18.—I preached four sermons here and organized a congregation with ten members. We raised $279, which will completely repair the house of worship. A good meeting ought to result in a strong congregation. Our next meeting will begin at Metz August 1.—E. H. Williamson, of Springfield.

Kansas City, July 13.—There were two confessions at Highland, Livingston county, yesterday. Our work there is in good shape.—J. W. Monser.

Kansas City, July 14.—Since last report we have had at the Budd Park Church 19 additions—six by baptism, six by letter, seven by statement. I leave in August for a month's vacation in Illinois. —B. L. Wray.

Bethany, July 13.—There were two additions last Sunday.—Andrew P. Johnson.

Nebraska.

Falls City, July 13.—We had one added by letter yesterday.—D. L. Dunkelberger.

Pennsylvania.

Pittsburg, July 11.—Since April 1 there have been 19 additions to the Knoxville Christian Church.—James Matthews.

Texas.

Austin, July 12.—During the past quarter we have had at our regular meetings 24 additions to the Central Church—10 by confession and baptism—four restored and the rest by letter and commendation.—J. W. Lowber.

Utah.

Salt Lake City, July 12.—Three additions—Dr. Albert Buxton preaching. There were also two baptisms at prayer-meetings.

Arkansas.

Pike City, July 17.—Robert A. Highsmith, of Prescott, Ark., has just closed a ten-days' meeting at this place, resulting in 18 additions to the church—two from other religious bodies—four by statement and the remainder by obedience.—C. A. Allhands, minister.

Colorado.

Grand Junction, July 15.—One confession and one by statement, July 5.—J. H. McCartney.

Florida.

Madison, July 17.—We closed a twelve-days' meeting at Mt. Olive, near Live Oak, with six added by confession and baptism and one uniting from the Baptists. This field was well gleaned less than a year ago.—T. A. Cox, corresponding secretary.

Oklahoma.

Purcell, July 18.—We have had 12 accessions lately that have not been reported. Brother Kindred begins a meeting for us next week. I will remain here one year.—J. W. Ferrell.

Oregon.

Portland, July 13.—Our Rodney Avenue congregation began a tent meeting July 5, with D. C. Kellems as evangelist and A. W. Shaffer as musical director. The prospects are good. We have had two confessions to date and five by letter and statement.—Mrs. Clara G. Esson.

Changes.

Harbord, C. L.—Canton to 3014 Euclid avenue, Kansas City, Mo.
Hill, Roscoe R.—Matanzas, Cuba, to Eureka, Ill.
Holmes, H. C.—Fairbury, Neb., to Lawrenceville, Ill.
Hull, Wm. C.—N. Tonawanda to East Chatham, N. Y.
Hunt, Ray E.—Bethany, to Trumbull, Neb.
Jackson, G. D.—DeLand to Eustis, Fla.
Jackson, S. L.—Bonne Terre, Mo. to Dighton, Kan.
Lindenmeyer, F. M.—1428 Twenty-sixth street to 1339 Twenty-seventh street, Des Moines, Ia.
Longdon, F. J.—Beechview, Pa., to DeLand, Fla.
Lyon, O. L.—Enid to Pond Creek, Okla.
Maldoon, George A.—Fitzgerald, Ga., to 114 Fayette street, Washington, Pa.
Mashburn, C. B.—Kinston to Wilson, N. C., care A. C. C.
Mason, J. C.—167 Grand avenue, Oak Cliff, Sta., A., Dallas, to Claude, Armstrong county, Texas.
Messick, R. M.—Halfway to Salem, Ore.
McCormick, H. B.— Hiram to Lexington, O.
McKnight, R. E.—1355 Tenth avenue, San Francisco to Gilroy, Cal.
Nichols, Fred A.—Alliance, O., to Chickasha, Okla.
Orrison, J. I.—416 Olive street, Kansas City, to West Plains, Howell county, Mo.
Peters, H. H.—Dixon to Eureka, Ill.
Polson, C. A. Exira, Ia., to Soldier, Kan., R. F. D.
Quiggin, George R.—Hiram, O., to Thomaston, Conn., R. F. D.
Rice, P. J.—1700 Portland avenue, Minneapolis, Minn., to 1605 Beaver avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.
Russell, Ward—Fort Worth, Texas, to Williamstown, Ky.
Sheffer, W. H.—519 Vance avenue, to Linden street church, Linden avenue, corner Mulberry street, Memphis, Tenn.
Shullenberger, W. A.—Trenton to Grant City, Missouri.
Sine, C. R.—Charlottsville, to Roch Enon Springs, Virginia.
Stevens, H. F.—Elwood, to Virginia, Neb.
Stivers, John T.—1343 West Twenty-second street, to 2728 Kentwood avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.
Trundle, Dan A.—Clarksville, Tenn, to Columbia, Mo.
Underwood, Charles E.—292 Norton street, to 111 Dwight street, New Haven, Conn.
Weedon, W. W.—Marion to Blue Mound, Ill.
Welch, Philip—Mulkeytown, Ill., to Piggott, Ark.
Witmer, W. W.—Jackson, O., to Tully, N. Y.

Ministerial Exchange.

J. M. Rhodes, of Macon, Mo., has some time for meetings this fall that is not yet taken.

Miss Lyda B. Seamans, singing evangelist, is making engagements for autumn and winter meetings. She would prefer to be with some evangelist who has his time all employed. Remuneration $25 per week and entertainment. Will furnish recommendations. Address 213 Lobban street, Warrensburg, Mo.

The church at Jerico Springs, Mo., wants a good evangelist to hold a meeting beginning August 15, or as near that date as possible. Address with terms, E. W. Yocum or P. A. Pear.

S. D. Dutcher, pastor of our First Church, Omaha, can be secured for a meeting in the early fall. Address him box 224, Omaha, Neb.

Sunday-School

August ... 1908

Memory Verses, 11, 12.

David Anointed at Bethlehem.—1 Sam. 16:1-13.

Golden Text.—Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart.—1 Sam 16:7.

It had already been fully demonstrated that Saul's administration was a failure. To be sure the nation had suffered no great calamity. A certain work of defense Saul must be credited with accomplishing. The Philistines were no longer a terror to Israel. Within its own boundaries the nation enjoyed a reasonable degree of peace, and such incidents as the victory over Amalek gave to the neighboring tribes a wholesome respect for Israel's prowess in war. But this was merely the work of a war-captain, not of such a king as Israel needed for the founder of her dynasty and to give the key-note to the whole monarchy.

So Saul was rejected. But was he not God's own choice? It is true that the people "made Saul king" (1 Sam 11:15), and that Samuel spoke of him as the king "whom you have chosen" (12:13). But it is also true that long before this, we are told, Jehovah had instructed Samuel to anoint Saul and that he had been chosen by lot, that is, by Jehovah. But for all that, we have no right to blame the Lord for Saul's failure. The divine choice and favor do not preclude the possibility of human folly and failure. Saul was the kind of king that Israel wanted. God used the material that was at hand, just as he does to-day, and then as now the working out of the divine purposes was intricately bound up with human frailties, imperfections and delays. God uses many imperfect instruments, and the discovery of a weakness or a sin in a man does not prove that God is not using him.

Samuel went to Bethlehem to sacrifice. We have here another evidence that the centralization of the sacrificial worship, as required by the deuteronomic law, had not yet been accomplished.

The rejection of the elder sons of Jesse and the choice of David must have been an even greater surprise than we can easily realize. Remember the "birthright" which was Esau's because he was the first-born. The right of the oldest son to receive the inheritance and to become head of the ramily was firmly fixed in early days and persists in some countries until to-day. Besides, though David was a handsome youth, he evidently lacked the majestic mien and kingly presence of his older brothers. It was a case of sight against insight. To the sight, the oldest son was the best material for a king. But when viewed with insight into heart and character, David was best.

It is a wholesome lesson to find a kingly spirit in a shepherd's garb. The heart of a true knight, or the spirit of a genuine gentleman, may have its place under the humblest conditions. He who, in lowly position, is not willing to be greater and finer than his place, will neither get nor deserve a better place. Let the soul stand erect though the body must stoop to its task.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
PREACHERS' SUPPLIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

PRIZE-WINNERS IN THE RACE OF LIFE.

Topic July 29.—1 Cor. 9:24-27.

The Christian life is a race. We can run or lie down, just as we please. There is no compulsion about it; and it is not an easy path that we must take. It is every fellow for himself, and the devil take the hindmost, or the fellow that falls down and fails to get up. If this seem a hard outlook, let the courage and fortitude of the Great Apostle come to possess us. Hard things make manhood and test the faith and endurance of the Christian, as in other of life's strenuous endeavors. All who would win must run. There is no getting around that. And we must run to the finish. We do not have to come out ahead—but we must finish our race, we must keep the faith. Whether we win or not depends on our holding out faithful to the end. There is significance in the old familiar phrase of our fathers and mothers: "Pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end." It is a hackneyed expression, that meant much or little, owing to the character of the one who uttered it. But it has the right ring. With all their crudities of thought and expression in things religious, our fathers had the true conception of things when it came to holding fast the faith. It is quite as important to hang on to the truth as it is to be taught the truth. The schoolboy's essay, laboriously written, was on the subject of virtue: "Virtue is a good thing to get holt of. When you get a holt of virtue you better keep a holt." And that is just the secret of prize-winning in the race of life. There is no such thing as luck in it. It is a matter of pluck, reinforced by Providence. And the old adage has it just right: "God helps them that help themselves." That is just as true in religion as in plowing corn. It is just simple common sense—everyday working sense. For, after all, common sense is the most spiritual thing in this old world. That is what Jesus taught. He spoke in parables which are illustrated proverbs.

"So run that ye may win." Why, of course. What is the use in fooling? Nobody likes a flunkey in religion, or in a race, or in a ball game. It is the fellow that gets there that we all admire, and it is our business to get there. But we must play fair—we must run on the square. That is what Paul means when he says, "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." He keeps his head and does the square thing. He can get enthusiastic on occasion, but he doesn't waste too much good breath in blowing about what he has done or is going to do. He gets in the game and stays till the finish. The Christian is a goer and a stayer. He goes and keeps a-goin'. He goes in to "win out." That's the game. There isn't any sense in beating the air. Paul says he fought "not as one that beateth the air." All of which shows his good hard sense. Perhaps he means to tell us that our running in the Christian race and fighting in this warfare is not the uncertain thing that the old Olympic races were in his day and in ours. You have been reading of the revival of the old Olympic games in Europe and have felt the natural pride of every American in the reports in the daily press of the success of our American contestants. And rest assured of this thing, the cleanest fellows, in conscience and in life and limb, will win out in the races and in the other tests of strength and of skill. "The pure in heart shall see God," and win out in the foot-race. Perhaps you never got those two things so close together before, but they belong right side by side. I wish we could get these simple things in life and religion straight. I was talking just yesterday with the deputy sheriff, and he said to me: "Whisky is the curse of this country. It took me twenty-five years to learn that," he added. And then he said another thing that made me glad: "I haven't a boy that touches it." He has six boys, grown to manhood. He is an Irish Catholic, with a streak of Protestant blood in him from some of his old Scotch-Irish ancestors, about whom he told me. He is a blood descendant of Rob Roy, the hero of Scotland, and has some of the heroic in him. He conquered the drink habit years ago and brought his boys up to let the stuff alone and to run that they might win.

Christian Endeavor

August 2, 1908.

SERVING THE CHURCH.—Ps. 84.

DAILY READINGS.

M. Grace Given to Each.	Eph. 4:1-7.
T. Serving in Worship.	Acts 2:39-42.
W. By Endurance.	Acts 8:1-3.
T. By Obeying.	1 Sam. 15:10-22.
F. By Sinning.	Matt. 5:13-16.
S. By Praise.	Ps. 100.
S. Topic.

The beautiful Psalm selected for the scripture lesson is especially helpful, coming as it does at the beginning of August. How difficult it is, how wearisome, to go to church during the dog days! How easy it is to excuse our absence and to quiet our conscience! We need a strong sentiment to help hold us to the house of God when the thermometer is standing at its highest degree.

This Psalm is an apt one at any time for Christian Endeavorers. Many ministers complain with sore hearts that most Christian Endeavorers are very careless about regular attendance upon church services. Many a minister goes from the Endeavor prayer-meeting to the pulpit and looks in vain to see in the pew the faces he saw in the prayer room and to hear in the worship of the congregation the voices he heard in the first service. Is that the sore thought your pastor has of you?

How are we to be helped in this matter? Consider the Psalm. What a fine expression of the rapturous contemplation of the joy of the house of God! What an overcoming longing is written in the words, "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of Jehovah; my heart and my flesh cry out unto the living God."

Do you ever feel so in regard to the house of God? Why should we not have such a longing? Surely God means more to us than he could have meant to one in these earlier years of his working for and with men! The writer's joyful contemplation recorded in verse 5 pauses a moment as he plays his instrument of music.

In the house of Jehovah he finds strength and in his heart are the highways to Zion. Valleys of weeping become places of springs as he goes to the house of Jehovah, and every foot of the journey adds to his strength. Do you feel that way as you start to church? Or do you feel stronger the farther away you get from it after the Mizpah has been recited?

Read the tenth verse. Is that the way you estimate the relative value of days and of positions? Would you rather be in the house of God than anywhere else? If not, why? Do you think of it as the house of God where you meet him? Do you expect to find your strength there? Do you expect to feel as the psalmist did when he wrote the first verse? "How lovely are thy tabernacles"!

I sometimes think that our greatest need is this Old Testament consciousness of the living God. How simply they accepted the fact and how strongly they helped themselves in it and with what sincere joy! Is is possible for us to have this consciousness of God when we go into his house?

We can never "serve the church" as the topic invites, until we feel as the psalmist did about the assembly of the people of God in his house. We run away from the services because we do not believe God is there. If we believed that, we should at least be afraid to run away.

Church Furnishings and Supplies

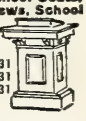
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUPS

Our "Self-Collecting" Tray saves "ONE FOURTH" Cost of other systems. Send for an outfit to use on trial before purchasing. Address,

Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 150, Lima, Ohio

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only

C-13	Church Furniture	School Desks S-131
L-13	Lodge Furniture	Opera Chairs O-131
B-131	Bank Furniture	Office Desks D-131



E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

THE NEW
PRAISE HYMNAL
The Latest and Greatest Church Music Book
Prices $50 and $70, per one hundred copies
Returnable copies mailed for examination
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE,
528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O., or 41-43 Bible House, N.Y

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References. Correspondence Solicited

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

Sunday-School
CLASS BOOKS,
ENVELOPES
RECORDS,
BLACK BOARDS,
MAPS, CARDS
AND OTHER
Up-To-Date Supplies

People's Forum

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I do not see why our brethren say so much about "receiving people into the church." There is certainly not one word in all the Bible on that subject. If it is true that "Where the scriptures are silent we are silent," why can not we be silent on that matter? And if it is not true that "Where the scriptures are silent, we are silent," then what about the Pittsburg Centennial?

John Encell.

Richland Center, N. Y.

[Another term might be used for "receiving," if that word is offensive. Recognition is the idea which the word stands for. We are to recognize and treat as Christians those who, by their outward obedience and by their character, manifest the spirit of Christians. We see nothing, however, in the use of the word "receive," in connection with the increase of church membership, that would make it necessary to dispense with the Centennial at Pittsburg.—EDITOR.]

"Baptized Deceptions."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

How to guard against filling our local congregations with "baptized deceptions" is vital to our usefulness as a people. Brother Freeman is tremendously right in admonishing preachers to urge the need of genuine, thorough-going repentance.

And in order to give proper effect to such urging from the pulpit, we need to exercise greater caution between the taking of the good confession and the immersing of the supposed penitent.

I am convinced that in most cases the preacher ought to have a searching private heart-to-heart talk with each one presenting himself for baptism in which the real meaning of his step is made clear. This is to be done before the immersing takes place. After the immersing has been performed there should be several intimate personal interviews on what will be the duty of the new convert in his various relations, on the need of Bible study and how best to study, etc. Of course these need not be absolutely individual and private, but they should be enough so that each individual feels that it is for him even though he were alone.

Then in the matter of receiving people into our congregations on the strength of their letters we need radical changes. Now we receive without any question whatever any one who can show a letter from any congregation without any regard to his worthiness; even when the one presenting the letter has shown in various ways that the claims of Christ rest very lightly on him, to put it mildly. We talk well enough in the pulpit and say that we stand for obedience to Christ and to him only, but by our practice we belie this to a large extent and show that we stand more for the enforcing of a certain form than we do for personal devotion and obedience to a personal Saviour.

God grant that we may prayerfully consider this matter, that men may be indeed and in truth saved. Ernest Thornquest.

Imperial, Cal.

What Means This Anxiety?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I have just read "What Does This Mean?" in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of June 25, and I am compelled to ask what does the alarm and anxiety mean? Why should it alarm any one for 5,000 Christian workers to hold a mid-summer rally? Wonder who wrote it? Surely not the Editor-in-Chief, for I had some correspondence with him on the subject, and he consented for me to make a short reply. But a short notice would not answer the paper of Brother Todd, and as others sent in replies I did not.

The congress of evangelists is not a new idea. Five years ago we had an assembly of evangelists at Maxinkuckee. Addresses from ten of our leading evangelists were given and all our leading singers were there. But that even caused anxiety. To talk about an opposition movement and "reactionary influence" is childish. How can an evangelistic assembly be an opposition to the regular midwinter congress? Their aims and purposes are widely different. One is criticism, the other is enthusiasm. Again the winter congress is for critical study. Any paper read there will not encourage evangelism. Still more only a few people go to this congress.

Thousands will be at the congress of evangelists. Let me assure the writer that the spirit of union and harmony will prevail and no organization will be made. We are now organized to distraction.

Bethany Assembly, like any other assembly, gladly welcomes this congress, and the managers will see that we behave well.

There is not a Chautauqua in the country but what would have welcomed us. There are no salaried officers nor financial profits in this congress. If any money is made Bethany gets it. If there is a loss, Bethany is not the loser. So calm your anxiety, come, and we will do you good. J. V. Coombs.

Rolla, Mo., July 5.

[It scarcely need be said that no anxiety has been created by the fact of a summer assembly at Bethany Park, nor the meeting there of an evangelistic congress. The circulars sent out which manifest a spirit of antagonism to existing organizations, is responsible for the fear which many brethren have felt, that this evangelistic congress was not to be conducted in the interest of our established work and of the unity and peace of the brotherhood. There is no explanation of their peculiar character. It would seem from Brother Coombs' reference to his correspondence with the Editor, that the object of the congress was to reply to Brother Todd's criticisms, but we can hardly believe that our brethren think a congress of evangelists is necessary for that purpose. We can assure Brother Coombs that there is not the slightest feeling of jealousy that this congress will outnumber our regular annual congress. We could wish that it might number 10,000, instead of 5,000, provided the brethren meet in the spirit of Christ, with a sincere desire to promote his kingdom by fostering the unity and peace of the brotherhood, and by planning for a more earnest prosecution of the work of evangelism. We are very glad, therefore, to have Brother Coombs' assurance that "the spirit of union and harmony will prevail, and no organization will be made." We hope the program will be carried out in that spirit, and we will all rejoice at the success of Bethany Assembly.—EDITOR.]

Obituaries

Notices of deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the mouey with the copy.

ELY.

Simpson Ely was born in DeWitt county, Ill., June 6, 1849. He was the son of Solomon and Deborah Ely. His father was a Virginian and his mother a native of Kentucky. His early life was passed on a farm in Kansas, where he helped to make the living for the family, and where he early learned to love God's out-of-doors. He always delighted in the beauties of nature and loved to roam the woods and be much in the open. His religious nature early manifested itself and at 12 years of age he confessed his Saviour during a meeting held by Dudley Downs and John Huston, at Old Bedford Church in Illinois. At the age of 16 he began speaking at prayer-meeting and social meetings, and he soon developed a power of thought and expression which gave promise of future usefulness. When he was 21 he began teaching and preaching. The same year he was married to Miss Elizabeth Miller, of Andrew county, Mo. In order to better equip himself for his chosen work he entered Oskaloosa College, from which he was graduated in 1875.

His ministry extended over a period of thirty-nine years. The larger part of it was spent in evangelizing. He had held meetings from Dakota to Texas, and from Kansas to South Carolina. He had held pastorates in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, but the larger part of his ministry was given to Missouri. His most notable pastorate was at Kirksville, where he was twice pastor, and where he received 735 into the church. He was president of Christian University at Canton, Mo., three and one-half years, and of the Bible College at Fairfield, Neb., one year. Brother Ely was a very versatile man. He was at home in any company. He played and sang with ease and was the author of a number of songs. He published large numbers of tracts and probably distributed more than any man among us. He was interested in all our missionary enterprises and was a liberal giver. At one time he was giving one-third of his income to the enterprises of the church. He was an ardent Prohibitionist and was prominent in every campaign. He held very pronounced views upon every vital question, and defended them with all the intensity of his nature.

His death was a great shock to this community. He was holding a meeting with Brother Famuliner and our Villa Heights Church and was going out Sunday morning to preach. In preparing to alight from the street car he fell to the pavement, striking the back of his head. Apparently he sustained only a scalp wound, but later in the day he became unconscious, and died at 8:30 p. m., from concussion of the brain. Funeral services were conducted at the South Joplin Christian Church, of which he was an elder, Thursday afternoon, July 9. The body lay in state, surrounded by many beautiful floral offerings, the gifts of sympathizing friends, from 11 o'clock until 2:30 p. m. The services were simple and impressive. A quartette composed of Brothers W. F. Turner and Harry Hill, of Joplin; Sam I. Smith, of Duenweg, and D. W. Moore, of Carthage, sang "Nearer My God To Thee." J. M. Miller, of Diamond, read 1 Cor. 15; H. M. Barnett, of Webb City, offered prayer; Harry Hill sang "Lead Kindly Light," and then six brethren spoke briefly of six phases of his life. Marcellus Piatt, a friend from boyhood, spoke of their early associations. They have corresponded for thirty-eight years. Sam I. Smith spoke of his last pastorate, J. W. Famuliner of his last meeting, W. F. Turner of his personal friendship, Hon. H. B. Faris, of Clinton, Mo., of his Prohibition work, and George L. Peters of his relation to him as pastor. M. H. Patrick offered a brief prayer and the body was taken to the cemetery. At the grave W. C. Willey, of Carl Junction, read 2 Thess. 4:13-18, and as the casket was being lowered Brothers Smith and Moore sang, "Silently Bury the Dead." Brother Ely and Brother Smith had sung this song on Friday night at the last service he conducted. As the strains died away Brother Moore stepped forward and feelingly commended the bereaved family to God, the great healer of all wounded hearts. His body rests in Fairview beside his aged mother whom he buried May 11. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Ely; two daughters, Mrs. Mary Whittlesey, and Miss Lois Ely, Joplin; one son, Marcellus R. Ely, pastor of the Christian Church, Charleston, S. C., and three sisters, Miss Salina Ely and Mrs. J. G. Hull, of Shoalsburg, Joplin, and Mrs. Jennie Harris, Siloam Springs, Ark. A host of friends, far and wide, join them in mourning his untimely end.

George L. Peters.

Individual Communion Sets

A large number of our churches are now using the individual communion sets, and we can supply them at various prices and in several styles.

We also have in stock collection plates and other church goods.

Write to us if you need anything of this kind.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

The Home Department

Rules for Health.

Avoid drinking stuff from bottles before you have looked at the labels.

Refrain from working in coal mines where there are likely to be accumulations of fire-damp.

When the elevator is crowded wait for the next car.

Skate only where you know the ice to be thick.

Wait for the car to stop, even if in so doing you waste three-quarters of a second of your valuable time.

If the man who calls you a liar is big and brawny, treat him with silent contempt.

Shun jails. They are likely to be very unsanitary.

Never take medicine for the purpose of keeping it from being wasted.

Don't be afraid of wearing out the bath-tub.—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Record-Herald.

"Did your children get through the Fourth all right?"

"Yes. Thank heaven, they were both down with scarlet fever."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Umbrella a Badge of Power.

Unless there is rain, we grumble at the umbrella as a most burdensome implement, and more easily lost than any article that we require. We do not think, and perhaps many do not know, what an important part the umbrella plays in some of the nations. The first Englishmen who carried an umbrella was named Hanway, and he lived toward the end of the eighteenth century. At first he was thought to be a most eccentric person, but by degrees it was seen that there was method in his madness, and the fashion that he set was generally followed by society before his death, in 1786. Hanway was not the inventor of the umbrella, for among the Greeks and Romans an article like it was very common, although it was regarded as belonging solely to women, and the men never used it. All over the East the umbrella has, for generations, been known as a badge of power and of royalty. On the sculptures that remain of the old Egyptian temples are to be seen representations of kings in procession with umbrellas carried over their heads. Some of the Maharajahs, the great princes of India, still call themselves "Lords of the Umbrella," and in the address of the King of Burma to the Viceroy of India, many years ago, the British representative of the government is described as the "Monarch who reigns over the great umbrella-wearing chiefs of the East."

Brown's Philosophy.

It is the knowing how that counts in everything, from milking a cow to running a college.

The sky can be seen in a mud-puddle when we look for it in the right way.

An eagle that is brought up in a cage never finds out that it has wings.

There are spots on the sun, and yet some folks expect a nine-year-old boy to be perfect.

The hardest things about the hard things of life is, that we must bear so much of them alone.

When the Spirit of God leads it is step by step, but the flesh wants to do things on the run.

It is by looking at our hearts, and not at our hands, that God knows we love him.

God has never found time to make a world that a shiftless man could prosper in.

God honors us most when he puts us where we will trust him most.—Ram's Horn.

"I'm sorry, Pat, but I can not be your wife," said Bridget after Pat had proposed.

"Why not?" asked Pat, with a tone of sadness in his voice.

"Well, Pat, I suppose I must tell you the truth—I'm a somnambulist."

"A what?"

"A somnambulist."

"Sure, and that won't make any difference. You can go to your church, and I'll go to mine."—Judge's Library.

Some Absent Minded People.

Stories of absent-mindedness are always interesting and usually amusing. The odd or unfortunate experience may proceed from profound abstraction, or may be simply the result of a habit on the part of very commonplace people.

Speaking of the withdrawal from all external things on the part of a deep thinker reminds me of the stories told of the astronomer, Watson, connected for some years with the University of Michigan. He had a building to which he withdrew himself and to which it was said meals were passed to him while he remained in retirement. The students used to tell of a book he wrote which could be understood by only three persons in the world.

A friend recently told me of a professor of his in Hanover College, Indiana, who would become so absorbed in thinking over deep problems as to forget all his surroundings. One day one of the boys at the beginning of class intentionally asked the professor a question rather puzzling in its nature. The professor looking off to the corner of the room and moving his hands nervously, pondered the problem, while the members of the class, stooping down, one by one crawled from the room until it was empty.

When Prof. Mommsen passed away not long ago, one of his biographers said that the great historian would sometimes become so lost in thought that he had not consciousness whatever of the hour for meals. His wife would prepare a large plate of sandwiches, and taking it to his study, would place it by his side. The professor would put out a hand mechanically and take the sandwiches until all were eaten.

A very different type of man was he who at New Haven, Conn., one day said to the postoffice clerk: "Have you any letters for ——" and then suddenly stopped, having forgotten his name. Turning away in confusion after a moment, and going out of the office, he met a friend who called him by name. "That's it—that's it," said the man, and rushing back asked for his mail.

The Discovery of the Boy.

Many and marvelous have been the discoveries of the past twenty-five or thirty years. Great have been the geographical discoveries. Livingstone and Stanley have opened up the Dark Continent; Nares and Nansen have unveiled the Arctic regions. Greater have been the discoveries of science. The electric light and the trolley, the telephone and the phonograph, the X-rays and wireless telegraphy, and, latest of all, radium, have been revealed to the men of this generation. None of these discoveries have greater human interest than the recent discovery of the boy.

But have not boys always been? you ask. Yes, and there has been no change in the boy; but now we know him. We have put him and his actions under the microscope, so to speak, and we can now tell all about him. Why, actually university professors, and they are not always so staid as they are thought to be, have been studying the boy. That science with the somewhat mysterious name, psychology, has been watching the boy from his cries in the cradle, where he first made his home, to the time when a promising "down" on his upper lip either required or gave an excuse for requiring a razor.

The university professor has analyzed and synthesized until he knows how and why the boy talks and walks. He can tell you why it is the boy takes to tops and to balls, while the girls insist on skipping-ropes and dolls. That reminds me of a scientific friend of mine whose boys were all girls. He made up his mind, however, that they ought to be boys, so he insisted on training them as boys and giving them only boys' games. He believed that such training would eliminate from their sex much of what he thought was merely feminine nonsense. One day he was out walking with his little family of girls, when to his utmost disgust and the shattering of his fine-spun theories, the eldest daughter seeing a big, dirty rag doll lying on a door-step rushed and gathered it to her bosom, kissing it, and saying, "Oh, you dear!" Girls will be girls, and boys will be boys. But to return to my point. The watchful professor will tell you why a boy plays certain games when he is six or seven, and certain others when he is twelve or thirteen. He will tell you why the boy loves to play with other boys. The professor, however, calls this a manifestation of the "gang" instinct.

When we think of the way some boys of past generations were brought up, is it not fair to say that the boy has been discovered during the past few years? A revolution has taken place in the teaching of boys in our public schools in the last twenty years, and this has come about chiefly as a result of the discovery of the boy by scientists, and their recognition of this play instinct. —East and West.

When the mother is remonstrated with for spoiling the child by overindulgence, she will say: "My child is different from others; she is more nervous. If I do not wake her up she will cry and make herself sick." The child in the beginning, finding that the mother ran to it the minute that it began to cry, of course soon learned this method of summoning her. It also perceived that the louder the cry the greater the indulgence, consequently it develops speedily into a despot, beneath whose tyranny the mother grows wan and pale. When it is said of her: "She is a perfect slave to her children," she looks satisfied and pleased, as if she had won a martyr's crown, instead of which she has uselessly squandered her strength, and prevented the child from learning proper habits, which are as necessary to his growth and development as it is that he should learn to walk instead of creeping the rest of his life, because he may fall and hurt himself, and cry now and then.—Harper's Bazar.

A Summer Appetizer

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

A teaspoonful in a glass of water stimulates appetite and quenches thirst. An excellent tonic.

"DOWN IN OLD MISSOURI"

By S. S. LAPPIN.

CHAPTER VI.

Retrospection and Reflection.

Strangely fascinating is the pictured canvas with which the long hall of memory is hung. Its unnumbered scenes stretch away to the shadow land, where once we began to know and think and feel. A silvery veil of glowing mist seems ever to hang before it. Almost imperceptibly near at hand, this sheen grows denser in the distance, so that pictures farthest off have an added glory, while the one retouched but yesterday and the one, unfinished as yet, to-day show bare, blunt outlines, angular and uncouth. It is not easy to believe that this treasured past is but a composite of the uninteresting presents that have been. Ah, it is the work of time. "Time the enchanter," one would say, but not so. Time is no enchanter to delude us and make things seem more lovely than they are. Time but disillusions us that we may truly see and know for once the value of what he has brought us.

We are robbed of the present, and ever possible, joy of living by fear, needless, foolish fear. We let anticipated trials detract from real and rational pleasures. Our forebodings bear no fruit; or, if trials do come, they are but transient, and helpful in the end. When we paint the future we put in these dark outlines; but time, with better taste, strikes them out for us, and when we look back the canvas is bright. This talk of the good old days is a delusion, and not a harmless one by any means. Those days are of a kind with those now passing, except that they grow richer all the time as they pass. The faith that trusts God and goes ahead is what we of this age most need to add zest and relish to our lives.

But time is a transformer, working ever with steady, justice-guided hand, by laws unerring and benevolent. When royal families retrograde and degenerate, the ferment of unrest sets silently to work. Presently there is an eruption. Revolution clears the atmosphere, reversing the order, and Time turns his glass the other end up and sets things going anew. When the rich grow arrogant in their independence, forgetting that they, too, had humble beginnings, and dare to despise the plodding poor, lo, already the anointing oil of untoward circumstance has fallen on the locks of some lad from a sun-kissed hillside in whose veins kingly currents run. When scholars, rich in the lore of books and puffed up with vanity, sneer at or ignore the eager askings of the lowly and unschooled, a great class is in training out where birds flit to and fro and soft-eyed sheep nibble the sward; and at the bidding of some uncouth Spurgeon, some Lincoln, with forest fragrance in his garments, some Edison with his hindering deafness, some Clemens from his river raft, climbs up another way and stands glory-crowned on the crest above them all.

In all this there is, of course, an occasional accident as we see even in the realm of nature—the tempest-wrecked leaf-tower of the woodland, the starved nestling of the slain bird mother, the maimed member of the herd limping behind its nimble-footed companions—but the general rise and fall of things, the great ocean swells, the light and shade of life, all come and go by laws unvarying and divine.

Values fluctuate in our appreciation, as markets vary from time to time. The possessions of mankind that once seemed to me of vital importance appear to have a quite different worth now. So many persons I once envied I have come at last to pity that I found soon enough that, to be a man, I must pluck up the weeds of envy from my heart that tender plants of pity might run rife and bear their seeds. Among all our sinning, suffering fellows, the one most to be pitied is he who feels no pang of pity for the ills of others, and he only who may be envied is that rare rich man who has no taint of envy in his heart. Blessed are they whose lives begin with humblest scenes and whose bodies feel the pinch of sheer poverty if thereby the later years are enriched with the enduring wealth of that peace which cometh to the upright in heart and the power to love even the unlovely. Poor indeed is he to whom these things never come, whatever else he may gain of the world's plunder.

We constantly undervalue the worth of a good word. Nothing else pays so well as investment in courageous speech to the world's disheartened ones. The ninety-and-nine may be heedless of our well-meant proffer of encouragement, or may forget it and us forthwith, but the hundredth one will be heartened by it and will praise the Giver of all good for it, remembering us when we are gone. In an old album of mine are inscribed these words: "Dear Sam—Every young man who dares to do right will succeed in life. The world may seem cold and hard, but the faithful will be rewarded.—W. C. B." I could not tell how often I have read these words penned by a schoolteacher who understood me, nor how they have helped me when no other help was in sight. "W. C. B."—perhaps not one of all who read this can guess what name these letters indicate. It does not detract from the worth of his words to remember that he did not always "dare to do right" and was not always "faithful" as he should have been. The thought of his later delinquencies but awakens pity in me, for I doubt not the world dealt bitterly enough with him as he walked the hard way of the transgressor, and I would gladly cross a state to grasp his hand, though it were through prison bars, and thank him for the good word he gave.

There is a great lot of unofficial and unlabeled goodness in this world. With no place for it in our classification we will go sadly amiss in our appreciation of what is worthy. When we find one doing good we ought, in the name of Him who noted the Samaritan's deed and made it deathless, to give the grip of recognition and go gladly on. So long as the deeds our Lord began to do are left untouched by those who own his creed, those of other name and nation must befriend him and do his bidding. When close contact with the unfeeling and cynical begins to make me callous, I go back in memory to that four-hundred-mile wagon ride out of the Ozarks; I recall the plain people who greeted us all along the way as though expecting us; the meeting of men in the wagon-house at Springfield; the good doctor who gave compassion when hope could not be offered; the ferrymen and toll-gate keepers who refused our money except in a single case; the strangers who took charge and assumed all responsibility when death came; the weak-eyed Hard Shell Baptist woman who quickly marked me as a Campbellite when we met last summer, but who, God reward her, kept my father's grave for thirty years with no single word from any of us. These people were of every religious denomination and none, of every degree of culture, and the lack of it, common in that day and place and of every conceivable station in life, yet the doctrine of Jesus beginning with "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these," was a controlling force in their lives.

It was not so in this old world once. It is not so to-day in lands where He is not known. This much is clear to me; not all who serve Him are clothed in the customary garments of the sanctuary. The eyes of those who know Him and have learned His Way look out sometimes from the grizzled visages of those accustomed to the hard ways of a hard world. The feet that go for Him are not always neatly shod. The hands that do His tasks are often brown and bony. But He knows His own and has them where they are needed most at times when they can serve Him best. This faith is enough for me if I can but know Him and be one of His when He wants me.

It is faith that moves the world. Faith, the much talked of and little understood force. My observation of faith-full men and women when under sore trial has been my best commentary on the eleventh chapter of Hebrews. The writer of that passage names but a few of the heroes of faith—enough merely for his purpose, to show

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY

NO POSITION, NO PAY

Largest and Best Equipped School in the West; 5 teachers of railroad experience. Students employed on 52 roads. Attendance doubled last year. Many states represented. Attend on credit. Car fare paid. Write for Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE TELEGRAPHY COLLEGE,
754 Irving Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

WE MAKE BANKERS

POSITIONS SECURED

or Tuition refunded. The CHILLICOTHE Business College has recently placed 90 students in Banks; 31 as teachers in Business Colleges. 27 states and Mexico represented. 53 Typewriters, 10 Instructors, 7 Assistants. Attend on Credit, Car Fare Paid. Write for free Catalog

ALLEN MOORE, Pres.,
3883 Monroe St., Chillicothe, Mo.

BIG SALARIES

FOR TEACHERS

now being paid. Attend the Chillicothe Normal for Professional Training or for University Entrance. 1200 students. 26 instructors. Conservatory of Music and Oratory. Tuition, Board and Room-rent 48 weeks $135. Attend on Credit. Car fare paid. Send for free Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE NORMAL SCHOOL,
60 Normal Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

The Randolph-Macon System of Endowed Colleges and Correlated Schools

Educates men and women, boys and girls not together but in Five Separate Institutions under one management. The combination enables us to offer the best advantages and to

Save Time and Money

For particulars, address, stating age and sex of student.

Chancellor WM. W. SMITH, A. M., LL. D.
College Park, Lynchburg, Va.

William Woods College

For Young Women

Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.

J. B. Jones, Pres.
Fulton, Mo.

that faith moves the world. Were some gifted one to write again he could add much to the catalogue of wonders wrought by faith. Nor have they all been wrought; all about us are those whose silent and unseen part in the tragedy and temptation of their lives, though unappreciated by those nearest them, give testimony to the overcoming power of faith.

Occasionally I meet a man, seldom though, a woman, and one usually it is, who has felt no frown of disfavor cast upon him in all the way, who sneers at faith in God and Christ. Then I think of my mother, taking her uncertain way from the grave of her dead and, without money or influential friends, bringing her five orphans through hardships and discouragements to honored maturity and lives of usefulness at last; and all the way groping, groping, groping in the ashy shadows of her darkened life with no hand to hold but that of an unseen God, and no name to call before him, but the name of him "by whose stripes we are healed." I say I think of all this when I meet one who scoffs at God and religion and, may I be pardoned, if it is wrong in me, I would like to strike him in the face and shame the mouth that dishonors God and disowns his care for the defenseless. This world looks to me like a harmonious whole. Even its discords and sorrows are parts of a plan. I can not but believe that there is a Wise One over it all. If this be true, and there is not somewhere a place and somehow a plan that eyes that see not here shall be opened, ears that hear not here shall be healed and lives cast down shall stand erect, it is the only disappointment in it all.

And now I bring this simple little narrative to its close. The mere hints I have given are all I could tell of the struggle upward, and they are enough, I trust, for the purpose I have held in view. The little triumphs for which we battled together in glorious fellowship and which stand out brightly along the way—the first lamp-flue we had in the house, for instance; the first time-piece; the first carpet on our floor, a partnership purchase from the earnings of us children; the first ready-made clothes; the first teacher's certificates; the first sermons—all these are so like the first things in other lives that they may hardly be mentioned.

What a help it ever is to meet one in like state with us. When confronted by some grave trouble, a financial reverse, a serious illness, a domestic tragedy—just to know that another has met like obstacles and has surmounted them nerves for the test. It is with a hope that I might encourage another or inspire someone else to do so that I have written. To know that I have done my part as best I could, is a sufficient reward for the effort it has cost me, but to know also that what I have written has not been wholly unheeded is a delight indeed. There is a little bunch of letters and postal cards on my desk, written since these sketches were begun, and speaking each its message of hearty response and appreciation. Not all have said so, but I know that they belong to the great fellowship of the successful unhelped who have become the helpers of others. I know them every time and they are a splendid lot. They are toilers, all of them, in workshop, factory and office, state-house, college and court, farm, pulpit and platform; their missives have come to me and the pride it gives me to be one of them is a vanity I trust may be pardoned. To have met them thus and to have told my little story to those able to understand, has been a pleasure. I would linger in the circle, but tasks are waiting and I must go.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN
Sixt'eth Session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture, New Laboratories. Splendid Campus, Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on request.
E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

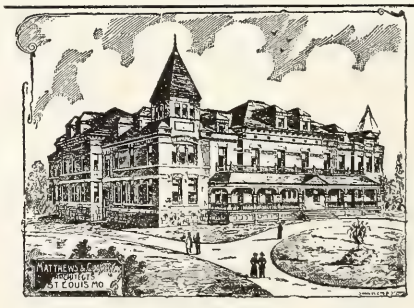
Campbell-Hagerman College

For Girls and Young Women. Begins its next session September 14, 1908. Large Faculty of scholarly men and women. Thoroughly equipped Departments of Music, Art and Expression. Confers A. B. anl B. L. Degrees. 126 graduates in the regular course, in the last five years. Between 60 and 70 graduates in the special Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Departments of Bookkeeping, Stenography and Typewriting. School of Domestic Science. Well equipped Gymnasium. Splendid new buildings with all modern conveniences. For catalogue address, B. C. HAGERMAN, Pres.

BETHANY COLLEGE
Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environments well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET, Bethany, W. Va.

MIAMI UNIVERSITY THE FAMOUS OLD COLLEGE OF THE CENTRAL WEST
(Supported the by State of Ohio.)
85th year opens September 16th. Free Tuition. Low cost of living. Wide range of studies. Thorough instruction. Christian influences. No saloons. A well-equipped gymnasium with specially trained physical director. Beautiful campus of sixty-five acres. Splendid buildings. Modern equipment. Write for catalogue and handsomely illustrated bulletin to the President.
GUY POTTER BENTON, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ohio.

FORTIETH YEAR.
HAMILTON COLLEGE
FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.
Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address
MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.
Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.



CARR-BURDETTE COLLEGE
AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, ART AND EXPRESSION
In location, building, climate and health conditions, home furnishings, department equipments and faculty Carr-Burdette is the peer of any Young Ladies' Boarding School North or South. Experienced educators have so adjudged it. It is select and limited in number. Building and grounds deeded to the Church free from debt. Bible taught every day. Write at once for catalogue and read for yourself, or visit us and see for yourself. Address,
SECRETARY, CARR-BURDETTE,
Sherman, Texas.

HIRAM COLLEGE
HIRAM, OHIO.
From articles by Hiram students in Hiram College Advance.
"I came to Hiram as the result of a deliberate choice. As I learned more of the school, I came to feel that Hiram was truly an ideal among small colleges. Its size, its standing among large schools, the spirit of its students and the peculiar devotion of its Faculty, all impressed me most favorably. I have not been disappointed."
The "Home-Coming" issue of the Advance, containing this and other articles of students, the inaugural address of President Bates, poem by Jessie Brown Pounds, articles by Judge F. A. Henry, and Professors E. B. Wakefield, B. S. Dean and G. H. Colton, sent free on application, also catalog. Address J. O. Newcomb, Secretary, Hiram, Ohio. Mention "The Christian-Evangelist."

A MOTHER'S HEART.

It seemed months instead of a week since Mrs. Hildreth had come to Balston, the lonesome little Maryland resort, whose only claim to notice was its villainous-tasting spring, the waters of which were supposed to help or cure all manner of diseases. It was late in the season, too; nearly all the summer guests were gone from the smaller boarding-places, and only a few chronic invalids remained in the big hotel. Not that Mrs. Hildreth cared for that; she hadn't come there for society, and she had no disease, except of mind. Uncharitable people might have insinuated that she had come to sulk, but to herself she had fled to this quiet spot to be alone with her thoughts, and to mourn over the wreck of all her hopes.

There was nothing to live for. It was ten years since her husband died, and now her only child, the little Dorothy she had almost worshiped, had deliberately married a good-for-nothing, fortune-hunting pauper, and she would never see her again. This is how Mrs. Hildreth put it to herself, and she rejoiced that her far-seeing husband had left his property exclusively to her, feeling sure that she could be trusted to do what was right by the child.

"And he shall never have a cent of my money," she said, fiercely to herself on one of those long, solitary walks that she took every day. "They may starve, both of them, for all I will lift a finger to interfere." Then, worn out and more miserable than ever, she would drag herself back to her boarding-place, where the kindly landlady, seeing that her guest was unhappy, would vainly try to interest and amuse her.

Now, there were other ways of looking upon this marriage, which had so changed the whole current of her life for the mother. Dorothy Hildreth had grown up a sweet, lovely girl, full of tender, caressing ways, and never questioning her mother's will until, at nineteen, she had fallen in love with handsome George Raymond, who, in his turn, had surrendered his heart completely the first time he met the beautiful girl. For a year Mrs. Hildreth contented herself with a passive resistance, keeping a watchful eye on her daughter meanwhile, and then appeared a millionaire, fifteen years older than Dorothy, and he also laid his heart and fortune at her feet. Mrs. Hildreth lent a willing ear to his suit, but her daughter would none of him, and then came a long and bitter struggle. The mother finally forbade the obnoxious George Raymond to call at her house, and Dorothy, while still clinging to her lover, refused to marry him without that mother's consent.

To every one else, George was a bright, hardworking young lawyer, who was bound in time to succeed in life; he had no enemies, and not a man could be found who had a word to urge against him outside of his lack of riches. Dorothy did all she could to break down the wall of opposition, but things grew worse with every month, and finally she yielded to the persuasions of her lover, and, going to the home of her minister, whose wife was heart and soul in their favor, they were quietly married, and went directly to housekeeping in the modest little flat which George was able to provide.

It was a manly, straightforward letter that the young husband sent to his newmade mother-in-law; he could not give Dorothy such a home as she had always been used to, but he would do the best he could and work with might and main to make it a better one. He was sorry for the underhanded way in which they had been married, but he reminded her that he was not allowed to see Dorothy at her home, and though he had done his best to clear away the obstacles in his way, yet things had seemed to grow even harder with each month. And he asked her, now the irrevocable step had been taken, if all that was unpleasant might not be forgiven and forgotten, and if in time he might not be a son to Dorothy's mother.

But this letter and the tear-stained little note from Dorothy herself had no power to move the bitterly disappointed woman. She ignored the presumptuous bridegroom entirely, but wrote a few brief lines to her daughter that she would never see her again unless she was ready to leave George Raymond forever. Until then she would try to forget that she ever had a child. As for forgiveness, she would far rather see her dead and in her coffin than married to a pettifogging lawyer, whose only aim in the whole matter was the hope of eventually handling her dead father's money, but who would find that he had made a sad miscalculation in his scheme. Naturally, she heard no more from George Raymond, and the one other note from Dorothy had been returned unopened. Then, after a miserable month in which she shut herself up and refused to see any one, she suddenly packed her trunk and departed for Balston.

How hard and bitter she felt toward the whole world as she strolled aimlessly along through the quiet woods, and how pitiless the blue sky seemed as it showed through the tops of the pine trees over her head! After all those years of love and care lavished on the only thing she had to make life worth living, and then to be rewarded by such an act of black ingratitude! She walked back to the quiet Southern home where she had taken refuge and prepared to spend another of the long nights that so tried her very soul.

"Have you seen Uncle Toby yet, Mrs. Hildreth?" asked the landlady, with a pitying glance at the sad-faced woman trying to eat her solitary meal.

"Who is Uncle Toby?" she inquired languidly, with hardly a show of interest.

"Why, he is the only showpiece we have in Balston," answered Mrs. Mason—"an old darkey who used to be a slave when he was a child before the war. He lives in a cabin down the road a piece with his little girl—his wife died years ago—and picks up a living doing odd jobs here and there. But he plays the violin and sings all the old plantation songs, and the way he dances jigs and breakdowns is wonderful. The summer boarders are always having him up to the hotel to amuse them. He's generally round here every two or three days to see if I have anything for him to do, but I haven't seen him now for nearly a week. Suppose I call him in sometime while you're here? I reckon you might enjoy his music firstrate."

Mrs. Hildreth assented indifferently, and then forgot all about it, but a few mornings later, as she sat in the living room, looking mournfully out at the misty skies, Mrs. Mason suddenly appeared with a coal black individual, whom she introduced as "Uncle Toby."

"I told Joe to stop at the cabin this morning and tell Uncle Toby to call round with his violin," she said, "and he's just this minute come. I knew it was too wet for you to go out, and I reckoned he might amuse you for an hour or so." Then she bustled off to her work, leaving the two together.

Mrs. Hildreth roused herself from her gloomy thoughts, and gazed curiously at her

COTNER UNIVERSITY Bethany (Lincoln), Nebr.

COLLEGE OF ARTS, four courses, four years each. Classical, Sacred, Literature, Philosophical, Collegiate, Normal, leading to A. B.—COLLEGE OF MEDICINE—DEPARTMENTS of Sacred Literature and Education. Combine six year course leading to degrees A. B. and M. D. Grants State Certificates, grade and life. SCHOOLS of Music, Business, Oratory, Art. ACADEMY accredited by state.

Beautiful location. Connected with Lincoln by electric line. New gymnasium. New heating plant building. First Semester opens September 7th, 1908. Second Semester opens January 26th, 1909. Address. W. P. AYLSWORTH, Chancellor.

"IN THE HEART OF THE BLUE GRASS."

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

Attend Transylvania University. A standard institution with elective courses, modern conveniences, scholarly surroundings, fine moral influences. Expenses reasonable. Students from twenty-seven states and seven foreign countries. First term begins September 14th, 1908. Write for catalog to-day.

President' Transylvania University, Lexington,

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

Elegant buildings, over one hundred rooms. Preparing to erect $50,000.00 worth more of buildings.

Campus, eighty-six acres. Creeks, springs, native forests.

Cost for tuition alone $5.00 per month; for board alone $12.00 per month; for board and tuition in College home $16.00 per month. Four Universities are represented in the Faculty.

The College gives Ministerial, Classical, Philosophical, and Scientific Courses.

The school has neither hazing, nor secret fraternities; does not desire to enroll boys and young men who are unwilling to stand for clean habits and worthy characters.

Correspondence invited. Address J. HOPWOOD, Lynchburg, Va.

visitor. He was very tall and very black, dressed in a varied assortment of ill-fitting, but scrupulously clean and well-patched garments, and might have been any age from forty to sixty.

"So you are Uncle Toby?" said she.

"Yes, Mis'," answered the apparition, as he pulled his woolly forelock, and returned her gaze with a pair of great, solemn eyes. "Mis' Mason she done sent word you might like to have me come up and sing some ob de ole songs."

"Yes, Uncle Toby, sing; perhaps you can make me forget my trouble for awhile," she returned.

The negro gazed at her with a strange look on his weather-beaten face, but made no reply. He tuned his violin, and, after a few minor strains, began a wild, sad plantation song that made the very heart-strings of his listener quiver with agony.

"Not that!" she broke in. "Sing something brighter and livelier."

But though he went from "Ellie Rhee" and "Swanee River" clear through to "Old Jim Crow," there was the same undercurrent of sadness running through the music, and at last Mrs. Hildreth could endure no more.

"Try a breakdown, Uncle Toby," she said. "Mrs. Mason says you can dance all the old jigs."

Laying down his violin, the old darky rose to his feet, and starting a merry whistle, began an intricate jug full of twists, that made his audience's head fairly dizzy. For a while she watched the nimble feet, then, suddenly looking up, saw the tears streaming down the old man's face.

"Why, sit down, Uncle Toby," she cried; "you're tired out. Does it always bring the tears when you dance?"

"No, Mis' Hildreth," he returned; "never befo'. But I ain't feelin' real chipper to-day. My little gal, she ben sick quite a spell wid de fever, and las' night she died. She's down thar all alone in de cabin now, and 'pears like I can't sing and dance nohow to-day."

Mrs. Hildreth sprang to her feet in dismay. "Why didn't you tell me? What made you try to dance?" she demanded.

"I can't be doin' no mo' for little Lucy now, honey, and I'se got to earn what I can for to bury her," returned Uncle Toby mournfully.

"And you've been singing and dancing for me, while your heart was breaking!" and forgetting the rain, her own sorrows, everything else, she hurried down to the cabin, by the side of the stricken father.

In a few hours everything was done that was possible, and Uncle Toby was bidden to have no more thought of future expenses. Late in the afternoon Mrs. Hildreth stood for a moment beside the body of the dead girl, and watched the father as the big, toil-worn hand lovingly smoothed the cold forehead.

"Has you any chillen, Mis' Hildreth?" he asked sadly.

"Yes, one daughter," she answered, after a moment's hesitation, in a choked voice.

"I'se glad for you," said the old man; "and don' never do nothin' to her is you'll be sorry for when the Lord takes her away. I cuffed little Lucy once 'cause she done kep pesterin' me with questions when I was a-tryin' to tune the fiddle"—and the father's voice broke as he laid his face down on the pillow beside his dead. "Toby wouldn't hit his baby no mo'," he sobbed, while the listener laid her hand gently on the bowed head for an instant, and then stole quietly out.

She went straight to her room at Mrs. Mason's, and, drawing out her writing desk, first addressed an envelope. That, perhaps, was the hardest of all, and her face contracted for a moment as she looked at what she had written: "Mrs. George C. Raymond, No. 26 Clifford Street, Boston, Mass."

She then began her letter, and the pen fairly flew over the paper, while ever before her seemed the vision of that father, in his lonely cabin, vainly mourning that once in a fit of anger he had struck his baby.

"I said I had rather see you dead, little Dorothy," she continued, "but I don't mean it, nor the other bitter things I wrote. I was hurt and disappointed because I couldn't see you in the grand place I had planned for you. Can you forgive me for sending back your dear little letter, and will George forget the hard, unjust things I wrote him? Mother takes it all back; she is so sorry and miserable, and she wants her little girl so much. Will you be there Saturday to meet me in the old home, you and George, both my children, to stay, during the few years I have to live, with your loving mother?"

Late as it was, she found some one to send her letter so that it should go by the first mail in the morning, and then, for the first time in long, weary weeks she closed her tired eyes and slept a peaceful, dreamless sleep.—Adeline C. Topham, in Good Housekeeping.

Tell Your Wife.

If you are in any trouble or quandary, tell your wife—that is, if you have one—all about it at once. Ten to one, her invention will solve your difficulty sooner than all your logic. The wit of woman has been praised, but her instincts are far quicker and keener than her reason. Counsel with your wife or mother or sister, and be assured light will flash upon your darkness. Women are too commonly adjudged as verdant in all but purely womanish affairs. No philosophical student of the sex thus judges them. Their intuitions, or insights, are the most subtle.

In counselling a man to tell his wife, we would go farther, and advise him to keep none of his affairs a secret from her. Many a home has been happily saved, and many a fortune retrieved, by a man's full confidence in his "better half." Woman is far more a seer and prophet than man, if she be given a fair chance.

As a general rule, wives confide the minutest of their plans and thoughts to their husbands, having no involvements to screen from them. Why not reciprocate, if but for the pleasure of meeting confidence with confidence? We are certain that no man succeeds so well in the world as he who, taking a partner for life, makes her the partner of his purposes and hopes. What is wrong of his impulse or judgment, she will check and set right with her almost universally right instincts.

"Helpmeet" has no insignificant title as applied to man's companion. She is a helpmeet to him in every darkness, difficulty and sorrow of life. And what she most craves and most deserves is confidence—without which love is never free from shadow.—Purity Advocate.

Busy People's Bible Course

at home, leading to graduation. Use your spare time. Terms easy. Circulars free. Write Pres. Chas. J. Burton, Ph. B., Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

ESTEY

ORGANS AND PIANOS

—THEY EXCEL—

In every quality necessary to make A PERFECT INSTRUMENT. Call or send for catalogues and full particulars.

THE ESTEY CO.,
1116 Olive St. - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

AULT & WIBORG

COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS OF PRINTING INKS

CINCINNATI, NEW YORK,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS.

This Paper Printed with Ault & Wiborg Ink

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING
IN THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS
Two Cents per word, per insertion.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY
CANTON, MO.

A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.
Send for free illustrated Catalog.
Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

BUTLER COLLEGE
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

This is the story of the Cat-that-is-not-Felix. I told you about my visit out at Chas. Scearce's farm, where the shower for Drusie started. Mrs. Scearce furnished 100 drops, and Mrs. Anna Bland the same, and Mrs. W. W. Willmott 50. These with the Johnsons', made 300 drops at a penny each. A very respectable sprinkle on the old farm! While I was out there, clouds for our missionary began to drift that way from fourteen different states. There were not many clouds from each state, but I was proud to see how widespread was the interest in the Advance Society work.

You understand that the day set for the Ten Cent Shower for Drusie is August 12. We welcome the preliminary downpour, because it makes it easier for it to rain afterwards, when it begins early. Every drop you send now, will start a drop. If we could just raise enough to support our missionary in China all by ourselves, wouldn't it be something for the Av. S. to be proud of? Tell your friends about it; get them to send 10 cents for our Shower; dwell on the fact that every penny goes to Drusie; do a lot of thundering, and let's make it rain hard!

E. S. F., Washington, D. C.: "I am charmed with the idea of a dime shower for Drusie—how does that young lady feel, to be so familiarly called by so many? I am not an Av. S. member, and have never sent before, but the shower has struck me. I hope it will just pour by August 12. I send two dimes for the shower."

George Gowen, Flat Creek, Tenn.: "I enjoy the Av. S. work in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I am Drusie Malott's old pastor, and am, in a measure, responsible for her missionary zeal. I know Paul Moore and we have recently talked of the Av. S. work."

Alta, Thelma and Ruth Dillman, Long Beach, Cal.: "We are not members of the Av. S., but are proud of our little missionary, and send three dimes for the shower. Perhaps we will send more by August 12. Best wishes to the Av. S. and its missionary."

Mrs. Ella Miller, Emporia, Kan.: "As I want to be included in Drusie's shower, I send a dime."

C. W. Evons, Millersville, Ark.: "I notice the move to get Missionary Drusie a winter dress. If her climate was like this, she would rather have fans, umbrellas and ice cream; but here is a dollar for any purpose, with my prayer and best wishes to the Av. S. Success to you all!"

Dorothy Brown, Danville, Ill.: "I am sending my fourteenth quarterly Av. S. report. We are having a great meeting with the Scoville evangelists (June 16). There are over 600 converts to date. My sister, Myrtle, was baptized two weeks ago. Sunday night there must have been 4,000 in the tabernacle. Although school is out, I don't seem to have any more time than I did before, because I have so many things on my mind at once. Earl passed the examination which admits him to the high school."

Myrtle Brown: "I am sending my sixth quarterly report, and am on the seventh week of my seventh. I am 11 years old and will be in the seventh grade when school opens. There have been over 600 additions since this meeting began. I was one of them."

Earl R. Brown: "We have moved again, so our address is 713 Franklin street. I am sending my eighth quarterly report. I passed my examination. Dorothy is going to try it next September."

Harry Buckley (in Christian love), Lawrenceburg, Ky.: "I have just read of the 10-cent shower idea, and think it a good one, so here's the drop. I am glad to note that the Bentonville church is having additions right along. I send my regards to Col. Felix."

Mrs. A. H. Street, Tuscaloosa, Ala.: "Here is a drop in Drusie's shower. I hope it will prove a regular Arkansas downpour."

Mrs. Myrtle Jacob, Kalona, Iowa: "Ever since Willie began keeping the Av. S. rules his little sister has wanted to 'be an Av. S. girl 'long with Willie.' I thought her too young to begin, but she learned her quotations and seemed to enjoy the work as much as he whenever they were together. She is 5 July 11, so I let her begin to keep the rules. She feels her importance, and insists on 'writing a letter like Willie does.' I inclose it, knowing your love for little people. We want to be one of the wee drops in Drusie's shower, and send 10 cents for each of us. I hope the shower will prove a deluge and keep our missionary's ark floating a long time."

And here is a letter from Willie's sister, printed by her own hand just before her birthday: "May I be an Av. S. girl along with Willie? I will be 5 next Saturday. Clarissa Edith Jacob." I enjoyed this letter fully as much as the one that said I was "certainly good-looking." That was a high compliment of Clarissa's mother, that she knows I love little people. I love big people just as much as they will let me, but they are mighty trying at times.

Mrs. Nellie Kirk, Woodward, Okla.: "A shower for Drusie? What a delightful idea! I send four drops, one for each of us. I hope it will be more than a shower; I would like for it to be a regular gully-washer. I know every drop will be well used. I rejoice at the good work of the Av. S. May the blessings of God rest upon you all, filling your hearts with encouragement in his work."

Edith M. Slightam, Spokane, Wash.: "$2 to apply on Drusie's winter clothes."

New York City, from A Friend: "Enclosed find $2 for Drusie Malott."

Mrs. Clara E. Sandberg, Red Wing, Minn.: My niece Edna, my son Carl and myself each send a drop for Drusie's shower, and best wishes to the Av. S."

Ruth Fay McDowell, Center, Mo.: "I am 8 years old. I have six cats. One is yellow like Felix, only much prettier. I send seven dimes to Drusie's shower." (I suppose one is for you and the others for your pretty cats?)

Speaking of cats (please notice my digni-

Refreshing Sleep

Comes After a Bath with warm water and Glenn's Sulphur Soap. It allays irritation and leaves the skin cool, soothed and refreshed. Used just before retiring induces quiet and restful sleep. Always insist on

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

All druggists keep it.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

THE TEACHER TRAINING HANDBOOK

By MARION STEVENSON

YOU WANT IT

1. Because it is the most complete teacher-training book published.
2. Because it will teach your class how to study the Bible.
3. Because it teaches the class the Bible rather than something about the Bible.
4. Because it makes the most thorough work possible.
5. Because it has been adopted as a college text book.
6. Because it gives a true view of Old and New Testament History.
7. Because it is the only teacher-training book published which gives New Testament Institutions.
8. Because it gives a working knowledge of Bible Geography.
9. Because it is up to date on Bible School organization, and pedagogy.
10. Because it received the unanimous approval of the International Committee.

Manilla binding, 224 pages.
Single copy, 30c, prepaid. Five or more copies, not prepaid, 25c each.
Limp cloth, 40c each.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905

A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.

For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

fied silence in regard to the slur at Felix' good looks) reminds me that I was about to tell you the story of the Cat-that-is-not-Felix. Once upon a time, in fact, the very time I was telling you about, the time of my visit to my home town, Plattsburg, Mo., after spending almost three years in Arkansas, I went on a visit to Plattsburg a few weeks ago. Dear me, what a disreputable sentence I am making! This must be one of the stories that should not begin with "once upon a time." Let me do it all over.

After a visit on the farm we went to Plattsburg, where I had spent most of my life, and which I had not seen for about three years. The family of Rev. R. A. Thompson have rented our house and lot (the yard and garden, too), and they very kindly gave me my old room to stay in while in town—the room in which I first thought out the Advance Society idea and in which I wrote the first Av. S. articles and such serials as the "Red Box Clew." It was a pleasant experience, meeting people who seemed very glad to see me (people who never thought of speaking to me when I lived there), and noting the same broken planks in the sidewalk to remind me of other days. It is the Thompson family who own and maintain the Cat-that-is-not-Felix. I was naturally grieved to find any cat but Felix frequenting the walks and porches that used to belong to my cat, and it was sad to reflect that Felix was left to mew alone in Arkansas, while the Cat-that-is-not-Felix strutted and washed his face in my ancestral halls. This interloper would have nothing to do with me. Whether he fancied that I was going to move back and thus end his reign (I would certainly end it if I did move back, for he is only a maltese cat, such as you see everywhere; just one of those pretty cats such as Ruth Fay was talking about, nothing to him but just his looks—let me out of this parenthesis and I will be good)—!

My room—I mean the room that used to be mine—has a little balcony of its own, and I would sit out there at night thinking of the times when Felix used it, perched upon the bannister to keep me company. The first night the Cat-that-is-not-Felix crouched at the end of the walk and glared at me, and yowled and yowled, deaf to my most persuasive "kittie, kittie, kittie!" The next night, after the family had gone to bed, I sought my balcony to look at the familiar weeds along the street and enjoy the air of home. But I had hardly started my train of reminiscence before the Cat-that-is-not-Felix appeared on the scene. He had a companion. They crept half way up the walk and set up the most cat-like duet I ever heard. One growled like a dog, while the other spat and cleared his throat and went like a condensed tornado through a fine-tooth comb. They pretended to be hostile to each other, but that was merely an excuse to intimidate me. After half an hour's hard work the companion went away, seeing nothing in it for him, but the Cat-that-is-not-Felix stayed on, yowling at me as if to say, "If you move back here you'll know what to expect!"

The next night I had the same sauce to my reflections, but methought my persecutor was growing weaker in his demonstrations. He was saving his voice, but still he glided like a shadow up and down the far end of the walk, stretching his neck and waving his maltese tail. The last night of my stay the Cat-that-is-not-Felix did not show up. The fight had been too unequal for him. Had he been a wiser cat—had he been Felix, for instance—he would have known that no antagonist is so immovable as a visitor who stays too long.

There is another thing I must tell you of my visit. Some of my neighbors referred to various sayings of mine in the Av. S. letters, showing they were well posted. I was highly gratified to think that old friends, who had so long known me personally, read my writings while I was too far away to ask them if they were doing so. But my self-satisfaction vanished when I discovered that just one lady (Mrs. A. K. Porter) reads the Av. S. page in her part of town for the balance of the street. When she finds something of particular interest she tells the others about it, and thus they know what is going on without having to lose time in reading for themselves.

It was a pleasant incident when Mrs. John Grayson sent me a dollar for Drusie's shower by a little orphan girl whom she has taken to raise.

We are now back at Bentonville. Felix saw me from our neighbor's yard. There were two wire fences between, but he came flying over those fences like a bird, looking glad. He didn't say he was glad; that is not his way. He let me rub his back awhile, then walked sedately off and sat by himself to gloat over the pleasure of our being back home. The-cat-that-is-Felix seldom gives people the satisfaction of knowing when he is happy. He keeps it to himself. Some people are that way; many people are. They don't want to make you feel good by letting you see that you have pleased them. The only way I am able to keep on good terms with Felix is to remember all the time that, after all is said and done, he is a cat. Smart he is, and yellow like old gold, but a cat.

In like manner I am able to get along with 'most anybody. For when they are sarcastic and insincere, and faithless to their friends and to the church, and indifferent to the higher interests of life, and patronizing toward poor people and the Advance Society, I say to myself: "After all, they are just human beings." Being human beings, what else can you expect? Happy is he who learns to hope all things from his friends, but to expect nothing.

In regard to Drusie's 10-cent shower, I am hoping a great deal. I will only have one more chance to speak of it before the date—August 12. So don't wait to be reminded, but send now while you are thinking about it. Can we hear from some state not mentioned in this letter? If not, let us hear often from the fourteen here represented.

Bentonville, Ark.

What the Little Shoes Said.

I saw two little dusty shoes
A-standing by the bed;
They suddenly began to talk,
And this is what they said:

"We're just as tired as tired can be;
We've been most everywhere;
And now our little master rests—
It really is not fair.

"He's had his bath, and sweetly sleeps
'Twixt sheets both cool and clean.
While we are left to stand outside;
Now, don't you think it's mean?

"We've carried him from morn till night;
He's quite forgot, that's plain;
While here we watch and wait and wait,
Till morning comes again.

"And then he'll tramp and tramp and tramp
The livelong summer day;
Now this is what we'd like to do—
Just carry him away

"Where he could never go to bed,
But stay up all the night,
Unwashed and covered o'er with dust—
Indeed, 'twould serve him right!"

—Our Little Men and Women.

Went Home on a Promise.

The saintly Miss Frances Ridley Havergal literally lived and moved in the word of God. It was her constant solace, delight and inspiration.

It is related of her that on the last day of her life she asked a friend to read to her the forty-second chapter of Isaiah.

When the friend read the sixth verse, "I, the Lord, have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee," Miss Havergal stopped her.

"Called—held—kept—use," she whispered. "Well, I will just go home on that."

And she did "go home on that," as on a celestial chariot, and the home-going was a triumph, with an abundant entrance into the city of God. What word of God have you to go home on?—Epworth Herald.

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS

in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them

PLEASE MENTION THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

A Christian Home and High Grade College for Girls and Young Women

College Preparatory, Full College and Special Courses. Faculty of experienced specialists. Superior advantages in Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science and Physical Training. If you want good care, culture, thoroughness and satisfactory results, investigate.

For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. W. T. MOORE, President.

200 College Place, Columbia, Mo.

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

DES MOINES IOWA

A well-equipped co-educational school, located in the Capital City of Iowa. Enrollment this year exceeds 1,850. Ten well-equipped University Buildings. More than one hundred trained teachers in the faculty. Excellent Library facilities.

COLLEGES AND SCHOOLS; Liberal Arts, Bible, Law, Medical, Music, Education, High School.

THE COLLEGE OF EDUCATION offers courses for teachers in all departments of our public schools from the kindergarten to the high school, including courses for supervisors of music and drawing.

THE UNIVERSITY HIGH SCHOOL offers the usual preparatory courses, and thorough courses in all business subjects, including shorthand and typewriting.

Send for announcement of department in which you are interested.

SUMMER TERM OPENS JUNE 20. FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 14.

VOLUME XLV. NUMBER 31.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, JULY 30, 1908.

"Now simmer blinks on flowery braes,
And o'er the crystal streamlet plays."

The Christian-Evangelist.

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER, B. B. TYLER, W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 963
Editorial—
Call Out the Men..... 964
Are We a Brotherhood?..... 964
Perfunctory and Real Enthusiasm. 965
Notes and Comments..... 965
Current Religious Thought..... 966
Editor's Easy Chair..... 967
Contributed Articles—
The Plea of the Disciples of Christ 968
Gleanings from the International Sunday-school Convention 969
The Unshepherded Church and Ministerial Supply. G. B. Van Arsdall 970
The Glory of Young Men. S. R. Reynolds 972
Evangelists and Foreign Missions. Laura Delany Garst 972
God's Out-of-Doors. Rochester Irwin 972
Our Budget 973
Another Diamond Anniversary 976
The Adult Bible Class Movement.. 977
Australia and the Centennial..... 978
People's Forum 979
News from Many Fields..... 980
Evangelistic 982
Midweek Prayer-meeting 983
Sunday-school 983
Christian Endeavor 984
Obituaries 985
The Home Department 986

J. H. Garrison, President.
W. W. Dowling, V. Pres't. W. Daviess Pittman, Bus. Mgr. Reuben Butchart, Sec.-Treas.

Christian Publishing Company
2712 PINE STREET - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

7/30/08.

To Our Subscribers,
Dear Friends:--

I desire to call your attention to two matters, both of which are, or ought to be, of much importance to you.

First. You will observe the re-appearance of the Tissot Bible Picture advertisement, on page 992 of this issue, which is intended to remind you that this exceptional offer to secure these world famous pictures, is still open for acceptance,--just how long it will be open, we cannot say, but it is quite likely that the same will be withdrawn shortly, as several letters from the publishers of these pictures would indicate this.

Second. In the matter of our mid-summer slaughter sale of books, we have not reprinted the list in this issue, although the offer to sell the books at a 30% discount is still open. Our space does not permit publishing this list of books in each issue, but the offer to sell the books at this discount remains open for acceptance until notice of the withdrawal of the same is given through the medium of a communication similar to this one. We will probably publish the list again next week, and if you are interested, we would respectfully suggest that you save the list to look over, with a view to purchasing such books as you desire, and again let us urge prompt action.

Sincerely,

W. Daviess Pittman

Business Manager.

Does Your Church
or Bible School Need

NEW SONG BOOKS?

We are headquarters for Church Hymnals
and Song Books
for Bible Schools

A NEW CATALOGUE SENT ON APPLICATION

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, JULY 30, 1908. Number 31.

Current Events

Japanese Exclusion.

The Japanese and Korean Exclusion League, as a part of a campaign the nature of which is sufficiently indicated by the name of the organization, has issued a pamphlet containing statistics regarding the immigration of these races into the United States and the occupations in which they are engaged. By the official records it appears that the total immigration of Japanese into the United States up to date has been 115,170. During the past five years the number of immigrants entering annually has been practically stationary, with a slight tendency to diminish. It is believed that the actual number is somewhat in excess of the number officially reported, since a good many have undoubtedly come in from Hawaii and from Mexico surreptitiously. The list of occupations which they have "invaded" includes sixty-three callings, most, though not all, of which are of a more or less menial character. It is true that the dangers and disadvantages, such as they are, which are incident to this inflow of Asiatic population are very largely confined to the Pacific coast, and those of us who do not live in that region must bear in mind that a problem which seems very trivial to us may be very important there. Nevertheless, we have never been able to escape the opinion that the anti-Chinese and anti-Japanese agitators are frightened much more than they are hurt by the alleged in-rush of Orientals to the cities and states of the western coast. A series of tables is given showing the number of Japanese that there would be in every important city in the United States if every city had the same percentage of Japanese as San Francisco. This may help us in a measure to appreciate the conditions which exist in San Francisco, but it does not by any means show that we are confronted by a national peril. For example, it is stated that the city of New York would have 89,000 Japanese among its nearly 4,000,000 if the proportion were the same as in San Francisco. Considering the number of low-class foreigners which New York already harbors—hundreds of thousands of immigrants quite as incapable of being assimilated into the general body of our American population as are the Japanese—it may be questioned whether New York would not be the gainer if she could take in the number of Japanese mentioned in exchange for an equal number of her own polyglot population.

Concrete Boats.

Re-inforced concrete, that magic building material which has been applied to such a wide variety of uses, from skyscrapers to chicken-houses and from sewer-pipes to million-dollar dams, has been utilized by the Italian government in a rather unexepected manner. They are using it for building ships. Perhaps the suggestion seems no more strange to us than did the idea of building boats of iron to those to whom that project was first proposed. At any rate, the thing is being done. The first boats of this type were constructed about two years ago and after a thorough trial they have been found satisfactory and some larger ones are being built on the same general lines. The method has not yet been applied to the construction of battleships or liners, and probably never will be. The ships built so far have been barges and colliers intended for use in connection with the navy. The natural fear was that such vessels would not be able to withstand the shocks and jars incident to the life of a ship on the high sea, and that any slight collision might crack it open. The test on this point was made by ramming the concrete boat with a heavy vessel equipped with a steel ram. The concrete boat stood the shock without damage.

Ancient History.

There has been another big find in ancient Egyptian manuscripts on papyrus. The newspaper accounts of the discovery give but scanty details, though they indicate that the documents seem to be chiefly private letters and unofficial communications such as may be expected to throw some new light on the private and social life of those times. There has been a great scarcity of this important class of material in regard to all of the ancient civilizations. We have many records of wars. We have inscriptions giving us the names and dates of kings. But naturally the trivial matters of the day, if written at all—which was relatively improbable in an age which was much less addicted to writing on slight provocation than our own age is—would not be carved on enduring granite, or written upon hardbaked bricks, or even inscribed upon expensive parchment. It would rather be written upon the flimsy papyrus of the Egyptians or on the wax tablets of the Romans, both highly perishable materials. What would we not give for something corresponding to the advertising section of a ten-cent magazine of three thousand years ago! What a flood of new light would be cast upon the life of the ancient world if we could find a copy of the fashion magazine of the period, or a few numbers of the ladies' home journal of that day, but most of all, a good collection of the advertisements of the articles most currently used! The advertising pages of the papers and magazines of today really give the commercial and domestic history of our own time. Let us hope that the historian of the future will be duly grateful for the abundance of material which is left to him. Meanwhile the present student of ancient life must do the best he can with an occasional broken handful of crumbling papyrus whereon it has been the sport of fortune to preserve for three thousand years the record of deeds which were too trivial to be really worth recording at the time, but which have been rendered important by the lapse of ages.

Flying Machines.

Aerial navigation is coming. Darius Green only lived ahead of his age and was not the fool he was supposed to be. The Wright Brothers have been doing marvelous things, and have apparently about reached the point where they are willing to abandon the policy of secrecy which they have hitherto maintained. Count Zeppelin, of Germany, has gotten some results sufficiently definite to warrant Emperor William in saying that an aerial equipment must be added to the military establishment. Zeppelin's machine, unlike the Wrights', is a balloon; that is, it depends upon gas and not upon the aeroplane principle to keep it up. In recent tests, Zeppelin's airship made an extensive circuit over northern Switzerland, carrying thirteen passengers over mountains and lakes at a speed running up to fifty-five miles an hour and returned to the starting-place after being in the air twelve hours. The occupants of the airship, if they were not too much frightened to notice the scenery, must have enjoyed the most wonderful view of natural beauties that was ever vouchsafed to the eye of man in the course of their trip over the Falls of the Rhine, the lakes of Lucerne, Constance and Zug and the intervening mountains.

Editorial

Call Out the Men.

In every great battle a wise general holds in reserve a body of soldiers which he can throw into the breach at any given point, and by which the tide of battle is often turned at a critical time. In our religious warfare, as a religious movement, we have, by degrees, mobilized our forces until we have a far more efficient army than we had a few decades ago. The recent Men's Movement, however, is an effort to call out the reserves preparatory to a great decisive forward movement.

One of the most remarkable signs of our times is the extraordinary interest that is being awakened in the Men's Movement, or in the formation of local and denominational brotherhoods, in the various religious bodies, looking to more effective service. Among the first to feel the need of this, and to agitate it, the Disciples of Christ are hardly, as yet, abreast of other religious bodies in the organization of their men for aggressive work. What is the meaning of this new interest in the men of our churches? Is it not in this, that the church has come to a clearer consciousness of the greatness of its task and the urgency of this task than ever before? This fresh realization of the magnitude and urgency of its work would naturally cause the Church to look about to see what unused elements of strength it might bring into active service at a time like this. And lo, here are the men of our churches—strong, clear-headed, far-seeing business and professional men, mechanics and artisans—who have been only touching Christianity with the tips of their fingers, as it were, because they have not been asked, or at least organized, to do much more! The question then arose, Why not mobilize this hitherto unused force, not only for the local work in their respective churches, but in behalf of the general enterprises on which the success of the body as a whole depends?

If we are right, then, in our interpretation of the significance of this movement, it means that the Church has come into an era of greater things, in which it shall do business for the Lord on a much larger scale than heretofore. We are coming to see that our business men, our men of affairs, of large interests, have not taken a deeper interest in Christianity because they have been given no great tasks to do which comport with the scale on which they are carrying forward their own private enterprises. We are beginning to see that if the Church will begin in earnest to do the work which its Master expects it to do, and grapples with its real foes, as he has commanded it to do, it will, in so doing, appeal to the heroic element in human nature, and especially in men's nature, and will call them into more active service. We have not planned largely enough to interest the men of our churches, and we have not given them enough to do, nor made them feel the burden of our great enterprises sufficiently to enlist their interest and energy. We are now seeking to remedy this fault, and to mobilize the men of our churches as the strong right arm of the Church in this mighty conflict with the forces of evil.

At the closing session of our Missouri state convention, which was "Brotherhood evening," one of the most imposing spectacles and significant events in connection with any of our conventions was the standing together of four or five hundred men, with linked hands and hearts, pledging themselves to the principles of brotherhood, viz.: loyalty to the principles of our religious movement, mutual helpfulness, and the support of every worthy enterprise among us, looking to the conquest of the world for Christ. At that meeting a committee was authorized to urge the formation of local organizations of men in the various churches, to be known as Brotherhoods, for the purpose of enlisting the men in more active service in their local churches, and in acquainting them with the nature and needs of our general enterprises, and to stand together in their respective communities for civic righteousness and for mutual helpfulness. This committee has been appointed, and will, as soon as possible, begin an active propaganda in carrying on its work. We bespeak in its behalf the co-operation of the churches in the state. We trust, also, that the churches throughout the United States will enter into this movement, so that at New Orleans these brotherhoods may organize a National Men's Movement, which shall mean much for unity among ourselves and the advancement of the cause we plead.

Are We a Brotherhood?

Some time ago it was suggested by one of our writers that under certain conditions we might become a "DISAPPEARING BROTHERHOOD." If we are to believe the suggestions which are just now made in certain quarters, it would seem that we never were a "brotherhood," and consequently the fears which were excited that we might "disappear" were entirely groundless. This would certainly be the case if the doctrine of extreme individuality should be accepted. It is difficult to see how we could then sing any longer that favorite old hymn:

> "Blest be the tie that binds
> Our hearts in Christian love;
> The fellowship of kindred minds
> Is like to that above."

This and other hymns of the same kind ought very soon to go out of fashion, while even the name of "church" need not trouble us any further, as practically there is no church, but only individuals and individual congregations. For a long time some have been troubled about our being called a "denomination," and in order to avoid that ugly word, when referring to the Disciples of Christ, the word "brotherhood" has been frequently used. But now it seems we are to be deprived of this term, and consequently we shall have to fall back upon some new word, or phrase, in order to break the monotony of using the phrase "Disciples of Christ," or "Christian Church."

But, seriously, this new contention, that every man has a right to start a missionary society, a newspaper, a publishing house, or any other enterprise that he may think advantageous to the cause of Christ, is little short of religious anarchy, if, indeed, it is not that very thing. To use an old expression, but one that is very forcible just here, it is individuality "gone to seed." Now, within certain limitations, individuality must be maintained. But these limitations do not allow the kind of anarchy to which we have referred. A brotherhood means something more than a condition where every man is for himself. Nor is it necessary, in a scriptural brotherhood, to contend for ecclesiasticism in the modern sense of that term. There is undoubtedly an organization, or, perhaps what is better, an organism, recognized in the New Testament as the Church of God. In the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians, Paul likens this church to the human body; and, while he differentiates the members of that body, he at the same time so co-ordinates these members as that all of them are necessary to complete the body, and all must work together harmoniously in order that the whole body may perform its proper function. Furthermore, he argues that each individual member must not complain because some other member may occupy a more prominent position. The hand and the foot alike are useful, and when each member is working in its proper place everything will be harmonious throughout the whole body. Individualism is recognized, but this individualism is co-ordinated so that every part of the body contributes to the efficiency of the whole. Precisely so will it be when all individual members and individual churches are working together in their proper places. Variety is everywhere recognized in nature, and should be in grace, but variety must be legitimate. It is only when this variety is in the right place and performing its proper function that it contributes to the efficiency of the whole body; or even to the whole of nature. The mistake that some men make, is, in supposing that every man can live to himself; but this is exactly what the apostle says no one can do. In spite of even selfishness, which is the foundation of extreme individuality, there is a wide sphere wherein every one must subordinate many of his individual rights, to say nothing of his conveniences, to the well-being of those with whom he is, nolens volens, associated. Of course, if there were no one else to be considered but the individual man, then he might have all the liberty of Alexander Selkirk on the island where there was "none his rights to dispute."

Our contention is, that in matters wherein the whole brotherhood is interested, the whole brotherhood should be consulted as far as this is practicable; and in carrying on our work it is necessary for us to co-operate, by bringing our individual contributions into some concrete form, such as is expressed in our general societies. It is true that these are entirely voluntary, but they are no less worthy of our support because they exercise no ecclesiastical authority in regulating faith and practice. They have had their growth out of particular needs, and to a large extent, at least, by the consent of our brotherhood with respect to the special ends for which they were organized. Undoubtedly they need to be guarded so as to keep them within their proper spheres. But we utterly deny the right or duty of carrying our individualism to such an extent as to allow the organization of rival societies while the present societies are performing their legitimate functions. The fact is, the claim which has been made would justify all the sects in Christendom, since an extreme individualism is the very thing on which these sects are founded.

Perfunctory and Real Enthusiasm.

We notice that one of the preachers of Kansas City has been animadverting upon the enthusiasm manifested at the recent national conventions, at the same time suggesting that this amount of enthusiasm could not be aroused for the King of kings and Lord of lords. The preacher in question expressed his regret that men will go almost wild over a political leader while on the next Sunday they will show little or no enthusiasm for Christ. This, at first view, looks a little strange, and perhaps most people will join in the regret expressed by the Kansas City preacher. We confess, however, that we are heartily glad that enthusiasm for Christ does not take on the demonstrative form manifested in the recent conventions. In the first place, that enthusiasm was largely manufactured. It was a set-up job; it belonged to the play. From one point of view it was extremely foolish, and no one who is at all acquainted with the tricks of politicians would be deceived by any such perfunctory performance. Undoubtedly enthusiasm for Christ is very much needed in many cases, and when the thing is real it is to be highly commended. But Christianity does not live on outward manifestations. The kingdom of God does not come by observation, nor is it meat and drink. It is joy and peace in the Holy Spirit. And the enthusiasm which is kindled by the Spirit of God is usually of a very quiet kind. It is earnest; it is all-absorbing; but it is quiet and restful in its manifestation. It is no less powerful on that account. All real power moves in silent courses. Noise is a sign of weakness. It is not the thunder, but the lightning, that kills.

Christianity needs no such demonstrations as those that characterized the recent national conventions. It needs the sweet, vivifying influence of spiritual power. It needs much of the influence of meditation at the eventide and in the closet. Jesus himself was accustomed to go into the mountain, apart from the multitude, where he spent hours in prayer, filling himself with power for the conflict in the valleys beneath and the great cities which he visited. Even the miracles which he wrought were of a quiet, unobtrusive kind. He never lent himself to spectacular demonstrations. Even when the people followed him in great multitudes and would have crowned him King of the Jews, he silently slipped away from them and sought some quiet retreat, leaving no word of approbation of the demonstration that had been made.

Perhaps there is nothing in the life of Jesus more distinctly seen, and upon the whole more remarkable, than the absence of spectacular manifestations in all he said and did. Indeed, the very charm of his life is in the sunshine which vivifies, rather than in any decided demonstration in either word or deed. Christianity undoubtedly needs more enthusiasm, but this enthusiasm should be a quiet flame that continues to burn, rather than a flash or some great upheaval such as shows itself when men are seeking to glorify human character or political events. The human may coruscate, but the divine shines on, a steady light. It would be unfortunate for Christianity if we could have any such demonstrations as are manifested in our great political convocations. The very fact that these demonstrations can take place is proof that they appeal simply to the flesh, rather than to the Spirit. They are the outgrowth of feelings and principles which have to do mainly with the temporal, and hence they must be evanescent. But the enthusiasm which is real ought not to pass away, and will not, where it has behind it a consecrated, spiritual life. Truly does the apostle say, "The things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal."

Notes and Comments

We are in receipt of a second communication from J. V. Coombs, covering substantially the same ground as that published from him last week. One question which he asks, which has already been answered, we desire to answer again, and still more emphatically, if possible. He says: "The missionary societies have conventions to create zeal, and why should it be thought a divisive movement because we evangelists come together, without any salaried officers or permanent organization?" Now, we will not say that Brother Coombs knows, very well, that neither we nor anybody else considers the coming together of the evangelists and other ministers in a meeting to create enthusiasm for evangelism "a divisive movement"; but we do say that he ought to know it if he does not. Against such a meeting we have said not a word. We have said that we wish the attendance might be 10,000 instead of 5,000. What we did object to was the issuing of partisan circulars, written in a partisan spirit, and calculated to stir up strife among the brethren, and seeking to increase the attendance at these meetings by such motives. That is what we condemn, and it is what the New Testament condemns. Not a word has yet been spoken in defense or explanation of these circulars.

To quibble about the virgin birth of Christ and about the reality of his bodily resurrection, indicates a lack of appreciation of what lies between these two great events—the living of such a life, the performance of such deeds, the teaching of such truths, and the manifestation of such a personality as the world had never seen before or since. Once we come into the presence of this supreme Person, and realize something of the infinite and eternal which manifest themselves in him, we are no longer troubled about the record of his entrance into the world nor the manner of his exit from it.

Because our missionary organizations are voluntary methods adopted by the churches and by the brethren for co-operative work in spreading the gospel, it does not follow that any individual or group of individuals has the right to inaugurate rival organizations or additional organizations for doing the same or similar work, without the approval of that consensus of judgment on the part of the brotherhood that is essential to give validity and success to any organization. Otherwise unity is an empty word, and brotherhood a meaningless term. If we can not secure the same unification of our general interests and the same co-operation by the power of unity—that is, the power of a common faith, a common Lord, a common hope, and a common aim—that can be secured by ecclesiastical legislation, this would certainly be an argument in favor of legislation as against the free and voluntary methods of organization, which we have hitherto approved. In other words, the validity of our claim that the same effectiveness in organization and efficiency in co-operation can be secured by voluntary action among free disciples of Christ, as has been secured by other bodies that claim and exercise legislative authority, is now on trial. It remains to be seen whether we can demonstrate the adequacy of unity and freedom to accomplish that solidarity of action that is essential to effectiveness in carrying on the work which every religious body must do.

It is a great step in advance when we once come to understand that God is using a thousand imperfect agencies to forward his kingdom, from the simple fact that he prefers to use men with all their imperfections, because it makes for their own development, and, on the whole, is probably more effective in winning sinning man to Christ than to use perfect agencies and instrumentalities apart from men, for carrying out his purposes in the world. God works in men and through organizations, just in proportion as they will permit him to do so for the advancement of truth and righteousness. The great problem of life of each individual and every organized group of individuals is to make themselves such vehicles of truth as that God can use them to the largest extent possible in causing his will to be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

Current Religious Thought

The editor of "Association Men" has been trying to find a young man of 20 to 30 years of age in the vicinity of New York who could make a telling gospel address, and failed. He says:

"It is rare to find a non-professional young man who can make an effective gospel appeal. This should not be so with all our training classes, Bible study and shop meetings. We ought to have a force of young men in training to present the gospel with the fire, passion and the power which gains a verdict for Jesus Christ. We do not much need men who can explain or theorize, but men who can effect reformation in character; men who can speak as 'saved men' with personal 'testimony' and an enthusiastic abandon, and these 'saved men' may as well be men of education, character and culture. Should each secretary undertake to find a few such men and put them in a course of training, he could develop a force of missioners which would be a transforming power in the community. There is no better time than now to try out some of these men in the country churches, in the outdoor meetings and in the shops. Having found the man, work with him, and this work would not be amiss for the secretary himself."

Here is some very practical current religious thought. It is from a personal letter from Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, describing his recent experiences in being adrift upon an ice-floe, and his miraculous escape and preservation. The letter was written to Mr. Paul D. Moody, son of the great evangelist, and appeared in the "Record of Christian Work":

"Easter Sunday I was called to a lad with oteomyelitis, about 60 miles to the south. I left overnight alone with my light bone komatik, surgical outfit, etc., and next morning about 9 a. m., while crossing a wide bay, the wind chopped round, broke up the ice and we all fell through.

"I discarded everything, and luckily had on nothing but my football rig, the very clothes I played my last games in at Oxford twenty years ago; they turned up in an old box this winter. Luckily enough I hadn't the conventional rig on, the trousers, boots, gloves, of the stage missionary. I managed to get my sheath knife adrift, pound through the porridgy ice and cut the dog traces. The father of the boy whose leg I was going to remove was drowned this very winter by the dogs tangling him up in the water. I then hitched the knife by its strap to a dog's back and tried to find a pan to bear me. It involved three swims, or rather battery through ice, till I got at one about twelve feet by twenty—a miserable flat snow pan only a foot thick, and that broke in half on a reef as I drifted away to sea. However, I got my dogs out, and was left like Robinson Crusoe, with no expectation of seeing any one again, and monarch of all I could survey, not a human being for twenty miles one way and ten the other, and the open Atlantic outside. I'll give you an account of my experience later. . . . . They weren't such as one would pine for.

"It froze so hard (and I was a sponge of small ice) I had to have a coat. I used my moccasin legs first, but that only covered my shoulders. So I had to stab my dogs. It was gruesome and difficult, and I had two good bites before I had killed three, and it was dark before I had skinned those, which saved the rest and me worse bites, and made a short cloak, stringing them with unraveled harness. What will interest you will be that the first dog I got my coat from was the beauty I named after you. It just went to my heart to call, 'Moody, Moody,' and take him a yard aside and stab him. He was a faithful, loyal, gentle, affectionate, hardworking friend, and he gave his life for me at last. His body helped to make a windbreak, and his legs (with others) I spliced up into a pole for a flag made of my only shirt.

"By a sheer miracle I was picked up next day. Oddly enough I slept twice rocked in the cradle of a pretty considerable sea. It was hot next morning, a lovely sun. . . .

"It has been an invaluable experience. I had a look into old Death's face, which is going to stand me in good stead, I hope. It made one estimate the practical value of faith and how much it had really counted with one.

"One of the hardest things, to a sentimentalist like myself, has been the expression of love and sympathy from all the shore. I've had a lump in my throat many times since I landed, as the strangest of visitors have come and shaken hands, and I've seen the tears roll down their cheeks when they couldn't speak. I tell you, it makes it feel worth while, and makes material honors and possessions take their proper place.

"There seems an odd, unreal feeling still as I'm called to decide what must be done here, there and everywhere; I had got it so fixed in my head that my responsibility in all these things was over. But I'm coming out of the clouds slowly, and spring is opening, and I hope you'll find me keener than ever about reindeer, co-operative stores, institutes, etc., when we meet again. My hands and feet got it badly, for I didn't find out they were frozen when I landed, and so allowed them to put me in "Grandpa's Chair" in a cottage, and I walked into dry clothes and hot tea, without the intermediary snow bath. I'll be wiser next time. . . . . Affectionately yours,

"Wilfred T. Grenfell."

The moderator of the Presbyterian general assembly sees evils in denominationalism. He only goes half way and would have three denominations left. But the admissions he made Lord's day last, when preaching for a Methodist congregation, are worth noticing as coming from the man pre-eminently honored this year by the great Presbyterian body. Dr. Fullerton said, among other things:

"If the church is a divine institution, if it gets its life from Christ, then the church is a unit. I have been told over and over again, and I used to believe it, that Jesus' desire that 'they may all be one' meant spiritual unity. Well, that isn't true. I used to think it was, but it isn't. Why did Jesus pray 'that they may all be one'? Why? 'So that the world may believe.' The world doesn't see spiritual unity. The world sees only material unity.

"It has been said that the denominations were to work out the purposes of God. Yes, just as God always overrules evil, so as to work out his purposes. But you can trace the rise of denominations in Protestant churches to sin—every one of them.

"If the Church of England had been as God meant that the Church of England should have been, there would not have been a Methodist church. I don't mean that this sin was in the split-off always; sometimes it was there, sometimes in the body from which the split-off came. It was always in one place or the other."

Dr. Fullerton said also that between Cumberland Presbyterians and Presbyterians, there would have been no separation in 1810 if the two bodies could only have seen things then as they do now.

"There is an awful evil in so much denominationalism," he continued, "the evil of waste. We are crying out because there are so few ministers. I will tell you, we have got more ministers now than we are treating well. I travel over the West and Southwest, and I see things you don't see. I have seen five or six denominations struggling for existence in a little town that would be well served by two. I have seen such churches unite and grow in every way manyfold.

"I hope to see the day when there will be no more than three great divisions of Protestantism—those of the episcopal form of government, those of the congregational form, and those of the presbyterial form, and then with the utmost comity between the three."

In the July "Forum" there is, besides the usual excellent literary and poetical articles, a striking poem, "The Man-God," from which we make an extract:

Grim is the gulf from which the Present springs:
Far in the future lie the Mountains of the Light;
Dark are the shadows of the World of Things,
Darker the Spirit's night.

Yet, deep within our souls there lies a dream
Which brings its own fulfillment, and that Power vast Which shaped us to the universal scheme
Shall guide us to the last.

We are not that alone which now we are,
But that we are to be; into the sky of Time
Above the verge of Night our being's star
Has scarce begun to climb.

Why Men Go to Church.—The Examiner.

Do they? Last Sunday—or was it the Sunday before?—there was one small boy but no man at all in a certain Protestant Episcopal church in this immediate vicinity. Such at least was the report received on the golf-links near by, and everybody there seemed shocked and grieved.—Harper's Weekly.

How about our readers?

"Editor Pitt, of the 'Religious Herald,' said the other day that it took, ordinarily, two preachers to make the average Baptist take his denominational paper. President Mullins, who was present, said it would take four to get him to read it after he had taken it. Editor Prestridge, of the 'Baptist World,' then added that it would take six to get him to pay for it! They were speaking for Virginia and Kentucky; if they knew our territory, they might have said—well, perhaps we had better not be too personal."—Baptist Commonwealth.

"Broaden your acquaintance to include those whose viewpoint is different from your own."—Congregationalist.

"The same people who found it hard to go to prayer-meeting last winter, because it was cold and wet, are finding it equally difficult now on account of the dryness and the heat. But many go without any study of the meteorological conditions. If the heart is just right, the weather is never very far wrong."—Herald and Presbyter.

"The first Hindoo temple in the United States was recently dedicated in San Francisco, Cal., by Swami Trigunanita, a noted Hindoo priest. He will conduct a school for the study of Sanskrit and also teach the tenets of his religious belief, in addition to the administration of the religious ceremonies of the temple. It is reported that many of the American ladies of social distinction are taking to the religion of the Hindoos, and that, perhaps, most of the financial support of the temple is expected from that source. If the forces of heathenism are thus invading the cities of our country, it would seem imperative to make still greater efforts to preach the pure Word with all the power we can command. The Truth will prevail if we do our part."—Gospel Messenger.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

There is something about the going down of the sun, especially as he sinks to rest over the even plane of a wide expanse of water, that inevitably suggests the closing of a human life. While there is something inexpressibly beautiful in the setting sun, which lends its radiance to cloud and sky and lake, so the scene, in spite of its beauty, would be inexpressibly sad, if we believed we were taking a farewell look at the glorious majesty of the king of day; and that we were to see his face no more forever. But we think of his going down in connection with his rising again on the morrow. If we had the same certainty of conviction that the human life, which ends here in a radiance of heavenly glory, would rise again in a fairer and brighter sky, death would be robbed of its terror, and we should see in it only the close of life's little day to usher in a brighter and eternal to-morrow. Surely there is something in these rising and setting suns to remind us, not only of the brevity of these human lives, but of the fact that the life which we have in Christ does not close with its earthly experiences, but that it will be resumed again in a land where "suns shall rise and set no more."

"Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O, thou who changest not, abide with me."

This is the cry of the human heart as it faces life's setting sun. As the evening shadows thicken, amid the gathering gloom, we long for the presence, and for the guiding hand of him who changes not, but who is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." If he abide with us and we in him, death has no power to break the continuity of that life which is eternal, because it has its springs in Him, who is the source of the life everlasting.

There is no problem in which the soul has deeper concern than that of the life hereafter. It is a question in which every man who thinks feels a deep and abiding interest. This interest deepens as life's experiences make more manifest the brevity of our earthly existence. We have just been reading the vagaries, guesses, and unsatisfactory speculations, of one who has been looking at this problem from the dim light of science. How vague and unsatisfying it all is! Hints and intimations of the life hereafter may indeed be found in nature, and especially in human nature, but not until he came, whose mission was that men might have life, and that more abundantly, was there a sure foundation given for the hope of immortality. In the light of his life and teaching, and his resurrection from the dead, one can utter with certainty the eloquent words of George D. Prentice: "It can not be that the earth is man's only abiding place. It can not be that our life is a mere bubble cast up by eternity to float a moment on its waves and then sink into nothingness. Else why is it that the glorious aspirations which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts are forever wandering unsatisfied? Why is it that all the stars that hold their festival around the midnight throne are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And, finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty presented to our view are taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affections to flow back in Alpine torrents upon our hearts? There is a realm where the rainbow never fades; where the stars will be spread out before us like islands that slumber in the ocean; and where the beautiful beings which now pass before us like shadows will stay in our presence forever."

Concerning the nature of that future life which is revealed to us in Christ, we find a helpful word in one of our exchanges which is copied from a book entitled "What Shall I Believe?" by members of the faculty of Auburn Theological Seminary: "The future life is the great shining hope of the New Testament, though the emphasis is everywhere laid upon the present life. The heavenly life is the unmistakable experience now, and its future blessedness is the perfection and fulfillment of the present promise. While Christ gives us the facts of the future his silence is also most significant. We know from his words that it is a life of personal, conscious blessedness, free from the defeating and crippling influences of sin. "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth or maketh a lie." It is a life of personal recognition and social fellowship, where there shall be no lost good, nor broken ties, nor unhappy isolation. The familiar, homely figures of the family and the Father's house tell us that it is no gloomy realm of disembodied spirits, but a life of love and fellowship and heart recompense. It is a life of growth and of use, a limitless world opening to the understanding, a nobler service than we can now conceive engaging our willing spirits. Of one thing I am sure, it will be better than our fondest hope. It is implied in him who has loved us with an everlasting love. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." All this and more may be safely affirmed of that life which is hidden from mortal view, and which we can know only as it is revealed to us. As stated above, it is sure to exceed all our fondest hopes.

What practical end, it may be asked, is served by this emphasis on the life to come? We answer, it serves a vital purpose in furnishing us the true perspective of the present life, thus enabling us to see earthly things in their true proportion, and to esteem them at their real worth. It is necessary, also, as motive and inspiration for true and worthy living, which very often involves sacrifices and denials, which, if the present life were all, we should be unable to make. How often we are tempted here to choose the easier path, rather than the more difficult and thorny way of duty! Earthly gains and honors loom so largely before the eyes of most of us, as to eclipse spiritual realities of vastly more worth. It is true that the Bible concerns itself more about the duties of this present life than about the life immortal, but there is enough of the future life revealed to stimulate our hopes and to encourage our hearts to bear patiently the ills of the life that now is, and the conflicts which always lie in the path of duty. St. Paul closes his great argument on the resurrection with these words: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." This is the use that we would make of the emphasis we have laid upon the life beyond. If we are to live forever with God, sharing in his life and in the glorious activities of that immortal realm, far beyond these scenes of strife and sorrow and suffering and death, ought we not to give ourselves, with singleness of heart, to the doing of his will, who has called us with such a holy calling, and to be lifted above all our narrow conceits, prejudices, alienations and petty jealousies, into a life of faith, of mutual love and forbearance, and of patient submission to whatever ills may befall us in the path of duty and of service?

Life here at the lakeside moves along in its uneventful way, while, "Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge." Nothing could be more charming than the weather, with its cool breezes, and its cloudless skies, which become veiled with clouds just often enough to furnish the rain necessary to keep green and fresh the foliage of the forest, and to perfect the growing fruits and other crops in this section. One day during the past week a party of us chartered one of the smaller craft and went to the upper end of the lake for a fish bake and picnic. It was a delightful day and a delightful company, and every one thought that the dinner of baked white and black bass, which had been wrapped in wet paper and cooked in the sand, together with the necessary accompaniments, was a feast for a king. A bonfire on the beach the other evening for social purposes brought out all the people in our settlement, and there were more here than we had supposed. Among the latest arrivals are T. P. Haley and wife, of Kansas City, who are quartered at the clubhouse. We are glad to have this valuable addition to our summer colony here by the lakeside. Many others are coming in August. Prof. Richard Moore and wife, of Butler College, who have been spending a year in London, have landed in New York, and are expected to arrive here soon with other members of the Moore clan, who are gathering here for a reunion. The Easy Chair finds it delightful, in its surcease of rest between tasks, to have the fellowship of these kindred spirits, in addition to these charms of nature. For, after all, the beautiful scenes of nature receive added charm when viewed in association with other kindred hearts.

The Plea of the Disciples of Christ

MEN OF THE PEW ANSWER THE QUESTIONS:

(1) Why Do I Value the Plea of the Disciples of Christ?
(2) How Can it be Made More Effective?

Freedom and Fraternity.

First: The plea of the Disciples is more valuable and dear to its adherents now, because it has fastened itself so firmly in the faith of the religious world. The experimental stage is passed and freedom and fraternity are vital characteristics of its vigorous life. We are commanding the respect of all other communions; this is the natural outcome of a people devoted to a principle.

The progress and acknowledgment of our plea had been fostered by a spirit of unity, harmony, liberty of conscience, and loyalty to the Church of our Lord.

The simplicity of the plea attracts the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the ignorant and the educated, commending itself to all: its value appeals to a universal conscience.

Second: The effectiveness of the plea in Christian character building resides in the purity and purpose of the individual life. The men's movement is an essential step toward complete and satisfying results.

All-round manhood, pure and clean in Christian experience, will be purposeful and powerful in the effective work of church life.

D. F. Givens.

Des Moines, Ia.

Harmonizes with the Bible.

In answering the first important question, let me say:

First: I value the plea of the Disciples, because it seems to me that it is in harmony with the teaching of the apostles on such questions.

Second: Because it is in harmony with the practices of the apostles.

Third: Because it is the most natural and logical doctrine that can be deduced from the life and purposes of the Master in seeking to draw all men to him.

And as to the second inquiry, I only have one answer and that is:

The only way to make it more effective is for our ministers to preach it in its purity, not in any offensive sense, but seriously and forcefully. Some of our more radical ones do too much boasting, and engage too much in remarks that are calculated to stir up anger and enmity. This should not be thought of for a moment, but the minister who is worthy the calling, should go at this subject conscientiously, seriously, and with a full realization of the mighty responsibility resting upon him.

Henry C. Barnett.

Franklin, Ind.

Three Reasons.

To the first question I would say:

First: I value the plea of the Disciples of Christ mainly for three reasons. It is a call to the liberty-loving spirit within me. As a people, the Disciples are the original and successful secessionists against creeds, formalism and sectarianism. Their gospel is untrammeled, their worship simple and sincere, their spirit missionary and optimistic.

Second: The Disciples are the sons of the loyal legion. They are loyal to the King. They are loyal to the Church. They keep its ordinances, exalt its doctrine, and exemplify its life.

Third: It is a command to my sense of the brotherhood of man, to seek to unify the brotherhood of Christ. "We are of one flesh," and we ought to be of one name, one spirit, and one body.

How can our plea be made more effective?

First: By a closer walk with our King as individual members and as churches. It is one thing to have the theory of religion, and quite another to have the practice. The head may be brave and right, while the heart may be weak and wrong. The best exposition of our faith is our life. We must accept the final test which Christ gave as a basis of faith in, and acceptance of him. "Believe me for the very work's sake." We must ask others to believe in us, and urge our plea.

Second: By seeking to cultivate the acquaintance of our religious neighbors, with the end in view, of being helped by them and of serving them in bringing "better way and broader vision." We must "needs go through Samaria" to reach the Samaritans. We must "join ourselves to the chariots" of investigating sectarians if we would "send them on their way rejoicing."

Third: By increasing our missionary and evangelistic forces. Give more, both at home and abroad. Educate and train more teachers and preachers. Bind the churches more closely together in co-operative work. Hold all we get, and get more to hold. Send out literature into more of the homes of the church, and distribute tracts among those "who know not us." Call out the strength of our present membership by drilling the forces. The men's movement is a great one. Put more men on the firing line in all places of church activity.

Des Moines, Ia. A. J. Small.

Has No Doctrinal Barriers.

First: Because of the emphasis our plea puts upon Christian union, which no other large denomination presents as a distinctive purpose. I conceive that plea to mean that all true Christians may find a welcome with us, conditioned only on faith in and acceptance of Christ. Not that they will be received if they accept our views and adopt our practices. Every denomination, I suppose, stands for union on such terms. But that they will be welcomed just as they are, with whatever views on doctrines and practices they may have, providing only they are entitled to be regarded as Christians. I believe that to be the only possible basis for Christian union.

Second: Because our plea presents no doctrinal barriers to any true Christian. While every religious system must have its theology, the individual does not need to understand theology to be religious; and the multitude must have its religion, if at all, without any extensive understanding of theology. It is pernicious to require the profession of theological beliefs which most people can not make intelligently. The sincere man does not want to have to declare his belief in doctrines which, though they may be very interesting and very important to the religious system, he lacks the time, ability, facilities or inclination to study for himself to satisfactory conclusions. Our plea, as I understand it, permits a suspended judgment on all doctrines not essential to one's being a Christian, but without discouraging their study. It is the only proper attitude to take toward man in his relation to theological doctrines.

Third: Because the attempt to reproduce the apostolic forms and practices and to employ scriptural names and phrases, although not necessary in my opinion as a matter of principle, is the best policy, both for effective Christian work and for the restoration of Christian union, if not applied too rigorously.

Fourth: Because our plea exalts Christ as the supreme authority, rather than the Church or the Scriptures, and makes all our religious faith and life center in him.

How can it be made more effective?

First: By consistently conducting our propaganda in harmony with its catholic spirit. The only opposition to our plea that need be feared is that which, in the guise of seeming loyalty to it, would narrow it until it would become in fact, though not in form, a man-made creed.

Second: By constantly seeking means and methods promotive of its ultimate purposes, unhampered by adherence to those which have become customary. We must recognize that union is not to be brought about by increase of our numbers merely, because that increase in recent years has been little faster than the increase of other large bodies. Our success in becoming one of the large religious bodies has been notable, but that is not the fulfillment of our mission. This success is due largely to the fact that our movement has been in accord with the tendency of the age. The same tendency has been working in other denominations and in interdenominational organizations. We must co-ordinate our work for union with the work others are doing to that end, if we would contribute most effectively to the further advancement of the cause of union.

Third: By justifying our faith by our works. If our beliefs, methods, and aims are more correct than those of other bodies, our churches and members should be better than theirs. Unless they are, our arguments will have little weight. Whether they are will be determined by the old rule, "By their fruits ye shall know them." We must ever seek to deepen the spirituality of our churches and members, and to make them notable in their communities for the abundance of their good works.

R. H. Bolton.

Boston, Mass.

It Unifies.

I should say in reply to the first question: Because of its efforts and its influence in lowering the walls of denominationalism and the uniting of God's people; because of our name and because of our practices.

And in reply to the second question: We can make it more effective, first, by meeting in all conventions and union meetings of an interdenominational nature, such as County, State, and World-Wide Sunday-school Conventions and the Christian Endeavor Conventions, all of which mean so much to our position; taking all the part we can in these meetings; minimizing our differences and exalting our fellowships. Let us not seek the offices, but encourage and help the officers of these interdenominational associations. Let us labor to bring about mission work, both home and foreign, through a united and interdenominational board.

Jay E. Adams.

San Antonio, Tex.

Gleanings from the International S. S. Convention

One of the principal addresses was delivered by W. G. Landes, of Pennsylvania, who spoke upon the subject, "The Spiritual Side of Our Work."

"Greater emphasis should be laid upon the spiritual side of the Sunday-school," said the speaker. "Only too frequently it is the case that the superintendents, in their anxiety to build up large Sunday-schools, neglect the spiritual needs of those who attend it."

In referring to the spiritual welfare of the American-born, Mr. Landes stated that 20 per cent of the American-born are regular attendants at Sunday-school, 30 per cent attend irregularly, and the remainder do not attend at all.

✣ ✣ ✣

Miss Rose Scott, of New Jersey, showed that some of the best results which the association of the state was able to secure were in the maintenance of a "cradle roll," or the names of babies under 3 years old. This is done, she said, to create interest upon the part of the parent. At the age of 3 years, Miss Scott said, the child should become an active attendant of the Sunday-school, and take full part in the work carried on there.

✣ ✣ ✣

Mrs. Thadius M. Salter, of Memphis, delivered an interesting address upon the subject, "How the Membership of the Union May Be Increased." Mrs. Salter also illustrated her points with a chart, giving figures and showing the great advancement that has been made by the Memphis schools through organization and co-operation.

✣ ✣ ✣

Should Know the Bible.

Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, field worker of the Alabama Association, touched on one of the vital secrets of the successful Sunday-school in her address on "The Training of the Teacher." In speaking of the preparation of the teacher, she said that the teacher of the class of to-day should have a thorough knowledge of the origin of the Bible and of its books. To create an impression of the facts and truths of the teachings of the Bible in the young minds of the children by illustration is another important thing in the training of the teacher, she said.

✣ ✣ ✣

Miss Sue Morgan Judson, elementary superintendent of Louisiana, delivered an address on "The Supplemental Lesson." She laid much stress on the importance of the supplemental lesson as it precedes the regular lesson of the day and serves to prepare the minds of the children for the regular lesson.

✣ ✣ ✣

"Organization and Equipment" was the subject discussed by Mrs. W. Eason Williams, elementary superintendent of the Maryland Association. Mrs. Williams told the workers the best way to organize the work and carry it on. The proper equipment is another important matter that should not be overlooked, and the speaker urged the workers to see that their classes had the proper supplies for the carrying on of the work.

✣ ✣ ✣

"Should Juniors be kept in their room during the entire session of the school, or should they be brought into the main school after the completion of the lesson?" Mrs. Walker, in speaking of this question, said that she did not think the children should be brought into the main school at any time, as the moving from one room to another tends to take the children's minds off the thoughts which the teachers are trying to impress upon them, and that if they are kept in the same room there will be no trouble in keeping them interested.

✣ ✣ ✣

Hand Work a New Feature.

"Hand Work as a Means of Self-Expression" was the subject of a helpful talk by Miss Marion Thomas, primary lesson writer for the Presbyterian Board of Publication. Hand work is a new phase of the work that is being introduced into the schools, and is for the benefit of the beginners and the primary classes. The hand work consists in having the children paste pictures together in such a way as to picture their idea or understanding of the lesson story. This method serves to make more clear the Bible stories that are taught them, and it also impresses the story on their minds so that they do not soon forget it. Another method was mentioned by Miss Thomas which never fails to attract the interest of the children, and that is story telling from pictures. An assortment of pictures of Bible incidents are given to a child with the request that the child tell in his own way a story that the picture suggests to them. The speaker said that many times the children tell beautiful stories from pictures given them, and oftentimes they express a new thought that has never been brought out.

✣ ✣ ✣

Simplicity the Key to Teaching.

Of the many excellent and interesting addresses that marked one day's program, probably none was more important than that by A. L. Phillips, General Superintendent of the Sunday-school and Young People's Work of the Presbyterian Church South, who spoke to a large gathering on the subject "The Master Teacher."

"Simplicity," he said, "is the keynote of master teaching," taking as his illustration the story of the Good Samaritan, which he cited as a model of what a lesson should be.

"The preparation of the mind, the presentation of the fact, the acquisition of the thought, and the application of the lesson is the entire process of education," Dr. Phillips said.

"The Pupil," was the subject of an interesting address made by Mrs. M. S. Lamoreaux, who handled the subject from the angle of how the pupil may be reached by Sunday-school workers.

✣ ✣ ✣

That which pertains to the spiritual life of the children was told by Mrs. M. S. Lamoreaux, International Auxiliary Elementary Field Worker, in her address, "The Unfolding Life." She described the possibilities of the spiritual life of the child and how the mind is trained to grasp the Bible teachings. First, the child learns to love in a selfish way, but as it learns service and is taught to live and work for others, the young mind slowly but surely comprehends the new idea, and after a time has acquired the Christ-like love of sacrifice for others.

The speaker pictured the conditions that surround the life as it unfolds. The atmosphere of the church and Sunday-school and the proper nourishment of the mind will lead the thoughts in the right way. When the mind has been properly trained then all that is necessary is to keep the young life active, and when this is done you have developed a strong spiritual life, with a strong foundation which can not be shaken.

✣ ✣ ✣

Difficulties in a Small School.

Miss Lea McCrea, of the Birmingham Graded Union in Alabama, discussed "The Difficulties in the Little Schools." Miss McCrea brought before those present all of the many difficulties that confront a worker of a small Sunday-school, where the means and money is very limited, and offered many helpful suggestions to such a worker. First, she told of the lack of room, and how many times a teacher in the rural districts must take her class out into the fields, and with the sky for a roof and the grass for a floor, tell them of Jesus. The speaker urged that no matter how much room there is in the main school for the Juniors, they should have a separate room in which to meet. In a room to themselves the teacher can better get the attention of the children, and with pictures and blackboard drawings she can teach them the lesson story, which she could not do in the main school.

BARACA BIBLE CLASS WORK

Object Lesson Given in How to Capture the Man Who is Not Interested, and How to Keep Him When He Has Been Caught.

Five hundred men and women delegates, representing churches in nearly all states in the Union, gathered at the joint session of the Adult Bible Class conference, where interest for the evening centered in a demonstration of the famous Baraca Bible Class work. All of the interesting features by which the class has been brought to a membership of 300,000 people were demonstrated and the meeting of the class was carried out just as it is carried out each Sunday morning in various churches throughout the country.

Much amusement and enthusiasm was created by a demonstration of the "class at work," and the big audience loudly applauded when an imaginary man was literally dragged away from his desk at his business office and carried away to join the big Baraca Sunday-school class. The class was convened in the front pews of the church in order that the entire audience might overlook the interesting proceedings.

When the roll was called it became known that Mr. Jones and Mr. Brown were absent, a fact that caused seemingly wide consternation among the members of the class. Emissaries were at once dispatched in search of the two absent members, bearing instructions to return as soon as possible in company with two delinquent members.

When Mr. Jones was finally located by the vigilant searchers, and brought down front, where he couldn't miss a word of the lesson, the audience signified its delight by loud applause. A few moments later the emissaries arrived with the delinquent Mr. Brown, and the audience roared its delight.

After the seating of the two absent members a report was heard from the workers of the week, showing the names of those whom they had visited and urged to attend. Those who were not brought into the meeting during the week were discussed by the members, who suggested new plans by which they might be reached.

An interesting feature of the great work demonstrated and one of the most impressive observances of the class, is their "secret service" department. This department numbers 50 000 men, who pray together at a given hour each day for the success of their work, and for the conversion of new members.

The Unshepherded Church and Ministerial Supply

By G. B. Van Arsdall

(CONTINUED.)

This then is our first problem—to relate our present ministry to our present churches, in the most helpful way. In the solution of this problem there are three phases of it calling for attention. First, whose problem is it; second, what are the difficulties in the way of its solution, and third, a plan of solution.

It is a brotherhood problem, and by that I mean a problem for the brotherhood as a whole to consider and effect some definite plan for its solution. Occasional articles in our papers and addresses before our district and state conventions are not its solution, but only a recognition of some elements of the situation. Conditions as they exist are conditions which we have created, and consequently for which we are responsible. Those creating conditions are responsible for their issue. Parents are responsible for the life of their children, because they gave them life. A state is responsible for the operation of the laws of its own enactment. It can not say it will enact the laws but will not be responsible for their operation. This principle is inherent in the very nature of things. Surely Christ taught nothing to contradict it, but rather many things to emphasize it. Whatever may be our theory of his constitution of the church, he certainly never so constituted it as to take away from it the responsibility for the issue of its own acts. Nothing in his teaching or spirit, either directly or by inference, can be construed to contradict this fundamental principle of duty.

Our Obligation.

Our National and State Missionary Societies are now recognized, if not the sole, as at least the chief agencies under our present system of bringing new churches into being. If these societies are not primarily responsible for the maintenance and life of our churches in so far as there is any responsibility beyond the local congregation, then some organization should be effected that would be responsible. While this is a matter of expediency, it is far more than that—it is a solemn obligation resting upon the brotherhood of churches which have created this condition. There are hundreds and even thousands of churches among us that we have brought into being that are now spiritual and moral cripples. There are many others only very imperfectly developed in Christian stature. Even the state recognizes the crime against society of bringing children into being and not caring for their maintenance and development; hence we have laws aimed directly at parents for the responsibility of the education of their children. It is surely no less a crime against the Kingdom of God to bring churches into existence only to die or suffer from a partial development. I should like to testify with many other words and exhort that we recognize this long-neglected responsibility and give ourselves to its discharge in a spirit and measure proportionate to its importance. I repeat then that it is our problem, and one to which we should give attention, not as a secondary matter or as a mild suggestion appended to something else, but with a definite purpose of instituting a method specifically for its solution, and to be pushed as aggressively as any of our present activities.

Fear of Ecclesiasticism.

A second element in the solution of this problem is the difficulties that we may naturally anticipate in its solution. In the light of the Disciples' strong adherence to the position of the independence of the local congregation we may naturally expect at least some mild fear of ecclesiasticism. Let it be understood, however, that any plan for the solution of this problem must of necessity preserve the independence of the local congregation and like independence of the ministry. There are some among us who aver that we have no scriptural authority for missionary societies, but this body is not of that number. At least we are not bound to be limited at this point by the silence of the Scriptures. Missionary societies for the creation of churches is as much ecclesiasticism as societies for their maintenance, and yet even in the New Testament we find at least intimations of our responsibility at this point. Paul left Titus at Crete to set in order the things that were lacking, and it would seem that one of the things that he set in order was that he should remain there himself for a time as pastor of the church. Paul and Silas and Timothy visited the churches of Galatia and set in order the things that were lacking. Whatever it may have been that they did there is here at least the intimation of the principle of his responsibility for the churches which he had created. Multiply Paul enough times to make a state board out of him and you have the responsibility located. He tells us, also, in his second Corinthian letter, of that which was daily pressing upon him, the anxiety for all the churches. It would seem that there is quite as much authority in these acts of Paul for the creation of a system for the care of the churches as we find in the New Testament for the Co-operation of Churches in Missionary Work.

If we have church extension to build houses of worship, may we not as well have societies to supply leaders to build up the men and women of those churches in equipment for service? This is a missionary enterprise. To be sure, not the initial missionary activity, but its issue. If Christ approves of the creation of churches by missionary societies, will he disapprove of their proper care for the same or kindred organizations? He certainly does not create churches only to place restrictions upon them which in their very nature kill or impair their usefulness. Moreover, we do not need to look for specific New Testament authority for such care, so long as we do not violate other fundamental principles. The absence of any provision for such care of the churches is not equivalent to its prohibition, but rather indicates that it is left to the judgment of the church, when the conditions shall demand it. The New Testament provision for the care of churches was for the conditions existing in New Testament times. Present day conditions were not hinted at or even necessarily anticipated.

It may not be argued that our present system does in some measure at least care for the churches. The responsibility for any care of them at all is a responsibility for their care according to the most efficient plan, and this I think has been shown that we do not possess.

But even when the fear of ecclesiasticism has been theoretically dispelled, there will remain the practical task of securing the actual co-operation of the churches and ministers in such a plan. This will, of course, require a campaign of education. The ministry and the church must reason this problem out together, and together put its solution into practice. Again, I say this can not be done if it is made a secondary matter—it must take equal rank along with our present missionary and philanthropic movements. It must be recognized as co-ordinate with them. Organizations must be created in each state that will do this one thing. Wise planning and persistent effort will give it equal importance with our present activities.

The Plan Itself.

The third phase of the problem is the plan itself. This must, of course, be wrought out by the brethren in conference. They have successfully solved the problems that have arisen in our history, and surely they may be trusted to do as much for this, and that too without any sacrifice or compromise of the fundamental principle for which we as a religious people stand. The writer would not presume to say what all the features of such a plan are, but he may at least suggest some of the fundamental principles involved, with some elements of the plan which appeal to him as practical. In the first place, the principle of the autonomy of the local congregation should be maintained as it now is by all our missionary organizations. The right of the plan to a continued existence will depend upon its efficiency. This efficiency will become the strongest possible incentive to the congregations to co-operate in it, and a like stimulus to those responsible for its execution. The ministry and the church should have like representation in the institution of the plan, and in its continuance. With these safeguards, there will be little, if any, danger that the fundamental principles of our movement will be violated by such a plan.

Some Suggestions.

I would offer the following suggestions as to the plan itself. In the light of what has already been said, the responsibility in the matter rests primarily and fundamentally with our present missionary organizations. Perhaps the unit for the continued maintenance of the plan should be the state society, but the American Christian Missionary Society might well assume the responsibility for the institution of such a plan in the various states. As to the plan itself, I would recommend the establishment in every state of an Advisory Board of Ministerial Supply. I say advisory, because such would be its relation to both the churches and the ministry. This board might well be made a part of our present state organizations. Our state societies are coming more and more to be delegate bodies. With the growth of this ideal condition, opportunity will be afforded the churches for a real voice in the creation of such a board. Some such plan as the following might be adopted: the ministry of the state to elect two members of the board; the churches, through their delegates, part from the ministry, to elect two other members, and the four to elect a fifth member. This board would at once seriously give itself to the task of placing itself at the service of the churches and ministers of the state. Its duty would be to locate ministers with churches. Every church and every minister would be free to use the services, or not, just as desired. It would have no more authority over the churches than our missionary societies have. The board would doubtless have a place for its work on the programmes of the state conventions; make reports and discuss plans and methods that would be of the highest worth to both the church and the ministry. Such a definite, well-ordered plan would give dignity to the enterprise and, more important still, efficiency in its mission.

Some Advantages.

The local church, while not relieved from the responsibility of securing a minister, would be encouraged and assisted in its task by the services of the board. This board would necessarily have a knowledge of men not possessed by the local church, and would thus be in a position to furnish information concerning available men, and to guard against misfits. It is everywhere recognized that the temperament of the man, his point of view, methods of work, etc., are all conditioning factors in his success. Men and congregations have characteristics that require the greatest care in bringing them together for useful service. If the local church should be indifferent to its interest in the matter of calling a minister, a suggestion from the board, with a proffer of assistance, would often be all that was needed. If conditions in the church, which unfortunately often prevail, were such as to make it practically impossible to secure agreement on a man, the whole matter might be referred to the board. Churches would not be so quick to let their ministers go when confronted with the prospect that their annual or more frequent use of the board in securing a minister would place them in an unfavorable light. Ministers would be more anxious for long pastorates,

Lest They Too Should be Put in a similar light. Such a plan would, in my judgment, distinctly tend toward longer pastorates among us. It would also serve to keep men in the ministry longer. Without question many men now leave the ministry because of the discouragements incident to transferring from one field to another. The services of such a board in furnishing information to these men concerning vacant pulpits and bringing them before such churches at their true worth, and without violence to their sense of modesty, would serve to keep many a man in the ministry. Such a board would also help hundreds of ministers over other discouragements. Many would doubtless go to the board and frankly tell them of their failures and ask for help and direction. Such friendly advice and counsel would save many a man and give him new heart for his task. Likewise, many local church problems would be referred to such a board. Both preachers and churches stand so close to their own problems as to prevent clearness of vision and wisdom of judgment concerning their solution. Such a board would serve as a clearing house of information for both churches and ministers. The transfer of men from one state to another would be made easier through information furnished by the boards of the respective states. The very existence of such a board, not as a committee to spy into things, but for appeal by both ministers and churches, for information concerning the character and work of each, would have a most wholesome effect upon both.

Quality and Efficiency.

One of the most wholesome effects of this plan would be the education of our people in a deeper concern for quality and efficiency. We have an abundant zeal for numbers—I would not have it less. The existence of a board in each state, whose duty it was to see that every minister was occupied and every church supplied with pastoral care, could not but have a most wholesome effect upon our churches in making them active instruments of righteousness in their respective communities. It would serve to dispel the idea that doctrinal accuracy is the highest ideal of church life. It would not weaken this ideal, but it would create a corresponding passion for efficiency in service. If it be true that doctrinally we hold the first position in Protestantism, that very fact is a challenge from God that we should be first in our system of organization. It is our preaching and not our organization that commands the attention of the world. Why not bring our organization up to the high standard of our faith? Surely God does not intend that our high doctrinal position should be an excuse for inefficiency of organization. It is a demand for the most perfect system. The doctrine is of God—the plan for its teaching and the development of life through it are of man. The greater the gift from God, the greater the challenge to man. Perhaps it may be said that other religious bodies of the congregational form of government have no better plan than we. Shall the failure of others be made a justification of our dereliction of duty? The plan suggested may have many flaws in it. About this particular plan I am not concerned, but I am deeply interested that the Disciples of Christ should institute some definite measures by which our present ministry may be kept continually and with the least possible disadvantages in the process of keeping in relations of the highest efficiency to our present churches.

The Other Problem.

There remains the other problem of the enlistment and training of men for our future ministry. This is sufficient within itself for a separate paper, and I hardly suppose that the committee intended that I should discuss it. I may, however, note a few things closely related to what I have already said. It goes without saying that a religious movement is judged more by its ministry—their discipline of mind and heart, their breadth of vision, comprehensive grasp of truth and the relation of things, their character and spirit of self sacrifice—than by any other element in the movement. It also goes without saying that these qualities in the minister determine the character of the people. The supreme need of the church of the future is a trained and consecrated ministry. With such, all its problems are safe. Without such, nothing is guaranteed. The character of the men in the ministry are the guarantee of the church. No wall can be built around the church that will safeguard its interests and promote its efficiency like the spirit and character of the men within it.

Our Insufficiency.

But in addition to the question of the character of the men, we are in the greatest need of increased numbers. Our statistician reports, for 1905, 6,675 ministers; for 1906, 6,570, or a loss of 105, and for 1907, 6,619, or a gain of 49 over the previous year, though still a loss of 56 over two years ago. When we reflect that our present ministry is quite insufficient for our existing churches, and our churches are increasing more rapidly than our ministers, allowing no loss by death or desertion, we begin to realize the imperative need of the situation. While our churches are increasing at the rate of about 150 a year, our ministry is increasing only about half that. The year book of 1908 shows 6,619 ministers, but of that number 558 are marked as in the class of students, occasional preachers, preachers in business, or retired. It is doubtful if we have more than 5,000 active ministers, for there are large numbers in the year book that are not so indicated, but who are not actively engaged in the ministry. For instance, the writer examined to see how certain men whom he knew were rated. Here is a man in the grocery business who at some time in his life preached a little, but has not delivered a sermon for years, and never had the pastoral care of a church, but who is rated as an active minister in charge of a church. Here is a farmer; here an insurance agent; here another business man, in the same class as above. While my acquaintance of such men is limited, I found all that I knew to be rated as active ministers in charge of churches. If all such are eliminated, the total number would certainly be greatly reduced; but even allowing that we have an active ministry of 6,000, what is the normal decrease of this number each year? Or, in other words, what is the average active life of a man in the ministry? Allowing for those of insufficient training, who soon work up their material and quit, those who go into business, desertion, failure of health and early deaths, I do not think we can place the average active life of the ministry as more than twenty years. This will give us an annual decrease of 300. To be sure, our year book does not indicate any such large decrease now, because we keep the man on the list after he has quit the active ministry. Our statistician reports that we are increasing in churches at the rate of about 150 a year. With a decrease of ministers of 300 and an increase of 150 churches, we have an annual decrease of 450 ministers, so far as the supply of our churches is concerned. Are our colleges making up this difference? I made inquiry of each of our colleges as to the total number of graduates from their Bible department in the past ten years. There were 716. From one college I received no reply, but estimating it in comparison with the others, we have a total of 800, or an average of 80 graduates per year. This is far short of filling the deficiency of 450, but it may be said our colleges are now graduating more men than the average for the past ten years. Our year book shows the aggregate of ministerial students in all our colleges to be about 900. We may not estimate that over 800 of these will enter the ministry, and that is a large estimate, for 100 would hardly include those who drop out or are preparing for missionary work, or other Christian work not distinctly that of the ministry. With a four years' course, we have an average of 200 graduates annually. These figures are doubtless high for the number of graduates, and low for the normal decrease; but even with these we have a net loss of 250 men annually as compared with our churches.

In the face of this situation we have before us a problem of larger proportion than that discussed in the first part of this paper. I have referred to it not for an exhaustive study, but simply to call attention to the services which a board of ministerial supply could render in the solution

HEALTH AND INCOME
Both Kept Up on Scientific Food.

Good, sturdy health helps one a lot to make money.

With the loss of health one's income is liable to shrink, if not entirely dwindle away.

When a young lady has to make her own living, good health is her best asset.

"I am alone in the world," writes a Chicago girl, "dependent on my own efforts for my living. I am a clerk, and about two years ago through close application to work and a boarding house diet, I became a nervous invalid, and got so bad off, it was almost impossible for me to stay in the office a half day at a time.

"A friend suggested to me the idea of trying Grape-Nuts which I did, making this food a large part of at least two meals a day.

"To-day I am free from brain-tire, dyspepsia and all the ills of an overworked and improperly nourished brain and body. To Grape-Nuts I owe the recovery of my health, and the ability to retain my position and income."

"There's a reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

of the problem. At present we have no other plan of enlisting young men for the ministry than what may be done by the local minister and congregation. The work of the ministry being the highest and divinest service possible for any man, there is certainly imperative need that the church whose future depends upon such men should provide for their enlistment and equipment. Their equipment is the problem of the college. Their enlistment is the problem of the church. Surely the call to the ministry is not such a distinctly supernatural thing that all human agencies and encouragements should be eliminated. The words of the Master: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his vineyard," does not mean that we are to do nothing but pray. Is it a prohibition of active search for men, and laying before them the high call of the ministry? There is need that the strongest and most brainy young men in our churches should be enlisted in the ministry to meet the problem of the coming generation. This should be made a business and not left to the indifference of the local minister or congregation. Whose business is it? All that we have said in regard to the matter of responsibility for the care of our existing churches pertains with like force to the question of our future ministry. I can not but feel that the establishment of such boards as I have spoken of, and more especially the great need as these men would see it in the discharge of their duty, would in the very nature of things stir them up to a like sense of responsibility for our future ministry. Hundreds of young men, yes, and thousands, are but waiting to have this line of high service pointed out to them and for counsel in the beginning and prosecution of their studies. In all this the board of ministerial supply could and would naturally and easily render the most valuable service. I can also see that this responsibility would call to positions on the board only men of highest fitness, and its discharge would develop in them qualities like unto those possessed by him who sent out the little company of twelve from whose ministry has grown the church of the Redeemer. My brethren, both of these problems of which I have spoken are such as we can not longer neglect and be true to our Master. May his passion for the world's redemption inspire us to action, and may his spirit direct all our planning.

The Glory of Young Men

By S. R. REYNOLDS.

The pages of history are resplendent with examples of noble deeds of young men. We are happy that it is our privilege to lead young men to Christ, who is their Saviour, and leader in every good work. It is difficult to foreshadow the greatness and possibilities of young men in the physical realm, and how much more is it so when they have become united to the Great Fountain of Spiritual Power—Jesus the Christ!

Very few young men are conscious of their power for spiritual things. Jesus' touch can reveal their powers to them as none others. Oh, for the touch of the Master! What soul-winners became Andrew, Philip, Peter and Nathanael when the Lord opened their eyes and hearts to things hitherto unseen. No doubt they had often discounted themselves by undervaluing their power for good; but not so, after they had found Christ.

For almost a year now we have had a host of young men whom God has entrusted to our care and oversight. It is with joy that we have taught them of Christ and his love. Many of these fellows had spent days in sin, and felt themselves powerless to do good; but, thanks be to God, they were redeemed by the loving spiritual touch of Jesus! They are now doing the part of Andrew, Philip, Peter and Nathanael of old—bringing souls to Christ. We first brought them to Jesus, and then organized them into a Bible school class, where every effort was made to show them that Jesus and his Father were only pleased when "ye bear much fruit."

The real glory of young men, it seems to me, is in finding Jesus and then crying like Paul of old, "What wilt thou have me to do?" The answer to this cry is far distant, for Jesus says, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest."

I desire to report a scene that occurred at one of our Thursday night Bible study classes. After the class period two young men demanded baptism. The entire class accompanied the candidates to the baptistry, and banking themselves around the "watery grave," sang God's songs while the two were immersed into Christ. We have never beheld such a beautiful sacred service as was witnessed that night. Under the glitter of a bright light and a dark background it presented a beautiful sea of upturned faces calm with the love of God upon them. These young men who sang and witnessed the baptism of two of their fellows were just a short time ago in the service of Satan, but now in the service of our blessed Lord. Here is the excellent glory of young men of to-day. "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift!"

Clearfield, Iowa.

Evangelists and Foreign Missions

By LAURA DELANY GARST.

Few pastors have so great power to mold opinion in the new convert as has the evangelist in a protracted meeting. Marvelous results might be achieved were this power of the evangelist always enthusiastically utilized. What a gift to an evangelist in the way of testimonial of high regard, were the new converts to take up some phase of mission work, as the station plan, for instance, and be responsible for it! Would not this exceed any "loving cup"?

I have been told of at least one prominent evangelist who said, during a meeting that he "hardly dared talk foreign missions," because the church, if not actually anti-, was at least o-missionary. What an opportunity for an evangelist! Can any man claim to have "declared the whole counsel of God, "or to have "rightly divided the Word," if he has omitted to enthusiastically drill and instruct his hearers on the scriptural basis for world work?

"Every little helps," as the boys say, and would it not help more than a little were we to talk more of world-evangelism, and less of mission work? In the language of the colleges,

"World-Evangelism!
That's the way to tell it,
That's the way to spell it,
W-o-r-l-d-
E-v-a-n-g-e-l-i-s-m!"

God's Out of Doors.

By Rochester Irwin.

How many persons in this busy, careladen, twentieth century life of ours know how to value and enjoy God's out-of-doors? How many habitually experience the soothing, strengthening influences of nature? Few, we fear.

Business men, professional men, tradesmen and artisans need to get away from their toil regularly and often. Ceaseless worker, what doth it profit, though you were to gain the world of wealth, if you lose your elasticity of spirit and your capability to enjoy? The world was here before your coming: it will be here after your departure. Why should you allow your occupation to enslave you instead of making it minister to your comfort and happiness?

Come, friend, lay down that book, put up that pen, forsake that counter, desert that shop, and hie out into God's sunshine and freedom. Let the grateful breezes fan your brow, and the birds sing a song into your ears. Take a stride across the scented fields to yonder wooded slope, and sweetly muse upon the mysteries of nature amid the silent shadows of the hills. Go and see the massive mountains lifting up their pale, cold faces to kiss the smiling sky. Open your ears to the tinkling music of the restless rill, or the deep murmurings of the mighty sea. Look up to the star-decked dome of the unmeasured sky and let the light of far-off worlds in silence say to you, "Peace, be still!"

If you would live long and happy; if you would be of greater use to the world than you now are; if you would find the fabled Fountain of Perpetual Youth, O toil-worn reader, learn to employ and enjoy God's blessed out-of-doors!

Washburn, Ill.

A FOOD DRINK
Which Brings Daily Enjoyment.

A lady doctor writes:

"Though busy hourly with my own affairs, I will not deny myself the pleasure of taking a few minutes to tell of the enjoyment daily obtained from my morning cup of Postum. It is a food beverage, not a stimulant like coffee.

"I began to use Postum 8 years ago, not because I wanted to, but because coffee, which I dearly loved, made my nights long weary periods to be dreaded and unfitting me for business during the day.

"On advice of a friend, I first tried Postum, making it carefully as suggested on the package. As I had always used 'cream and no sugar,' I mixed my Postum so. It looked good, was clear and fragrant, and it was a pleasure to see the cream color it as my Kentucky friend always wanted her coffee to look—'like a new saddle.'

"Then I tasted it critically, and I was pleased, yes, satisfied with my Postum in taste and effect, and am yet, being a constant user of it all these years.

"I continually assure my friends and acquaintances that they will like Postum in place of coffee, and receive benefit from its use. I have gained weight, can sleep and am not nervous." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Our Budget

—There is variety in this issue.

—Brother Van Arsdall's congress paper is concluded.

—It gives information and suggests that something must be done.

—The writer does not insist on his own plan.

—If any one has a better it may be presented.

—Men of the pew answer some questions about the plea of the Disciples of Christ.

—If the unanimity of opinion as expressed by these haphazardly chosen men from the pews is characteristic of our membership not in the pulpit, we have every reason for encouragement as a brotherhood. Here is evidenced a faith in our principles and a real Christian spirit of love that is refreshing. Some ministers can take lessons from these business men on being sound in the faith and yet possessing a charitable spirit.

—The personal letter to the Assistant Editor in another column from Brother Durban will be read with deep regret by those who have been charmed, edified and instructed by our accomplished London correspondent. The death of his wife is the greatest blow that could come to him in this life. As no other man we have ever known, he was dependent on his helpmate. That is, indeed, what she was to him. Their companionship was ideal. She was a woman of rare good sense, a thorough housewife, and endowed with the practical nature that was so needed in the wife of the idealistic and intellectual literary man and minister. It was at Chester, where she died, that she and her husband came out from the Baptist church, under the tutelage of M. D. Todd, father of Earl M. Todd, and W. T. Moore.

✣ ✣ ✣

—Edward Clutter is in a meeting at Latham, Kan.

—The church at Fayette, Mo., has been redecorated.

—W. B. Clemmer, of Rock Island, Ill., has been in demand for special sermons and addresses.

—Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Freer entertained recently at Bedford, O., in honor of President Bates of Hiram College.

—Secretary Miller, of Ohio, has found the strain of state work so heavy that he has gone for his vacation at the lakeside.

—J. L. Greenwell is doing good work with the Queen Anne Church, Seattle, Wash., where he has just concluded his first year.

—Bishop M. Hopkins, one of the young men ministers of Lyons, Kan., has accepted the work at Mound valley, and is now on the field.

—Dr. Royal J. Dye expects to return to Bolenge, Africa, in October. Mrs. Dye will not return at this time. She will remain until later.

—Since Charles H. Caton went to Savannah, Mo., there has been a decided improvement in the interest, attendance at nearly all the meetings having been increased.

—T. C. Howe has married over 1,000 couples in Indiana alone. During the recent period of memorial and baccalaureate addresses, Brother Howe was called upon fifteen times.

—The Annual convention of the churches of Christ in Pike County, Ill., will be held at Chambersburg, August 19-20. The church and the pastor desire a large attendance. Entertainment will be free.

—J. C. Reynolds has resigned at Athens, W. Va., and will be ready to locate with some church or make engagements for evangelistic work beginning September 1. He may be addressed at Athens.

—James Egbert, pastor at Anaconda and Deer Lodge, Mont., recently completed his three years' seminary course at Oberlin College and received his diploma conferring the degree of Bachelor of Divinity.

—Miss Mattie Pounds will attend the annual convention of the Maritime Provinces and spend three or four weeks visiting the churches throughout that territory in the interest of the missionary work.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the week ending July 22 was $7,871.78, a gain of $605.17. It is hoped this gain will continue until September 30, when the books close for the current missionary year.

—G. W. Morton, whose resignation at Erie, Ill., we announced last week, was asked to re-consider this, but has decided to spend a few months lecturing for prohibition, and later to take a church again.

—O. J. Law having resigned at Eureka, Kan., to take effect September 1, the church there, we are informed, is ready to consider an application from a good strong preacher. Address R. C. Summers, church clerk.

—Charles P. Hedges sailed on the steamship "Arabic" July 23, on his way to Bolenge, Africa. Brother Hedges goes out from Bethany College, West Virginia. As announced elsewhere, Dr. Dye will follow in October.

—F. M. Biddle has for some time been the minister at Wellsburg, W. Va., which is one of the first churches of our reformatory movement. The congregation observes our special days and a good work seems to be in progress.

—Ed. S. McKinney, who has just entered upon his fifth year with the church at Woodward, Okla., has been in the state longer than most of our ministers who are now located there, and in this city longer than any other minister.

—The church at Delta, Colo., continues to grow. E. M. Miller has been doing good work as supply pastor, but A. N. Glover, of Orange, Cal., has accepted a call and will take charge of the work the first Lord's day in August.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was invited to the wedding of Marcia Sloan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Booth, of San Antonio, Tex., to Mr. Carleton Weir Adams. Our congratulations to the happy pair and to all interested.

—At New Castle, Ind., the various churches are holding a most delightful series of Sunday evening fellowship meetings. T. C. Howe preached on one Sunday to a crowded house in the Presbyterian Church. There have been good additions of late.

—J. E. Dinger, who is preaching at Alliance, O., until October 1, has a number of lectures which are said to be excellent. We suppose Brother Dinger could be secured to deliver some of these by the churches of Ohio while he is in the state.

—The church at Llano, Tex., has completed an addition to its building, made necessary by the rapidly growing school. There were recently two additions to the church by confession and baptism not reported. J. J. Cramer is the minister.

—Preparatory work leading up to the erection of a new church building is making good progress at Findlay, Ill., where J. J. Bare is the minister. Harold E. Monser, who organized this work in the fall of 1906, recently revisited it and preached there.

—A. M. Harral, of Texas, was a recent caller at THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office. Brother Harral is taking his vacation and visiting his father and other friends in Missouri. We are glad to know that he is much better in health since he located in the South.

—Geo. R. Cleveland, minister of the church at Cato, N. Y., and Miss Frances McHarrison, of Brooklyn, N. Y., were married at the home of the bride on July 15, Joseph Keevil, pastor of the Humboldt Street Church, Brooklyn, officiating. We extend our best wishes.

—J. R. Jolly has resigned the work at Huntington Beach, Cal., to accept the associate pastorate of the Sterling Place Church of Christ, Brooklyn, N. Y. This will enable him to take some special work in Columbia University and the Union Theological Seminary.

—Our Bible school at Mexico, Mo., shows a steady increase. The enrollment the first of January was 242. It had increased by April 1 to 308, while in the middle of July the enrollment was 359 and an attendance of 257. Superintendent J. W. Dry says the aim is to have 500 by December 25, and they will reach it.

—L. A. Chapman, of Elmwood, Neb., has organized two normal training classes—one at Elmwood and one at Union. As County Superintendent of normal training classes, he expects to organize in every town in Cass County. Elmwood begins with 35 and it is hoped that there will be between 50 and 60 by September 1.

—The Bible school at West Plains, Mo., has just broken all past records for attendance. There were 25 in the minister's class of young ladies, 25 in the boys' class, number 4, and 50 in the primary class—making 178 in all. G. G. Horne, the minister, is sure they will have 200 coming to study the Bible by Christmas.

—W. A. Wherry, minister of the church at Commerce, Tex., is very cordial in his commendation of A. E. Dubber, who recently held a meeting for him. "He is the ideal evangelist—earnest, eloquent and practical." We are glad to know that the church at Commerce is in the best condition it has been in for years.

—The church at Roseburg, Ore., pledged $300 for the new mission boat on the Upper Congo, to be know as "The Oregon." This is to help our important work in the Congo Free State. The church also at Eugene, Ore., pledged $500 for the same purpose. The churches in Oregon propose to furnish this steamer at a cost of about $15,000.

—There is a young man and his wife, splendidly educated and well equipped, ready to go to the Upper Congo and to open a new station at Longa, if their traveling expenses and outfit money can be provided. Their salary has already been secured. If some large-hearted friend or friends would furnish about $1,200, it would insure these gifted people for that important field.

—J. Walter Carpenter, of Uniontown, Pa., is taking his annual vacation. There is hope for great things in a Sunday-school way at Uniontown, Pa. Our church there entertains the Fayette County School of Methods again this year, August 27-28. The school attendance in the middle of July is 540, and the preacher has a mixed class numbering over a hundred in attendance.

—F. B. Huffman, Eureka, Cal., who recently made a circuit of the globe and visited many of the mission stations of the Foreign Society, is enthusiastic over the work that is being done and feels that it should be enlarged. He is hoping that our people will enlarge the work in every direction. This is the universal testimony of every Christian who has an opportunity to become an eye-witness to what is being done.

—John L. Brandt has held six meetings this year, with a total of 690 additions.

—The marriage is announced of Charles C. Wilson, our minister at Shelby, O., to Clara Eva, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Bidler, at Ashtabula, O. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends congratulations and good wishes.

—Mr. and Mrs. George William Brown have returned from our Indian mission field on furlough, and are spending the summer at Hiram. Brother Brown will take some work in Sanskrit and Indian philosophy in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, during the winter.

—Our church at North Tonawanda, N. Y., has granted its minister, W. C. Bower, a leave of absence for something more than three months to continue his studies at Columbia University, beginning the latter part of September. Brother Bower has been with this congregation more than six years. We are always glad to see this happy relationship between minister and congregation.

—J. P. Myers is the present minister at Shelbyville, Ind. We hear that when he entered upon the field, he found a debt of $6,000 unprovided for and the church discouraged. There has already been paid off about $2,000 and the balance is provided for in good notes. The church is taking on new life. There have been additions, and a spiritual growth is prayed for and expected.

—Mrs. Lillie Wallace has been called to preach half time for the East Side Church at Columbus, Ind., and will give the other half time to Central Church, during the vacation of its pastor, until September. Her husband, Thomas Wallace, is conducting a special party on a four weeks' trip down the St. Lawrence and through some eastern cities. All of his church work is progressing nicely.

—President Miner Lee Bates, of Hiram College, dedicated the new $13,000 church at Nelsonville, Ohio, July 19, and raised about $6,000, which practically provides for all indebtedness. Walter Scott Cook, the minister at Nelsonville, reports that President Bates' sermons were scholarly, simple and heart-searching, and his manner of raising money beyond criticism. We have no man better fitted for such work than he.

—Sam B. Ross, of Wapello, Ia., writes: "We had a very impressive memorial service in memory of Simpson Ely last Lord's day with the congregation meeting here. He, under God, was the founder of this congregation, and the people had great respect for him. We had always found him loyal and true to the old Book. He was very positive, but also very earnest in his advocacy of the truth as he saw it."

—We hear, with great regret, of the death of several of our prominent workers. We can only mention these in the space at our disposal in this issue—Peter Vogel, of Somerset, Pa.; John Brant, of Isabel, Kan.; O. W. Darnold, who recently took the work at Glasgow, Ky., and Mrs. L. A. Betcher, of Alexandria, La. A fuller notice of the passing away of these lamented workers will be made in our columns.

—On another page we give a list of the Ohio District Conventions as presented by the corresponding secretary of the state. These district conventions ought to be made very important factors in our work. Hundreds of people could attend a local convention of this character who have not the time nor the money to travel far. Where these conventions are well managed, they can be made very helpful.

—The Queen Anne Church, Seattle, Wash., J. L. Greenwell, minister, will, in the future, support a missionary in the Congo Free State. This church is less than two years old. They have no permanent church home. The minister says, "I do not feel that we have done any more than we should have done, if as much. We are stronger and happier in our work here because of our larger vision and service."

—We are very glad to know that Milo Atkinson, of Covington, Ky., has recovered sufficiently to be able to send us a few lines. It will be some time yet before he will be able to take up his regular work again. He has received so large a number of messages of sympathy that he will not be able to answer them all personally, but wishes his friends to know that their prayers and encouragement are not the less appreciated.

—Charles M. Fillmore, of the Hillside Church, Indianapolis, writes: "E. C. Mannan, our choir leader, has decided to enter the field as a singing evangelist. I am sure he will make a success of it, for he has an exceptionally fine tenor voice, sings a gospel solo with unusual sweetness and power, and is a young man of splendid character and winning personality. Evangelists or pastors wanting a helper will do well to write him at 1013 E. Morris Street."

—J. W. Holsapple, minister of the Central Christian Church, of Hillsboro, Texas, has been elected platform manager of the four days' reunion and encampment to be held at the reunion grounds near Hillsboro, August 11-14, inclusive. He also made the address of welcome at a recent reception by the ladies' clubs of Hillsboro to the Hill County Normal, and was on the program at the Fourth of July union picnic given by the different fraternal organizations of Hillsboro.

—In our obituary columns will be found the account of several people who have made their mark in our religious work. Mrs. Ford has been a great helper, both by her money and her personal interest, not only to our general work, but especially to the Christian churches in Michigan. Dr. Monroe was a noted pioneer Disciple, a good physician and a good Christian. W. T. Clarkson was cut off on the very threshold of what seemed to be a most promising career in the ministry.

—Alfred Farrar is to close his work at Gloucester, O., September 1, and enter the evangelistic field. He can be secured for meetings after that date. He has had sixteen years' experience as pastor and evangelist, can give the best of references, and will go anywhere for free-will offering and railroad expenses. During the past year there were 127 additions in all at Gloucester, and when Brother Farrar offered his resignation a standing vote of the congregation showed its appreciation of his labors. He may be addressed at Gloucester.

—W. M. Taylor has been spending a period for rest in Tennessee. Before leaving New Orleans there was a testimonial banquet in his favor, attended by some thirty male members and friends of the Soniat Avenue Christian Church. All formality was laid aside and a spirit of Christian optimism was prevalent. Of course, the coming convention was in the minds of all present. Brother Taylor's vacation is taken with a view to preparing himself the better physically for the arduous duties that will fall on him. Among those present from outside the city was William Pearn, who is doing Christian work in the Canal Zone.

—The church at Bolivar, Mo., has erected a tabernacle for summer meetings. It has a seating capacity of 1 000. The object is to interest all of our churches in the county in a meeting which will be held each year by some good evangelist. After this central meeting the churches of the county will take it up in their various localities and continue it in their own way. We understand this year the evangelists are to be Coombs and Beyer, and the meeting is scheduled to begin August 2. J. H. Jones is the minister at Bolivar. We know that his congregation has consented for him to do some evangelistic work, and he will be available after October 1.

—The congregation at Weston, Mo., had J. H. Bryan, who is assisting Brother Hardin in the Bible school work, with them on Lord's day, July 19. J. E. Wolfe, the minister, writes that Brother Bryan is filled with good things and information and plans, knowing his specialty thoroughly. Brother Wolfe reports that every officer of his church and every member of the Bible school is enthusiastically at work to make this the first centennial school in Missouri. The teacher training class has 30 on its roll, and it is hoped to swell it to 50. Every teacher of the school is in it. Brother Wolfe is the teacher, J. H. Hardesty is the superintendent and Miss Lizzie Allen the secretary. "Let those schools who want an abundance of good things to practice for the next year have Brother Bryan attend," writes Brother Wolfe.

—E. B. Bagby leaves Cleveland, O., this week and will spend some time at his father's home in Tappahannock, Va., where he hopes to recuperate and be ready for work in the early fall. Brother Bagby leaves the Franklin Circle Church with many regrets. While he has not accomplished all that he had hoped, the two years have been profitable ones. There have been 144 additions since October, 1906, and $18,185 raised during the two fiscal years, of which $8,185 was for missions. Brother Bagby has been much handicapped by his sickness. It will be remembered that he was one of our foremost preachers in Washington before going to Cleveland. The Franklin Circle Church is now in correspondence with one of the ablest of our young preachers, and it is thought he will accept.

—On another page will be found a communication from Allen Price, representing our brethren in Australia, and announcing some of their purposes with regard to the celebration of our Centennial in that country. It will be noticed that they have arranged the date early in the year, which will permit some of the Australian brethren to come to our Pittsburg celebration, and they extend an invitation to any of the American brethren who can visit them at the time they celebrate. Australia is much indebted to our American brotherhood, both for ideas and for men, and especially for the education which many of their own young men have received in our colleges. We are glad, indeed, to know that both in England and in the colony recognition will be made of the "Declaration and Address," and all that it has meant to the religious world.

—Our readers will be glad to know that J. H. Hardin, who is now convalescing from his serious illness at Macatawa Park, is steadily improving. In a recent letter to the Editor he writes: "I am now beginning to feel the tides of returning health rising and flowing stronger every day, but it will be some time before I can endure much exertion, or, with safety, return to the heat of the interior. I will go back to my work, however, at the earliest moment I can do

The New Hope
Is the Best Remedy for the Drug and Liquor habits
HOME TREATMENT can be administered
J. H. GARRISON, President
Correspondence invited. Address New Hope Treatment Co., 2712 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.

so with safety. Meantime, J. H. Bryan is in charge, and I am directing in a general way.'' We are sure the friends of Brother Hardin, and of the Sunday-school work in Missouri, will join us in urging Brother Hardin to remain at his lakeside home until he is entirely able to resume his work with safety. Meantime, all should be earnest in their co-operation with Brother Bryan in carrying forward the work.

—E. B. Barnes, after three years in the evangelistic field, has settled with the church at Grand Rapids, Mich. Brother Barnes has been one of our most vigorous evangelists. He enters upon a field that will not be easy, yet the brethren are hopeful and enthusiastic over the prospect of a great work. The interest is growing and the young people are planning for an aggressive campaign. There have been several additions and a revival effort will be made in November. One young man, who will give himself to the work of the ministry, recently confessed Christ. The church supports Dr. Jennie Crozier in India, and the work at Muskegon to the extent of $400 per year. It is hoped that a more suitable building can be erected in the near future. Brother Barnes is having large congregations, notwithstanding the vacation season. The Fifth Avenue congregation recently had a meeting with some 35 additions. W. A. Bellamy is the minister there.

Behind on Receipts.

The Foreign Society is several thousand dollars behind in receipts on the year. This is a source of no little anxiety to us. We had confidently hoped that there would be a considerable increase. Many have worked hard for a great advance.

Complaints of hard times come from every quarter. Some churches have not responded with more than half as much as last year. Thousands of our people are out of employment on account of the money stringency. Not since 1893-94 have we had such a widespread complaint of money stringency. The political agitation, no doubt, helps also to divert attention.

In spite of all this, however, the churches have stood loyally by the work. There has been a small gain in the number of contributing churches, but a small loss in the receipts from the churches as churches. Many, however, have given far beyond all previous records. The loyal preachers have stood by the work in a most heroic way.

The greatest loss is in annuities. Many who expected to give on this plan have been unable to collect moneys coming to them or to turn property into cash.

There is yet time and opportunity to regain the present loss and turn apparent defeat into victory. There are already signs of renewed interest. During the first fifteen days of July there was a gain of fifty-nine contributing churches and 209 contributing Sunday-schools; and a gain in the regular receipts of $6,401. Many living link churches which have not sent in all their gifts, will yet rally and increase the receipts. Indeed, we have confidence that when the facts are known, all classes of churches will put forth a special effort to relieve the situation, and especially the churches that have given in former years, but have not responded this year. We are receiving many expressions of anxiety and genuine interest from friends on all hands.

It is known to many of the friends that some twenty new missionaries are under appointment and stand ready to go forth to their several fields in September, if the Executive Committee sees its way to send them. It will be a great disappointment to the workers on the fields and to those under appointment if they are not permitted to go.

As a matter of course, whatever is done, we must depend chiefly upon the leadership and vital interest of the preachers. We hope to hear from all classes of friends at an early date, that we may know how to plan the work toward the close of the year.

F. M. Rains,
S. J. Corey,
Secretaries.

Death of Mrs. Durban.

My Dear Brother Paul: Alas! that I should have to send you this tragic news. We are in deep waters.

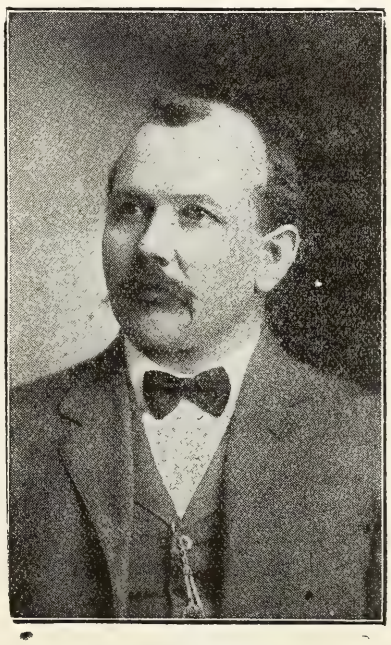
For forty-two years my darling wife has made my life a heaven on earth. I loved her with a kind of adoration. We were perfect lovers.

Our recent visit to America was not expected to end thus. For she was fairly well when we sailed from Liverpool on May 2. She fell sick about three weeks after arriving at Mr. Maxim's summer residence at Lake Hopatcong, N. J., but got better. Then she was ill during the voyage home, and on reaching Liverpool felt unequal to the journey to London, and I got her to Chester amongst kind old friends. The doctor in three days ordered an operation as the only chance, but after coming out from the chloroform she passed away in three hours, leaving me desolate indeed. In my beloved children she has left me a beautiful legacy of consolation, for which I thank God. Her sweet and gentle spirit has fled, but yet she will in a blessed sense ever be present with us.

My son Will went with us to America and remained with Lily and Mr. Maxim. Oh, how terrible their grief will be when they receive the news! I did not cable, for the shock would be too dreadful.

You, dear Paul, and yours know much of the bitterness of bereavement. I have thought much of all you have gone through in dark days. For me life can not be the same, for the brightest of all earthly lights has gone out. Fraternally your loving old friend,

William Durban.



J. E. Teaney.

Brother Teaney is the man who destroyed his stock of liquors, wines, etc., after his conversion by Evangelist Violett. He is now a student at Christian University, Canton, Mo., and is open for ministerial and lecture work.

A Christian Endeavor Revival.

A new idea in Christian Endeavor is being exploited in the First Christian Church, St. Louis. For four successive Sunday evenings plans have been made for what is called a Christian Endeavor revival, the services taking up the entire evening. On last Sunday evening the first meeting was held, with about 300 present and 31 additions to the society. Special topics, leaders and a large chorus were features. There were three additions to the church at the close of the service. All the lines of work at the First Church are holding up remarkably well in spite of summer weather and of the fact that the church has been without a pastor for four months. Earle Wilfley, the recently-called pastor, will find an unusually rich field awaiting him in September, when he is planning to take up the work.

An Open Door.

Just one month ago we opened up a new station among a mountain tribe, whose chief characteristic is gross ignorance. Two native evangelists were sent to begin the work. Last week one of them returned, giving the first report of their labors. At first both evangelists located in the same town. In a short time a school was opened with an enrollment of thirty-seven. The news spread. The leaders from another town visited the workers and urged them to open another school. The request was granted, and now we have the second school with an enrollment of twenty-five. In the latter town a building suitable for dwelling and school purposes has been provided by the inhabitants without price. They are anxious to have the gospel preached unto them. Now we are being urged to open other schools in this same region. We have the men, but not the means. While the Church of Christ is demonstrating her ability to carry on an aggressive Sunday-school campaign at home, will she not lift up her eyes and look on this great field where hundreds of young people may be brought to a knowledge of Christ? Help us to give to these young men and women the bread of life.

John Lord.

Vigan, P. I.

What's the Score?

Next to ''What Time Is It?'' this is the most frequent question heard in America. The children of this world, being wiser than the children of light, make elaborate preparations, at an enormous expense in telegraph, newspapers, bulletin boards and telephone calls, to give a prompt, accurate and reliable answer.

The Church of Christ is engaged in a transcendent conflict. The main thing, of course, is to press the battle to the gates. But it is well worth while, from time to time, to report the progress made. This encourages other churches. It inspires your own members. Somehow the victory seems more complete when we see it reported in print. And then it is helpful in many ways to have all the reports of all the churches gathered and tabulated, so that the entire progress of the cause can be seen at a glance. If there were anything wrong in statistics we should not read of three thousand and five thousand, and other numbers, in the book of Acts.

At this season of the year the state secretaries are endeavoring to gather the annual reports of all the churches. In addition to the many regular reasons for prompt response to their request, the interests of our Centennial make it highly important that every church and every member should be reported this year and next. Among other things, we hope to publish a Centennial Year Book containing not only the usual information, but much additional matter, including a complete list of churches.

If the representatives of any church have not received the annual report blanks from the state secretary, please write him at once and ask for them. Let everybody stand up and be counted. Let the perennial complaint about our statistics be removed by every one doing his part. The statistical secretary can only tabulate the information that comes to him. He is wholly dependent upon the state secretaries, as they are upon the churches.

W. R. Warren,
Centennial and Statistical Sec'y.

ANOTHER DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY

In our last issue appeared some account of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis. Another Indiana church, that at Vincennes, has also just celebrated its diamond anniversary. We regret that we have been unable, though we made the effort, to secure illustrations to picture the building and its pastor.

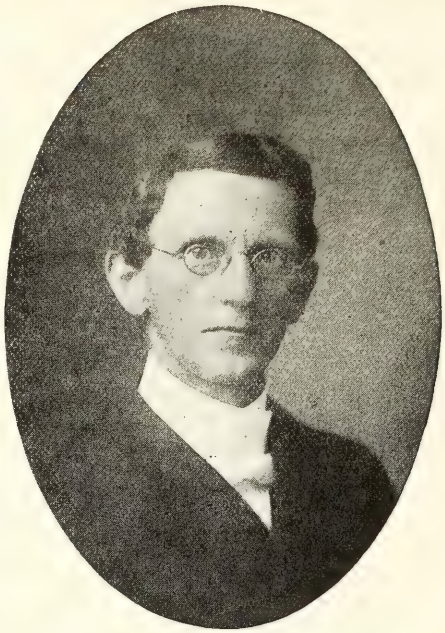
The anniversary day was June 21, and on that occasion William Oeschger, the present minister, preached a special sermon, during which he gave some sketch of the history of the congregation, basing his remarks upon the text 1 Samuel 7:12, his aim being to discover the divine aid, the stone of heavenly help in the past, and to point out the path that will merit it in the future.

T. J. Clark, who for twenty-two years was the minister of this congregation, preached a special sermon twenty-five years ago at the fiftieth anniversary. The present minister has been able to find more information about the early days, the source of this, for the most part, being the "Millennial Harbinger" of 1831 and 1834.

It appears that the first seeds of truth were sown by Alexander Campbell, through the "Harbinger" and the "Christian Baptist," and lodged in the heart and head of some of the members of the Mariah Creek Baptist Church, and especially one William Bruce. Out of this sowing came the Bruceville Christian church, organized in 1832. From there the "new thought" was carried to Vincennes, first through the "Millennial Harbinger," and then through the living messenger, Morris R. Trimble. The organization took place in June, 1833, nine persons covenanting together to take the scripture as their guide. By April of the following year the number had increased to 39. "We are much in need of proclaimers in this section," was the report of Ignatius Mattingley, the "Harbinger's" correspondent. This rapid growth did not, however, always continue. Just what were the causes that arrested the rapid numerical growth of the church would be difficult to say. But the fact remains that for forty years the membership of the church remained very small. Not until T. J. Clark became pastor of the church was there any marked increase in the numerical strength of the church. During his twenty-two years of faithful ministry many were added to the membership of the church. His pastorate was not marked by any specially great ingatherings, but there was a constant and healthy growth.

While J. N. Jessup was pastor of the church many were added to its membership. In one meeting alone 134 were added. During the ministry of the present pastor, which began March 1, 1900, seven revival meetings have been held, with good results. In addition to these ingatherings there have been many additions at the regular services. Thus, from this little band of nine, the congregation has grown in seventy-five years into a great body of believers.

Alongside of this numerical growth there has come a material growth equally great. This church, in its early day, was very poor. For fifteen years it did not have a house of its own in which to worship. The meetings were held in the different homes of the brethren for a long time. Sometimes the meetings were held in the courthouse and in the old city hall. The first regular meeting place was in the home of H. D. Wheeler, who fitted up a room in his own house for the use of the church. It was an upstairs room. The building in which it was still stands. It is the old building that stands across from the rolling mill on the corner of Harrison and Park streets. In 1846 the church bought a plot of ground on North Second street, between Perry and Buntin streets. The purchase price, $200, had to be borrowed, and was not paid back until eleven years later, when the church sold off fifteen feet of the original plot for $225, with which it paid off the $200 loan and the interest that had accumulated. In 1848, after two years of hard work, the congregation dedicated a small house of worship. This was later on built onto, during the pastorate of T. J. Clark. From that house the congregation passed, on August 28, 1904, into its present beautiful temple of worship.



T. J. CLARK,
Who Served this Congregation Twenty-two Years.

But more to be appreciated than numerical and material growth, is the spiritual growth that has been made. In its early history the church's spiritual ministrations were very much limited. One of the chief functions of a church is to have the gospel constantly preached. This spiritual ministration was sparingly administered in the early days of the church. For many years the preaching of the church was intermittent. For thirty years the church had no regular stationed pastor. It depended on an itinerant ministry for its preaching. Not until the year 1865 did the congregation employ a man to give all of his time to the service of the church. From that time to this the church has never been long without a regular pastor. For thirty years the entire spiritual activity of the church was expressed through the social meeting, with its communion service, and its occasional preaching ministration. This single spiritual ministration has had a wonderful expansion. To-day the word of God is preached every Sunday; there is the Sunday-school, with its great teaching force; a great C. W. B. M.; young peoples' societies, with their gracious ministries; weekly prayer services. Once this church could not raise enough money to have the gospel preached once a month. Now it has it preached every Sunday at home, and every Sunday on a foreign field by its living link missionary, S. G. Inman, in Mexico. Once the church had two elders and a few deacons; now it has a great body of godly men who are serving in this spiritual capacity. Once there were scarcely enough people in the church to carry a tune. To-day it has a great number of sweet singers and a great band who make a joyful noise unto the Lord on the organ and on instruments that neither David nor our fathers ever dreamed of seeing used to praise the Lord. So great has been the growth that another church has been organized out of this church, which is now stronger, numerically, materially and spiritually, than this church was thirty years after it was organized.

THE PROBLEM OF THE FUTURE.

In his sermon on the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Vincennes Christian Church, William Oeschger, the minister, spoke the following words that deserve the attention of a much wider audience than the local congregation:

What of the future? That is the question that we must meet. The past—with its victories and defeats, is forever fixed. The present is our concern. What is the real problem that confronts us in the years that lie before us? The problem is not how to secure more members, nor is it that of more means for supplying the material needs of the church. These are all secondary matters. The heart of our problem is, "How to conduct ourselves so as to merit the help and favor of God." In connection with this problem the crucial test will be, "Can we stand prosperity?" Will worldly riches, social prestige and political honors turn our minds and hearts from God unto the world? As the families in the church rise in affluence and wealth, will the children be carried away from the spiritual grasp of the church into the death-gripping vice of worldliness? Shall the children in our best homes be lost to the church through the deadly allurements of worldly pleasures? The next twenty-five years will give the answer. What will the answer be? I fear worldliness as I do the poison of an adder. Just to the degree that worldliness enters a church, God leaves it. To those that are laboring to build up this spiritual temple, I say, ponder well the words of the Psalmist when he says, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." The greatest assets that this church, or any other church, can have, are not wealth, social prestige nor political honors; but simply men and women who serve as temples for the indwelling of the Spirit of the living God.

Deserving of Success.

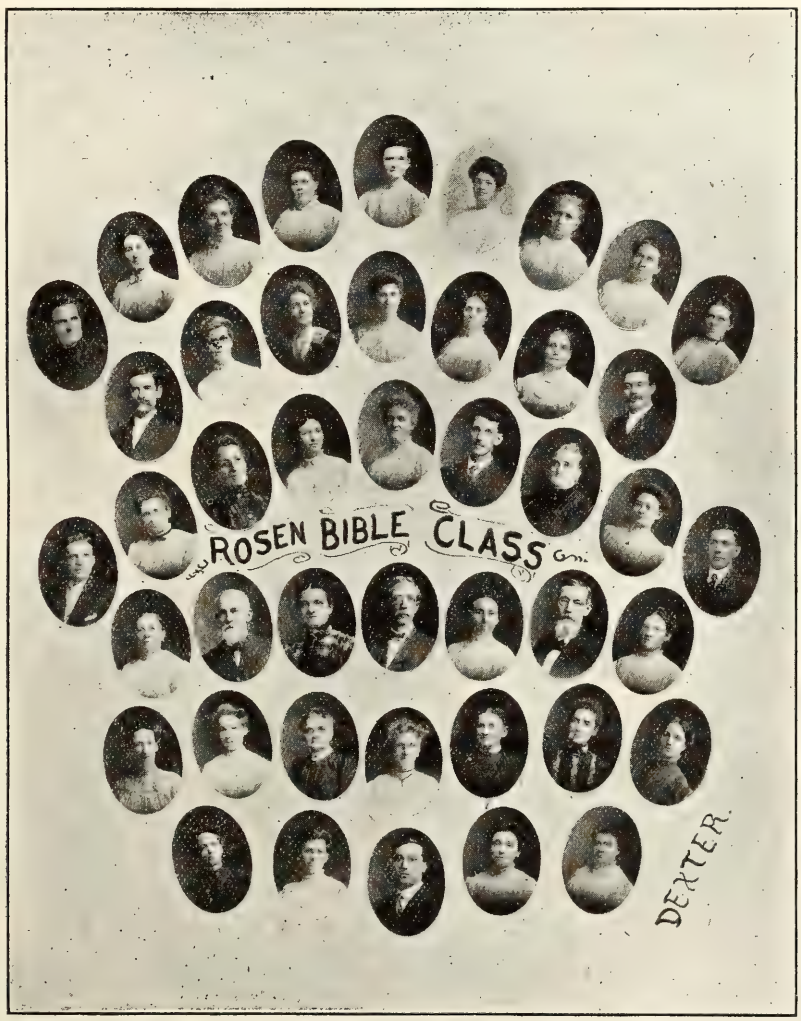
The marvelous growth of Borden's Condensed Milk Company is due to unceasing vigilance in observing rigid sanitary regulations in the manufacture of their products. Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Peerless Brank Evaporated Milk (unsweetened) have received highest awards wherever exhibited.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

The Rosen Bible Class.

The Rosen Bible class of the First Christian Church, of McKeesport, Pa., formerly known as "No. 9," was started in the summer of 1901. It was at first composed of married men only, six in all, who, after forming the class, chose Mrs. Jos. E. Weddle as their teacher. May 4, 1905, it became an organization, claiming the distinction of being the first organized class in the church, and has since been known as the Rosen Bible class. To the class the name "Rosen" signifies "faithfulness," being chosen in honor of Dr. D. F. Rosen, the efficient superintendent of the Bible school and also a member of the organization, whose marked characteristic is faithfulness. It is now a mixed class of men and women, with only a few exceptions members of the church, many of whom are so situated that it means a sacrifice for them to attend the morning Bible school session.



Quite a number of members were transferred to other classes during the last two years, when our school was being graded, owing to the fact that the class was composed of those who varied considerable in age. The present enrollment is 58.

The three standing committees of the class are, membership or lookout, flower and social. Present officers are: President, L. W. Patterson; vice-president, Mrs. Alice Bilby; secretary, Mrs. William Tennant; treasurer, Mrs. I. N. Folks. The class colors are gold and white; class pin, a three-leaf clover of gold and white enamel, containing R. B. C., each letter on the separate leaf.

The Rosen Bible class has not only greatly aided the church financially, but has also supported for two years a sewing teacher in the White Street Mission Industrial School, this year furnishing the teacher herself in one of its members. The entire class is now taking the teacher training course, and belongs to the International Sunday-school Association.

The success of the class, as it seems to the writer, may be attributed to three reasons: The class spirit, or organization, the faithful work of the members, and the teacher's consecrated and untiring efforts for its welfare. Mrs. Weddle, though one of the busiest women of the church, active in all its undertakings, yet finds time during the week to call on the absentees and attends to her class duties as well. She possesses not only the treasure of a sterling Christian character, but also a loving, sympathetic, motherly nature that has won and held for the class not only the young man with a genial face, who later became the first president of the Baraca class, but likewise the dear silver-haired lady who, though not a regular member, is furnished with a quarterly every Sunday, and whose generous contribution finds its way at timely intervals into the treasury, and who is thus kept in touch with the school and its work. In her daily life, this Bible school teacher is so situated that she comes in contact with young men and women who are away from home, and it is there that she has proved herself a power for the church, in ever embracing the opportunity offered, doing the Master's work.

A. Christine Vasicek.

McKeesport, Pa.

Studies of the Books of the Bible.

The first year's work in the Advanced Teacher Training course is announced under the above title. Send now for the prospectus, containing a sample lesson and a special advance subscription offer. The book contains fifty lessons and will be published September 1.

A Delta Alpha Class.

What is now known as the Delta Alpha Class of the First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., was originally Class No. 7. In the beginning, probably in the year 1901 there were two young women in the class and others joined from time to time until at the end of the year the total membership was probably ten or twelve. We continued to grow steadily but moderately up to the time of our class organization on October 9, 1904, and at that time we had present 23 and a total membership of 45. The record of our progress would be about as follows:

TOTAL MEMBERSHIP.
1901	2
1902	10
1903	20
1904 (October)	45
1905 (December)	73
1906 (December)	144
1907 (December)	220
1908 (April)	330

In our present total membership we include those who have been members of the class and for various reasons are no longer active members and are now entered as honorary members. There are now 75 on this list, leaving 255 active members.

On July 28 we moved into a new and very commodious church building where we have had favorable opportunities for growth and usefulness. Before this time we had no Sunday-school room and were laboring under serious difficulties, where it was almost impossible to do good work or make much progress. We are now a well-organized force of Christian workers and are trying to do all we can for the church, the Sunday-school and the cause of Christ generally.

F. M. Robinson.

Very Valuable.

This is to tell you how very valuable we have found Marion Stevenson's Teacher Training Handbook. Our people are delighted with the logical method of presenting the great truths about and of the Bible. Our Official Board has been so pleased with the book and the idea of teacher training, that on last Lord's day they recommended that all our efforts be centered on this one department of the Bible school until all the church should be made alive with the spirit of it. Personally, I know of no book which so successfully meets all the requirements of this work.

Paris, Mo. Frank W. Allen.

Australia and the Centennial.

On behalf of the churches of Christ throughout the commonwealth of Australia, I am authorized by the Federal Conference to lay before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the matter of our proposed centenary celebration as arranged for April, 1909.

Sydney, the capital of the mother state, New South Wales, and home of the first of our churches in Australia, has been selected as the place at which these celebrations will be focused.

Recognizing, as we do, the value of the simple and far-reaching statement of Thomas Campbell, "when the Bible speaks we speak, and where the Bible is silent we are silent" as a means of breaking down the division of Christendom and consolidating scriptural churches, we hold out our hand to you, our brethren in one common cause. In our time of rejoicing and thanksgiving, we wish to strengthen the bonds of Christian kinship not only throughout Australia, but also with our parents in the far-off lands of America and Britain. We admit the fatherhood of the American churches, who have, from time to time, sent us sturdy preachers of the gospel, while we owe much to the constant nursing of the faithful ones who came to our shores, bringing with them the strong principles of the churches of the motherland. As a result of this combination, we think we have, in a measure, inherited the earnest desire of the mother for the restoration of the old things, together with the father's overwhelming wish for the union of the followers of Jesus Christ.

In this spirit of union we now stand, both geographically and ecclesiastically, between our parents, and hold out a hand to each. Perchance in grasping the hand of the one and the other, we may make their hands to touch, thus arousing a thrill of kinship which will cause the circle of comradeship to be completed by the joining of hands across the Atlantic. We trust that even now the dictum, the centenary of whose utterance we are about to commemorate, may be applied, in all its force, to both the internal and the external affairs of our churches and achieve a consolidation that will astonish the world.

Within a few weeks of this reaching you, the kinship of our races may be most strikingly emphasized by the visit to our shores of the great American fleet and the ensigns of England, America and Australia intertwined in political fellowship. This union of hearts is, however, as nothing compared to the spiritual fellowship that should cement the souls of those who have rallied around the gospel banner of love and have pledged themselves in unquestioning obedience to one common Lord.

It is still too soon to give a detailed statement as to the centennial celebrations proposed, the purpose of this communication being mainly to enlist your sympathy. We welcome to this land of sunshine any members of your churches who can spare the time and cost of such a visit. We would release them in good time for your own commemorative convention in September, at which convention you may expect to see some of your fellow-workers from Australia.

In the meantime, please keep this matter well before you and let us hope that the world-wide fellowship, in which we may in God's good providence participate at that time, will be a foretaste of the eternal fellowship of heaven.

On behalf of the Australian Federal Conference Committee

Alan Price, Press Agent.

How Our National Budget is Prepared.

["The Review of Reviews" for July, of course, has its articles on Bryan. But there is a general assortment, too, worth while. Especially topical are the articles on Quebec, the New Methodist Bishops and the "Government as a Spender." From the latter article we make an extract.]

Congress, holding the pursestrings, has determined the national disbursements for the fiscal year of 1908-1909. The procedure was begun last September, when official by official, bureau by bureau, department by department, contributed to building up the book of estimates, till it comprised 700 broad pages of federal print. When the Secretary of the Treasury, in December, dispatched wagon-loads of those documents to the Capitol, they constituted formal and official notice that almost $1,1000,000,000 would be required of Congress at that session for the maintenance of the national government. . . . Treasury officials are at a loss for descriptions that will bring the billion-dollar term within the average mental grasp. The sum will require every penny from customs, internal taxes, and postal supplies. It will also drain low the quarter-billion reservoir of surplus. It is almost one-third of all the money in the land, more than half the value of all the cargoes and carloads of annual exports, and only $200,000,000 less than the value of all our imports. A billion of money in twenty-dollar yellow backs would weigh over seventy tons. Compactly stacked against the Washington Monument, they would make twenty-five separate piles, 550 feet high, reaching from the monument's foundation to its very top. To count a billion silver dollars, the best Treasury expert, working eight hours every business day, would require a century and three years more. Where will all this money go? It was appropriated through fourteen great supply bills, under more or less arbitrary classifications. The disbursements, however, may be roughly grouped in three grand divisions, as follows:

Postal Service	$225,000,000
Military Service	500,000,000
Other government service	225,000,000

SWISS FARM COLONIES.

The Few Simple Propositions Upon Which Their Success Depends.

[The July "Century" is a good number. Much of its space is devoted to articles on the business interests of the country. But the fiction side is strong, too. We make an extract from Edmond Kelly's "Employment for the Unemployed."]

The success of the Swiss farm colonies depends upon a few simple propositions: That although it is difficult to make money out of land, it is easy to secure a living from land; that everybody who is not infirm can, under directions, soon be fitted to do remunerative work on land; that, thanks to recent improvements in agriculture, many more men can be supported per acre of land to-day than a few years ago; that work on land is physically and morally regenerating.

The Swiss have adopted a system of small farms, each farm occupying no more than 300 men, thus making it possible for the director to be acquainted individually with every one of them. The industries on these farms are relatively insignificant, and are only there for the purpose of giving employment to those who are unfitted for agricultural work, and during those months of the year where little work can be done in the field. The surveillance, instead of being confided to an expensive soldiery, is confided to farm-hands, who not only exercise a sound and moral influence over the inmates, but incidentally earn their wages by the work they do on the land.

Moreover, the Swiss have discovered how indispensable it is that by the side of every forced labor colony for tramps there be also a free labor colony for the unemployed. Nothing interferes more with the discipline of a tramp colony than the presence there of innocent unemployed, who tend to relax the discipline necessary for the tramp, and nothing is more unjust to the unemployed than to put them in daily and hourly contact with the tramp. Also, the character of the discipline necessary in the one case is totally different from that needed in the other. The tramp needs some severity and even coercion; the unemployed, on the contrary, needs only just such regulation as is indispensable in every factory or farm. In Switzerland, therefore, the colonies where discipline and coercion are used are confined to tramps and misdemeanants, and the free labor colonies are open to the unemployed, who, in lieu of discipline and coercion, find ordinary factory regulations an encouragement. At Witzwyl, too, a very interesting experiment has been tried. Around the forced labor colonies is a collection of farms to which the inmates of the forced colonies are encouraged to go when their term has expired. At these farms a fair wage is paid; and, being removed from the temptations of town life, the inmates of the forced colonies have an opportunity of doing work under virtually free conditions, and thus completing the self-discipline necessary to fit them for restoration to the community at large. The forced labor colonies have in some cantons been so adroitly managed as to be self-supporting. This can not be claimed for the free labor colonies, which contain too large a proportion of infirm to permit of their paying expenses; but the expense of the free colonies is relatively small.

A Year's Work at Fort Wayne.

The work at the Third Church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., was begun by the earnest efforts of Brother E. W. Allen, now of Wichita, Kan. A lot 50x150 was purchased and a rough board tabernacle was built. Later an excavation 48x50 was made and cement walls built. Had Brother Allen remained, he would have been able to have carried his splendid work on to completion. But after his departure the work was without any one regularly for nearly two years. Our state evangelist, T. J. Legg, was asked to hold a meeting. The good work of Brother Legg resulted in an organization of sixty-eight members, on the first of April, 1907. Upon his advice the church called H. E. Stafford, of the Third Church, New Castle, Pa. Brother Stafford took charge July 14, 1907. He found fifty-nine active members, a Bible school of forty regular attendants, an active Ladies' Aid Society, a hole on the back end of the lot, a rough building in the front, and a mortgage of $1,000 on the property. His first plan was to pay off the mortgage by starting to build. It worked well. The mortgage was burned, the building completed and dedicated by January 19. Z. T. Sweeney dedicated; he asked for $1,000 and received $1,600. During the year a splendid financial system has been introduced; every missionary offering has been observed; a C. W. B. M. organized; the church membership increased to eighty; the Bible school to 140 regulars, having four organized classes, in which many young ladies and men have been interested; a Bible training class during the week; class on mission study (by Mrs. Stafford); about $2,800 raised in cash and $1,000 in pledges. A meeting was held by Brother Stafford at Metz, Ind., and the church at Mooresville received his services every Sunday afternoon. There he had many additions. The church here has called him for another year.

Ed Shelleberger, Clerk.

People's Forum

Stopping the Leakage.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I have been much interested in the articles by Ward Russell and others in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on "Stopping the Leakage," and I crave permisison to offer one or two suggestions.

The church letter method of holding removals is absolutely inadequate. People ove to localities where we have no churches. Take western Canada, for example. Our churches are as seldom found as the proverbial "hen's teeth," or white blackbirds. At the Buffalo convention in 1906, C. S Medbury told me that he thought it was putting the matter conservatively to say that 1,000 disciples had moved into western Canada, during the year, from Iowa alone, yet our total membership in western Canada, at the present time, is less than 1,000. If these Iowans carried letters they did not find churches to which to present them. But even where there is a church established, the matter of seeing that one gets into touch with it throws considerable responsibility upon the secretary of the church granting the letter. To do the matter right, he must have the name and address of the secretary or pastor of the church to which the letter goes; he must have, and be willing to use, a copy of the Year Book; he must be willing to write, sometimes, two or three personal letters; he must, in short, be a secretary who is qualified and willing to perform the duties of his office. If secretaries were always elected because of their fitness for the office, the problem would be very much simplified; but how many secretaries are so elected? It is sheer folly to depend on unprompted church secretaries to do their duty in this matter; but that is what we depend on when we rely on the letter system.

Last year I proposed to our western Canada board a plan which I believe would overcome the difficulty, if generally adopted. The board endorsed it, and I sent the proposal by letter to the state secretaries, at the Norfolk convention. I believe it reached the latter too late, and most of the letters were returned to me by the postoffice. After the Norfolk convention, the matter was dropped, as negotiations with the Baptists, looking to the unification of our mission work with theirs left us very uncertain as to what form our future work in western Canada would take.

My plan is as follows: Whenever a removal takes place, let the secretary of the church notify the state secretary, giving all the particulars. The state secretary can then notify the church that receives the removing person; or, if the removal be into another state or province, he can notify the secretary of that state or province, and he, in turn, notify the church. Each state secretary should also report annually to the A. C. M. S. the number of these inter-state, or intra-state removals, and whatever other particulars experience may prove to be necessary, so that a fairly accurate idea may be had of the movement of our population.

I am aware that this plan, like every other advance in organization, must overcome certain objections. Two of these may be considered, as follows:

1. It tends to give the missionary societies undue influence in the churches. If this should be found to be true it would still pay to put the plan into operation, though it might be necessary to create a separate bureau, independent of the missionary societies.

2. It would give the state secretaries too much work, and most of them are already overburdened. I admit that in some of the states the secretaries would have to have clerical help. I submit that the state societies in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and perhaps others, should all have offices, and one or two clerks, right now. It would pay them. Suppose it does involve the employment of one or two extra clerks for the whole country. In my own opinion, the whole scheme would involve an expense, for the whole country, of not less than $2,500 per year. I claim that the saving, in money alone, to the churches and missionary societies would greatly exceed this sum. Every disciple who severs his congregational connection ceases to be a contributor; every such connection saved is so much money saved. And this, too, is taking no account of our great business of saving souls. Twenty-five hundred persons saved to us in this way, being average contributors to all our work of $1 each, would pay the expense of the whole plan.

Following are some of the reasons:

1. The state secretary, either directly or through the district secretaries, can, more nearly than anyone else, keep the church secretary up to his work. Occasional letters to the churches will bring out information as to any removals, except where the church secretaries are incorrigible.

2. It will enable the missionary societies to understand much more readily what cities and what parts of the country are swallowing up our brethren.

3. It will tend to make the individual removing less careless to know that there is someone keeping track of him.

4. It will solve the "isolated disciple" problem, to the extent of informing, at first hand, the state or provincial society as to just where that disciple is.

5. It will enable the societies in receiving districts, like western Canada, New Mexico, or the city of New York, to form a pretty accurate idea of how many disciples are coming their way, and where enough of them are located to form the nuclei of churches.

6. More accurate information concerning the real standing of a man in the church can often be conveyed in this way than the church officers feel safe in putting into the letter given to the man himself. I am confident the churches will fall in readily with this plan, if the state societies will take it up. I do not claim that it will solve the whole difficulty. No plan will do that unless every church adopts it. But it will solve the difficulty in very many places.

Alex. McMillan.

Yellow Grass, Sask.

Two new buildings will be erected at Miami University, the large institution supported by the state of Ohio at Oxford and under the presidency of Dr. Guy Potter Benton. These will be the Carnegie Library and the Normal College Administration Building. The large and handsome general administration building for the university built last year was occupied early in the spring. At a recent meeting of the trustees the resignation of Dr. E. D. Hepburn was accepted, and the unusual honor was paid him of electing him Professor Emeritus of English for life. He has been for many years Professor of English, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Vice-President of the university. Next year the university will celebrate its first century of existence.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
PREACHERS' SUPPLIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

Church Furnishings and Supplies

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Made of several materials and in many designs
Send for full particulars and catalogue No. 27. Give the number of communicants and name of church. "The Lord's Supper takes on a new dignity and beauty by the use of the individual cup"—J. K. WILSON, D. D.
GEO. H. SPRINGER, Manager,
256-258 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

BELLS BUCKEYE BELLS, CHIMES and PEALS are known the world over for their full rich tone, durability and low prices. Write for catalog and estimate. Established 1837.
The E. W. Vanduzen Co., 419 E. 2d St., Cincinnati, O.

New S. S. Songs for 1908
Joy and Praise
By Wm. J. Kirkpatrick and J. H. Fillmore.
Up-to-date in ideas. The best ever. FREE sample pages. Returnable book mailed.
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE, 528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O. or 41-43 Bible House, New York.

WICKS PIPE ORGAN CO.
Manufacturers of
HIGH GRADE CHURCH ORGANS
L. SPENGEL, President — O. GEISMANN, Secretary
L. J. WICK, Vice President — J. F. WICK, Treasurer
S. W. BIHR, Manager
Office and Factory
HIGHLAND, - - ILLINOIS
Correspondence solicited

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References. Correspondence Solicited

Historical Geography of Bible Lands
We can now sell this splendid work by the great geographer, John B. Calkin, M. A., for $1.15, post paid. It contains 180 pages, besides 14 accurate maps. This should be in the library of every preacher and all other students. Order before this edition is exhausted. Another may not be so low priced.
The Christian Publishing Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Mexico's National Convention.

The Federation of Young People's Societies and Sunday-schools has just closed at Torreon, Coahuila, one of its most remarkable gatherings. At these annual meetings workers from all the different denominations in the republic come together in convention to plan for larger work and receive inspiration. The Torreon convention will go down in our history as one of the greatest on account of two things, that of Christian union and the evangelistic spirit manifested.

Rev. George C. Levering, of the Friends' Mission, spoke on "What Practical Methods Can We Take for the Union of the Ecclesiastical Bodies of the Country?" which was a practical study of the situation of denominationalism in Mexico to-day, aided by answers to a list of questions that had been sent to almost all the Christian workers. These answers showed an almost unanimous desire for union, but a majority of them expressed the belief that it would not be possible for Baptists, Friends and Presbyterians to live together in one ecclesiastical organization. Mr. Levering's paper was well received and proved a discussion which showed that at least those present at the convention were most heartily in favor of immediate steps to be taken to consummate the union, although all realized it must be of slow growth. A committee, consisting of one member from each of the churches represented, was appointed to present the matter to each of these ecclesiastical bodies, asking them to appoint a committee with power to act in forming a federation of all.

One of the most prominent delegates was Sr. Valiente y Poso, a former priest of wide experience both in the old world and Mexico, now pastor of the Methodist Church of San Luis Potosi. On Saturday night he spoke on "Why I Left the Catholic Church?" to an audience of 1,500 people, about half of whom were Catholics. The audience was profoundly impressed with his evident sincerity, his love for all men, and his desire to state the truth, not to wound feelings. The next morning he was announced to preach at one of the churches, but it was decided to change the meeting to the theater, so as to give all a chance to hear him. Early Sunday morning the following notice was thrown broadcast over the streets of Torreon: "Important Notice! To-day the performances that the Messrs. Protestants have been giving in the Theater Richardo de la Vega ceases, and beginning to-morrow we will publish a series of leaflets in which we propose to picture exactly and minutely Protestantism and its sects from the miserable Luther down to the last one of these apostles." Our indomitable Sein, secretary of the Mexican Sunday-school Union, headed a committee that waited on the signer of the announcement, and asked for a public discussion in the theater, offering to set aside the program of the day for this purpose, but of course this was not accepted, the excuse being that permission from higher authorities would have to be secured for this, and this was not possible at present. At the conclusion of Sr. Valiente y Poso's address Sunday morning the venerable Arcadio Morales, the Moody of Mexico, gave an invitation and some fifty people came to the platform to declare their desire to unite with some evangelical church.

In the afternoon the theater was the scene of another great meeting. It was open and spontaneous without any set program, where all were asked to testify for Christ and renew their vows of consecration. Never before has one of our conventions witnessed such a meeting. It was a constant reminder of some of the gatherings in the Welsh revival a few years ago, as we have heard it described. Often there were five or six praying at once, and at other times several different songs being sung at the same time. And yet this impressed one, not as being a conglomeration, but as the manifest presence of the Spirit. Dr. Morales again closed this session by an invitation, which was accepted by about seventy people. The last meeting of this, one of the greatest days in the history of the evangelical churches in Mexico, was the consecration meting, which left all on the mountain top, but determined to return to the valley of service with renewed enthusiasm and power.

The Disciples were well represented by delegates from Monterey, San Luisito, Saltillo, Sabinas and Cuidad Porfirio Diaz, and had a prominent part on the program.

A Happy Day in Idaho.

June 28 was a great day for the church at Weiser. I was called to assist in rededicating the house of worship. An enlargement was made necessary by the great meeting held there by the Clarke family, in which there were 123 additions. The work at Weiser has moved steadily forward since we secured J. P. Woodley as the pastor. Brother Woodley had it in his plans to re-enter school this fall, but yielded to the urgent call from the church to remain with them, and we took pledges for the salary in a few moments at the close of the evening services. For years the work at Weiser has been a life or death struggle, and it was a relief to us to look into the faces of the large congregation and contrast it with the little handful of discouraged people we met there sixteen months before for the first time. They are now able to get along without our help, and we will take up other points.

B. F. Clay has moved to Nampa and will give his whole time to that work. Earnest E. Jones has lately located at Meridian for the summer. The secretary is taking his vacation, but while enjoying the mountain and shade, he is carrying on his heart the care of all the churches and hopes to inaugurate a great campaign this fall for the election of Jesus the Christ to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords in South Idaho. Who will vote for him?

Frank E. Jones,
Cor. Sec. of S. Idaho.

Caldwell, Ida.

Oregon Convention.

The Oregon Christian Missionary convention met at Turner, Ore., June 22, and continued ten days. The title is a misnomer, since there is a ministerial institute, besides the conventions of the C. W. B. M., Bible School Association, Education Day, and Christian Endeavor Day. It was a great gathering, marked by utmost harmony and good will.

President E. V. Zollars, of Enid, Okla., was the principal speaker. His addresses were a great uplift to the convention. W. J. Wright, of Cincinnati, gave an address that was especially inspiring to preachers. The Church Extension address of J. L. Greenwell, of Seattle, Wash., was one of the best addresses of the many good ones which were as mighty levers to lift us to a purer and more truthful plain of life. It was a real missionary convention, the influence of which will be felt even beyond the bounds of Oregon.

Among the notable visitors were Dr. Royal J. Dye and wife, of Bolenge, Africa, and Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Emporia, Kan. There were about seventy-five preachers in attendance, which is a good showing for a state that has but few over a hundred preachers.

There were 692 additions reported for the last year by state and district missionaries, a large increase over the preceding year. The good work of the Eugene Bible University was manifest in various ways. Of the 75 ministers present, 31 were either graduates or students of that worthy institution. When Dr. Dye and wife made their impassioned appeal for means and missionaries, $2,130 were pledged, and 31 volunteers for foreign service were enrolled. About half of these were of this student body. With a grand new building and a larger corps of teachers, we look for very much greater results under the able management of Pres. E. C. Sanderson.

P. P. Underwood.

Boyd, Oreg.

We have just closed one of the grandest and largest conventions Oregon ever had. The brethren of the state with one accord join in gratitude to President E. V. Zollars for the great good he has done by coming and visiting our state.

Dr. and Mrs. Royal Dye's work among us has started a movement which is to end in the Oregon disciples placing a steamboat on the Congo for the use of the mission. It is to bear the name "Oregon." It will cost $15,000, and $2,140 of this was raised at the convention.

W. J. Wright spoke for us several times and always to the point. Davis Errett was re-elected president of our State Board, and C. F. Swander, of McMinnville, Oregon, was elected Corresponding Secretary to succeed F. E. Billington, who has so courageously filled that office for the past three years.

The C. W. B. M., the C. E. and the Bible school each had their time in the convention and all are in prosperous condition. Mrs. Clara G. Esson, of Portland, was elected traveling Bible school Evangelist for this coming year. On the last Lord's day, thirty-one young people pledged themselves as volunteers for the foreign field. This was a grand culmination for our convention.

We are justly proud of the progress made in our state. But with God's help and a greater degree of consecration on our part, we will do more in the future.

Geo. R. Whipple,
Press Committeeman for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

North Carolina.

The State Board, through "The Carolina Evangel," is asking the churches of the state to help the brethren at Wilmington secure their lot and build a tabernacle. The lot costs them $5,000. It is well located. They now meet in a plain tabernacle on a rented lot. Wilmington is one of the most important cities in the state. Let any one who reads this, who can do so, send help to W. A. DeCover, Church Clerk, Wilmington, N. C., or W. G. Walker, Cor. Sec., Wilson, N. C. The congregation at Wilmington is only a little over a year old. They enroll 140 members, but have little money. Judge J. A. Erwin is the preacher.—We hear good reports of the work of C. C. Jones, late of Washington, D. C. in Newbern.—President J. C. Caldwell, of Atlantic Christian College, is visiting various churches. He hopes for a large attendance of young men at the college this fall. Misses Fannie and Myrtie Harper, two of the teachers, are taking a summer course at the University of Virginia.—On one day recently H. H. Ambrose baptized twenty candidates at Farmville.—At Winston-Salem we reached our apportionment of $30 on Children's Day. Had fine program. The Y. W. M. C. had a Centennial rally at night and got $4.30 in their collection. We also sent $10 this week to the Board of Ministerial Relief for the aged ministers. The ladies have recently put new pulpit chairs in the church.—G. F. Cuthrell had one added at Wilson's Mills in a short meeting and one at regular services at Dunn.—O. J. Helsabeck is with Dr. Bitting at Stockdale in a meeting.—I expect to spend part of August at Bethany Beach, Del. Those who love the sea will find delightful bathing and brethren and friends who are congenial there. Come to the sea!

J. A. Hopkins.

Winston-Salem, N. C.

New Church Home Dedicated at Corona, California.

June 21 was the time of our dedication. It will long be remembered by the church here. The work has been difficult. For years the church has struggled along in an inferior building and on a side street. But now we have a modern, convenient building and the best location in town. The new property cost us $4,500. We needed $1,000 to clear us of debts. As the members are all poor, no one thought we could raise the amount needed; but when the smoke of battle cleared away, we had over $1,200 in good pledges. The Church Extension Board had granted us a loan of $1,000, but we will not need it now. Our much loved C. C. Chapman, President of our State Board, was master of ceremonies. He did his part well and we were all proud of him. Grant K. Lewis was with us in the evening and did us all good. His masterful address was a fitting climax of the day's service. We all love Brother Lewis and are always glad when we can have him with us.

This makes two new churches I have helped build in the last five years. The former one was at Waitsburg, Wash. But it required more courage to undertake this one than the former one. I am closing my second year with the church here.

W. T. Adams.

Dedication of the First Church, Tacoma, Wash.

Sunday, June 21, was a great day, not only for the Disciples of Christ in the city of Tacoma, but for the entire Pacific coast, for the new building, dedicated on that day, is perhaps the very best among our people west of Kansas City. There are doubtless churches in the East that cost more, but certainly none so serviceable and attractive. The fact that the First Church in Tacoma cost only $40,000, is due more to the fact that the membership assumed much of the work and oversight, than to cheapness in labor or material. It is built of handsome gray stone, somewhat on the same plan as the Independence Boulevard Church in Kansas City. The location is 6th and K streets, at the intersection of two of the main street car lines in the city.

W. A. Moore, the pastor, is a man of great faith, untiring energy, and tremendous resources. It was the unanimous desire of the church that he should preach the dedicatory sermon, and he certainly proved himself equal to the occasion. The Central Church at Tacoma and the First Church held a union all-day session. The total amount of money raised on that day was was $18,250—more than three thousand dollars above the amount actually needed to cover all present indebtedness.

We are praising God for still greater victories ahead in this beautiful and rapidly-growing coast city. The Disciples of Christ in Tacoma are not only united among themselves, but are enabled to teach and practice Christian union among their religious neighbors to an extent that is seldom possible in large cities. F. H. Groom,
Pastor Central Christian Church.

The Work at Flora, Ind.

Our work in this most pleasant field is moving along very nicely. We have a membership of 220 and they are the very best of people. Our choir, the best in town, is composed mostly of young people, and they are all good Christians, too. Our meeting with home forces came to an abrupt end at the close of the second week, because of the sickness of the writer—a sickness that at first promised to be typhoid fever. I am about able to again be about my work as usual. There was a most excellent interest and attendance when we closed. I believe we would have had a big meeting if we could have continued a week or two longer. There were two additions by confession. Also two before the meeting, by reclamation, not previously reported.

The teacher training class, started by A. B. Houze, my predecessor, has finished the course and passed a successful examination. The grades were good, ranging from 80 per cent to 97 1-2. This is the first class to take the training course in the county. While I had but little to do with the class (I was with it two months), yet I feel proud of it. We are going to make a strenuous effort to start a class September 1 with a membership of 100.

The C. W. B. M. is taking on new life. There are frequent additions and the meetings are well attended and interesting. There is a healthy growth along all lines—the missionary offerings also.

F. L. Davis, minister.

Oklahoma.

The State Board has provided for the organization of the state into eleven missionary districts. Seven of these are to be in Western Oklahoma. The organization of the First district was effected at Enid, May 28. The counties of this district are: Garfield, Grant, Kay, Noble and Alfalfa. There are forty-nine church buildings in the district, with nearly as many schoolhouse organizations. The officers elected are: President, W. S. Rehorn, Enid; vice-president, J. G. Chapman, Cherokee; corresponding secretary, J. A. Shoptaugh, Enid; treasurer, Stacy S. Phillips, Ponca City. The executive committee is composed of the above officers and Randolph Cook, of Enid, and Prof. O. L. Lyon, of Enid. This strong district will be an efficient promoter of Oklahoma Christian University.

The Second district is composed of the following counties: Logan, Payne, Pawnee and Osage. This organization was effected at a convention held at Guthrie, July 7. The officers are: President, Virtes Williams, Stillwater; vice-president, M. T. Ingraham, Pawnee, corresponding secretary, E. M. Chester, Guthrie. The executive committee is composed of the above officers, together with J. W. Garner, of Perkins, and E. M. Dempsie, of Pawhuska. This district has an evangelist in the person of W. D. James, who is supported by the Guthrie church.

The Fourth district is composed of Canadian, Kingfisher, Caddo, Blaine and Majors. The officers are: President, O. L. Smith, El Reno; corresponding secretary, C. M. Bliss. George T. Thomas is the district evangelist.

In the Fifth district the counties are: Comanche, Kiowa, Tillman, Jackson and Greer. The organization was effected May 8, at a convention at Snyder, with the following officers: President, W. A. Curtis, Hobart; vice-president, H. C. Stubblefield, Lawton; corresponding secretary, J. W. Mansell, Hobart; treasurer, Clarence Donart, Altus.

The Third, Sixth and Seventh districts will be organized before the state convention, which will be held at Shawnee, August 24-28.

J. M. Monroe,
Cor. Sec. W. D.

That Gladstone Proposition and the Chautauqua.

The Willamette Valley Chautauqua Association has just closed its fifteenth and most successful encampment. More than 1,200 people were camped on the ground and 20,000 people are said to have attended. Six schools did efficient work and the platform was represented by some of the most eminent men in America. For the first time in its history the Disciples established headquarters and many from near and from far visited us. Literature of the Disciples was on exhibition, and a foundation was laid for a wider knowledge of those who are satisfied with the name of disciples only. Every feature will be improved upon next year, and more ample provisions for the accommodation of all who may come will be made. We also hope to be represented on the program by some one of our eminent men; as the management is already at work on a program for the next session, we shall take the matter up with them at once and, if possible, have a representative next year. If we can secure the same person for Turner and the Chautauqua it will lessen expenses. Indeed, we look forward to a time when we shall have our own pavilion, where we shall, from time to time, have our own lectureship or School of Evangelism for the uplifting of our cause.

Owing to the larger interest, the little church here, not yet a month old, adjourned its services both Sundays. The Sunday-school marched in a body, the grounds being at our door, and secured free admission. We resume regular work at once and shall take no vacation this year, the Lord willing. Gladstone promises a rich harvest.

Any brother or sister knowing of Disciples living in Gladstone, Jennings' Lodge, Oregon City or Canema, all near to Gladstone, will do us and the cause a service by sending us their address. We shall take pleasure in calling on them at the earliest practical moment.

Gladstone, Ore. A. H. Mulkey.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

On July 15 an up-to-date map, with an up-to-date exhibition of our church extension work, was mailed to all the churches where we could get addresses of pastors, correspondents or elders. The maps cost the board $188 and about $130 in postage to mail them, and about $30 in clerical help. The Board of Church Extension can only expect good returns from this investment as pastors, correspondents and elders use them well by putting them in conspicuous places in our churches and calling attention to them.

Please post up the Church Extension Map. Don't consign it to the waste basket. It is the Lord's money that pays for the maps. A good offering for church extension will be secured only by faithful people in each church interesting themselves and then enlisting the indifferent.

Will the pastors please order their supplies for the annual offering for church extension, which begins on September 6. "Prominent Points on Church Extension," is a leaflet to be distributed to the people. It will count greatly in giving information. Then there are the usual collection envelopes. Send a postal card to G. W. Muckley, 500 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo., and supplies will be mailed free.

The Board of Church Extension has received a $200 gift on the annuity plan from a friend in Minnesota. This is the 223d gift to the board. Send annuity money to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 500 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo.

Statement of Receipts by Board of Church Extension for First Nine Months, Compared with Last Year.

CHURCHES.

For last year	$11,266 15
For this year	8,688 49
A falling off of	$ 2,579 15

INDIVIDUALS.

For last year	$ 8,908 60
For this year	16,790 84
A gain of	$ 7,882 24
Total gain	$ 5,302 58

The board is grateful for the gain in receipts. The falling off in receipts from the churches is no doubt due to a real or fancied closeness of money. A deep interest on the part of the churches in the annual offering in September will more than make up this loss.

Number of loans closed, 69, aggregating	$140,025 00
Returned loans	64,035 76
Interest received	17,779 47

Note that sixty-nine churches have been aided to the extent of $140,025, making the average loan about $2,300. More work is being done in our cities, hence the larger must be our loans. We are not neglecting the smaller towns, but since the fund has grown we are able to help the long-neglected city missions.

The returns on loans and interest receipts are not so large as last year because the churches that have our loans are all pleading hard times, and hence asking to delay their payments. Our older and stronger churches should take up the burden and send larger offerings in September.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Russellville, July 19.—Four added to the church here to-day by letter—three by primary obedience last Lord's day.—F. B. Elmore, pastor.

Bentonville, July 19.—One addition at morning service to-day. The summer campaign is now on and our general cry is victory.——J. W. Ellis.

Colorado.

Delta, July 20.—The church here continues to grow. There have been 21 accessions since the report in May 11, by primary obedience and 10 otherwise. I have been supplying. A. N. Glover takes the work in August.—E. M. Miller.

Illinois.

Findlay, July 21.—There was one confession on July 20, Harold E. Monser preaching for us. He organized this church in 1906. All departments of our work are in a thrifty condition. In August I will be away for a vacation.—J. J. Bare.

Indiana.

Mishawaka, July 20.—There was one confession yesterday and three others since last report. Our Bible school attendance was 30 more than double that of a year ago.—J. D. Hull.

Kansas.

Leavenworth, July 16.—There were four confessions and five additions by letter, making 17 additions since last report up till June 11, since which there has been no report. W. J. Dodge is the minister.

Chanute, July 20.—There were five added yesterday—four by letter and one united who came from the Baptists. We have sent out another preacher, Robert Copeland, a bright young man. He is now preaching at La Harpe and expects to go to school this fall. We have some more preachers in the making. Our work is doing well.—G. W. Kitchen.

Kentucky.

Princeton, July 20.—The meeting held here by Dr. Crossfield and Singing Evangelist Sturgis closed with 80 accessions to the church. A fuller report will appear later.—Charles W. Barnes is the minister here.

Michigan.

Wayland, July 15.—There have been seven additions recently—one by baptism. We are repairing the church building to the extent of $500 cash outlay. The Sunday-school sends me to Bethany Park.—E. G. Campbell, pastor.

Missouri.

Chaffee, July 19.—The tent meeting began today. It seats 300, and was crowded to-night, though the weather was threatening. The Bible school was organized with 93 charter members. There is great interest apparent and excellent prospects for a large ingathering.—Mrs. F. A. Curtius.

Anderson, July 17.—I am in a meeting at Anderson. In eight days there have been 11 additions. It is a hard field and these are the first revival services ever held by the Disciples here. We are having large crowds and seemingly a good interest.—W. S. Hood, Clinton, Mo.

Canton, July 17.—Two united by letter—a Baptist minister and wife at Newmon's Chapel last Lord's day. Two young men joined us by confession and baptism on the second Lord's day in June. We are planning for a great meeting beginning on Monday, July 27. On account of temperance lectures I have not all my time employed at present. Those desiring a minister may address me at Canton.—J. E. Teaney, ex-saloonkeeper.

Kansas City, July 22.—There were ten accessions at the Forest Avenue Church last Lord's day without revival services. Several of our ministers are out of the city and others are going. D. Y. Donaldson, of the South Prospect Church, was able to fill his pulpit on Lord's day, after a serious spell of typhoid fever. No minister has been secured yet for the Roanoke Church, but they have some one in view.—J. L. Thompson.

Nebraska.

Fremont, July 20.—There were two good audiences yesterday and one added by letter. The Bible school is retaining its interest this hot weather under the superintendency of J. W. McClure. We are preparing to attend the state meeting at Bethany, Neb., in August. We hope to have a good convention.—I. H. Fuller.

Kearney, July 22.—Under the efficient leadership of our new pastor, E. M. Johnson, our church is having a steady and prosperous growth. There was one confession and baptism on Lord's day. Everybody enjoyed the presence of Sister Wilkinson and her little Porto Rican girl, Consuola, on their recent visit. We had a delightful talk on Porto Rico, and at the close the president of the C. W. B. M. sprang a surprise on the congregation and the pastor by making his one-month-old daughter a life member in the organization.—Stella Wanzell.

Ohio.

Akron, July 21.—The Wabash Avenue Church of Christ recently tried the experiment of having a mid-summer meeting without previous preparation. David D. Dick and wife, evangelists from Canada, having an open date, we secured them. The attendance continued to increase in spite of the warm weather. There were nine additions by baptism—one reclaimed and two by letter. Although Brother Dick has been in the evangelistic field only a year he proved himself thoroughly capable. Those who want a good meeting should correspond with him at Cuyahoga Falls, O.—A. F. Stahl, pastor.

Oklahoma.

Frederick, July 21.—Just closed a fine meeting seven miles east of Frederick. In the twelve days we were rained out four times. We had only two members to start with. The additions numbered 48—20 by baptism, 10 from the non-progressive brethren, 3 by statement, 6 reinstated, 1 from the Catholics and 8 from other organizations. We organized the church on the last evening and raised $615 towards building. The aim is to erect a $2,000 church house. L. C. Roscoe did the singing. Our next meeting will be at Eschite, Okla. We would like to hear from churches wanting meetings.—Charles P. Murphy, minister.

Oregon.

Eugene, July 16.—Just closed a very successful meeting at Halsey, with 40 additions. Evangelist D. E. Olson and his singers, C. C. Curtis and Mrs. Walter Callison, led the victory. It was a great meeting when we consider there were only about 300 inhabitants in the town and two other churches besides the Christian Church. The work of Brother Olson and his helpers more than doubled the expectations of all the church except the pastor. It was due to the simple plain teaching of the evangelist and the spiritual songs of his noble singers. Brother Olson puts as much plain gospel teaching into every sermon preached as I ever heard any evangelist do. He does the very necessary thing to my notion, and that is to teach the people before they accept Christ. This he did very sweet-spiritedly and never compromised a truth. We organized a Christian Endeavor with about 50 members; a C. W. B. M. with 30 members; doubled the attendance at Sunday-school and gave the pastor a call for full time with a raise of salary. They go to Brownsville next, and if they fail to have a good meeting it will not be any fault on the part of the evangelist or his excellent helpers, who leave not a single stone unturned for success.—C. R. Moore.

Texas.

Cooper, July 20.—The revival, lasting over a period of two weeks, closed with 21 additions. The meeting was held in the city tabernacle with large attendance throughout. The various churches adjourned on the Sunday evenings. A large chorus composed of the best singers from the choirs of the various churches was under the directorship of Prof. T. E. Fitz, of Dallas, whose all round work highly pleased and was one of the leading factors of the meeting. The evangelist was A. E. Dubber, who preaches the gospel clearly and with force, yet in the spirit of love. He simply electrified his audience, and is pronounced by the brethren here one of our strongest preachers. Both evangelists were good mixers with attractive personalities and clean, godly lives. The church has been spiritually strengthened greatly by this meeting.—Charles M. Ashmore, minister.

Belton, July 23.—John L. Brandt and his associates recently closed a meeting here with 169 additions. The membership of the church was more than doubled; a new house of worship is assured, a Christian Endeavor Society with more than 50 members was organized and the plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity was heard by thousands. The meeting was held in a large skating rink. C. H. Hoggatt directed the chorus of 100 voices; Mrs. Brandt directed the Sunbeam Chorus of 100 voices, and Miss Brandt directed the personal work. W. M. Williams was recently installed as pastor. Col. J. Z. Miller subscribed $5,000 toward a new house of worship.

West Virginia.

Wellsburg, July 15.—Since last report there have been eight baptisms and five added by leter and statement.—F. M. Biddle.

Washington.

Seattle, July 13.—I closed my first year with the Queen Anne Church yesterday. There were two added that day—one by confession and one by statement, making a total of 66 during the year. Our church became a living link in the foreign society, June 28. The reflex influence of this forward step is lifting us nearer to God. The future is brighter as our faith in the promises of God is strong.—J. L. Greenwell.

Wisconsin.

Ladysmith, July 21.—We recently closed a meeing here. E. C. Nicholson, of Redwood Falls, was our evangelist. In the four weeks we had 43 additions—32 by baptism and 11 reclaimed or from other churches. We are all much encouraged and are still reaping results in further additions.—J. I. Carter.

Ministerial Exchange.

Any church wishing to secure the services of a competent pastoral helper will do well to address B. B. Tyler, Denver, Colo.

John T. Birdwell has some open dates for meetings; his terms are free-will offerings. Address general delivery, Columbus, O.

W. A. Haynes, of Mt. Sterling, Ill., would like to hear from some good evangelistic pastor who will be willing to exchange meetings this fall.

J. Y. B. Wood, gospel singer and chalk talker, who has been sick for the past few months, is now ready to fulfill engagements. His address is 2403 Thrush avenue, Walnut Park, St. Louis, Mo.

The church at Eureka, Kan., wants a pastor by September 15. Educated, married, middle-aged man preferred. Address R. C. Summers, clerk.

O. L. Haley, Butler, Ind., can be had by churches desiring choir leader and personal worker. He also plays the trombone.

J. H. Carter, of the First Church, St. Louis, can preach for congregations within reasonable distance of that city.

Changes.

Beckles, H. E.—Belle Center, O., to 118 Church street, Monongahela, Pa.
Bennett, H. G.—Yorkton, Can., to 509 West Russell street, Monroe, Wis.
Bledsoe, E. S.—Italy to Big Springs, Tex.
Bryan, J. C.—Williamsville, N. Y., to Grandville Center, Pa.
Chapline, George F.—Holly Springs to Jackson, Miss.
Maple, O. D.—Fredericksburg, Va., to Mt. Ranier, Maryland
Murphy, H. R.—Clay Center to Effingham, Kan., box 322.
McCallum, Donald C.—No. 1 Divinity Hall, Cambridge, to 43 Cleveland ave., Everett, Mass.
McPherson, Chalmers—Waxahachie, to 614 Granger street, Fort Worth, Texas.
Nance, Thomas G.—Texico to Clovis, N. M.
Norris, B. F.—Ash Grove, Mo., to Arlington, S. D.
Pearn, William—Cristoval, Canal Zone, to 1525 Eighth street, New Orleans, La.
Polson, C. A.—Soldier, Kan., to Exira, Ia.
Read, T. L.—Eureka, to Chapin, Ill.
Robinson, H. B.—404 Arizona street, to 915 North Stanton street, El Paso, Texas.
Romine, E. M.—Hinton, to Marlow, Okla.
Ryan, William D.—Ashland, Ky., to Winona Lake, Ind.
Shreve, J. T.—Memphis, to 227 Ohio avenue, St. Joseph, Mo.
Smith, Charles E.—901 Sixth avenue, to 751 North Main street, Marion, O.
Smith, G. T.—Dexter, Mo., to 212 Third street, Danville, Ill. (Vermillion Heights).
Smith, M. M.—Atlanta, to Greenville, Texas.
Smith, Alvin O.—Waco to Gonzales, Tegas.
Spear, N. S.—Middleport, to Bucyrus, O.
Stauffer, C. L.—Dana, to Dallas City, Ill.
Stuckey, J. H.—Kansas City, Kan., to Bertram, Texas.
Williamson, Guy B.—Chattanooga, Tenn., to Wichita, Kan.
Wilson, B. Alvin—West Philadelphia, to Grafton, O., No. 1.
Wray, B. L.—137 Drury avenue, to 128 North Hardesty avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

As We Go to Press.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Atlanta, Ga., July 26.—Yeuell is just the man for this difficult field, surpassing our greatest expectations.—Bernard P. Smith.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Somerset, Pa., July 27.—Our beloved Peter Vogel died Saturday and was buried to-day.—J. D. Garrison.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Pasadena, Cal.—Compelled to close meeting at climax of interest with 551 added in nineteen days of invitation. Church building triumphantly dedicated and city aroused as never before. Scoville a mighty preacher, a master organizer, dedicator, and a grand man; Mrs. Scoville an almost irresistible personal worker and beautiful singer; Ullom an inspiring expositor of the Scriptures and marvelously successful in leading men to Christ; Mrs. Ullom manifestly called of God to win souls. City captured by Van Camp's personality and power in song.—Frank M. Dowling, minister.

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS

in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them

PLEASE MENTION THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

GOD'S GRACE IN EARTHEN VESSELS.

Topic August 5. 1 Cor. 15:10; 2 Cor. 4:7.

"By the grace of God I am what I am" was the secret of Paul's life and service. He gladly recognized the fact in his own life. Salvation by grace is the great fundamental doctrine preached by the chiefest of the apostles. Matthew Arnold in his "Last Essays" sums up the teaching of the Old Testament as "Salvation by righteousness"; and of the New Testament as "Salvation by Jesus Christ." So as he puts it we have "Salvation by righteousness through Jesus Christ." And that is the sum and substance of Paul's doctrine of grace. "Justification by grace" was his favorite plea and it was this doctrine proclaimed by Martin Luther that wrought such revolutions in men's thoughts and lives during the Reformation. This was also a favorite and fundamental doctrine of the Wesleys and the early Methodists, as it has been and is of all truly evangelical preachers. It is the heart of the Gospel and accounts for Paul's marvelous success as the apostle to the Gentiles and also for the success of Martin Luther and all the mighty preachers of the centuries, from Paul to Charles H. Spurgeon, Dwight L. Moody, and Charles Reign Scoville. Matthew Arnold was a critic, sometimes a destructive critic, but he was sound on the doctrine of salvation by grace through Jesus Christ. And there is not much danger of any one going far wrong who holds, humbly and trustingly and triumphantly, to the great doctrine of salvation by grace through faith in Jesus Christ. Get this, brother for whom Christ died, and let the critics cry destruction, but hold fast the faith and the steadfast hope with Paul and with all the saints and servants of the Christ of the centuries. Nothing is of much consequence in comparison with this divine revelation, this glorious realization in the life of the redeemed.

The grace of God was not bestowed upon Paul in vain. Would that we all could say that as truly and triumphantly as he did. He labored more abundantly than they all; "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was in me," he adds; and it was this sense of his own insufficiency and of the sufficiency of the divine grace that made him the mighty apostle and servant of Christ. "But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us." And this realization not only humbled him, but made him heroic. Read the closing part of this fourth chapter of Second Corinthians and see how Paul was enabled to endure perplexities, persecutions, discouragements and death. It was the secret of his splendid faith and fidelity. And this grace which had abounded to his own salvation he held as sufficient for others also. "All things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God."

To thus hold fast the fact and the faith of salvation by grace through faith in Jesus Christ, through whom we have "received the atonement," is the really victorious thing in life. After we have done the very best we can, lived the very best life we could, we have to confess with Paul that it is "not by works of righteousness which we ourselves have done, but by his mercy he saves us, through the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Spirit, poured on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour." To realize that we have indeed this treasure of all truth, yet in earthen vessels, is to take away from us all self-conceit and false pride, and truly fit us for service and fortify us for all the conflicts of the Christian life. God can use the man who realizes that he is a sinner saved by grace. It is impossible for him to use any other sort. And this is really our need as individuals and as churches. We have too much formality and not enough faith of the sort that humbles and yet exalts and fills and fits for service.

Sunday-School

August 9, 1908.

DAVID AND GOLIATH.—1 Sam. 17:1-18:5.

Memory verses, 48, 49.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In the Lord put I my trust.—Psalm 11:1.

Saul's unbalanced mental condition soon began to take the form of acute melancholia, which the ancient writer describes as possession by an evil spirit. In calling a musician instead of a physician to heal him, Saul acted in harmony with some of the most modern theories regarding the treatment of nervous diseases.

Observe that David at this time was not a green country boy. He was a grown man. He is described as "a mighty man of valor and a man of war, prudent in speech and comely in person" (16:18). He became not only Saul's harpist, but also his armor-bearer, an office which called for the service of a tried warrior, and not a mere child attendant.

It is by no means improbable that in the story of David, as presented in 1 Sam. 16-20, we have a combination of two or more narratives. One of these represents David as brought to the court as Saul's musician, and becoming his armor-bearer and intimate friend, while the other, which follows this, represents him as first meeting Saul in connection with the Goliath episode. It is rather significant that, after telling about the anointing of David and giving a fairly full description of his father and brothers, and after giving an account of his call to the court, where he became the beloved friend and companion of the king, he is introduced in connection with the Goliath episode (17:12), as though his name had never before been mentioned: "Now David was the son of that Ephrathite of Bethlehem-judah, whose name was Jesse; and he had eight sons. . . . And the names of the three sons that went to battle were Eliab, the firstborn, and next unto him Abinidab, and the third Shammah. And David was the youngest."

It is also a significant fact, which has been often commented upon, that, although the previous chapter tells of David's residence at the court and being Saul's armor-bearer, it now appears that Saul does not know David, and has to ask first Abner and then David himself who he is. These are interesting considerations in connection with the literary study of the narrative, but are not of primary importance for our purpose. The important thing is that we have here the story of a young man who, although already a man of war, went into an important battle not relying on his own strength, but trusting in the help of Jehovah. It is, perhaps, easier for the weak to trust in God than for the strong to do so. The weak are accustomed to the attitude of dependence. They are aware of their own helplessness. The strong are naturally self-reliant. They are little used to asking or receiving help. They have not such obvious need of divine assistance. The mental attitude of the little boy who asked God to take care of him at night when he was asleep, but said he could look out for himself in the daytime, is characteristic of the practical attitude of many people. David was a strong man who went into battle not trusting in his strength, but relying on the power which his God should give to his arm.

That is really the whole lesson. Note the contrast between the boasting of Goliath and the calm assurance of David. One was confident because he was big; the other was confident because he had confidence in the power of his God. Note also the contrast between the character of Saul as shown in various incidents mentioned in earlier lessons, and the character of David as revealed in this episode. It is the contrast between faith and self-sufficiency. Faith means effectiveness. Self-sufficiency is inefficiency.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

WE HAVE an actual gold mine in operation at Rawhide, Nevada, machinery installed and taking out ore. All Christian men, we need a little more money to secure returns from the smelters; will let you in on the ground floor with us and treat you right. L. W. Klinker, Los Angeles, California.

NURSES WANTED.—By the Christian Hospital, St. Louis, Missouri. Fifteen young ladies between twenty and thirty years of age, with at least a grammar school education, and all right, morally and physically, to enter our training school for nurses. For terms address Supt. of Christian Hospital, 5881 Plymouth ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Church Supplies, Etc.

HAS IT for less. All church and Bible school supplies. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelists and Ministers.

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

D. H. SHANKLIN, evangelist, Normal, Ill., uses stereopticon, charts and furnishes singer if desired.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write HINNERS ORGAN COMPANY, PEKIN, ILLINOIS, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

THIRTY-SIX DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS plus 25 1-2 hours a week pays for all the privileges of an up-to-date school. Catalogue free. Address School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Books and Book Cases.

FOR SALE.—Pulpit Commentary, 51 volumes, good as new, cost $60. Price $40.00. McClintock & Strong's Biblical Encyclopedia, 12 vols., morocco, cost $67, price $35.00. Filing cabinet, containing 300 pouches, cost $25.00, $18.00. Globe-Wernicke Library casing, cost $3.25 a unit, $2.25. Address Box 397, Little Rock, Ark.

MILLENNIAL HARBINGER.—Any one desiring almost a complete set, forty volumes, six of them bound and all the others in good condition, will do well to write to Peter Vogle, Somerset, Pa. This set of Harbingers will be sold to highest bidder.

WHY?—Blotters, cards, leaflets. Why attend, join, support the church, be baptized, confess Christ, attend P. M., etc. Wonderfully effective for judicious distribution. Sample lot 25 cents. Arthur E. Prior, Harvard, Neb.

Christian Endeavor

August 9, 1908.

DAILY READINGS.

M.	Our Bodies are Sacred.	Lev. 19:27, 28.
T.	They Should be Kept Pure.	1 Cor. 6:12, 13.
W.	Temples of the Holy Ghost.	1 Cor. 3:16, 17.
T.	Cheerfulness and Health.	Prov. 17:20-22.
F.	A Triumphant Life.	1 John 5:4, 5.
S.	A Good Conscience.	1 John 3:20, 22.
S.	Topic.

What more marvelous mystery than the human body? What more wonderful piece of mechanism than a human hand? What more beautiful thing than the human eye, out of which the soul looks? What is this marvelous body for?

There were some followers of Christ in the church in Corinth who believed that the body was an instrument of pleasure, even if the pleasure was suggested and controlled by the appetites of the body. Paul intimates that such a view of the body would lead to unprofitable living; or even worse, to a bondage of the body to its own appetites (verse 12). It is unworthy of the almost divine possibilities of the body that it should be bound, or that it should waste itself in unprofitable living.

Paul leads us far away from such ideals to the beautiful one in the lesson text: "Your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit." What a mystery! The indwelling of the mind and its control of the body is a mystery, but the indwelling and control of the Holy Spirit is a higher one. Does it indicate anything that a man has a mind dwelling in his body? Certainly. Does it indicate, more or less, that in the same body the Holy Spirit dwells, as in a sanctuary?

The meaning is given in the next verse: "Glorify God therefore in your body." This is the purpose of the Christian's body, and not pleasure. What a dignity this confers upon conduct; that we should be able to glorify God in our body, and not pleasure. It is almost unthinkable that what we do can add any glory to God. How can it be?

In the first place Paul wants us to keep the body free from habits which make instant and fullest service tardy or impossible. But when we examine our habits we frequently find that they are vitally connected with the question of health. And here is the why and how to keep in good health. A weakly, frail body can add little glory to God if its weakness and frailty be its own fault, the result of some disregard of a law of the physical being.

Good health is a duty as far as it lies in our possibility, for only a healthy body can give the strongest service to God. Think of the body of Christ. In order, then, that we may render the best service to God through our bodies, we should make health a religious duty.

How are we to have it? It will help us very much to realize, first of all, that "we are not our own," and that the Holy Spirit dwells in us. A realization and acceptance of the fact of the indwelling of the Spirit of the living God, who was the living and life-giving agent in creation, ought of itself give us better health than we have been having. Let the life and power of the Holy Spirit have its way.

Then we will be careful to do nothing with our body that is contrary to the fact of this indwelling. This will relieve us of many a habit and dissipation which means poor health, if not immediately, in the end.

This does not mean, of course, that we should disregard the well-known laws of hygiene; that we should not have a physician or medicine when needed. It simply means that in addition to these things which common sense suggests in their proper place, we, as Christians, should use the help which the world does not have, the help of the Spirit of the living God, the life giver; and that the consciousness of his indwelling, and the careful accommodation of our life and its habits to that fact, will give us better health than otherwise we could have enjoyed.

And with this good health we shall be better able to render the service which the indwelling Spirit will lead us into according to the directions of the word of God.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

HIRAM COLLEGE

HIRAM, OHIO.

From a Students' Symposium in the "Hiram College Advance":

What are a few essential characteristics of a strong, although perhaps small college, which are worthy of our attention and should induce us to favor it above all others?

First, a healthy environment for study; in the next place, able and manly professors with whom a student can form intimate associations. and lastly a deep spiritual life sustained and encouraged by the influences brought to bear in the community. As these three phases are to be found in the Hiram life, I rested my decision in choosing the "Old Hill" as the spot on which to spend college days.

The Home-coming issue of the "Advance" containing the symposium entire, the inaugural address of President Bates, a poem by Jessie Brown Pounds, articles by Judge F. A. Henry and Profs. E. B. Wakefield, B. S. Dean and G. H. Colton, and many other things of interest, also catalog and full information, sent free on application to J. O. Newcomb, Secretary, Hiram, Ohio. Mention "The Christian-Evangelist."

HOW WE TEACH THE BIBLE IN

The College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky.

(1) We teach the Bible more thoroughly than we teach any other book—while teaching many books besides the Bible.

(2) We teach the Bible as the inspired Word of God, the only and all-sufficient rule of our faith and practice.

(3) Each book in the Bible is divided into its parts, each part is divided into its sections, and each section is divided into its paragraphs, and each paragraph is learned thoroughly; and difficult questions growing out of each paragraph are thoroughly discussed.

(4) Both sides of all important critical questions are carefully considered, and the fallacies of destructive criticism are pointed out, as well as the valid reason in support of the truth.

(5) Men of average ability who take our course know the truth, and are able to defend it under all circumstances. Address

Publicity Department. THE COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.

THE

TEACHER TRAINING HANDBOOK

By MARION STEVENSON

YOU WANT IT

1. Because it is the most complete teacher-training book published.
2. Because it will teach your class how to study the Bible.
3. Because it teaches the class the Bible rather than something about the Bible.
4. Because it makes the most thorough work possible.
5. Because it has been adopted as a college text book.
6. Because it gives a true view of Old and New Testament History.
7. Because it is the only teacher-training book published which gives New Testament Institutions.
8. Because it gives a working knowledge of Bible Geography.
9. Because it is up to date on Bible School organization, and pedagogy.
10. Because it received the unanimous approval of the International Committee.

Manilla binding, 224 pages.
Single copy, 30c, prepaid. Five or more copies, not prepaid, 25c each.
Limp cloth, 40c each.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

Obituaries

Notices of deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the mouey with the copy.

BARNS.

The beloved wife of Elder O. S. Barns, who has served the churches at Hepler, Kan., and other places, with profit to all, passed away June 12. Her maiden name was Elvira L. Spoom. Born at Brookville, O., July 10, 1837, she united with the Christian Church at the age of 13. Her life reflected the Christ. She leaves a husband and two sons. T. P. Childs preached the funeral sermon.

CLARKSON.

William Temple Clarkson, who met a sudden and tragic death by drowning in the Coosa river June 18, was born 29 years ago. He was a native of Alabama and reared by his grandmother, Mrs. J. J. Jolly, who was known as the mother of the Christian Church at Birmingham, and her grandson was reared up in the church atmosphere. He entered college at Transylvania College in Lexington, Ky., and after staying there some time went to the University of Kansas, where he graduated. He then went to Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary, in New York City, from whence he went to Rome, Ga., on March 29 to assume the pastorate of the First Christian Church. He was a man whom everybody loved and whose sunny disposition and unselfish Christian character made him known to hundreds of people and very highly esteemed. He was a scholarly man and was fast winning for himself a reputation as one of the ablest ministers in the Christian church in the South. One of his brothers, E. R. Clarkson, is state evangelist for Georgia. Another brother is secretary to Congressman R. P. Hobson. His father lives at Citronelle, Ala. The church at Rome has passed resolutions in testimony to his noble Christian character and the sincere love of his people, and will contribute to the erection of a suitable monument to his memory.

FORD.

Ella Imogene Neat, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Andrew Neat, was born near Frankfort, Ky., April 12, 1846. She became a member of the Christian Church during her school life at Eminence, Ky. September 4, 1866, she was married to Emory Low Ford, at New Albany, Ind. In 1883 the home was changed from Indiana to Pittsburg, Pa. Some years later Mr. Ford died while on a trip abroad and in 1902 Mrs. Ford moved to Detroit, Mich. It was from her beautiful Woodward avenue home in Detroit early Sunday morning, June 29, 1908, that she was summoned to her final home, "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Four children survive her—Mrs. Elmer David Speck, of Pittsburg; Mr. Emory Leyden Ford, Miss Nell B. Ford and Miss Stella Dunbar Ford, all of Detroit. These, together with other near relatives and a large number of sympathizing friends, gathered for the funeral services conducted in the home on June 30, by the writer, assisted by H. J. Derthick, of Hazel Green, Ky. The burial took place the next day at Pittsburg, where her body was finally placed in the family vault beside that of her husband, whose remains had been brought back from his grave in a foreign land. This is the simple story of a very beautiful and useful life which has closed so far as these earthly walks and associations are concerned.

Soon after the writer took charge of the Central Christian Church of Detroit Mrs. Ford placed her membership with this congregation, where she was a faithful and devout member up to the time of her death. Her faith in God, her Bible and her Saviour, was ever the same simple, unchanging trust which she expressed in her obedience to Christ during her girlhood days at Eminence. The passing years; the possession of an ample fortune; a busy life in the midst of many cares and heart-breaking sorrows and finally several years of suffering before she died, simply deepened her piety and clarified her vision and brightened her hope which, at the last dread hour was "An anchor to her soul both sure and steadfast."

The last years of Mrs. Ford's life were largely given over to deeds of mercy. She gave large sums of money in ways that encircled the globe and helped all classes and conditions of people. She was the soul of generosity. Her heart was large and tender and easily touched at every indication of need and sorrow. Race, education, social standing, culture or lack of it upon the part of those who sought her help, played no part in her final decision. In her eyes they were all human beings alike unfortunate and worthy of her careful investigation and assistance if their need was genuine. She was most generous in the support of her home church and in the building and equipment of the new Woodward Avenue Christian Church. State, home, foreign missions and all departments of the Christian Board of Missions were remembered yearly. As she could not go to foreign lands to toil, she sent a worker in her place and paid all bills. She could not go and teach in the mountains of Kentucky, but she could, with her daughters, build and equip a special department for the school at Hazel Green, and her giving was not confined to the interests of her own church, but all union movements, such as the Y. M. C. A. and city homes and asylums were alike generously helped from year to year. Indeed, many of us who are toiling for these various interests now pause and ask ourselves what we shall do in the absence of our tried and true friend. The sick and sinful and needy may well put on mourning for a season.

It is a matter of great satisfaction that Mrs. Ford's son and daughters are in full sympathy with her life of good works and are individually and personally following in her footsteps. The writer can not refrain from expressing his own deep sense of loss in the death of Mrs. Ford. He has directed his footsteps to her sick room and bedside for many months and now that the room is vacant and the patient, cheerful face of the sufferer will be seen no more, he pens these words out of a full heart and as a very faint and imperfect tribute to her memory.

Detroit, Mich. C. J. Tannar.

HUDSON.

Judge Samuel W. Hudson died at his home near Sibley, Mo., April 20, 1908, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Brother Hudson lost his father in early life, which threw the cares of a mother and the responsibilities of a large estate upon him at an early age. He always had the confidence and love of the entire community where he lived and died. He was a public-spirited man and served Jackson county two terms as county judge. He was a member of the state board of agriculture at the time of his death and as president of the board introduced some measures which promise to make the agricultural college more useful than ever before. He obeyed the Saviour in 1871 and was the most useful member and an elder in the Christian Church at Sibley for many years. In the death of this princely man his family, the church and community have sustained a great loss. He was always a friend to the poor and needy and his bountiful hand and generous heart were open to the cry of the widow and orphan. He was one of the most practical Christians that I ever knew.

Kansas City, Mo. W. H. Embry.

KNOX.

Mrs. Margaret Knox, who was born April 10, 1849, died May 9, 1908. Funeral was conducted from her late home in Holliday's Cove, W. Va., by the undersigned. Deceased was for many years a faithful Disciple. Francis M. Biddle, Wellsburg, W. Va. Minister Christian Church.

MONROE.

Dr. William Monroe, of Monroe, Wis., died at his residence on July 3, 1908, at the age of nearly 90 years. He was one of the most noted characters in Southern Wisconsin. He served in the Black Hawk war at the age of 14 years. In the early days and when in the prime of life Dr. Monroe held a high place in the affections of citizens of Monroe and community. It can be said without hesitation that those affections were never lost.

He was never known to shirk a call in line of duty, and being an able and well versed man in his profession met with great success. His professional career extended over a period of nearly sixty years. He also served a term in the Legislature of Wisconsin, and during the civil war he went to the front for a time and gave his professional services gratuitously to the sick and wounded. He was an active member of the Christian Church and one of the principal founders and supporters of it in his home town. He gave the lots on which the present church edifice now stands in Monroe. When the Union Church in Christ, consisting of Disciples and Baptists, was formed three years ago, he entered heartily into the movement, and his funeral was directed by his pastor, J. H. Burkey, and a touching eulogy was delivered by his own grandson, William Balsh, of Lincoln, Neb.

To Possess a Healthy and Pearly

SKIN

use Glenn's Sulphur Soap with warm water daily, and the skin will soon become soft and beautiful. To remove pimples, redness, roughness, sunburn, nothing compares with

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Sold by druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY

NO POSITION, NO PAY

Largest and Best Equipped School in the West; 5 teachers of railroad experience. Students employed on 52 roads. Attendance doubled last year. Many states represented. Attend on credit. Car fare paid. Write for Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE TELEGRAPHY COLLEGE, 754 Irving Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

PASTOR'S COLLEGE

Champaign, Ill.

New road to the ministry. Especially for men and women of limited education and burning zeal. Only one year in college then training while preaching. Freshness, power, time, enthusiasm conserved. Catalogue ready.

William Woods College

For Young Women

Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.

J. B. Jones, Pres. Fulton, Mo.

WE MAKE BANKERS

POSITIONS SECURED

or Tuition refunded. The CHILLICOTHE Business College has recently placed 90 students in Banks; 31 as teachers in Business Colleges. 27 states and Mexico represented. 53 Typewriters, 10 Instructors, 7 Assistants Attend on Credit, Car Fare Paid. Write for free Catalog

ALLEN MOORE, Pres., 3883 Monroe St., Chillicothe, Mo.

Oklahoma Christian University

Located at Enid, Oklahoma. One of the finest railroad centers in the southwest. Elevated region, bracing atmosphere and good water; excellent climate and fine buildings. A well equipped educational plant, one of the best west of the Mississippi River. Large and experienced Faculty, extensive courses—literary and Biblical. Superior advantages for Business Training, Music, Fine Art and Oratory. The following Schools and Colleges in successful operation:

I. College of Arts and Sciences.
II. College of the Bible.
III. College of Business.
IV. College of Music.
V. School of Oratory and Expression.
VI. School of Fine Art.
VII. Elective Courses in great variety.

EXPENSES MODERATE.

There is no better place in which to be educated than in a school located as this is in the heart of this great and rapidly developing southwest that offers better opportunities to young people than any other place in the United States. Preachers, Lawyers, Doctors and Business Men by the thousand are needed.

Next session opens September 15, 1908.

Send for catalogue to MISS EMMA FRANCES HARTSHORN, Registrar, Oklahoma Christian University.

E. V. ZOLLARS, President. O. C. U.

BIG SALARIES

FOR TEACHERS

now being paid. Attend the Chillicothe Normal for Professional Training or for University Entrance. 1200 students. 26 instructors. Conservatory of Music and Oratory. Tuition, Board and Room-rent 48 weeks $135. Attend on Credit. Car fare paid. Send for free Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE NORMAL SCHOOL, 60 Normal Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF

BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE

No matter what you want, write to us about it.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

The Home Department

Churches That Will Hold.

There is a great deal of nonsensical talk nowadays about getting ministers that will draw. A man came into my study the other day from one of the churches on Murray Hill that is vacant, and he said: "I wish you would recommend a minister for our church." I said: "I can recommend a dozen." He seemed rather bluffed at that; thought that was a large number, and said: "Won't you suggest a name?" And I went on suggesting one name after another. I suggested one man and he said: "I understand that man has not a very strong voice." I suggested another. "Well, I understand that man wears a black cravat in the pulpit." Another man. "Well, I understand that he is not a very good reader." And another man, "Well, I understand that that man has a very stiff and formal delivery." Finally, he said: "Well, what we want in our church is a minister that will draw." "Oh, no, my Christian friend, what you want is a church that will hold. You have not got it. Twenty congregations have passed through your church in the last twenty years, and they have passed through because you have not had a church that will hold. You want a church that will hold the people when they get into it. The minister can not hold. Success depends not so much upon the minister as upon you, the church.—Dr. Van Dyke.

Good Things in the Church.

The choir that sings from the heart.
The folks who are sunny and sweet.
The "shut-in" saint who prays at home.
The minute-men who fill awkward gaps.
The sexton who watches the thermometer.
The brother who crucifies self-importance.
The usher who makes politeness a fine art.
The parent who believes in the conversation of his children.
The young people who gladly help in house-to-house visitation.
The young man who pleads with his impenitent chums.
The treasurer who keeps plenty of meal in the parsonage flour barrel.
The brother who is willing to do small jobs out of view of the crowd.
The Sunday-school superintendent who longs for the salvation of his pupils.

For the Ills of Children.

When the time comes for children to indulge in the delightful pastime of going barefooted, it is not an uncommon thing for them to step on a rusty nail, or cut or bruise their feet. One of the best remedies for such accidents is to crush a beet and use as a poultice over the wound. To cure hives, put a teaspoonful of salt in a cupful of water and give as a drink ever hour or two, and put a few drops of carbolic acid into a tablespoonful of cold water and bathe the hives with the solution. For a sudden attack of diarrhoea there is nothing better than a tablespoonful of raw flour in a glass of cold water, to be given in two doses, half an hour apart; for children teething, brown a tablespoonful of flour in the oven and feed the child a little of the flour once an hour. To cure severe cases of hiccough, give hot milk in small quantities, and while the milk should be given as hot as can be borne, it should not be allowed to boil. Any irritation of the skin is benefited by bathing with warm water to which borax has been added. A teaspoonful of borax can be used to a quart of water. For the sting of insects, bathe with the same solution, only it must be made a little stronger. There is nothing better for thrush, a disease so common to delicate children, than a weak solution of borax water. Cover the finger with a soft cloth and wash the mouth out very gently. Dry bismuth in a starch bag, or rubbed on with the fingers, will cure chafing on any part of the body, in infants or adults, and for slight sores use the bismuth mixed with vaseline. For earache, tie a pinch of black pepper in a bit of cotton, dip in sweet oil and place in the ear; then put a flannel bandage over the head to keep warm. A simple remedy for whooping cough is a strong tea made of chestnut leaves and sweetened with rock candy. Let the little ones drink freely of it at intervals throughout the day, and especially before retiring at night; extract of chestnut leaves can be given instead of the tea.

Martha.

The Poet and His Song.

A song is but a little thing.
And yet what joy it is to sing!
In hours of toil it gives me zest,
And when at eve I long for rest;
When cows come home along the bars,
And in the fold I hear the bell,
As Night, the shepherd, herds his stars,
I sing my song and all is well.

My days are never days of ease;
I till my ground and prune my trees,
When ripened gold is all the plain,
I put my sickle to the grain.
I labor hard and sweat,
While others dream within the dell;
But even while my brow is wet,
I sing my song, and all is well.

Sometimes the sun unkindly hot,
My garden makes a desert spot;
Sometimes a blight upon the tree
Takes all my fruit away from me;
And then with throes of bitter pain
Rebellious passions rise and swell;
But life is more than fruit or grain,
And so I sing, and all is well.

—Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

Things Cleveland Said.

Public office is a public trust.

After an existence of nearly twenty years of almost innocuous desuetude these laws are brought forth.

It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory.

Party honesty is party expediency.

If the wind is in the south or west so much the better, but let's go fishing wherever the wind may be.

The duck hunter is born—not made.

I do not believe that nations any more than individuals can violate the rules of honesty and fair-dealing.

Tread lightly, gentleman, for you have to do with temples of the Holy Ghost. (This to assembled physicians.)

A Very Sharp Boy.

Many a schoolmaster discovers to his cost the need of the utmost precision in language in speaking to his pupils and questioning them day by day.

"What are the inhabitants of the Sulu archipelago called?" asked a schoolmaster in the course of a geography lesson.

"There is no specific name for them," answered one of the sharpest of the boys. "They may, however, be classified under the one general name of fish. Among these fish, sharks, flying fish and others of various kinds may be mentioned. Then there are tortoises or turtles of different sorts, though these can not really be called fish, but——"

"What on earth are you talking about?" exclaimed the master, as soon as he could recover from the astonishment created by the boy's reply. "I am asking you about the inhabitants of the Sulu Islands, and you ought to know that these are Malays by race and Mohammedans by religion."

"I beg your pardon, sir," retorted the lad. "You asked me about the inhabitants of the Sulu archipelago, and I believe I am not mistaken in thinking that an archipelago is merely a sea or body of water interspersed with islands."

The master gasped, and has since had a dread of that boy.—Unidentified.

A Song of the New Life.

(From the Portfolio of a Village Parson.)
We do not sigh for the olden days,
Which have gone beyond recall;
For these fair new, rare new, golden days
Are sweeter far than all.

The days of old were restless days,
So full of fret and strife;
But now we are living by faith each day,
The calm, untroubled life.

We'll bring our most heroic moods,
To the deeds of the common day;
And we'll go about our hardest tasks,
Like joyous lads at play.

Read this Slowly, and Think.

Does my life please God?
Am I studying my Bible daily?
Am I enjoying my Christian life?
Is there any one I can forgive?
Have I ever won a soul to Christ?
How much time do I spend in prayer?
Am I trying to bring my friends to Christ?
Have I ever had a direct answer to prayer?
Is there anything I can not give up for Christ?
Just where am I making my greatest mistake?
How does my life look to those who are not Christians?
Is the world being made better or worse by my living in it?
Have I ever tried giving one-tenth of my income to the Lord?
Am I doing anything I would condemn in others?

Verandas as Living Rooms.

Modern verandas are literally homes. They are readily transferred into living-rooms, sleeping-rooms and dining-rooms.

To furnish a veranda to the best advantage for living purposes, furniture should be utilized that can withstand the weather and hard usage, says the June "Delineator." Several large easy chairs, a settee, furnished with crash or denim-covered cushions, and hammocks are essential. Bamboo screens or awnings will add materially to the comfort or the veranda equipment; a swinging couch is a luxurious addition that will be greatly appreciated. Such a couch may be home-made, only length and depth and a wealth of pillows being necessary for comfort. It may be supplied with a home-made full-length pad, or a number of pillows. It is a fancy of the moment to have summer porch-pillows filled with pine or balsam needles, hops, or clover. Husks from green corn are saved, and with some lemon verbena, geranium, lavender or other leaves to give fragrance, make particularly nice pillow fillings. Lacking better material, finely-torn paper with any sweet-scented leaves intermingled makes cool and acceptable fillings for porch-pillows.

A home-made folding-screen which is both convenient and picturesque may be made by stretching green burlap over an ordinary frame. Over the top weave or darn an Indian border in colored raffia. This screen will be thick enough to serve as a protection from drafts.

FOR LOSS OF APPETITE

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Its use is especially recommended for restoration of appetite, strength and vitality.

THE REPENTANCE OF DARLING

BY MAUD K. O'FLYNN

A beautiful town containing about 20,000 inhabitants was having great revival services, held in a spacious and artistic Christian Church. Everything was done that the meeting might prove successful. The Bible study was made into a nursery for the time being. Ladies were continually reminded of the fact. Some thought the church would never be filled. Every night the men and boys sat in the windows and gallery, and stood around the inside and outside of the church in order that they might hear. During the meeting almost two hundred souls were given to Christ. They were, indeed, happy days for the conscientious preacher of that church, who toiled daily with the souls within his realm.

During the revival it was all a battling between the angels of light and the angels of darkness for the souls of men.

Four nights before the meeting had closed the evangelist announced his subject as "The Taking Off of the Lid," which implied the harms of gambling, dancing, etc. He illustrated the influences, temptations and the evils which might be and are derived from these social affairs. In his discourse he said, "Ninety-nine per cent of the women confess that the beginning of their downfall was dancing."

If an onlooker had noticed, he might have seen a very beautiful girl sitting in the back of the church, with a fine-looking blonde, who was an athlete in appearance. Although she was attractive, it was not the attractiveness that the average society girl possesses. There was something more. Her clothes seemed to be in accordance with her charming personality. She had come to the church expecting to go to the opera that night after services.

If one had been a keen observer, he would have noticed the face of the girl Darling grow paler and paler, and the hazel brown eyes seemed to say to the preacher, "It is not so, it is not so." Those hazel eyes, which seemed as if they were transfixed on the speaker, flashed defiance, and then they would show sorrow and seem to say, "Yes, it is so, and I am wicked." Then the Cinderella feet would pat the floor nervously. The result was that at the end of the services she was confessing Christ as her Savior.

Every eye was upon Darling, the beauty and belle of the town. Her escort was in a stupor of surprise, for it had come as a shock to him. Just as he was about to take her arm and lead her out of the church to the Grand Opera she had stepped aside from him and walked down the long aisle.

Darling's thoughts were all of her soul. She could not see the bewilderment of her friends. When she gave her tiny bejeweled hand to the minister, it seemed as if the jewels had never flashed so before. "Satan's treasures, Satan's catch-boxes to allure my thoughts and soul away," she murmured.

The choir sang one more verse of "Meet Mother in the Skies." It was too much for the blonde, who had been so near his Darling and betrothed wife only a few minutes before. "Had he not gone everywhere with her before? Why not go now?" were his inmost thoughts. It was a strange step to him that she was taking; but something incomprehensible pushed him unaware down toward where his Darling was. Perhaps it was the song, "If you Love Your Mother, Meet Her in the Skies." His Christian mother had just "crossed the bar." The audience was amazed that Darling's friend, Handsome Young, the leader of society, would take such a step. Some said they thought so noble an act was due to his mother's departure to the realms of bliss. Others thought that the influence was due to Darling. When the choir had hushed, and the benediction had been said, an unusual crowd lingered instead of the usual few. It seemed as if church continued to be in session.

When Darling collected her thoughts she realized what Handsome had done, and gasped, "Handsome, aren't you glad? And to think that we have been so foolish all of this time."

"Yes, Darling, I guess you—you are right," he stammered.

The walk home was an ideal one. Never before had nature smiled on them so kindly. The long avenue of arched trees had a new meaning. The flowers were more redolent. In short, everything with which they came in contact seemed purer. So it is with one who is pure; he can not conceive the thought of people being so impure. At length the tiny summer-house, with its benches, table, with ice water and fruit, was reached. They made a charming couple in the tiny air house with its honeysuckle vines twined from its high-pointed spire to the ground of shells below.

"Darling," he said, "what are we going to do about it?"

"About what?" came the answer.

"About everything."

"Oh, do you mean the ball that we had planned for our wedding and the dance you got up for tomorrow night?"

"Yes—that—and, oh, the gambling-houses that I own in Frisco!"

"I had thought of that, Handsome."

"And you left it to me, my treasure?"

"But, Handsome," she sobbed, "I am afraid to tell my parents. They have looked forward to our wedding, the ball, and all of the rest as one of the greatest events of their lives, and to shatter it is to shatter happiness, and not get one penny of our promised money. Then we couldn't have our home that has been built, and, oh, Handsome, it is so pretty that I hate to give it up."

"My dear girl, your parents are stern. Come, let us face the cannon together; if we lose we lose together, yet we have each other."

"And that is a taste of heaven," she said.

Slowly the veranda was entered by this happy but serious couple; the button was pressed, and Sarah ushered them in with her usual jocular way. To-night she was surprised. "You are early to-night, Miss Harcourt," she said, "and good it is. Your ma and pa have just received the programmes for the ball; they be berry anxous that you and Mr. Young see them." Sarah said the last words very slowly, because she had noticed something very strange to her. She then lead them to where Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt were, who formed a picturesque scene. A fine-looking old gentleman, with a black evening suit on, which he had just worn to the show. His wife was none the less better looking. She wore an old rose silk dress, which contrasted prettily with her grey wavy hair, blue eyes, and a countenance of determination. The old man was the first to speak. "Good evening, my dear children, good evening. Your box at the opera was unoccupied, but mamma and I know what it is to spark out amongst the shrubbery; in that doll-house, ha! That is where I first told her that, as sure as the vine grew 'round the stump, she was my darling sugar lump. Ha, ha! I told you that I had been in the mint several years and could teach you how to make Yankee dimes. I taught you and you have known how ever since, ha, ha!" The rigorous old man was jolly that night.

"My children, something is wrong; you look fatigued," said the anxious mother, "but I have something that will no doubt alter your looks. Come now, tell what you look so guilty, yet serious about."

The long-dreaded tale was now told—how they had joined the life they intended living, and lastly that they wished a quiet wedding, or at least for the ball to be discarded from their memory. As they had expected, the parents were very unrelenting. Darling had acquired some of their austerity, hence she was just as firmly opposed to a "swell wedding" as her parents were firm in joyously anticipating it. The wedding was to be postponed until the betrothed consented to all that was prepared for a grand and showy wedding. Handsome was reproached with much severity for letting himself be caught in such a trap, as the old man expressed it.

Days passed by and still the old couple refused to give up their ideas of having their plans carried out. Still the lovers were just as persistent in what they thought to be best. During this time they were assisting in the services. Darling's voice was wonderful. She had never before sung such a sweet high soprano with so much feeling in her words. She was not innocent of the effect that her voice had, and how it brought flocks of people to Christ by its sweet rendition of appealing words. Handsome's sweetheart was not alone in her good works, for he was made a deacon in the church, which had never had such a faithful officer. He was also spending much of his time in the study of the Bible under the pastor.

One year passed by. Darling had given up her use-to-be friends, as well as amusements. The latter she declared to be catch-boxes for the regions of darkness. She was to comply with the conditions of the wedding, in order that she might own their promised home on the corner, which was arranged according to their own taste with every luxury. She thought that she would never be willing to submit to that as she sat on the gallery with Bible in hand. The day had been one of bitter trial and suffering. Everything had gone wrong. The mother had said, "Handsome will not be allowed to visit the house any more, after his expected visit this morning, unless he gives up his fanatic ideas." The girl's eyes were opened wide. A careful observer would have noticed a very pained look on her face. She had grown more beautiful from rest, sweet rest, that only quietude gives. Last night and this morning had been anything but rest. It was a question of giving up earthly love for heavenly love. Did not the Bible say, "Honor thy father and mother"? If she honored them, she ought to love. "But how can I love?" she sobbed, "because everything in life is to be taken away?" Her only comfort and sympathizer, Handsome, would never be allowed to be with her again. She could not defy mother, yet she loved Handsome so dearly.

Handsome was very happy. He had a great burden of conscience wafted from his soul. The world was cheerful to him, and his heart was light. He came down the avenue whistling that loved tune, "Will

50 Bible Students

Can attend college at half regular rates by working part time. Term opens September 7. Write Charles J. Burton, Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

there be any stars in my crown?'' At the gate he stopped short and said, ''Well, you look as if you had just come back from a funeral; cheer up, the worst is yet to come.''

''Yes, I fear the worst is yet to come.'' Handsome was puzzled at her grave words, and with a boyish laugh replied, ''Ho, ho! I guess if I am the worst to come I had better make a twenty-three run.''

''Oh, Handsome, I can't see you any more. Never look into your eyes, which to me are delicious depths of love, and now there will be no one to love, only cold looks and sneers, not even mother's love. If I were not a Christian I would feel like dying. I wish I could run off, run away to India, and maybe when I told some poor little brown-faced girl over there about somebody who loved her, maybe she would love and caress me; but, oh, Handsome! I know it is wrong, but the world would seem so cold without you. A verse I read has sunk into my mind and soul to stay there until destiny shows me the last on earth. It was from God's Good Man and ran something like this: 'Art thou afraid to live, my heart? Look 'round and see what life at it's best, with it's strange unrest, can mean for thee!' ''

''Darling, it grieves me to think that you could ever conceive the idea of us being separated. Your verse has struck me deeper than words will express, and I take hope in an idea of yours. Darling,'' he said, ''say that I may go to India with you and be loved by a white-faced little queen.''

''Handsome,'' she gasped. ''do you mean it?''

''Yes, Darling, we will run away tonight.''

Mr. and Mrs. Young have passed two years in India. Mrs. Young was considered to be the prima donna of America. Large quantities of gold were offered to her on account of so wonderful a voice. She refused all offers, and remained gracious to her heavenly Father and earthly love, thereby bringing hundreds of souls to Christ. Peace and love remained supreme. But the Harcourt home in America is still one of sorrow for their child; ever hoping that her supposed fanatic idea of religion will be given up. But her parents were disappointed, for they passed the rest of their days in the frivolities of society without seeing the long-looked-for coming of Darling, their darling, and the use-to-be Darling of the town until Darling's Repentance.

Some By-Products.

The by-products of the young people's meeting are worth considering.

Participation in the society's meeting is an education. It makes young people think.

It trains them in public speaking.

It spreads knowledge, usually of a useful character.

It cultivates the social spirit and life.

Open our Eyes and Tell Us Why.

You can see any day a white horse; did you ever see a white colt? How many kinds of trees grow in your neighborhood, and what are they good for? Why does a horse nip grass backward and a cow forward? Why does a hop vine wind one way, and a bean vine another! Where should a chimney be larger, at top or bottom, and why? Why does a horse when tethered with a rope unravel it in grazing, while a cow twists it into a kinky knot? Why do leaves turn upside down just before a rain?—Exchange.

What Christianity in her antagonism with every form of unbelief most needs is holy living.—Christlieb.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

A Christian Home and High Grade College for Girls and Young Women

College Preparatory, Full College and Special Courses. Faculty of experienced specialists. Superior advantages in Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science and Physical Training. If you want good care, culture, thoroughness and satisfactory results, investigate.

For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. W. T. MOORE, President.

200 College Place, Columbia, Mo.

EUREKA COLLEGE

A record of fifty-two successful years. Six substantial and convenient buildings, lighted with electricity and warmed by central heating plant. Beautiful campus shaded with natural trees. Biological and physical laboratories with modern equipment. Carefully selected library, including the best periodicals. Lida's Wood, girls' dormitory, known far and wide. Wholesome atmosphere. Eureka stands for the best. Courses offered: Collegiate, Preparatory, Sacred Literature, Public Speaking, Music, Art and Commercial.

For catalogue and further information, address ROBERT E. HIERONYMUS, President

MISSOURI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

ONE YEAR FREE AT ROYAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, LEIPZIG, FOR THE HONOR GRADUATE.

Faculty of 30 graduate instructors. Vocal and Instrumental. Classes and private lessons. Languages, Oratory, Dramatic Art. Normal courses for Teachers. Boarding department for young ladies, one-half block from school. Careful supervision. Students met at train. Terms moderate. Write for Catalogue.

J. C. EISENBERG, DIRECTOR 2108 LAFAYETTE AVE.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

CANTON, MO.

A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.

Send for free illustrated Catalog.

Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

BUTLER COLLEGE

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

Elegant buildings, over one hundred rooms. Preparing to erect $50,000.00 worth more of buildings.

Campus, eighty-six acres. Creeks, springs, native forests.

Cost for tuition alone $5.00 per month; for board alone $12.00 per month; for board and tuition in College home $16.00 per month. Four Universities are represented in the Faculty.

The College gives Ministerial, Classical, Philosophical, and Scientific Courses.

The school has neither hazing, nor secret fraternities; does not desire to enroll boys and young men who are unwilling to stand for clean habits and worthy characters.

Correspondence invited. Address J. HOPWOOD, Lynchburg, Va.

The Changing Order of the Average Housekeeper

In picking up a newspaper printed in any one of the small cities of the land, and running over the "Want Ads," it is easy to see that the "maids" of to-day are far advanced above the "hired girls" of a generation ago. The time was when the mistress of the house laid down the law, and told the hired girl what would be required of her, but nowadays things are reversed. The mistress of the house makes many concessions in order to get and keep a maid, and the advertisements announce that there are few or no children in the family and that there will be no washing. Also the ironing is often done out of the house, but in the majority of cases the "no-washing" announcement is the only one. Girls who go out to service refuse to do the washing, so that there is nothing to be done but send it to a laundry or a washerwoman.

But the announcement tells more than the ordinary reader discovers in looking it over. To have no washing done in the house often means having next to none done out of the house. It is really interesting to watch the procession of children delivering clothes their mothers have toiled over, or to denote the baskets sent out from homes in the delivery wagons on Monday mornings. To know the size of the family and then see the size of the washing, is to make interesting calculations about the state of the home and its inhabitants in regard to clean clothes. Many well-to-do families have the washing done only once in two weeks, because it is so small that it does not justify them in taking the trouble to pick it up and send it oftener. At least that is what they tell you about it.

Ladies, who consider themselves good housekeepers and home-makers, are often positively stingy in the way of clean clothes for the household and personal use. Often the woman who does the work receives but seventy-five cents per week for a family of four or five, and furnishes the soap and starch herself; and before any one condemns the habit of "beating down" poor women who wash for a living, let it be stated that the seventy-five cents is a fair price considering the size of the washing. Of course, many families pay more and have larger washings, but the average woman can not resist the temptation to economize in this particular. Whether she has a maid to help or not, she is always scheming to keep down the number of pieces that go into the hamper. Some thrifty housewives haggle with the washerwoman, and insist that a fixed price shall be maintained by the week no matter whether the washings are large or small. "Our washings vary," they say, easily, and "some weeks they are very small. I would rather have a fixed amount each week than to pay more or less as the case may be."

"But only the very poor women and the amateur workers consider such propositions. It is almost impossible to keep from loading down the basket and enjoying the luxury of plenty of clean garments when a fixed rate is established, and the weary worker soon discovers that the small washings are few and far between.

The devices resorted to save washing are many and varied. In one home where the head of the house is a minister with a salary of fifteen hundred dollars and a house to live in, the washing is wonderfully small. Sheets and table-cloths are changed once in two weeks, and in mid-winter underwear only as often. To be sure, each member of the family is careful, but most active. Healthy adults need clean garments oftener than that. Everything is rigidly kept down to the lowest possible limit, and the maid in the kitchen has but three dish towels, for fear she might slip them into the hamper instead of dabbling them out herself. White petticoats are worn only on rare occasions and washed on still rarer ones, being used until the last possible moment, regardless of the dark background they furnish for filmy dresses. When asked why she was leaving a certain family, a capable young woman said frankly that she could not endure the things they put upon her. She was required to press white dresses and shirt-waists time and again, and she said the odor of the soiled garments under the warm iron was more than she could endure.

Many people dabble things out at home to save washing, and they are the most troublesome customers any one could have.

A colored washerwoman told her woes to a sympathetic charity worker, and said some plain, but truthful, things about her patrons. They would wash out handkerchiefs and towels and even underwear at home two or three weeks, sending it to her occasionally dirty and yellow, as clothes get when not properly washed, and they expected her to restore the garments to their former state with one washing. Every one knows that yellow garments require careful bleaching, but these well-to-do ladies added to the burdens of the poor, old woman by expecting one washing a month to do the work of four.

One well-to-do family with a well-arranged, airy dining room where the table was always beautifully set or had a lace square on the polished surface, took all their meals in a little dark, back room on a small table covered with a red cloth. This cloth was sent once in three or four weeks to the washerwoman, along with the ugly red napkins made from old table-cloths, but the bill was kept down to fifty cents per week and very few persons ever had a glimpse of the red cloth. The parlor had mahogany chairs and fine rugs, but clean garments were too costly luxuries to be enjoyed. In the dresser drawers in the bed-rooms were elaborate garments for emergencies, but for all other occasions the family wore the things that would show the least dirt and be the cheapest laundried.

If only poor people economized on washing it might not be so bad, but when really rich families do without clean garments in order to save twenty-five or fifty cents a week, it looks stingy, to say the least. The charm of a thin waist is its perfect clean-

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN
request.

Sixteth Session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture, New Laboratories. Splendid Campus, Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on

E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

Campbell-Hagerman College

For Girls and Young Women. Begins its next session September 14, 1908. Large Faculty of scholarly men and women. Thoroughly equipped Departments of Music, Art and Expression. Confers A. B. anl B. L. Degrees. 126 graduates in the regular course, in the last five years. Between 60 and 70 graduates in the special Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Departments of Bookkeeping, Stenography and Typewriting. School of Domestic Science. Well equipped Gymnasium. Splendid new buildings with all modern conveniences. For catalogue address,

B. C. HAGERMAN, Pres.

BETHANY COLLEGE

Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environments well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET,
Bethany, W. Va.

MIAMI UNIVERSITY THE FAMOUS OLD COLLEGE OF THE CENTRAL WEST

(Supported the by State of Ohio.)

85th year opens September 16th. Free Tuition. Low cost of living. Wide range of studies. Thorough instruction. Christian influences. No saloons. A well-equipped gymnasium with specially trained physical director. Beautiful campus of sixty-five acres. Splendid buildings. Modern equipment. Write for catalogue and handsomely illustrated bulletin to the President.
GUY POTTER BENTON, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ohio.

FORTIETH YEAR.

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.

Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address

MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.

Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.

liness, and dirty underskirts are abominable. The time many a woman spends dressing soiled clothes trying to restore them to beauty and freshness might well be put in giving them a thorough cleaning with soap and water. Anything but a young and beautiful girl in a dress that is soiled, and reeking with the odor of perspiration. Little babies and young girls lose their charms very rapidly if not arrayed in clean garments. To have plenty of towels and clean household linen seems beyond the wildest dreams of many homes, and the ladies who recklessly spend money for trifles and bon bons will haggle over the price paid for enough clean clothes to barely carry them along, when a few more cents each week would give the luxury of perfect cleanliness. It is not necessary to be extravagant with clean clothes, but there should be plenty for all purposes. Doing without enough clean articles for the home and family is not thrift, but foolishness.—Religious Telescope.

THE COUNTRY BOARDING HOUSE.

BY CAROLINE FRENCH BENTON.

All of us who have boarded in the country in summer have thought that if ever we ourselves kept boarders we could make them more comfortable than we had been made. Really, absurd though it seems on the face of it, the one who knows best how to keep a boarding house is the boarder. She has been used to this and that at home and expects to have it in summer, while the farmer's wife or other woman who takes outsiders into her home knows nothing about these things, but only how she herself is accustomed to live, and she merely extends her ways a little and has the same sort of rooms, beds and meals as she had before.

But while the city woman who goes to the country to board is considered exacting by her country sister, she is usually ready to be pleased with the simpler life if only certain things which to her are necessities, are provided. Possibly she speaks of these, and it is too late for her hostess to provide them for this one season, while had she known of them earlier they might have been managed. Possibly, too, she resents the suggestions; too often that attitude of resentment is here. And yet how foolish it is! If she wishes to make a success of her business she should welcome all sensible, helpful requests made by those who are paying her for food and lodging, and paying generously. As the child said of herself: "I want what I want." The boarder wants certain things, and wants them badly. If she has them, or what approximates to them, she will return a second or third year and tell her friends of the delightful place she has found in the country. If her wishes are not regarded and are rather treated with indignant silence, she will probably never return to this same boarding place, but find one where she can have what she likes. The first thing a city woman wishes for in the country is a good bed. Not one hard and lumpy, with a poor spring, and comfortables in the place of blankets, but a bed such as she has at home, with a good, even spring, a mattress which lies smoothly upon it, and which, if not hair, is at least a strong fiber covered with a layer of wool or felt. Such a bed is not expensive, and it is pleasant to lie on. Then the sheets should be abundant and changed frequently, the blankets cut in halves and hemmed at both ends, the white spread scrupulously clean and the pillows full and heavy with feathers which have been so perfectly cured that there is no suggestion of odor about them.

The windows of the sleeping room are to be considered next. There must be good screens in them, easy to adjust. The curtains should be freshly laundered muslin, and there should certainly be dark shades to keep out the morning light. Then the washstand needs a little thought, for there must be plenty of towels, changed often, a fresh one added every day and one taken away, at the least. And, last of all, there should be a good lamp and a comfortable chair, with a small table to write on.

As to the dining room, which comes second in importance to the sleeping room, that, too, must be screened and shaded to begin with. Then the table linen should always be clean and napkins changed every day at dinner, if that is possible. As to the food, there it is impossible to be perfectly definite, since price of board, nearness to markets, and so on, must all be considered. Generally speaking, however, the summer boarder wishes fresh vegetables, well cooked, plenty of fruit and berries, milk, cream and eggs. If there is good cold drinking water and tea and coffee are carefully made, and delicious country butter, it will not matter so much if the meat cart brings tough meat, as a usual thing, and the ice supply is short and desserts are plain, and these things are almost certain to be the rule. An excellent plan in serving, which many farmer's wives are now using, is to have the family meals first, at an earlier hour than boarders like to observe, and the second meals served to the guests only. This makes waiting on the table easier and gives a certain freedom all around, which is pleasant.

The indoor sitting room and the porch, which is the out-of-door room corresponding, requires a little thought also. There should not be too much furniture within, too many chairs or pictures or ornaments. Have the walls rather bare instead of covered with pictures and mementoes, and dispense with as much upholstery as possible. A few easy wicker rockers are better than heavier chairs for the summer. Be sure and have a good shaded reading lamp.

The porch should be as broad as possible and shaded with vines. The quick-growing moon vine is a good one to plant, for its leaves give heavy shade. Then have plain rockers and a hammock, and that will be all that is needed here. One or more hammocks hung under the trees, however, will be appreciated. These things may mean some expense at first, but they will last more than one season and will prove themselves useful and delightful. They make the plainest farmhouse seem homelike and attractive.—New York Observer.

The Drink that Cheers

but does not inebriate. Tea has been credited with these qualities—

Coca-Cola

has them and more. It is cooling, delicious and refreshing. Relieves fatigue. And comparing tea, coffee and Coca-Cola

An Eminent Chemist Says:

Jno. M. McCandless, State Chemist of Georgia, said:
"I have purchased in the open market samples of Coca-Cola Syrup and subjected same to chemical analysis. I find therein no trace of the alkaloid cocaine, for which I made special search, and nothing of a nature any more injurious than would be derived from an ordinary cup of tea or coffee."

GET THE GENUINE

5c. Everywhere

35

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

COTNER UNIVERSITY Bethany (Lincoln), Nebr.

COLLEGE OF ARTS, four courses, four years each. Classical, Sacred, Literature, Philosophical, Collegiate, Normal, leading to A. B.—COLLEGE OF MEDICINE—DEPARTMENTS of Sacred Literature and Education. Combine six year course leading to degrees A. B. and M. D. Grants State Certificates, grade and life. SCHOOLS of Music, Business, Oratory, Art. ACADEMY accredited by state.

Beautiful location. Connected with Lincoln by electric line. New gymnasium. New heating plant building. First Semester opens September 7th, 1908. Second Semester opens January 26th, 1909. Address. W. P. AYLSWORTH, Chancellor.

"IN THE HEART OF THE BLUE GRASS."

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

Attend Transylvania University. A standard institution with elective courses, modern conveniences, scholarly surroundings, fine moral influences. Expenses reasonable. Students from twenty-seven states and seven foreign countries. First term begins September 14th, 1908. Write for catalog to-day.

President' Transylvania University, Lexington,

When the Box Was Opened

"Daddy!"

"Yes, dear."

"Do you think the box will come to-night?"

"I hope so, laddie."

"O, well," with a weary sigh, "I 'spose there will be nothing in it but some old clothes and a few books."

"Why, Bartie!"

"You know that's about all, daddy," and the great brown eyes so tired with pain looked straight into the troubled ones above him.

"Clothes and books are very useful, dear," was what the father answered, but he knew the sick lad spoke truly and he wished for his sake there were beautiful things packed into the boxes and barrels sent to missionaries.

"Yes, but we don't need any more old clothes, daddy," and the thin hand touched the minister's patched coat sleeve.

"Well, Bartie, they will be new old clothes, because we have never seen them."

"O, daddy," and a smile played about the exquisite mouth, "you do say such funny things!"

"Now, suppose I tell you a sleepy story before I go out to make a call or two, laddie."

"Yes, that will be nice," and the small boy settled down among his pillows.

"It was the twilight hour and Mother Nature was helping the birdies and the flowers and the squirrels get ready for bed.

"The birdies were nestling close together in the leafy tree tops, swaying back and forth, back and forth, sleepy, sleepy, O, so sleepy, that Mother Nature had to help some of the wee ones poke their bits of heads beneath fluffy wings.

"The flowers were bending their sweet faces, low, low, low, closing tiny eyes, swaying back and forth, back and forth, soft and low, sleepy, O, so sleepy!

"The gay little squirrels were tired of scampering about and were disappearing into their little beds one after another, sleepy, sleepy, O, so sleepy!

"When Mother Nature has tucked and patted each woodland baby into bed, she lighted a lot of tiny lamps which were nothing more nor less than hundreds of fireflies. Those dainty lights were just what the birdies and the squirrels needed in the middle of the night when they woke up thirsty and had to go to the brook for a drink of water.

"There were no sleepy cries of 'Please, I want a drink. I want a drink of water,' no, indeed, the night lamps gave a lovely light in the woodland bedroom.

"When the last lamp had been lighted, Mother Nature sang and rocked the birdies and the flowers and the squirrels back and forth, back and forth, soft and low, soft and low, slow, slow, slow, soft and low."

The father bent over the little lad and found he, too, was fast asleep. Then he went out and gently closed the door.

"O, girlie, I wish there could be one beautiful thing in the box for Bartlett," and a sob sounded in the minister's voice as he entered the scantily furnished living-room where his wife sat darning stockings.

"Perhaps there will be, Roger; God knows how long Bartie has been ill and how hard it is for him to lie there day after day during his convalescence," and the peaceful faced woman rose from her chair and put her comforting hand on her husband's shoulder.

"We will hope so, dear," and a note of cheer came into the sad voice.

The box did not arrive that night, but two days later it reached the humble western parsonage.

"O, daddy, daddy, if there should be something new and pretty!" and the child's pale face was flushed with excitement.

"Easy, easy, dear," and the mother put her arm tight about him, while the father turned away from the eager, expectant eyes, and a groan sounded above the noise of the hammer with which the box lid was being removed.

"O, daddy, what is that?" as a bundle wrapped in white paper came to view. Surely that was neither an old coat nor an old dress.

"Uuwrap it, laddie," and the package was put into the outstretched hands.

"O, mother; O, daddy!" from the paper came a magic lantern, one of the best and brand new.

"Thank God!" said the missionary.

"Amen!" breathed his wife's low voice.

—Advance.

"In de Natchal Way."

A rich Northerner, walking about in a Southern negro settlement, came upon a house around which several children were playing. Seeing that the family was destitute, he called the oldest negro boy and gave him a dollar, telling him to spend it for a Christmas turkey. As soon as the generous man had gone, the negro woman called her boy and said: "Thomas, yo' gimme dat dollah and go git dat turkey in de natchal way."

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING
IN THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS
Two Cents per word, per insertion.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905

A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.

For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

Living Praise

NOS. 1 AND 2

BY

Chas. H. Gabriel and W. W. Dowling

FOR

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS, YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES, EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS, AND ALL RELIGIOUS OCCASIONS

No. 1, No. 2 } CONTAINS { 267, 227 } SONGS AND HYMNS

EDITIONS AND PRICES.

No. 1 or No. 2.	Postpaid Per copy	Not prepaid Per Dozen	Not prepaid Per Hundred
Cloth Binding	30c.	3.00	$25.00
Board Binding	.25c.	2.50	20.00
Limp Cloth Binding	.25c.	2.00	15.00

W. W. Dowling, the editor-in-chief of our Bible school literature, assisted Mr. Gabriel in selecting such songs as he knew "our people" would like, and the selections are in every way good and suitable to the needs of our brotherhood.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE WORLD-FAMOUS

Tissot Bible Pictures

A collection of 120 from the Old Testament and 120 from the New Testament

Size 5x6 and beautifully colored. Each collection in a convenient portfolio.

EVERY CHRISTIAN HOME SHOULD HAVE THESE PICTURES

And having made special arrangements with the publishers, we are in position to supply them at the remarkably low price of

$1.00 FOR EACH COLLECTION

Upon receipt of $1.00 we will send by mail, postpaid, either the Old Testament or New Testament collection,---the selection to be made by the purchaser.

OR

We will send these pictures to subscribers to "The Christian-Evangelist"

ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE

UPON THE FOLLOWING TERMS AND CONDITIONS:

1. A portfolio containing the full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $3.00 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full amount, $3.00, to pay the subscription for a period of two years. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are now paid.

2. The same offer as above to any subscriber who sends in $3.00—one-half of this amount to apply on his or her own subscription, and one-half for a new subscriber for one year.

3. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $1.50 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full $1.50, to pay the subscription for a period of one year. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears, or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are paid.

4. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any NEW subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" sending us $1.50 for one year's subscription.

5. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any of our present subscribers who send us a new subscriber under the terms set forth in the preceding paragraph (No. 4). That is, we will send a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the new subscriber, and also a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the old subscriber sending us the new subscription.

6. A portfolio containing full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us two new subscriptions, accompanied by $3.00 to pay for same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old Testament or New Testament studies.

SPECIAL AND EXTRAORDINARY

7. Two portfolios, one containing the full collection of 120 pictures of Old Testament studies, and one collection containing 120 pictures of New Testament studies, both free of charge and postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us three new subscriptions, accompanied by $4.50, to pay for the same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old or New Testament studies.

We reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time, without notice.

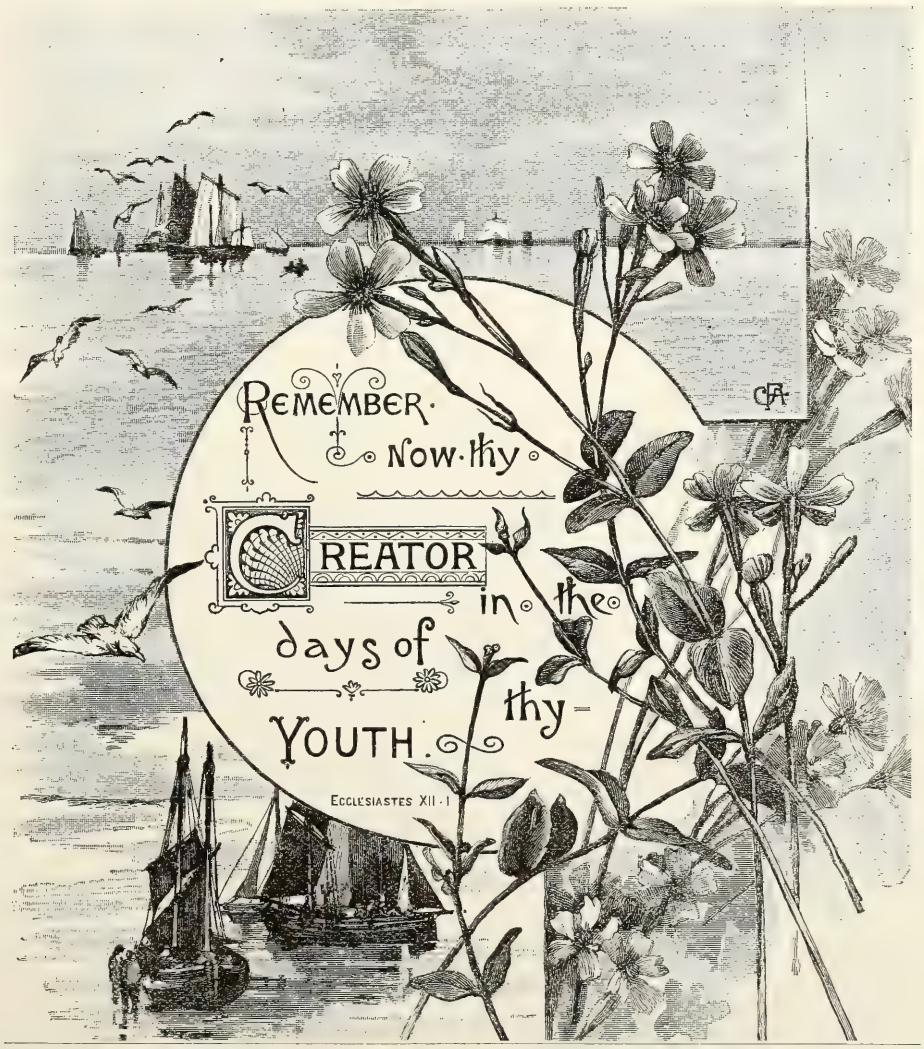
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

VOLUME XLV. NUMBER 32.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 6, 1908.



The Christian-Evangelist.

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER, B. B. TYLER, W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.
Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.
For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 995
Editorial—
The Supremacy of the Bible..... 996
The Offense of the Cross..... 996
Illiberal Liberalism 996
Notes and Comments..... 997
Current Religious Thought..... 998
Editor's Easy Chair..... 999
Contributed Articles—
Gleanings from the International S. S. Convention 1000
Use Men in Athletics, and Do It in the Name of Christ.....1000
As Seen from the Dome. F. D. Power.1001
The Church and Men.....1002
Boy Drowned. Dr. Elliott I. Osgood 1004
Men for the Ministry. W. R. Warren 1004
Our Budget 1005
Adult Bible Class Movement.....1008
The Indiana State Convention.....1009
Concerning the Proposed Union at Rockford, Ill 1010
News from Many Fields.....1011
Evangelistic 1015
People's Forum 1016
Midweek Prayer-meeting 1017
Christian Endeavor 1017
Sunday-school 1018
The Home Department 1019

J. H. Garrison, President.
W. W. Dowling, V. Pres't. W. Daviess Pittman, Bus. Mgr. W. D. Cree, Sec.-Treas.

Christian Publishing Company

2712 PINE STREET - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

August 6, 1908.

To Our Subscribers,
Dear Friends:--

You will observe that the list of books we are offering at a special discount of 30% is again inserted in this week's issue of The Christian-Evangelist. A number of the books listed in the first advertisement are not on the list, as it appears in this issue, for the reason that they have been sold out, and from the present indications, the next time we insert this list, there will be very few of the books remaining, as our friends are seeing the advantage of purchasing these books at these exceptionally low prices, which are in some instances below the cost to us.

In the matter of the Tissot Bible Pictures, being offered for sale and as a premium for subscribers, we desire to inform you that this offer will positively be withdrawn September 1, 1908; therefore, any who desire to take advantage of this offer to secure these magnificent pictures will please see that their orders for the same reach us not later than Monday, August 31, 1908, after which date the offer will be permanently withdrawn.

Sincerely yours,

W. Daviess Pittman

Business Manager.

Does Your Church
or Bible School Need

NEW SONG BOOKS?

We are headquarters for Church Hymnals
and Song Books
for Bible Schools

A NEW CATALOGUE SENT ON APPLICATION

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 6, 1908. Number 32.

Current Events

In Honor of Garrison.

One needs to make no comment on the fact that a bronze tablet has just been placed in a new building at the corner of Congress and Water streets, Boston, other than to announce the inscription and say that men of such character can not be too early or too often remembered. The reading is:

On this spot
WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON began the publication of
"The Liberator"
January 1, 1831.

In a small chamber, friendless and unseen,
Toiled o'er his types one poor unlearned young man.
The place was dark, unfurnitured and mean,
Yet there the freedom of a race began.

A Labor Leader and the Saloon.

John Burns is to the British workingman what John Mitchell is to the American. Burns is of the people, as is Mitchell. Burns has risen to a cabinet position, as may Mitchell, perhaps, if Mr. Bryan should win. If the latter has ever made any pronouncement on the liquor question, it has escaped our memory. But Mr. Burns believes firmly in temperance. Of the "public house," as the saloon is called in his country, he says it is very bad for men, worse for women, and positively intolerable for children. Mr. Burns knows, for he has lived for many years in Battersea, one of the most densely populated of the London working-class districts.

Milk, Babies, Graft.

Mr. Burns is much interested in a "milk bill," which it is hoped the British parliament will pass. He spoke recently before the National Conference on Infant Mortality, and showed that England is far ahead of other comparable countries, with a rate of 132 per 1,000, as compared with 155 in Belgium and 204 in Germany. We wish the American figures had been quoted. We believe they would show up not favorably, for we are more lax in holding up standards of quality of milk, and our weather conditions are more trying on the infant. The chemist of a city of some 60,000 inhabitants told us recently that a great profit is made by milkmen in dealing in the city's water. The objection is not to water, but to watered milk. But—well, it is just a case of good reputable citizens failing to turn out—or, rather, keep out—grafters, when they go to, or, more often, keep away from the polls.

An Ambassador's Speech.

We have not seen all of Ambassador Hill's speech as he discoursed on "The Day we Celebrate" to the five hundred members—five hundred, that is, who have the entre on such occasions—of the American colony. But he gave utterance to a sentiment that is worth heeding. "Independence," he said, "is the keynote of the day we celebrate, but this day should also make us accentuate that other note of international interindependence, fellowship, friendship and loyalty to high principles of law, justice and honor."

Wages and Food.

A matter of supreme importance to 99 per cent of the people of this country is that which concerns the rates of wages and the retail prices of food. The Bureau of Labor of the Department of Commerce and Labor has placed in the hands of the printer Bulletin No. 77, which gives the results of an investigation of the principal wage working occupations in 4,169 establishments representing the manufacturing and mechanical industries of the country. This showed that the average wages per hour in 1907 were 3.7 per cent higher than in 1906, the regular hours of labor per week were 0.4 per cent lower than in 1906, and the number of employes in the establishments investigated was 1 per cent greater than in 1906.

Investigations covering the sales of 1,014 dealers in 68 localities show that the retail prices of 30 principal articles of food, weighted according to consumption in representative workingmen's families, were 4.2 per cent higher in 1907 than in 1906. As the advance in retail prices from 1906 to 1907 was greater than the advance in wages per hour, the purchasing power of an hour's wages, as measured by food, was slightly less in 1907 than in 1906, the decrease being one-half of 1 per cent.

Average hourly wages in 1907 were higher than in any other year of the eighteen-year period, 1890 to 1907, and more than 20 per cent higher than the average in any year from 1890 to 1900. As compared in each case with the average for the ten-year period, 1890 to 1899, average hourly wages in 1907 were 28.8 per cent higher, the number of employes in the establishments investigated was 44.4 per cent greater, and the average hours of labor per week were 5 per cent lower.

The average price of food in 1907 was also higher than in any other year of the eighteen-year period from 1890 to 1907. The average price of 30 principal articles, weighted according to family consumption of the various articles, was 20.6 per cent higher in 1907 than the average price for the ten years from 1890 to 1899. Compared with the average for the same ten-year period, the purchasing power of an hour's wages in 1907 was 6.8 per cent greater.

The increase in average hourly wages in 1907 over 1906 was quite general, occurring in 40 of the 41 industries covered by the investigation of the Bureau of Labor. The greatest increase was in the manufacture of cotton goods, where the average wages per hour in 1907 were 12.9 per cent higher than in 1906. In the manufacture of paper and wood pulp the increase was 10.1 per cent; in eight other industries the increase was 5 per cent but less than 10 per cent, and in 30 industries the increase was less than 5 per cent. In one industry, Bessemer steel, there was a decrease of wages of 0.9 per cent. In the 41 industries as a whole, weighted according to importance, the increase in wages per hour was 3.7 per cent.

Of the 30 articles of food covered by the investigation, 29 were higher in price in 1907 than in 1906. The articles which showed the greatest advance in price are flour 8.9 per cent, butter 8 per cent, evaporated apples 7.8 per cent, milk 7.3 per cent, corn meal 6.8 per cent, cheese 6.7 per cent, and potatoes 5.4 per cent. The only article which showed a decrease is tea, the decrease being 0.2 per cent. The average prices of 20 of the 30 articles were higher in 1907 than in any other year of the eighteen-year period from 1890 to 1907.

The Passing of a Bishop.

One of the most distinguished men of the Episcopal Church in America was Bishop Potter, whose illness has for some weeks been announced in the daily papers, and who finally passed away at Cooperstown, N. Y. Bishop Potter, by birth, training and tastes, was exactly suited for the position he ultimately attained, and he has done more to popularize the Episcopal church than, perhaps, any other clergyman in its ranks. For, while an aristocrat, he was always ready to visit and care for the humble churches and missions of his diocese. He sought to put himself in touch with living things, and though he made mistakes—one very serious one, we feel, when he inaugurated his "Subway Tavern," an experimental saloon, which was opened with prayer and the singing of the Doxology and closed a year later for lack of patronage—at the same time he proved himself of great service to his church. He conducted its affairs as a captain of industry would have conducted some great business. He learned the principles of business in a grocery store, and afterwards fitted himself for the ministry. He was a man of intellectual attainments.

Editorial

The Supremacy of the Bible.

In spite of all adverse criticism and the open and veiled attacks of skeptics and agnostics, it must be admitted by all candid minds that the Bible continues to hold the supreme place in the world's literature. It is still what Walter Scott called it, on his dying bed, "the Book." It is destined to remain so throughout the present dispensation. The recent revival of interest in Bible study is only one of the evidences of the hold which these Sacred Writings have upon the minds and hearts of the most enlightened people of the world.

It is not difficult to account for the remarkable influence which the Bible is exerting on the life of mankind, and for the place which it holds in the affections of men. If there were no other reason for this fact, it would be enough that it contains the portraiture of the one perfect life which this world has known, and that it presents to the world, not onlp its greatest teacher, but its only Savior. But, aside from that fact, it is a book of marvelous spiritual power and infinite reach of thought and purpose. One of the best recent statements we have seen concerning the Bible is contained in a lately published work, to which reference was recently made in these columns, entitled, "What Shall We Believe?" consisting of addresses delivered by members of the faculty of Auburn Theological Seminary. In a paragraph concerning the Bible is the following statement:

"The Bible gives us the record of a great spiritual history, wrought out in the life of man and of the world, with such sweep of vision, with such minuteness of detail, with such accuracy of description as to make its story utterly trustworthy. The center and charm and worth of it all is Jesus Christ. He is the consummate revelation of God; he is the ideal man. The Bible is born out of man's profoundest religious experiences, when the Spirit of God speaks most plainly to him. It ministers to man's profoundest religious experiences, and finds him in the deepest recesses of his life where God alone deals with him. When we open its pages, its message of conviction for sin, of offer of salvation, of comfort in sorrow, of fellowship with God, of part in the heavenly glory and blessedness, goes to our heart as no other message has the power to do. My belief in the Bible leads me with all urgency to call men to repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ. It leads me to say to all men, the first thing for you to do is to get right with God, to get as close to him as you can, to follow the best light you have, to surrender yourself to him, to trust him to give you more and still more light. Turn to God! My belief in the Bible impels me to urge all men to read and study its pages, to open their hearts to its sweet influences, to entrust themselves to its guidance in their journey along the perilous road of life, to test their doctrine and to test their lives by its counsel. My belief in the Bible fills me with utter calm and security in the midst of all the strife of tongues and the assault of men upon it or upon the religion out of which it has been born. I have no sleepless hours or disturbed dreams about its value, its truth or its power. It is a living book, it reveals a living Savior and Lord, it ministers to needy souls a living gospel."

Does it not seem like a small business to be turning a microscope of hypercriticism on a book of such majestic sweep, of such infinite grace, of such divine purpose to discover some flecks and flaws on which to base the proposition of its "'errancy"? Enough to know that the Bible infallibly leads the devout believer to Jesus Christ, who is an infallible Teacher and an infallible Savior. Infinitely better would this world be if men would open their hearts to the divine teaching of this book, and seek to incorporate its doctrines into their lives. Let historical investigation, of course, shed all the light which it can bring from the past upon the sacred record, but after all we shall derive the greatest benefit from a devout perusal of its sacred pages, with minds open to the truth and with hearts that are willing to obey the truth.

Would that the daily reading of the Bible might become a fixed habit in the lives of all who reverence it, as an inspired volume, to the end that its high ethical standard, and its pure spiritual fervor, might mold our lives and characters after the divine pattern!

The Offense of the Cross.

It is one thing to acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and another thing to recognize him as the Savior of men, by way of crucifixion and death. Peter was prompt to confess his faith in Jesus as the Son of the living God, on the coast of Cæsarea Phillipi, but immediately afterwards, when Jesus spoke of his death by crucifixion, he rebuked him, saying, "Far be it from thee." Christ's divinity he was willing to acknowledge, but his humiliation upon the cross, that by means of death he might open up the way for our salvation, he was not prepared to accept. Much more must he have been offended by the statement of Jesus that not only he himself must die upon the cross for men, but that everyone who would be his disciple must, also, take up his cross and follow him. This was a program for which Peter was not prepared. It is a program for which thousands in the church of to-day are unprepared. The cross is still an offense to many, not only without, but within the church.

What does the cross stand for in the Christian life? It stands for the crucifixion of self. It stands for the offering up of our lives on the altar of Christ's service. What does taking up our cross daily, and following Christ mean? Does it mean that we are to follow the path of duty, no matter what hardships and unpopularity it may involve? Does it not mean that we are not to shrink from persecution for Christ's sake, and for truth's sake? When we turn aside from the path of duty to walk in an easier path that is less loyal to Christ's high ideals, are we not denying him and repudiating the cross? If we refuse to stand for temperance, and for civic righteousness in a community for fear it will injure our business, are we not rejecting the cross? If we withhold our means from worthy causes, and refuse to make the necessary self-sacrifices for maintaining the interests of Christ's kingdom, are we not refusing to take up our cross and follow Christ?

What the church needs to-day is a new vision of the cross—a clearer understanding that Christ's death was not a greater necessity for our salvation than is our self-crucifixion. The church needs to sing with a new meaning, the old song:

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No; there's a cross for everyone,
And there's a cross for me."

Woe be unto us if we refuse to take up that cross daily and follow Christ in those self-denials and self-sacrifices which are involved in loyalty to his ideals, and which alone can bring us into real sympathy and oneness with Christ, and enable us to become partakers of his life and of his triumphant joy!

Illiberal Liberalism.

No doubt Madam Roland was right when she intimated that many crimes had been committed in the name of liberty. We all know that it not infrequently happens that those who contend most earnestly for liberty for themselves are the least willing to grant liberty to other people. In short, the most illiberal people are those who make the most noise about liberty. Liberty is a noble word, and what it represents is a priceless thing. But there is much that passes for liberty that is a spurious article. Liberty must have limitations, and this means that it must be governed by law; and, this being true, it does not follow that men are illiberal when they contend for what the law in any given case prescribes.

A proper understanding of this whole subject will reveal the fact that no one can be liberal, in the true meaning of that term, unless he acts within the sphere of the law which governs the case under consideration. Let us look at this matter in the light of certain questions which have recently been discussed. One of these questions is the attitude which the Disciples, as a religious people, should sustain toward Pedobaptists. There are a few among us who seem to think that our attitude toward these Pedobaptists is illiberal unless we admit them into our churches. Now this question can not be decided by an appeal to liberty, for that term has no significance until it is bounded by another term which we call law. We must, therefore, appeal to the law and the testimony, and we can not be even liberal unless the law is on our side. A charity which condones that which is wrong in itself is really no charity at all. We can not be charitable unless we are true, for the wisdom that comes down from above is pure before it is even peaceable, and our charity must be true to the truth before it can possibly be liberal. In short, the only man who can be liberal is the man who is loyal to the truth. At least, he must be loyal to his convictions as to what that truth is.

The first question to be decided, as regards our attitude toward Pedobaptists, is, can we ignore what we believe to be the plain teaching of the Word of God in order to be liberal toward our religious neighbors? We believe that we can not be liberal toward them if we are not true to what we believe to be the teaching of the Scriptures with regard to the matter of difference involved. If we are true to our own convictions, and maintain the attitude which these convictions demand, then we can be charitable and liberal toward those who differ with us as long as they occupy the position which their own convictions compel; but the moment we surrender our own convictions, or in any way compromise these, that moment do we sacrifice our power to be liberal or charitable in the case. No society of any kind can maintain its organic existence unless it is true to the constitution under which it is organized, or at least it must be true to the generally accepted interpretation of those who constitute the organized body. Now, this makes it imperative that our churches can not receive unbaptized people into their fellowship, nor can they accommodate the case by compromising, so as to make what have been called associate members, while an overwhelming majority of our brethren hold to the conviction that our churches are made up of only baptized members.

Let us illustrate the whole case: Suppose an Englishman should come to this country, and should at once claim citizenship without obeying the conditions by which a foreigner may become a citizen of this country; and suppose he should begin to exercise his assumed citizenship by claiming the right to vote and to do other acts involved in citizenship, would it be regarded as uncharitable by any right-thinking people if he was at once prohibited from doing what he illegally is trying to do? Would it be regarded as an uncharitable act if he was told plainly that, before he can exercise the rights of citizenship, he must become a citizen according to the constitution of our country? He may have interpreted the constitution so as to justify his conduct in his own estimation, but that would not make his action correct, nor would he, on that account, be admitted at once to the rights of a citizen of the United States.

Doubtless Pedobaptists are as honest as we are with respect to the matter of baptism. But our interpretation of the law compels us to regard believer's immersion as the only baptism, and our churches have all been constituted according to this interpretation. Now we must either give up this notion, and allow that the question for which we have contended is an open one, and that very probably we have been mistaken in making believer's immersion a condition of membership in our churches, or else we can not allow anything with respect to this matter which in the slightest degree seems to vitiate the claims which we have so long and earnestly made. Nor are we in any way less charitable in this regard than Pedobaptists are themselves with respect to the conditions of membership which they insist upon with respect to their own churches. Suppose that some man should go to a Pedobaptist church and ask for admission into the church, while at the same time he declares that he does not believe in the Christ. He thinks he would like to be associated with good people in reformatory work, and he desires membership on that account; or it may be his wife is a member of the church, and he wishes to be associated with her. Would any Pedobaptist church in all the land receive him into fellowship, or even as an associate member? We think not. But why not? Evidently because he does not accept what is fundamental in the organization of the church. But the infidel is just as conscientious with respect to his denial of the divinity of Christ as the Pedobaptist is in his denial that immersion is the only baptism. The only difference in the case is in the fact that the denial of the divinity of Christ may be of more importance than the denial that immersion is the only baptism; but the principle involved is precisely the same in both cases, and in both cases the churches must follow what is their interpretation of the matter, not what is the interpretation of the man who seeks membership. Any other course leads to pure anarchy, and makes it impossible for any one to be liberal, for the reason that we can not be liberal where we do not respect law. But when a man feels that he is respecting law, or at least his own honest convictions as to what the law is, he can then afford to be liberal towards his fellowmen who are equally conscientious with regard to their convictions as to what law is. But neither can let down the law, or compromise it for the sake of a temporary expediency which practically makes it impossible for either one side or the other to be true to the truth, or even true to any proper understanding as to what liberty is.

W. T. M.

Notes and Comments

We are in receipt of several letters and statements from candidates for office, especially in Missouri, asking for their insertion in The Christian-Evangelist, or for some editorial mention of such candidates' fitness for the offices which they seek. It seems necessary, therefore, for us to state once again, what we have often had occasion to make plain to our readers, that The Christian-Evangelist does not feel that it is within its province to deal with party politics. It has not been its custom to lend its columns to the advocacy of any candidate as against the claims of any other candidate of the same party, or of a different party. A few times we have made mention of the candidacy of some personal friend without reference to his party, and with no criticism of any opposing candidate. But this has been done in the interest of no party. We must, therefore, decline the publication of the commendations which have been sent us by eminently respectable citizens, of eminently worthy men, who are seeking the nomination of their party for public office. In doing so, we recognize the worthiness of the men whose claims are advocated, some of whom are religiously affiliated with the same religious movement with which this paper is identified; but in harmony with the principle which has always governed this paper, we can not enter the field of partisan politics. This is not only because our readers, and even the members of our company, differ in their politics, but because we believe it is not within the province of religious journalism to discuss these issues.

This leads us to say that the paper, while seeking to adhere to this principle, has seldom escaped criticism during presidential campaigns, because of some statement construed to be more favorable to one party than to the other. In our attempt to give an independent and true statement of political events of importance, there are statements sometimes made which are construed by strong party men to be partisan, just as often, however, on one side as on the other, so that they neutralize each other, and tend to show that we are independent rather than partisan in our report of current political events. While we promise our readers our best efforts to be strictly true and just in our report of current happenings in the world of politics, we must ask, also, their generous and charitable interpretation of these statements in harmony with the principle we have enunciated. The state, no less than the church, has divine authority, and we can not be indifferent to whatever affects its welfare. When moral issues are involved we are at liberty to speak. In matters of mere policy, where equally good men may differ, we have no desire or purpose to interfere. We trust this statement of our editorial policy will suffice, both as an explanation of why we decline to publish commendations of good men who are candidates for office, or who are seeking to be candidates, and, also, to protect us from the suspicion of using our columns to further the interests of any political party or any partisan issue.

Our good neighbor, the St. Louis "Christian Advocate," commenting upon the recently discovered record of how John Knox once called upon John Calvin at his home in Geneva, on Sunday afternoon, and found him in the back yard playing bowls, a popular outdoor game of that day, says:

"In justice, however, we feel obliged to call attention to the fact that nobody ever heard of Wesley playing bowls on Sunday or any other day. Wesley was an Armenian."

We had supposed, before seeing this statement in our Methodist contemporary, that John Wesley was an Englishman, and we still think our neighbor is in error as to his nationality. Of course, he was an Arminian, but that is another story.

Current Religious Thought

"To criticise another's position is not wrong. To find fault with another's utterances should not be condemned, provided this is done to rectify whatever mistakes or correct whatever errors one finds. If the purpose is to set the erring party right, the work of the critic is to be commended. But there are critics—and there are altogether too many of these—who criticise in order to break down the man whom they judge to be in error. These sort are never at a loss for something to find fault with. They listen to nothing but to criticise it. They are diligent in their search for defects and faults. These have a fertile imagination, one which is most accommodating, and what is lacking in fact, their imaginations supply. They seem to take a keen delight in rash judgments. They consider their opinions, views, words and acts next to perfect. They get much satisfaction in parading the faults of others, and it makes no difference with them whether these faults are real or imaginary. The faults they see or think they see in others is their favorite theme of conversation or thesis of composition.

"The world has always had to be afflicted with these fault-finders, from the children of Israel, who found fault with Moses, on down to the Pharisees, who found fault with Jesus Christ, and still on to the carpers of to-day. Any departure, however slight, from their way of thinking, is at once branded as heresy, and the fault-finder proceeds at once to warn the public against the dangerous man with such dangerous views. The feudist would assassinate his victim to avenge a wrong. The cannibal would kill the body to feast upon the flesh. These are to be dreaded, feared, but how much more so the man who would by insinuation, inuendo, or by telling only part of the truth—which is the worst sort of falsehood—assassinate the character and destroy the good name of one whom he chances to oppose! We should pray earnestly to be delivered from such."—Christian Courier.

"The supreme objection to gambling in all its forms, whether in sport or in speculative business, is that it works harm and loss to society. As soon as any practice or conduct is found to be socially hurtful, it thereby becomes wrong, whatever men may have thought of it before. Does not all morality rise to consciousness through the fact of social advantage or injury? Now the long and costly experience of mankind bears uniform testimony against gambling, till at last the verdict of civilization has become as nearly unanimous as human judgment can be that it is an intolerable nuisance. It is a dangerous or unsocial form of excitement; it hurts character, demoralizes industry, breeds quarrels, tempts man to self-destruction, and it works special injustice to women and children. We may not know precisely why morphine preys upon the nervous system and has to be labeled 'poisonous.' The fact is the main consideration. So with the stimulus of excitation of gambling. Grant that I profess myself willing to pay for my fun. The fun is degrading, like the prize fight or bear baiting."—The Atlantic.

Orilas G. White, in writing of a certain meeting, where the preacher of another brotherhood would not co-operate with the Disciples of Christ, says:

"He preaches to a handful of people, and our people have only a fair-sized audience, while the ball park, even Sunday morning, was crowded with an enthusiastic crowd. As long as those who claim to be the friends of Christ find competition, strife and enmity necessary, men will shun the churches and flock to the ball parks. Jesus prayed for union that 'the world might believe.'"

"A new hour of opportunity in the realm of the Sunday-school is sweeping through our gates with the glory and majesty of the ongoing ocean. Let us inform, inspire, and give the 'vision splendid' to this great stream of humanity that they may become strong advocates of New Testament Christianity, then, one day after while, the world will come with perfect heart to crown Jesus King of kings and Lord of lords."—Walter P. Jennings.

"The Pittsburg 'Christian Advocate' punctures the vanity of those Democrats who have been boasting that their national convention at Denver broke the record for noise when it shouted nearly an hour and a half for its presidential candidate. The wise Pittsburg editor reminds these modern politicians that the record is still held by the inhabitants of ancient Ephesus, who 'all with one voice for about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.'"—Interior.

Are there not many heathen households in the United States where the current of the religious thought is as wide of the true mark as was that depicted in this story of the "Philadelphia Public Ledger"?

Elizabeth's mother did not teach her little daughter much that she should have learned about religion; nor did the father.

The other day a guest said to the little girl: "Elizabeth, does your father say grace at the table?"

"What grace?" returned the girl, innocently.

"Why, thanks for what you have to eat."

"Oh," replied Elizabeth, now enlightened, "we don't have to thank any one for what we have; we always pay cash."

Writing in the "Contemporary Review" of "Paulinism in the Græco-Roman World," Sir W. M. Ramsay presents an interesting picture of Paul and his relations to the men and opinions of his time. "But, it may be said," says Dr. Ramsay, "that the freedom on which Paul insists as a fundamental part of the Christian life, is only freedom from Jewish ritual, not freedom in general in political and social and philosophical relations." Still the "illustrations, the reiteration of the contrast between freedom and slavery, in the Galatian letter, show that the wider application could not be absent from the mind either of the writer or the readers. It is difficult and dangerous to narrow an idea in the interpretation of a great thinker and statesman, just as it is difficult and dangerous to narrow it in practical life, for a people which is educated to freedom in one direction will widen it all around. No man can set bounds to the growth and generalization of a fruitful idea in the practical life of the world. Every autocrat has found it so, except if he succeed in a universal massacre; and if he leaves one survivor, it may be fatal to his intentions."

If there be any season in the year when current religious thought should not fail to take cognizance of the duty of being jolly it is when the mercury is cavorting up among the nineties and the "dog-star rages." The editor of the "Western Christian Advocate," with the "make-up" man clamoring for copy, turns out a jolly editorial on the subject. He says:

"It is a real duty, and the violation of it ought to subject any one to fine and imprisonment. What right has any one to go about the community lachrymose, woebegone, with 'tears in 'is eye, distraction in 'is aspect'? What right has he to distribute the bacilli of depression, gloom, dumpishness, and general 'forlornity'? A fellow may have corns and porous plasters, and boils and styes and spasms, and freckles and moles, and ear-drums and quinine pills, and an utter absence of joy in the stomachic regions, but he needn't hire the town-crier to go about with a bell proclaiming it all. He needn't be pouring it into the ear of every unwilling, button-holed victim who feels afterwards as if he had visited all the hospital incurables or read an advertisement of 'Is This What Ails You?' Take a brace—a strong one! Smile on, smile ever. Groan not! Whimper not! Blubber not! Grumble not! Say you're feeling O. K.—gay, jolly, right-side-up-with-care, salubrious, hilarious, never better in your life. Laugh—laugh out loud—real loud. Risk the blood-vessels and have a good old snort and chuckle for once.

Snicker, and the world snickers with you—
Whine, and you whine alone.

"Burn your own smoke. You're not the only Job on the ash heap. Stop peddling disagreeables and creating a social blanket of sticky, shivery fog. Don't make a fool of yourself and talk about blowing your brains out. These are hard times, and undertakers' bills come high. Scatter sunshine—bushels of it, whole freight trains of it. Scatter it by the barrel, bag and ton. People won't object to it. They'll take all you can give them. Quarantine your sour feelings. Put your dumps in the calaboose. Give that old liver a good shaking and chew some dyspepsia lozenges. And let loose all your giggles, winks and dimples. You'll catch more flies with saccharine paper than you will with a thrasning machine. Don't be a peevish, bristling, disagreeable, disgruntled old porcupine, or a night-owl or a bat or a weeping jackal or a howling hyena."

"Only a crucified man should preach a crucified Christ," says Dr. Charles L. Goodell.

Last week we quoted the "Harper's Weekly" in answer to the "Examiner's" article on "Why Men Go to Church." "Harper's" man was on the golf course, and he and his fellows were shocked that only one small boy was at a nearby church. The "Examiner" comes back with:

"Per contra, we attended a Baptist church last Sunday—also the Sunday before—when a good-sized congregation was present, of whom more than one-third were men. So there you are."

Does this sentiment belong to current religious thought? Dr. George T. Dowling is its author:

"Cling to the habit of still being young;
Cultivate leisure without being lazy.
Garner all joys that the poets have sung,
And prove every year Dr. Osler is crazy."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

Life gets much of its zest from contrasts. People abhor monotony no less than Nature does a vacuum. We have had a succession of calm days in which the temperature has risen to unusual heights for this latitude, and in which the great lake has breathed as softly as a sleeping infant; and on its smooth surface and down in its clear depths, there was a reproduction of the upper world with its lights and shadows. Last night when the sun took his evening bath, sinking beneath the western wave, the whole lake became crimson with his presence. The scene of tranquil beauty killed the imagination of our Park muse so that he expressed it thus:

King Sol is a bold gallant, in his way—
Decidedly so at the close of the day.
Last eve he smiled at the lake, passing by,
And she blushed crimson and heaved a faint sigh.

This morning the scene has changed. When we wakened from our slumbers the roar of the billows was in our ears as they broke in rhythmic beat on the shore. A stiff northwestern blowing out of a clear sky has stirred the lake into deep agitation, and as far out as the distant line of the horizon, the wild flocks of Neptune are frolicking upon the green meadows of the deep. One who had witnessed the lake only during the calm preceding days would not have supposed it capable of the scene it presents this morning. Great bodies of water, like great bodies of people, possess potentialities which are only manifest in times of stress and storm. A nation enjoying the calmness of profound peace, with its people apparently indifferent to public welfare, when stirred to action by the peril of war manifests a depth of patriotism, and performs deeds of heroism which are a surprise even to itself. Not prosperity, but adversity, brings out the real strength of an individual or a nation.

Why is it that when one looks upon the ocean or the great lakes as they are traversed by the white-capped billows, and send up their loud acclaim to the skies, he feels an answering response in the depths of his own nature? Is it not because there are depths in his own nature, which no human sounding line has ever fathomed, and of which we ourselves are only dimly and vaguely conscious? "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterfalls," cried the psalmist, when in exile, and when the waves and the billows of trouble were sweeping over his soul. In that hour of desolation the psalmist learned more of God, and more of his own capacity for God in the depths of his own nature, than he had ever known before.

"As the heart panteth after the waterbrooks,
So panteth my soul after thee, Oh God."

Any experience in human life that creates in one the thirst for God,—a conscious need which only God can satisfy,—is a most blessed experience. No one ever rises to his highest and best until he has experienced this thirst for the living God, and has realized that satisfaction which comes only from communion with God. No one has ever sounded the depths of his own nature, or has any adequate conception of its undeveloped possibilities, until he has felt the quickening touch of the divine Spirit and come into reconciliation with God, who alone can fill to overflowing the capacities with which he has endowed us. The enjoyment of a great work of art on canvas, a great song sung by one who has mastered the possibilities of the human voice, a great sermon, or a great speech, or a great scene in Nature, grows out of the fact that they appeal to the deepest and highest, the noblest and the best, in our natures.

We have spoken above of the unmanifested and unrealized possibilities of a nation in the repose of peace, when its citizens are absorbed with their individual pursuits and interests, and how it is stirred to deeds of noble daring, and to a realization of its resources, both material and immaterial, by the perils of war. The same principle applies to religious bodies. There are periods when local churches and their pastors are concerned chiefly with their local work, and when there is, at least, apparent indifference to the claims of brotherhood in its larger sense, and the wider interests of the kingdom of God. In such periods, while good is being accomplished, no doubt, the religious movement is hardly conscious of its own strength, and its special mission in the world. It is not seen at its best at such a time. It is only when it is profoundly stirred by some great event in its history, and it rouses itself to self-consciousness, and rises to the demands of some great emergency, forgetting its personal and local interests in its devotion to the larger claims, that it manifests its real power and character to the world, and reveals even to itself the strength of the motives which underlie its history. The religious movement which has come to be most widely known in history as the Disciples of Christ finds in its approaching Centennial an event which stirs its loyal advocates to their profoundest depths, and one that ought to inspire them to such loftiness of aim, such unanimity of action, such a degree of self-sacrifice, such subordination of local to general interests, and such emphasis upon the great cardinal principles of religion for which we stand, as to give a new conception to the world of the meaning and spirit of the movement.

These are no common days through which we are now passing, as a religious movement. The national convention next preceding our Centennial celebration at Pittsburg is close at hand, and will give the final touch of preparation for that historic event. At such a time who among us that cherishes the memory of the fathers, that is profoundly convinced that God has raised us up for a great purpose of his own in carrying forward his plans, does not feel humbled in spirit before God and before the magnitude of the task he has laid upon us? It is a time when gratitude to God for what he has accomplished in us and through us should be mingled with the feeling of unworthiness of our past for so holy a task as has been committed to us. It is a time, too, when, if, ever, every man of us who loves the Cause we plead ought to rebuke the spirit of strife or division wherever it may manifest itself, and seek to bind together in bonds of holy fellowship and co-operation all the churches and individual members of this reformation. Pleading as we do for the unity of God's people of every name and creed, how earnestly should we cultivate the bond of unity among ourselves by that forbearance which is ever the characteristic of love, and by the practical carrying out of our own most cardinal principle of unity —the subordination of individual opinions and preferences to the common faith in a common Lord. In such a period of our history one naturally recalls the stirring words of Napoleon at the battle, under the shadow of the Egyptian pyramids: "Forty centuries of history are looking down upon you." A hundred years of splendid history, even though marred by the mistakes incident to human imperfection, are looking down upon us. Ought not this "cloud of witnesses" call out the very best that is in us?

As we write, the thunder of the surf is still in our ears, and fills the air with its deep monotone, just as it did, no doubt, ages ago, before the white man came to these shores, and just as it will, long after the ears that now hear it shall be closed to earthly sounds and opened to the melodies above. Men may come, and men may go, but this great unsalted sea sings on its song forever. We count it a joy and an inspiration to dwell a part of the year where we may listen to the music of its waves, and witness the beauty and majesty of its ever-changing moods. There is enough of eternity in it to stir the infinite and eternal which is in us, and so to fit us better for that longer voyage which every day draws nearer. July ends its course to-day, and the last of the summer months will be upon us. We are hoping to greet here a number of our friends during August, some of whom, no doubt, will become permanent members of our summer colony here by the resounding lake. Brother Coleman, of Springfield, has been spending a few days visiting his son-in-law and daughter, Dr. H. T. Morrison and wife, of Campbell Park, across the channel above us. C. C. Morrison and wife, with Mrs. Willett and son, have arrived at that beach, and others belonging to that Park are expected soon. Dr. Morrison spoke to us at the union meeting in the Methodist church last Lord's day, and was greatly enjoyed by all. Sister Moore and one of her students, Miss Jennie Morton, have arrived, and there are other Moores to follow. The cooler wave, which has arrived, is greatly enjoyed by us all, and we speak of it as "real Pentwater weather." A fire on the hearth this morning seemed as unusual as it was cheerful. May the fires of love and hope and of good cheer be kept burning brightly in all our hearts!

Gleanings from the International S. S. Convention

Triumphs of the Sunday-school.

Dr. Hemphill, acting for the governor, in welcoming the convention, said:

"We welcome you for the book you teach, the book that rises higher in the estimation and reverence of mankind by your ministrations. We welcome you for the banner that you wave aloft, which is the standard of what all true and good citizenship should be. We welcome you for the religious education in all lands you represent. We welcome you for your influence for purity among all the institutions of the land.

"When we find cleaner and purer politics all over the country, when we find moral reform sweeping the nations, when we have more righteousness from our political leaders, we shall say that the great Sunday-school movement has been a potent factor to that end. When we see the handwriting upon the wall that the saloon has been tested and found wanting, and that it must forever be put away from the social order, we shall place the laurel wreath of victory upon the brow of the Sunday-school hosts."

❖ ❖ ❖

The Plastic Intellect.

Bishop Oldham, speaking on "The Value of Teaching of Foreign Missions in the Sunday-school," said.

"The child has a vivid imagination; he understands a picture, either upon canvas or a word picture. He also has a plastic mind, and that which is put into his mind ever afterwards influences his thinking. In presenting ideas to children, the teacher should present them by concrete facts, either by stories with a dramatic hue, or by lantern slides, pictures, etc."

As an illustration. The story with which the speaker closed was that seventy years ago a young boy in Maine, sitting on a front seat at church on account of parental despotism rather than inherent desire, looked at a chart containing a map of the heathen world, consisting of a big black ring with a little white ring in the center. The boy learned that the black ring represented the percentage of the foreign world steeped in heathen superstition, and the white ring the percentage of native Christians. The story, accompanied by the picture, had its effect, and the boy prayed then and there that he might some day be a big man and labor to enlarge the white spot. That boy is now 77 years old, resides in Cleveland, Ohio, and has given hundreds of thousands of dollars toward evangelizing the heathen. "And it all comes from the fact," said the speaker, "that the boy's imagination was caught and an impression was made on his plastic intellect."

❖ ❖ ❖

Elementary Department.

Mrs. J. Woodridge Barnes spoke of the three stages of the work in the elementary division—the adoption of uniform lessons, the grading of the work to meet the capabilities of the students, and the growth of these ideas into the glorious efflorescence of the present elementary department.

"Thirty-five years ago," she said, "we had no international lesson system, every school went its own way, each teacher selected his own lesson, and sometimes the little children had food for them, and sometimes they shared the food of their grandfathers and grandmothers. But once at old St. Paul's there was great excitement—something had happened, and a new teacher was doing wonderful things—she even dared to put a blackboard in the room—she faced the criticism for her new methods of interesting the children—of giving them their real due—people came from far and near—grew interested—stayed to watch the new methods, and to learn the secret. What could she teach—she was untrained as a teacher—she was a mother with five children—not accustomed to teaching and helping others—but she did."

Mrs. Barnes showed from these small beginnings the great results that had come about.

She detailed the fight that the elementary teacher has to make—how the plea for a separate room was often refused—the thousand and one little criticisms they have had to endure before the innovations of a generation ago had become the fixed necessities of this.

❖ ❖ ❖

Side Lights.

"It was once the proud boast of the Roman to say, 'I am a Roman.' But in this convention we shall not say, 'I am an Englishman' nor 'I am an American,' but rather shall we say 'I am a Christian.'"—Dr. Alfred Rowland, of England.

Dr. A. C. Dixon, in one of his addresses, said that a preacher friend of his once asserted that he had saved the lives of five of his congregation. They all suffered from insomnia, and he gave them a nice nap every Sunday morning. "So if I see the people go to sleep tonight," he said, "I'll not be discouraged. Sunday-schools, like churches, may need sleepers as well as pillars. And if you go to sleep I'll not be angry, provided you keep quiet."

Dr. Dixon then told a story of a taxidermist walking down the streets of Chicago, who he said passed by a window and criticised an owl on a pedestal. "If I could not make a better job of stuffing an owl than that fellow," said the critic, "I would quit the business," for he was a taxidermist himself. When he got through criticising the owl turned round and winked at him. And then he felt like the biggest fool in Chicago, for he had criticised a live owl. "Everything he said was true," said Mr. Dixon, "until the owl winked. But when he showed life he was beyond criticism. The word of God is alive, and when it gets in you and lives in you you'll be beyond the scalpel of criticism of anybody on earth."

There were many beautiful banners containing clever mottoes which were used in the big parade.

"The Bible Class Men in the Lime Light—Be One," was the motto one carried; "The World For Christ, the Men of America for the Man of Galilee," was another that caused much comment. Another read, "Our Means, the Word of God—'Tis a Manly Thing to be a Christian." There were many extremely inspiring inscriptions, and all came in for much favorable comment.

Use Men in Athletics, and Do It in the Name of Christ

Judge McKenzie Cleland and Others Answer Many Perplexing Questions at Short, But Breezy, Session of Adult Conference—Make Every Member of Church a Sunday-School Worker.

One of the breezy, refreshing parts of the international Sunday-school convention was the adult Sunday-school conference, conducted by McKenzie Cleland, judge of the municipal court of Chicago. Judge Cleland, who employs the parole honor system with adult criminals, as Judge Ben B. Lindsay, of Denver, does with children, was presented to the convention as a "live wire."

The conference lasted fifteen minutes and consisted of the asking and answering of questions in rapid-fire order. Judge Cleland stated at the beginning, however, that he had been much impressed with the Chautauqua salute, given frequently by the delegates to the speakers. "Now, the adult department," he said, "has for its sole and only text book the word of God. I propose that we give the Chautauqua salute to the word of God."

As Judge Cleland held the Bible aloft, the whole congregation, delegates and visitors, in the balconies and on the main floor, rose and waved handkerchiefs.

Judge Cleland then began reading questions from slips which had been previously collected. "To what extent should athletics be employed in men's and women's classes?" was the first, and Judge Cleland called upon C. G. Kindred, of the Englewood Christian Church, Chicago, for an answer.

"A man is a man wherever you find him," said Brother Kindred. "Find what he likes and put a Christian atmosphere around it. Use the men in athletics as far as you can use them, and do it in the name of Jesus Christ."

The next question asked, how to get mixed classes separated into men's and women's clases. "It can not be done," shouted one delegate. "It can be done," said another, while still another cried, "Don't try it." The question was passed.

Judge Cleland interrupted to tell a story. "Some one asked a boy," he said, "to name the zones and tell the climate of each. The boy replied that there were two zones, masculine and feminine, and that the masculine was always temperate or intemperate, while the feminine was either frigid or torrid."

The next question was: "If you could have only one committee, what one would you have?" Answers varied, some wanting the devotional committee, others the lookout committee, and yet others the membership and ways and means committees.

"Is the adult Bible class making as much progress in the South as it is in the North?" was asked. The general consensus of opinion was that it is.

"Should men's classes be encouraged to take part in politics?" was asked, and a hundred voices joined in the choral response, "Yes." One delegate added, "And women, too," and no one disagreed with him.

"Should they organize as clubs?" was asked, and all answers were in the negative.

"How can the adult classes help prohibition?" was read, and the answers were, "Talking and voting," and "By precept and example," and "By frequent temperance addresses."

Judge Cleland then proposed that the international association adopt as its motto for the next three years: "Every member of the church a member of the Sunday-school." A motion to that effect was carried unanimously.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

It is a liberal education to attend a "Co-operation Meeting" in the Old Dominion. First there is the state, then the history, after that the people, then the Virginia Disciples, and last the feast of good things, material and spiritual, and all this of a unique character that you find nowhere else in all the universe, as far as known to me.

Taking the "Southern," I was immediately on the sacred soil. Old Alexandria, Bull Run and Manassas—who does not know them? Culpepper and Orange and Charlottesville—what a story they tell! I am now on my native heath. A long time ago I held meetings and traveled all through this region. I was a pastor in Charlottesville when I got my wife. There are just two dates in my life—one when I was born and the other when I married.

Charlottesville has as many historical associations as Boston or Philadelphia. In the little, old-fashioned court house, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, William Wirt and Patrick Henry have been heard. "I have known men who saw a President of the United States talking with two ex-presidents in the court house square, and were joined by an ex-attorney-general of the United States, an ex-minister to England and an ex-minister to France, and all residents of the county at the time," said an old resident. Everybody knows of John Jewett, the fox hunter, and Tarleton's Cavalry. Jewett happened in Louisa, thirty-five miles away, when Tarleton's legions passed there hurrying toward Charlottesville, where Jefferson, head and front of the rebellion in Virginia, lived, and where the legislature was in session, having fled from Richmond. Tarleton had sworn to "crush every egg in that nest of treason and sedition," and would have done it, possibly, but for Jewett, who, leaping on his horse, after the British had passed, sped across the country, got in ahead of the enemy and warned the legislature and the author of the "Declaration" just in time for them to take to the woods in "The Ragged Mountains."

I know old men here who would talk for hours about Jefferson and tell a thousand things that the people do not generally know, how he invented the mold-board of the plow, and roll-top carriage, and revolving chair, and planned the house at Monticello, the rotunda of which Stanford White said was the most harmonious and beautiful thing in brick-and mortar he had ever seen. In the court-house one may see his will, written in his own hand, and that of his friend Kosciusko, who made Jefferson his executor, and the parole of Cornwallis, given at Yorktown October 28, 1781.

One may take a day's horse-back ride through this county, and, fancying the men still alive, eat breakfast with a President, drop in on one or two senators and congressmen and a governor and secretary of the navy, lunch with another President, call on a third President and a speaker of Congress and minister to the Court of St. James, an attorney-general of the United States, a minister to France and a couple of governors, sup with a fourth President and call on a couple of famous explorers, and spend the night with the greatest literary genius the country has produced—all in a day's ride in a country community! Who were they? Zachary Taylor for breakfast, and, in the order named, the Barbours, Thomas W. Gilmer, Madison, Monroe, Andrew Stephenson, William Wirt, William C. Rives, Thomas Randolph and Edward Cowles, Jefferson, George Rogers Clark and Meriwether Lewis, Edgar Allan Poe! Can Boston boast of such an array?

Not far beyond is North Garden, where I used to preach in a little, abandoned Episcopal church, and near that, another President will be found, who has a small cottage here for recreation, well known as Theodore Roosevelt, with whom we may breakfast, and then the Blue Ridge, and Peaks of Otter, and Lynchburg on the James, and not far beyond is Chatham and the South Piedmont convention. Pittsylvania county is one of the favorite haunts of that genus of the nightshade family, known as nicotiana tabacum. It is a stately plant, three to six feet in height, with ample leaves, which is a delight to the average American, and one may see thousands of acres here devoted to its culture, 4,000 to 7,000 plants to the acre and men everywhere "worming" and "priming," or "topping," or "suckering" the thing. Hogsheads of this weed are shipped from this region and consumed by men and boys, and even women and girls, who chew it and smoke it and "dip" it at the rate of seven or eight hundred millions of dollars a year. It yields the farmer good returns, but it is not the best thing for the cleanliness and health of the people, and yet the church spends more for it than she gives for her work at home and her missions abroad.

This district has 29 churches of Disciples of Christ, with about 3,000 members, and this is one of ten in Virginia, with 278 churches and 25,446 communicants. Only two of the churches in South Piedmont have preaching every Sunday, and many of them have no preaching at all. There is a distressing dearth of preachers for these country congregations, and the fields are white, the harvest inviting. They are bravely facing the problem of supply, and seeking to solve it by grouping the churches. One excellent method is to build a parsonage at the center of a group, and so enable it to secure a better pastor and make a more permanent arrangement. My own father in the gospel, A. B. Walthall, did pioneer work in this district, and Abell and Shelburne were also among the early preachers. William Motley, hale and hearty at four score, is doing the work of the ministry at Chatham.

The program of the convention was an inspiring one. Such men as W. C. Clark, A. C. Knibb, S. T. Burgess, C. W. Montgomery, J. W. Giles, H. C. Combs, Josephus Hopwood and Judge Wm. H. Mann, of temperance fame, were among the speakers. Many of the churches, however, had no representatives and sent no report. A. F. Ramsey presided and O. S. B. Yeatts was secretary, and business was dispatched in an orderly and businesslike fashion. The sessions were long and the weather intensely hot, but it is amazing to witness the patience and cheerful interest and decorum of an old Virginia country audience under such conditions. The people came, some of them, from thirty or forty miles away, and were willing to hear as long as the spellbinders could hold out to talk. An address of special interest was that of Judge Mann, author of the famous Mann law. Virginia has rid itself of 1,500 saloons during the past two years, eighty counties out of ninety-nine have abolished the traffic, and the lines are inevitably closing upon the enemy of God and man. The Judge, in his mighty arraignment, reminded me of the story of Horace Mann, the philanthropist, educator, temperance worker and member of Congress. It is said that he, on one occasion, visited an insane asylum, and a patient challenged him to fight. "No," said Mann, "I am two men, a Mann by name and a man by nature, and it would not be fair." "Well," replied the lunatic, "I am also two men—a man by nature, and a man beside myself. Let us four fight." The Judge is a man by name, by nature, and a man beside himself—three men, as the liquor men might think, or rather, a host, when it comes to antagonizing this monster.

One of the events of the convention was the dedication of the new church at Sheva, where the sessions were held. It is a distinctly country meeting house, five miles from Chatham, at the cross roads, with a membership of less than one hundred, but a wideawake, working congregation of Sheltons, Motleys and other good brethren. The house is an excellent one, and worth perhaps $2,000, all provided for. A. F. Ramsey is their preacher, and they have every promise of useful service in the kingdom. Their hospitality was just what one expects of Old Virginia's first families.

All our general causes were well represented at this meeting. The C. W. B. M. had a useful session under the management of Miss Orvis. An enthusiastic brother leaned over and said to me: "Who is that?" On being told, he added: "Well, that woman is worth every piece of gold in Virginia!" I could not observe what he dropped into the collection.

Silence is often the wisest antidote to unprofitable or dangerous contention. The kindling flame, if not blown upon, will go out. A few blasts from an unguarded mouth may fan it into a long-burning and wide-spreading fire. Silence, not a sullen and contemptuous silence, but a silence that shows itself to be the child of principle and love, is also sometimes the strongest rebuker and vanquisher of unkindness.—Wm. Newell.

R. R. TELEGRAPHER
Increases Ability on Right Food.

Anything that will help the R. R. Telegraph operator to keep a clear head and steady nerves is of interest to operators particularly, and to the public generally.

As the waste of brain and nerve cells in active work of this kind is great, it is important that the right kind of food be regularly used to repair the waste.

"I have used Grape-Nuts," writes a B., R. & P. operator, "for the past six or eight years daily, buying it by the dozen pkgs.

"A friend of mine, a doctor, who had been treating me for stomach trouble and nervous exhaustion, recommended me to leave off so much meat and use fruit and vegetables, with Grape-Nuts as the cereal part of each meal.

"I did so with fine results and have continued Grape-Nuts from that time to the present. I find in my work as R. R. telegrapher that I can do more work and far easier than I ever could on the old diet.

"To any man who is working his brain, and who needs a cool, level head and quick action, I recommend Grape-Nuts, from long experience." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE CHURCH AND MEN

BY ARTHUR HOLMES,

Religious and Educational Work Secretary of the Pennsylvania R. R. Y. M. C. A.

This paper cannot hope to be more than suggestive. Its only claim to originality is based upon the fact that the writer has had actual shop experience as a machinist, and feels himself in touch with the workingman's view-point and able to give some, at least, of the real psychology of the toiler. In addition he has had some experience with the church as pastor, and for several years, as a worker in an organization, bringing him in touch with professional men, employers and employes.

To the man outside of the church, perhaps the most prominent doctrine of Christianity is brotherhood, or love. For him the best definition of love is found in 1 Corinthians, 13th chapter; its most typical example is the life of Christ. The passive character of Christianity has been most prominently impressed upon him. It is something weak, sentimental, and effeminate; good, perhaps, but unfitted for his life. To him, the words of an old man to his son on choosing a profession, sound pat. "All life is a game," said the old man. "If you become a business man, you will play the game; if a lawyer, you will make the rules of the game; if a teacher, you will teach the rules; if a doctor, you will treat the wounded; if a minister, you will sit in the grandstand and explain the fine points of the game to the ladies."

The Church in Fact.

As a matter of fact, the church is an organization of very human men and women, teaching, first, personal salvation through the atoning death of the divine Savior, and second, devoting much of its energies toward preserving and building up itself.

The success of the organization is measured in terms of material things, members enrolled, houses of worship, lands and dollars. Its members preserve social castes. Its conservatism resents novelty and clings to customs. Formality is the chief characteristic of its meetings. Charity is its social service. Beyond individual morality and religion, or more strictly theology, it has no interest. Membership in good standing requires fair attendance, fairly regular money-gifts, and a life not scandalously below the moral standards of the community.

Membership in United States.

So much discussion has been carried on concerning the small attendance of men at church that any proof of this seems to be superfluous, especially since this condition is so freely admitted by the friends and ministers of the church. A few figures may serve to illuminate the condition.

According to Dr. H. K. Carroll, members of the church, in this country, including infants baptized in certain sects, number 32,283,658.

About one-third, or 35 per cent, of the average church membership is male. Allowing for those denominations which include infants, a rough estimate would give the church 8,000,000 men, leaving about 9,000,000 untouched directly.

The fundamental assumption of this paper will be that the church is as responsible for the 55,000,000 people untouched—9,000,000 of them men—as it is those within the fold. Success must be viewed in the light of the end attempted. So far success is measured by about one-third of the task completed.

More women attend church than men. A clue to the cause would seem, therefore, to reside in the different natures of men and women and in the adaptability of the church services to the latter.

In broad outlines the difference of temperament between men and women is marked enough. Men are active, radical and rational; women are passive, conservative and emotional, in the sense of placing a high value on feeling. Most of the geniuses and lunatics are men.

Church services undoubtedly suit the feminine nature. The theology is passive and tragic; the pleas are largely emotional; the hymnology introspective and prominent; the opportunity for social expression is open to them.

Possibly the chance to make a good appearance is not unwelcome to the more showy sex. The necessity for sitting for some time in an uncomfortable pew is a hardship no mere man longs for; he sprawls and lolls at different angles, changes frequently and tries to find a comfortable spot. The gentler sex have a faculty of sitting quietly upright, if not always gracefully at least with grace, until the service is at an end.

Conditions of home life are different also. The man is away from home during the week and Sunday is his day of rest at home. The opposite is true of the woman. The prevalence of books, magazines and newspapers no longer permits the pulpit to be the moulder of public opinion, or the means of instruction on public matters. The lack of any felt need on this score is indicated by the fact that one hundred Presbyterian laymen recently expressed their choice on sermons as follows: On guidance in Christian life, 93; evangelistic, 63; expository, 91; doctrine, 32; current topics, 16; critical, 5. t(The Princeton Seminary Bulletin, Vol. I, No. 3, November, 1907, page 10.) Address John Converse, Esq., at fall conference.

Added to these causes is sin, the positive desire of some men, how many depends largely upon the estimator's personal equation, to live contrary to the teachings of Christianity.

To whatever extent the above causes may account for conditions, it remains forever true that the cause of causes is indifference, not to religion, but to the church. As Dr. Worcester, of Boston, recently said, "Men do not attend church because they do not think they will gain much by going and will not lose much by staying away." The reason for this, I believe, is to be sought in present-day social and economic conditions, and is to be found only by a close and careful analysis of the world of men.

The World of Men.

For convenience of such an analysis, men may be divided, for our purposes, into four classes: (1) The leisure class; (2) Professional men; (3) Employers; (4) Employes. Since the first class is comparatively small in this country, and probably can be found at church in as representative numbers as anywhere, it is relatively unimportant for us. The second class, professional men, are so closely allied, economically and socially, with employers that, to save time, they are treated with them.

Before proceeding to a consideration of the employer's and employes' worlds, it might be well to place them in their proper setting by giving a short historical sketch of our modern industrial system.

It dates its inception from the quarter century between 1760 and 1785, and is traceable to two main causes, invention and a book. The one furnished the material means; the other prepared the minds of men and gave direction to the movement.

According to Mr. John Mitchell, that period produced a series of inventions, the like of which had never before been witnessed in the history of the world. This generation saw the invention of the steam engine, the discovery of the process of puddling and rolling iron and smelting by coal. The invention of the spinning jenny, the power loom and the carding machine gave an impetus to the cheap and wholesale production of textiles, while inventions in the pottery trade, in printing from cylinders, in bleaching by chemical agents furthered the rapid development in industry. (Organized Labor, p. 19.) A complete industrial revolution followed.

The guiding genius of that change was Adam Smith's "Wealth of the Nations," published in 1776. It demolished the old guild system. It preached individualism under the laissez faire policy. Let every man alone to seek his own living in his own way, promised industrial prosperity and individual happiness. For the employer it brought wealth and greed; for the employe, the deepest misery. One became the captain of industry; the other the factory hand.

"Working people lived in the smallest of dingy, filthy, foul-smelling rooms, in cellars over drains, reeking with accumulations of filth—all ages and sexes herded together." Several thousand women and girls were employed in the mines. "Frequently the women were obliged to push tubs of coal with their heads, or haul them by a chain placed around their neck like a halter and passing between the legs, often on their hands and knees." (Ibid pp. 23-25).

Out of such conditions emerged on the one side modern labor unions. Experience proved the inherent impossibility of individualism. The toilers were forced into brotherhood whose fundamental principles saved them by denying their right to make individual contracts for their labor. It forced them to see that their only hope was co-operation.

On the other hand, employers also discovered the futility of competition. Our own day has seen their departure from it, and the formation of trusts and corporations.

Curiously enough, co-operation stopped with the organization of two hostile armies. The very essence of individualism, the center and seat of its contention, the wage system, has been preserved. The improvement reminds one of the Irishman who greased the whole carriage, except the little round iron things that the wheels turn round on, and, "begorra, he couldn't get into thim."

As long as that exists, it is vain to say that employers' and employes' interests are one, and that the trouble is due to a few outside meddlers and agitators. The difficulty is inherent in human nature and in the system. The system gives every man a right to get what he can within the law. The greedy employer, therefore, gets as much work and pays as little as he can; the lazy workman gets as much wage and does as little as he can. The competitive system compels the best man to live down to the business standards of the worst. The issue is sharp, clear and ineradicable. The Supreme Court recognizes it in the following decree: "The proprietors of these establishments and their operatives do not stand upon an equality; their interests are, to a certain extent, conflicting. The former naturally desire to obtain as much labor as possible from their employes, while the latter are often induced, by fear of discharge, to conform to the regulations which their judgment, fairly exercised, would pronounce to be detrimental to their health and strength. . . . In such cases self-interest is often an unsafe guide." ("Organized Labor," by John Mitchell.)

Labor knows it. "The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. Between these two classes a struggle must go on until all toilers come together on the political as well as the industrial field, and take and hold that which they produce by their labor," says "The Proceedings of the Industrial Workers of the World." (1905, p. 247.)

Thus we have to-day our economic and social worlds torn asunder. On the one side ever more engulfing corporations; on the other, increasing labor unions; wealth beyond the counting, poverty unmeasured; luxury limited only by power of imagination, want beyond imagination. Still the industrial war goes merrily on. Strikes and rumors of strikes, lockouts, wage cuts, riots and arbitrations fill the headlines of daily papers, and disturb orderly production.

In the midst of the warring elements stands the bewildered church, crying, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace, and wondering why men neglect her interests.

From this discussion of the essential opposition between the wage-earners and the wage-payers involved in the wage system itself, as well as from the organization and scope of the church, it will be seen immediately that the church can not take sides with either party. As one writer has said, "The labor movement is a class movement and the labor organization a class organization, while the church stands for the abolition of all class distinctions and would cease to be a church as soon as it sided with the union." (Annals American Academy of Political and Social Science; article, "The Church and Workingmen," Nov., 1907.)

This must not be taken to mean, however, that the church can take no part in helping to a solution of this vital question. The words of Phillips Brooks have in them too much of sophistic plausibility when he says: "I like workmen very much and care for their good, but have nothing distinct or separate to say to them about religion; nor do I see how it will do any good to treat them as a separate class in this matter, in which their needs and duties are just like any other man's." (Ibid.) While in a general way I agree with the words, I most emphatically disbelieve in their usual implication that the church is to pursue the laissez faire policy toward any class. In the latter part of this paper I will try to show what this duty is.

The Church and Employers.

In the battle between labor and capital the church has been thrust to the side of the employer. Consequently, it has been assumed that the men in the churches are employers, and, conversely, employers attend church en masse. Color is given to this belief by the prominence of a few great laymen in religious work. This prominence, however, is due to the rarity of the phenomenon and argues against the assumption. These men are special occasion men, advertised far and wide.

The efforts of the church, energetic if futile, to get business men into financially-colored clubs, constant appeals for vigorous, forceful men for the heads of sub-organizations, attest well the fact that the church herself feels that the flower of the employers' army is but partially and indifferently enrolled under her banner. Study, I believe, will show that comparatively few of the employing class attend church, but these few dominate and direct its policies. Why this is true will be shown by an analysis of the employers' economic world.

The Employers' Economic World.

The economic world of the employer is individualistic in motive, materialistic in ideals and competitive in method.

The business man is after money for himself. The good of the public, when considered at all, is secondary and a means to an end, an accommodation which will attract buyers. The effect of the goods upon individual customers is no concern to the seller. This alone largely excludes from the church membership the 300,000 men in the liquor business.

Business success is a palpable thing. You can count it, bank it, check it, wear it, eat it. It is measured in terms of yachts, private cars, automobiles, stone mansions, overdressed and titled sons-in-law.

Competition is not merely the life of trade, but is the tradesman's life. It is constant, keen and fierce. In the mighty heave and toss of recent economic events it has passed from inspiring rivalry to a struggle for existence. Eat or be eaten is the jungle law. It is the Eskimo dog's battle for pack supremacy, fought to the death in the circle of watching eyes and waiting teeth.

Success demands a clear head, strong nerves, quick action, bold aggressiveness in planning and carrying through plans, large expenditures, adroit adjustment of methods, a thoroughly up-to-date knowledge of the business, untiring labor and complete devotion to the end sought. This, in rough strokes and bold outlines, is the world of the employer.

The Employer and the Kingdom of God.

Contrast such a world with the kingdom of God. They are opposed at every point; individualism to altruism, materialism to spiritualism, competition to co-operation. Individualism breeds selfishness. The selfish motive is essential to business; brotherly love is the essence of the Kingdom. The kingdom of God in business becomes a distant dream.

Next, materialistic standards of success modify and obscure spiritual values, corrupt business honesty and disregard human life and happiness. One million workers are sacrificed annually. Over sixty thousand people are killed and injured on railroads alone. Twenty-three thousand men, according to Dr. Steiner, went down to death or maiming in one mining district alone in the last twenty-five years. Huts for homes, ignorance unbelievable, poverty unbearable, and vice unthinkable have resulted in many places directly from such success.

Third, the constant strain of competition unfits a man for Sunday worship. Men are worn out or set on edge. They long for outdoor relaxation, a trip to the shore or an automobile ride.

The spirit of competition, too, is opposed to the spirit of Christianity. For the employers, faith is not the victory, the weak do not overcome the strong, the foolish do not confound the wise. A passive Christ can not be taken seriously. The cross is incomprehensible. Preachers may pray that the gospel may cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, but employers know that its principles would be as much out of place in their business as a dove in a snake-den.

As a result of this incompatibility of week day and Lord's day ideals the majority of employers do not attend church. They can not drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of the devils.

The minority do attend. These latter are able to divide life into air-tight compartments. Others blunder along hoping that the good Lord may have mercy upon the flock whose shepherds have so hopelessly lost them. All are distinctly religious. Many of them long for a ringing call from the pulpit to come back to business honesty and make their dealings square somewhere near at least with the Golden Rule. But they see even the elders of the churches, caught in crooked deals, blow out their brains, and never once does it transpire that their ministers were close enough to sound a warning cry. Nero fiddling while Rome burned is too stale and too gross a figure of the theological pastor, but it has its likenesses. George Eliot's play-reading rector, too busy with Aeschylus to heed a call which would have prevented murder and disgrace, can find duplicates to-day.

While comparatively few of the employer classes may be communicants, the universal opinion obtains that such men, responsible for the gigantic steals and oppression of the poor, are masters of the church. A clergyman writes: "The alienation of the masses from the Christian church, the arraying of its power upon the side of moneyed interests, . . . are now commonplace utterances." "There are many men judged guilty of criminal practices in our law courts, who walk in and out of the courts of the Lord proudly confident of their ability to procure at least a Sabbath day's immunity bath." (Dr. W. J. Cochran, Annals Am. Ac. P. and S. Sc., V. 30, Nov., 1907, "Church and Workingman.")

The reason for this is not far to seek. Business men, once in the church, find it altogether different from Christianity as outsiders see it. It is an organization. Its chief practical concern is its own preservation and promotion. For this it needs, first, money; and second, leaders, able to guide wisely and well the fortunes of an institution whose success will be measured in terms of their own success. Captains of industry are perfectly at home. Offices come their way. Pews, frescoes, pipe organs, ornamented services and ornate sermons are all ordered to their tastes and that of their wives. The net result is the capture of a few men by the church who in turn lead captivity captive.

Hence, there arises the curious spectacle of the majority of the upper classes remaining away because Christianity does not present a rugged ideal of positive right, and the masses remaining away because the church omits rebuke of positive wrong.

(To Be Continued.)

WONDERED WHY

Found the Answer Was "Coffee."

Many pale, sickly persons wonder for years why they have to suffer so, and eventually discover that the drug—caffeine—in coffee is the main cause of the trouble.

"I was always very fond of coffee and drank it every day. I never had much flesh and often wondered why I was always so pale, thin and weak.

"About five years ago my health completely broke down and I was confined to my bed. My stomach was in such condition that I could hardly take sufficient nourishment to sustain life.

"During this time I was drinking coffee, didn't think I could do without it.

"After awhile I came to the conclusion that coffee was hurting me, and decided to give it up and try Postum. I didn't like the taste of it at first, but when it was made right—boiled until dark and rich—I soon became very fond of it.

"In one week I began to feel better. I could eat more and sleep better. My sick headaches were less frequent and within five months I looked and felt like a new being, headache spells entirely gone.

"My health continued to improve and to-day I am well and strong, weigh 148 lbs. I attribute my present health to the life-giving qualities of Postum."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

BOY DROWNED

By DR. ELLIOTT I. OSGOOD

The Medical Missionary was hard at work among the flock of patients. From the hot room filled with the smell of diseased and dirty patients his eyes would wander once in a while out to the cool banks of the river. Suddenly he saw a crowd gather there. Some one said a boy was drowned. A few minutes later when the last patient was gone the Medical missionary strayed down to where the crowd still clustered.

Everybody was interested, but no one was doing anything.

"There is where he fell in. He was an apprentice to a basket-maker. He could not swim. The water is ten feet deep there." Every newcomer was being given the information.

"But why are they not trying to rescue the body?" asked the medical missionary, who was used to trying to save life when he got a chance.

"Oh, the men who can dive are waiting till the boy's parents come. There they come, now." And the crowd surged toward the frantic parents.

Everybody was talking, even the parents, yet no movement was made toward the water. "What are they waiting for now?" asked the missionary.

"Why, they are talking price so the divers will know how much they are to receive for rescuing the body."

"But they could have had the body out of the water and perhaps have saved the life of the boy before now."

"But, don't you know, they must settle the price first and they could not do that until the parents came?" It was a small boy who ventured the information with wide open eyes at the idea of doing anything, even to the saving of a life, before the price was settled.

It was an hour after the boy was drowned that the price was settled and the divers went to work. A float of logs was hastily constructed and from it men dove down and searched the bottom. When one of them would clumsily fall off the rolling logs the crowds on the banks would jeer and laugh. Everybody was having a good time,—everybody but the agonized parents. It was their only boy who lay in the river bed. If it had been one of their girls,—well, that would have been different. It was their boy. Their hopes had all been in him. Their life lay in the bed of that river. To the crowd it was just another excitement, something like a circus, something new.

Another hour had passed by when suddenly one of the divers came to the surface dragging the body by the hair of the head. The crowd surged again. They watched the paying of the money to the divers and the wrangling over its division, gathered about to hear the moans of the mother and see the dead body. Then they slowly melted away. The excitement was passed.

The medical missionary went slowly back to his work of healing. He had been face to face with heathenism.

MEN FOR THE MINISTRY

By W. R. WARREN

Within the last few weeks we have seen young men by the thousand graduating in law, medicine, and dentistry. Bookkeepers and stenographers have received certificates and diplomas by the tens of thousands. Yet the daily papers of every city tell of thousands who are unemployed. There is only one class of schools that is not able to supply the demand for its graduates. The colleges that train men for the ministry are asked for ten where one is ready.

For years the denominations about us have been wrestling with the problem of a decreased ministerial supply. We have not been agitated over the matter, partially because in proportion to our numbers we have twice as many young men in our ministerial classes, but chiefly because we have had no one whose especial business it was to lay the facts before the churches with authority. From year to year our Statistical Secretary has called attention to the need, and his cry has been disregarded or soon forgotten.

The first note of encouragement was found in the enthusiastic response to the passionate address of Geo. H. Combs at Norfolk last fall. Scarcely a State Secretary is failing this year to call attention in the annual convention to the supreme need of preachers. Better still, his words are given more than a perfunctory hearing. But we are yet only half awake. Look about your own county. How many churches are without preachers, and how long have they been vacant? Inquire of the condition throughout the state. Is it like Iowa, with one hundred and eighty vacant pulpits, or Ohio, where two hundred and fifty churches have no regular preaching? Take a casual glance at the year-book, and at the table of statistics on page 567. Notice in state after state how far short the number of ministers falls of the number of churches. Turn over to the list of preachers and note how many less names are given than the statistical table claims, and in that number how many have retired and the considerable number who are engaged as teachers, editors, evangelists, and secretaries, and so unable to meet the regular demand. Consider further that we are preparing to celebrate the Centennial of an aggressive movement, the restoration of the militant spirit in the church of Christ, and that by all apostolic precedents we ought to have an army of conquest at least as large as our army of occupation. When the salient features of the situation have been grasped, pray the Lord of the Harvest that he will send forth four thousand more young men before the first day of October, 1909, that we may have ten thousand ministers for the Centennial.

Christian Endeavor in Missouri.

H. W. Hunter, of Mt. Washington, Mo., state superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Missouri, presented to our convention in session at Kansas City the report of which the following is the substance:

Success is crowning the continued efforts of our Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. The fight for success is always a continuous performance. Some people believe they get results by telling others how to obtain them; but Christian Endeavor has found out that results come to those who come after them. We speak with pride of some of these "results."

Christian Endeavor has always taught, and practiced to a large degree, that civic duty is imperative upon each citizen, and that, though the precept be good, its value is dimmed unless practice follows in its wake. Thus we have seen our young people interested, actively so, in the present-day movements that tend to purity and righteousness. We note local unions having such topics as these: "The Public Play Ground"; "The Boy, his Care"; "Sunday Closing"; "A Sane July 4th."

We are inclined to believe these things have become more vital to us because we are studying more than ever before the Book; and through the study we are applying the truths gained, to the needs of the world around us. Christian Endeavor, if anything, is always practical.

We are comprehending that Christ ment, along lines tending to the kingdom coming here on earth, so that every tongue shall confess that he is Lord. Therefore, we have deemed it wise to push the mission study work in Missouri. We have reported thirty-five classes organized. We are making this campaign for two years, setting our mark to reach 300 such classes before our centennial year. We will do it if every pastor, evangelist and worker will determine to speak a good word for it. Yes, if our Christian Endeavor will get more of the desire to learn, which was always the Christ spirit, we believe we will win.

During the year your superintendent has been working hard to get the books into some kind of order. We have succeeded, in a measure, but are handicapped by reason of carelessness on the part of the secretaries in answering letters. If you will not answer our letters get out of your job and let some one have it who will work. I said at the beginning of the year that I would only report to this convention what was reported to me. I have heard from 109 societies which have a membership of 4,520, who have given to missionary work as follows: Home boards, $669.39; foreign boards, $963; other needs, $2,048.60, making a total of $3,680.99.

Together with these faithful there are about 100 societies that I know are living; of course there are many that we know nothing about; and if I were guessing I would say we have about 350 societies in the state. The figures show an increase in members, money raised and in general usefulness. There have come to our notice forty-three new societies.

If any society should receive special mention it would be the one which has the largest membership; this is the Christian Endeavor of the Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, with a membership of 171; the society that raised the most money for all purposes was the South Prospect, of Kansas City, which raised $375. We would also mention the Kansas City Federation of Christian Endeavor, which, under the splendid leadership of Barclay Meador, has done so much to stimulate mission study in Kansas City. They have fourteen such classes and all have been studying "The Challenge of the City." Every Kansas City society has reported to the convention.

This work should have a man who could devote his entire time to its service. The correspondence has been very heavy, some 3,000 letters, of all kinds, have left our hands. We have done this work cheerfully and because we loved to do it, and if we have been instrumental in doing good that will be our reward. In closing, we recommend: That the mission study class work be pushed to the utmost during the coming year, and that the 300 classes be obtained by June, 1909; that all our district and county conventions allow ample time for Christian Endeavorers on their programs; that, inasmuch as our national superintendent is urging first place in Christian Endeavor for our people by the Pittsburg convention, we, in Missouri, take an active part in this campaign.

The financial exhibit is as follows:

Received from Christian Endeavor this year	$130 00
Total	$130 00
Expended	$140 00
Balance due superintendent	$ 10 00

Our Budget

—Men and the Church.

—How to interest them?

—It is a problem felt by all.

—We begin the publication of what was recognized by our congress as a valuable contribution to the subject.

—Mr. Holmes has his own viewpoints. He does not ask you to accept them, but to consider them.

—His experience is that of the Christian man with both a theoretical and practical knowledge of Christian work among large masses of men.

—The Assistant Editor hopes to have a few days' rest from the August heat as the next paper goes to press. He is getting his fishing tackle ready for Lake Pentwater.

—We had confidently expected to have a report in this issue of the evangelistic congress at Bethany Assembly, but the correspondent who had charge of this has not yet sent in his copy.

—Our instructions to the writer were to give as full a report as he thought the occasion merited, and an absolutely impartial one.

—We hope to publish this and a report of the teacher training congress next week. Marion Stevenson is attending this.

✣ ✣ ✣

—John W. Moody, of Louisville, Ky., takes the work at Keosauqua, Ia.

—Our church at Traverse City is making good headway under J. A. Canby.

—J. F. Williams is doing good work at Gurney, Ill. He recently was called upon for a special address.

—The financial committee at Findlay, Ill., is meeting with good success in raising money for a new building.

—C. M. Smithson has closed his two years' of work at Flora, Ill., and moves to St. Elmo, where he will enter the evangelistic field.

—C. S. Medbury, while having a change of scene, is working hard, seeing that he is down for twelve addresses at the California State Convention.

—Geo. W. Wise, of DuQuoin, was recently called to the Friendship Church to conduct the ordination service of James Brayfield to the Christian ministry.

—Work on the great University Place Church auditorium at Des Moines is begun. The dwellings are being moved from the lots and the plans are about completed.

—Prof. Rolla G. Sears, of Oklahoma Christian University, was a lecturer at the Oklahoma Camp Meeting at Crescent City, under the control of the United Brethren.

—We learn that the Armordale Christian Church at Kansas City has again been devastated by the flood waters of the Kaw River. We hope to publish further particulars in our next issue.

—J. S. Stockard has tendered his resignation at Honey Grove, Tex., to take effect September 1. The church there extended a call to A. E. Ewell, who recently entered the evangelistic field.

—J. H. Stuckey, who is located at Bertram, Tex., where he is engaged to serve two churches west of Austin, will be glad to serve some other congregation one Sunday in the month, or hold a meeting.

—After nearly thirty years' residence in Waxahachie, Tex., Chalmers McPherson is now making his permanent home at Fort Worth that he may have more convenient railroad facilities for his work for Texas Christian University.

—One of our small but active Christian colleges desires a principal—a good mixer and executive are necessary qualifications. The outlook is good. Address "Forwarded," care The Christian-Evangelist.

—Mrs. C. L. Thurgood, of Pittsburg, Pa., calls our attention to the summer school of missions at Chautauqua, which is being held from August 1-8, as a meeting that will combine summer pleasure with a spiritual recreation.

—John T. Brown has just taken the work at Johnson City, Tenn., which Lem Keevil recently left in order to go to Sherman, Tex. The church building will seat 1,200 people. The membership, we believe, is about 500.

—Mart Gary Smith, of Enid, Okla., desires to get in touch with any one in his state knowing of a church or churches that need a preacher. He will try to arrange for students at the Oklahoma Christian University to supply.

—W. S. Priest and family will spend the month of August at the Christian Outing Grounds, Long Lake, Iosco County, Mich. The pulpit of the Broad Street Church, Columbus, O., will be occupied during his absence by Charles A. Kleeberger.

—The work at DuQuoin, Ill., continues to prosper. The audiences are excellent for the summer season. The church has extended to its minister, Geo. W. Wise, a call to continue another year. He takes a four weeks' vacation, in the course of which he will visit his father and mother in Tennessee.

—J. D. Babb is having success, as the result of his faithfulness at Calhoun, Mo. The church there is full of life, and there have been thirty additions in the regular services of half-time work during the past six months. The revival has just been begun. F. M. O'Neal and wife are leading the music.

—E. H. Kellar sends word that DeForest Austin passed away at his home in Englewood, near Los Angeles, Cal., on July 23. Brother Austin was one of our great evangelists and a fine type of man well-known throughout the Middle West. We regret to lose him. Some one will, no doubt, supply us with some facts of his life.

—H. H. Utterback, of Park Avenue, Des Moines, has received a call and will take the pastorate of the Estherville Church, Ia. Those who have written W. S. Johnson, state evangelist, will take this as an answer to their inquiries concerning this field. All letters have been forwarded to B. S. Denny, State Secretary, who is always pleased to locate good men in Iowa.

—The congregation at Gordon, Tex., will at once begin to erect their new building. Charles Chastain held a meeting for them and this is one of the results. Their former building was burned in February.

—H. K. Shields, of San Marcos, Tex., but formerly of Rochester, Ind., has arranged for some meetings in the autumn. He has been out of work for a few months, but we are glad to learn that he will again be in the field as a singer and helper. Address him Box 18.

—I. W. Babcock has closed his work at Stafford, Kan., and last Lord's day entered upon the ministry to the brethren at Mankato. The church at Stafford is in good condition and the fine new building will, e'er long, be opened. An energetic man is needed to take the work at a salary of $1,000.

—The Bible School at Garden City, Mo., has closed a contest with the school at Belton. Garden City won by 200 in attendance and $40 in collection. It more than doubled its regular average attendance, while the collections amounted to more than three times the former average. R. A. Blalock is the minister.

—It appears that at a recent meeting held at Greenville, Tex., and reported in our columns, W. T. Hilton, the minister of the church, did the preaching, though our report indicated some one else did. Correspondents are sometimes so indefinite that the editors may have to guess, and, of course, may guess wrong.

—J. W. Kerns, minister at Carbondale, Ill., will spend his vacation at Marble Falls, Tex., where he will conduct a ten days' meeting and on August 16 dedicate the new church building. He will also officiate at the dedication exercises of the new Christian Church at Hurst, Ill., the first Sunday in September.

—Dr. R. H. Crossfield will not be able to leave his work in Owensboro, Ky., before the first of November and will not, therefore, be formally installed as president of Transylvania University until that time. He is already carefully studying the needs and workings of the institution and putting himself in touch with its needs and condition. He has taken hold of the work with his characteristic vigor and enthusiasm and optimism.

—The work goes forward at West Pawlett, Vt., where Frank A. Heilman is pastor. This little congregation rejoices in that it is able to have a share in a mission station through the Foreign Society, its recent contribution for that purpose being the largest contribution the church has ever made for missions and it has been an organization for over twenty years. The apportionment for Children's Day offering was also largely exceeded.

D. A. Nicoll and his ministerial class.

—The Christian Church at Buffalo, Mo., is making a steady, permanent growth under the preaching of D. A. Nicoll. There were five additions by baptism during June. The Sunday-school is working nicely under the management of M. E. Reynolds, superintendent. The midweek prayer-meeting and Christian Endeavor are both well attended. The Teacher's Training Classes, both senior and junior, are increasing in numbers, and are making their meetings very interesting. The ministerial class, under the instruction of Brother Nicoll, is doing splendid work. Some of its members are preaching to country churches. We give a group picture herewith. This is one way to solve the problem of ministerial supply.

—Our last issue reported a good meeting at Halsey, Oregon. Brother Curtis sends us an account of it, in which he highly commends the church and its minister, C. R. Moore.

—A new $5,000 church building for the congregation at Yellow Grass, Sask., Canada, is nearing completion. The membership is about 100, and the organization was effected some six months ago by A. R. Adams.

—Knox P. Taylor, of Bloomington, Ill., spent a few days last week in Eureka. In a public service held in the Christian church, Brother Taylor spoke of the great good that Eureka College and the Christian church in Eureka had done for our cause in Illinois and throughout the world.

—The campaign committee of Eureka College recently met in the office of Mr. A. J. Elliott, in Peoria, to receive the report of the field secretary, H. H. Peters, and to plan work for the remainder of the summer and early fall. The work that has been accomplished during the past six months has been successful, and the outlook never was brighter.

—H. M. Johnstone has completed his second year's work with the church at Fredonia, Kan. During his short pastorate there more than $10,000 has been raised and expended. At the regular services and during R. S. Martin's revival, 320 members have been added. This is the largest congregation in the city and is in a position to do aggressive work.

—F. Ellsworth Day's congregation recently had the pleasure of a visit from Dr. Dye. Brother Day says that nothing they have done this year will bring them so much joy as the taking up of the station plan and supporting a missionary in Africa. His C. E. Society recently gave a most enjoyable entertainment that attracted the attention of the whole city.

—A. R. Adams, of Milestone, Sask., Canada, would like to hear from all who endorse the idea of publishing a union church paper devoted to the interests of Baptists and Disciples in Western Canada, and who desire the "Clarion Call" to continue. This, of course, means an endorsement with support. A newspaper can not be published without subscribers paying for it.

—S. F. Fowler, who took the work at Jennings, La., the first of last November, has been unanimously asked to remain with the church at an increase of salary. This information was conveyed to Brother Fowler in an official letter, in which the secretary was also instructed to extend to him and his wife the deepest appreciation of thanks for the fine service rendered during his ministry.

—The Fleming H. Revell Co. is bringing out another book from the pen of W. T. Moore, entitled "The Supremacy of the Heart Life; or, The Regnancy of Love." He is now reading the proofs during his summer residence at Garrison Park, Pentwater, Mich. Having had the opportunity of examining some of the manuscript and proofs of this book, we think it will be one of the very best of the author's works.

—J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Tex., has announced to his church that at the close of the present year he will give up his work there, as he and his wife both feel they must have a change of climate. They have been in Austin twelve years, and in Texas twenty-one years. In addition to his church work, Brother Lowber has delivered more than 500 lectures and addresses at different colleges, universities, conventions, and lectureships.

—The Christian Endeavor Society at Amarillo, Tex., has adopted an orphan boy at the Damoh Orphanage and he is to be educated for the missionary field. This society is beginning a mission work in Amarillo also. Nine new members were recently added, the total now being thirty with an average attendance of twenty. Miss Lora Hawkins reports the church and endeavor greatly helped by the meetings recently held by Fife and Son.

—We regret to learn that owing to recent financial losses and indebtedness on their new building, the members of the Christian church at Longview, Texas, will not be able to keep J. A. Holton as pastor. He is one of our best preachers and pastors, and during the time of his work at Longview sixty members have been brought into the fellowship and the efficiency of every department of church service has been largely increased. Brother Holton is now open for engagement with some other church.

—Our congregation at Blackwell, Okla., has completed a brick building costing about $10,000, which was used for the first time last Lord's day. It is expected to dedicate some time in September. This is the largest and most costly church building in the city. G. W. McQuiddy, the minister, has just returned from his trip to the East and South and is ready to push things. The congregation will heartily cooperate. A good evangelist is needed for a campaign for numerical and spiritual strength.

J. N. Crutcher.

—President Hopwood informs us that a definite announcement has been received from Mr. Carnegie that he will give $20,000 as the work on the new building for Virginia Christian College progresses. The other $30 000 has been secured in cash and negotiable notes, so that there will be no delay in the construction. This school holds the same standard of conduct for young men and for young women. The work has grown with each year, and a still better opportunity for helpfulness to young manhood and womanhood will now be possible.

—August F. Larson, who was born and raised at Canton, Ill., where he also obeyed the Gospel, was there solemnly ordained to the work of the ministry on July 26. J. G. Waggoner writes that he is a most excellent young man, full of faith and zealous for the cause of Christ. He spent some time in Drake University and has now been a student in Eureka College for two years. He preaches regularly at Roanoke, where he is doing a fine work. Brother Waggoner takes great pleasure in welcoming and introducing such a young man as a minister of the Gospel.

—It appears that a statement has been published that the "only living charter members of the organization of Bethany Assembly are Prof. A. C. Shortridge, of Irvington, Ind., and L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash." It appears that at least one other man, who had a prominent part in this, is living in Indianapolis. This is Wm. H. Draper, who was one of the pioneers in urging the convention to purchase assembly grounds. Brother Draper has been prominent in much of the public work of the state, corresponding secretary of the State Missionary Society for three years, and recording secretary of the general convention for eight years.

—J. N. Crutcher, who recently resigned at Higginsville, Mo., is to supply the pulpit of Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, during the absence of its minister, George H. Combs, who is lecturing in California. Brother Crutcher will spend the remaining part of the summer on Indian River, near Anderson, McDonald county. He writes: "Bass fishing is fine; better come down and see us." As we sit in the sweltering heat in St. Louis we can hear the reel singing and feel the tug on the line, but, alas! it is all a dream.

—The church at Latonia, Ky., is carrying on a special campaign to raise all or at least a large part of its indebtedness on the new building. It puts out a little weekly called "The "Whirlwind News," which contains some interesting matter. From one item we glean the following for our readers. It is about the pluck and perseverance of a young man who recently preached for the church. A year ago he was a toiling desk clerk in a Cincinnati railroad office, providing for his family and paying for a home in Latonia, where he lived and attended church. Robbed, by the force of circumstances, of the education which he felt he needed to become a preacher, he finally was persuaded by Prof. H. L. Calhoun to go to college and study for the ministry. He did so with so much earnest energy and zeal, that he has lead his classes in school the first year and has already held some remarkable meetings. This man is Phil Bornwasser. Much credit for his success is due to his good wife, who taught school last winter to help him through college. We echo the hope of Brother Kunyan that the recital of this victorious struggle will stir many another young man to determine to make the most of himself.

Lincoln Temperance Chautauqua.

One of these popular Temperance Chautauqua Assemblies has at length been arranged for Chicago, and will be conducted in Englewood, in a large tent, to be pitched on the twenty-acre plat of the Normal School grounds, Normal Avenue and Sixty-eighth Street, August 11-16, Tuesday to Sunday inclusive. This will prove a week of rare entertainment and education.

W. P. Keeler,
for Committee of Arrangements.

Send for our Catalogue.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Eleven Years in Kansas City.

Frank L. Bowen began his twelfth year's work in Kansas City, Mo., Sunday, July 19. His ministry has been abundantly blessed in many ways. The holy fellowship of his preaching brethren and the membership as well is counted as one of his rarest blessings. He has had a splendid host to help him in his work of city evangelization. Special services were held at the Jackson Avenue Church, of which Brother Bowen is pastor, in addition to his city work. Brethren Gribben, Douglas, Donaldson and others spoke of the work of the past eleven years. Over 1,600 have been added to the several new congregations organized by Brother Bowen, fifteen new Sunday-schools have been started and six new buildings erected. About $80,000 has been expended in city mission work and all of it raised by the Kansas City people. The Jackson Avenue Church was burned last year and the insurance money was also lost by failure of a trust company. The congregation is determined and hopes to rebuild this fall. They now worship in the basement of the new church. It is unplastered and has a rough floor. They have a campaign on for "One Mile of Dimes." Mrs. Bowen has always been prominent in all the work in the city. She is now in the hospital, having undergone an operation. The prospects for even larger work in city evangelization were never brighter. The interest is deepening and the membership is splendidly united.

A New Church for Burlington, Ind.

At Burlington, Ind., the corner stone of a new Christian church has just been dedicated. The design of this we are able to present to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, together with the likeness of the minister, J. Thomas W. Luckey. In his speech on the occasion, Brother Luckey pointed out that when Christ was here he built no church house nor effected any organization, but revealed what kind of timber should characterize this when built, leaving the matter of construction to the good sense of his people. Among the articles placed in the stone was a copy of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and other papers of the church, with a local county newspaper containing a history and picture of the proposed new building, a catalog of Butler College and picture of the old brick church which was recently torn down to give place to the one now in course of erection, and a copy of the Bible. This was included because it is a book indispensable to the modern church. There were many present on the occasion. The plans have been enlarged and improved upon the first original suggestions. The church is to be of Bedford stone, red pressed brick and white mortar. It is to cost about $10,000, and the money, we understand, was subscribed and provided for before the building was begun. Its seating capacity will be 600. Brother Luckey has been with this congregation nearly two years, but will soon close his ministry and be ready to take work in another field where there is opportunity for constructive work. Burlington is a fine opening for a consecrated minister. Its church building will be the best in the county, and it has an excellent parsonage. Much credit for the erection of the new building is given to the minister.

New Christian Church at Burlington, and J. Thomas W. Luckey.

As We Go to Press.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 3.—Yeuell is having wonderful success in this difficult field—20 to-day; tabernacle overflowing, people enthusiastic.—Bernard P. Smith, pastor.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

St. Louis, Aug. 3.—At the second meeting of our four-weeks' Christian Endeavor revival at the First Church, eleven were added to the membership of the society. Ten were added to the church on invitation of the president of the Christian Endeavor. Not a preacher in the house. We have been without a minister for four months.—H. W. Simpson.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Bethany Park, Ind., August 3.—Past week been great for Bethany Park. Moment crowds saw Moninger and evangelists felt in atmosphere of success. Enthusiasm, sobriety, spirituality, intelligence, goodness, love, friendship, prosperity, and cheerfulness pervade the air. A studious and spiritual picnic on a gigantic scale. Contributions of all speakers full of power and fervor. Park beautifully laid out, bountiful supply of good food and water. Last week evangelists had everything; this week teacher training blast. Moninger has elements of great leader, the ability to see need of age, feel for the masses, equipment of speech, power to suit the action to the world. Magnificent music under the leadership of E. O. Excell, and singing evangelists Netz sisters, with their sweet voices and beautiful characters, here. Best Christian company without effort. Culture, kindness, cheapness and equality and right practical thought on hand. The Bible school yesterday reached 4,000, crowds computed from 6,000 to 8,000. Lectures this week by distinguished men and specialists in teacher training. Some come from curiosity for a day, have stayed a week. Bethany this year is a spiritual paradise without a sin, without a victim, without a blot, without a boss. Two things have been kept constantly in view—burning zeal for evangelizing our land and for bringing up children in the knowledge of the Lord. May such zeal never be quenched. The inflammable material was ready. Russell Errett applied the match and L. O. White a blaze. The contests in teacher-training have been especially interesting. The victorious state has not yet been announced. The morning that Sniff and Dungan and Radford and McGarvey appeared on the program and spoke will never be forgotten. Nobody has thought of making a side trip. All have caught the enthusiasm and are staying with the crowds. Waggoner is a busy man on the grounds; his laugh and humor are catching. Scoville and many other fervent evangelists are adding coals to the hot fire. F. M. Rains, W. J. Wright and Marion Stevenson are giving their presence and encouragement to the great movement. Wallace Tharp preached a great sermon last night. Bethany Assembly management can not express their delight at the way things are going. They say there has never been anything like it in the history of the Park. People are here from at least twenty-five states, including those from Maine to California and Washington. It is universally conceded there never was such an array and variety of high-grade talent in any gathering of the Disciples.—James Small.

[The above telegram is one sent to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST voluntarily by the writer, one of the evangelists. We print it without any editing, and let it speak for itself. It has come to hand too late for us to verify some words that seem doubtful. As announced elsewhere, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has representatives at the Assembly, and they will no doubt furnish our readers with a report that will do justice to the conventions held.]

When Feet
are Tired and Sore
Bathe them with
Glenn's Sulphur Soap and lukewarm water, just before retiring. The relief is immediate, grateful and comforting. Sold by druggists. Always ask for
Glenn's Sulphur Soap
Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

Ministerial Exchange.

J. P. Addock, of Fort Scott, Kan., will be glad to hear from churches desiring meetings this fall and winter. He has a good singer and will go anywhere for expenses and offerings.

A devoted little congregation of about 42 members, which has been a mission church at Vermillion, O., near Cleveland, desires to secure a regular minister. They can pay $800 or $900. Address Charles H. Hofrighter.

C. H. Fowler, of Mt. Pulaski, Ill., can put a church paying $800 or $900 into communication with a good minister.

Elder Hiram Scott, of Mound Ridge, Kan., writes us that the Christian Church there needs a minister. There is a good building, the congregation is out of debt, and has a membership of about 50. A good young man starting in the ministry, or an older man that could preach for $600 would find a useful place here.

I. G. Shaw, who has been pastor of our church at Bryan, O., for about 18 months, has decided to enter the evangelistic field and solicits correspondence with those wishing meetings after the November election. His terms are free-will offerings. He is heartily commended by his church.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

June Graduates.

TEACHER TRAINING EXAMINATION QUESTIONS NOW READY FOR CLASSES.

Missouri should have three thousand of the people now studying in teacher training classes to graduate, and receive recognition at the State Convention next June.

To this end the classes should take the examination on the first four parts of the book not later than the middle of September. This office is ready to send the questions at a moment's notice. Send for them!

J. H. Hardin, State Supt.
311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

◈ ◈ ◈

Missouri Bible School Work.

All our readers will be glad to know of Brother Hardin's continuous improvement in health at Macatawa. The Board is insisting that he take his time and fully recover before he undertakes to take up the work again. In accord with this wish, he will not try to go to Bethany Park, but will send me instead. I will start from Mexico Friday night, after a meeting for the organization of a Mexican class.

Everything in the state office is centering in three lines of work: Teacher training, Adult Bible classes, and Finances. We want a training class in every church, all our Adult Bible classes organized, and an offering from each school. Just now we are pushing for pledges, and desire that each school shall send in its pledge to this office before the Board meets, August 14. The Board wants to push our two campaigns hard up to October 1, but wishes to know that the pledges will justify the expenditure of the money. Send in your pledge!

Weston Church and school join together in an effort to make their school a "Centennial Bible School" with all the Church in the Bible school and as many more by September 1. When I visited them Sunday, July 19, the Board of Elders, and the teachers and officers both passed resolutions indorsing the motto, and adopted plans for vigorous work which they hope will give them the results desired. The fact that Tarkio is in a contest with Weston has helped to stir up things at the latter place, but when Tarkio finds out what Weston is doing, it will doubtless do as well, or better. The two preachers, Brother Grimes at Tarkio and Brother Wolfe at Weston, are leading in the work.

A. N. Lindsey has an organized class of 30 men at Clinton.—C. R. Sheldon reports a new training class of thirty-one members at Unionville.—J. E. Wolfe has a new training class of thirty at Weston.—Diamond has a Young Men's class of twenty-one, of which T. C. Sutton is teacher.—The Hamilton Avenue, St. Louis, Class No. 11, mixed, with fifty members, sends for certificate of recognition.

J. H. Bryan,
Asst. State Supt.

◈ ◈ ◈

Adult Bible Class Conferences.

W. C. Pearce, Superintendent of the Adult Bible Class Department of the International Sunday-school Association, sends the following announcements for future days in August. He will attend these conferences. Will you meet him?

August 6, 7, Huntingdon, Pa. (Juniata College). Teacher training work will also be considered at this conference. For further particulars address Mr. William Beery, Huntingdon, Pennsylvania.

August 8-10, Pocono Pines (Monroe county), Pa. In connection with the Eastern School of Methods for Sunday-school Workers, August 4-14. For further information address Mr. W. G. Landes, Philadelphia, Pa.

August 12-14, Winona Lake, Ind. In connection with the summer training school for Sunday-school workers of the Fourth International District. For further particulars address Rev. E. Wesley Halpenny, dean, Law building, Indianapolis, Ind.

August 29-September 3, Sunday-school Camp, Lake Geneva, Wis. On August 25-28 immediately preceding this adult Bible class conference will be held a teacher training conference—25 and 26—under the auspices of the Cook County Association; 27 and 28 under the auspices of the committee on education of the International Sunday-school Association. For particulars as to railway, hotels, etc., address Mr. Frank L. Wood, Williams Bay, Wis., care Sunday-school Camp.

◈ ◈ ◈

Classes Join in Big Parade on the Fourth.

The Loyal Sons, of Ukiah, Cal., and the Faith Circle of the same place, a kindred organization for young ladies, took part in the Fourth of July parade at that place this year in a striking manner, making an impressive advertisement of the two classes.

The colors of Loyal Sons everywhere are white and blue, and of the Faith Circle, white and gold. The young men wore white shirts and white caps, with blue bands, and marched just ahead of a magnificent float bearing the young ladies. The float was drawn by six white horses, with a Loyal Son marching at the head of each, alongside. The young ladies wore white dresses, with gold bands over the shoulder, from belt to belt. They occupied seats beneath a canopy of white and gold crepe paper covering. The float was decorated with the colors, and at each corner was a large design of the Faith Circle monogram. The harnesses on the white horses were wrapped with gold (yellow cloth), the whole making one of the prettiest things in the entire parade.

At the close of the parade the participants went to the park, where was reserved for the classes mentioned a table seating 100. Here the Faith Circle girls served a splendid dinner to the Loyal Sons in appreciation of their work in making the float. Over the table, which was near the speaker's stand, in a conspicuous place, was a large sign, reading: "This table reserved for Faith Circle and Loyal Sons of the Christian Sunday-school." The demonstration of these classes, in the manner stated, was the "talk of the town," not only on that day, but for several days following.

Otha Wilkison, the progressive pastor of the Christian church at Ukiah, in which are these classes, is the teacher of the Loyal Sons. On July 19 the classes joined in a union service in place of the regular Sunday evening service.

Will H. Brown.

◈ ◈ ◈

Young Men's Club of Helena, Mont.

The Young Men's Bible Class (42 in number) have organized a young men's club. They have opened club rooms on Main Street; they have a reading room with the leading papers and magazines; there is a large room for games and social meetings. C. R. Neel, the pastor, and the president, has also a room in his private office.

As there is no Y. M. C. A. in Helena, we feel the club will somewhat take the place of this worthy institution. The club has been organized one month and already we have 80 members. We hope this autumn to put in a gymnasium and booths, and as far as possible run the club on the Y. M. C. A. plan. Other churches are not taking kindly to the movement; they refused to go in with us, and now are alarmed to know that we are succeeding and that their young men are joining the club. But in no sense is this to be a proselyting affair. We are here to help young men. We have the largest organized men's Bible class in the town, if not in the state. We are compelled to enlarge our church building in order to meet the growing needs of the Bible school. We are excavating our basement and will have an assembly room, 38x36, and ten class rooms outside the auditorium. We are also putting in electric lights throughout the building. This, when completed, will give us a good working plant.

C. R. Neel.

HELPFUL DEVICES FOR BIBLE SCHOOL WORK

The following card is used in building up the Century Men's Class in Fort Wayne, Ind.:

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP.

I WISH to become a member of the Adult Bible Class. Each member to have a voice in the conduct of the class; the class to be a part of the Bible School, West Creighton Avenue and Miner Street. The object of the class to be Bible Study, Mutual Helpfulness, Intellectual and Social Culture, and an Adequate Christian Service for every member.

Name .....

Address .....

Dated .....

Signed at Request of .....

The Loyal Sons of Oakland, Cal., found this card exceedingly helpful:

YOU AND YOUR FRIENDS . . .

CORDIALLY INVITED TO ATTEND THE

LOYAL SONS'

THIRD ANNIVERSARY SERVICE

AT FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH
Thirteenth and Jefferson Streets

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 23 7:30 p. m

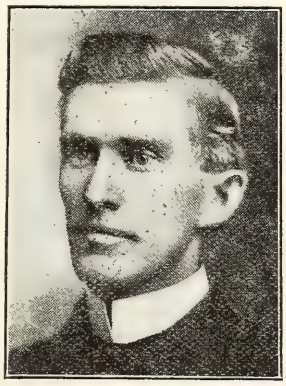
Large Choir, composed of Loyal Sons, Male Quartet, and other special music, vocal and instrumental. Special addresses for the occasion. Rally for young men in Loyal Sons' class room at 9:45 a. m. the same date.

THE INDIANA STATE CONVENTION

The Indiana State Convention includes state missionary, ministerial, Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor and educational interests. The whole program covered a period of one week.

The session began July 20. Monday afternoon and evening and Tuesday morning and afternoon were devoted to the work of the State Ministerial Association. The first session was opened by an interesting and profitable Bible study on the



J. C. Rose,
Cor. Sec. of the Missionary Society of Churches of Christ in Indiana.

"Parable of the Sower," conducted by M. H. Garrard, of Laporte. This was followed by an address by G. W. Hemry, the president of the Association, on "Preaching the Ruling Passion," suggested by Paul's declaration, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." He presented a clear statement of the scope and importance of the message to be preached, and dwelt on the supreme obligation of Christ's ministers to give this message to men, conscious that much depended upon the faithfulness with which they did so. This was a stirring and impressive address, faithfully prepared and effectively delivered.

L. H. Stine, of Tipton, gave us a review of Dr. Shailer Mathews' recent book, "The Church and the Changing Order." The paper was a vigorous, thorough and fair presentation of the contents of the volume as viewed by the writer. Accepting the Church in the sense in which the word is used by Prof. Mathews, and conceding that there is a "changing order" that is discordant with the attitude of the Church toward progress, the reviewer endorsed the position of the book, that the Church must accept the well-established conclusions of the new thought in psychology, biology and sociology. It was urged that enlightened faith and science are in harmony and should work together in order to secure the best results that are attainable, meeting the needs of our modern life, our social conditions, our industrial progress, and the highest demands of the present day thinking and true progress in religion.

In the absence of Bruce Brown, of Valparaiso, L. E. Brown, of Lebanon, gave an address on "Deserting in the Time of Battle," based on Psa. 78:9: "The children of Ephraim, being armed and carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle." Brother Brown stated that while he has never appeared upon a Bethany Assembly program, this was the fourth time he had served as a substitute. One would suppose from the character of this address that he was always ready, and that he was probably held in reserve for occasions of this kind.

The Tuesday morning session was opened with a Bible study by R. E. Moss, of Franklin, followed by a short business session. Then came an address by E. F. Daugherty, of Wabash, on "Religious Liberty among the Disciples." This was a remarkably well-written paper. The author had very definite convictions, and presented them in a clear and forcible manner. He pled for faith in Christ as the Son of God, for loyalty to him as Lord and Master, and for righteousness in living. "The only essential heresy in our brotherhood," said the author, "is bad character." The desire was very generally expressed that this paper reach a larger number through our weekly papers.

Earle Wilfley, now of Crawfordsville, but soon to take his place in the ranks of the Missouri ministry, read a paper on "The Value of Dramatic Studies to the Minister." The paper was really a discussion of the character and importance of a thorough preparation for the work of the ministry, with emphasis on the value of the study of elocution and oratory. Brother Wilfley's clear, musical voice, his perfect enunciation and strong gestures added great force to the plea he made for the study of elocution.

The afternoon session opened with a review of President King's book, "Theology and the Social Consciousness," by Austin Hunter, of Indianapolis. The reviewer did not discuss the position taken by the author of the book, but gave a well-written and complete synopsis, which was perhaps as valuable to those who had read the book as to those who had not.

W. H. Book, of Columbus, gave some of us a surprise in his discussion of the subject, "The Pastor-Evangelist." We had come to think of Brother Book more as an evangelist than as a pastor, and we had seen his name on the program of the

Austin Hunter,
Who has for the fourth time been elected President.

"Evangelistic Institute." But this did not mean that Mr. Book endorsed all the methods of the "professional" evangelist, or accepted without criticism all the results of his meetings. Did space permit, I should like to enumerate some of the things to which Mr. Book made objection; but this is not necessary, as attention has been called to many of them more than once. He thought that, as a general rule, the pastor would better hold his own meeting, or else secure a fellow-pastor to assist him.

The last address of the Ministerial Association was given by T. W. Grafton, of Anderson, on "Organizing the Men of the Church." Brother Grafton thinks he has found the solution of this problem in the "Men's Bible Class;" and for himself and the church at Anderson, he no doubt has, for he has been very successful, having a class of more than 200 men who not only attend the Sunday-school, but who are ready for any other service he may assign to them.

This closed the sessions of the Indiana

T. J. Legg,
State Evangelist of Indiana.

Ministerial Association. The program throughout was excellent. The interest, upon the part of those present, was all that could be desired, but the attendance was very small. There was no provision made in the program for the discussion of the papers. This may be wise, but one can not help feeling that in a meeting of this kind there should be an opportunity given for a free and frank discussion of all subjects presented.

The Tuesday evening session was given up to a Bethany Assembly entertainment, and Wednesday morning the first session of the State Missionary Convention was held. This was opened with devotional exercises conducted by T. A. Reynolds, of Muncie, followed by the presidential address of Austin Hunter. The president briefly reviewed the past, showing the good accomplished by the state society, dwelt upon the resources, the opportunities and the responsibilities of the Indiana Disciples; plead for a permanent fund of $50,000 for the employment of a specialist in Sunday-school work, and for the earnest and hearty co-operation of every minister in the state.

The report of the Board showed $5,560 raised during the year for state missions and state Sunday-school work. This is about $2,000 more than last year. The report also showed that only 160 churches and 67 Sunday-schools gave anything to state work last year. There are 792 churches and almost as many Sunday-schools in the state. This means that more than 600 had no fellowship in the work. An address by L. C. Howe, of Newcastle, Ind., on "The Law of Development in the Kingdom of God" closed the morning session.

Wednesday afternoon was devoted to the state Sunday-school work, and consisted chiefly of an address by T. J. Legg, on "Sunday-school Evangelism." The address was filled with facts calculated to show the Sunday-school as a great evangelistic force. In the evening Jabez Hall, Dean of Butler Bible College, preached the convention sermon. It was based upon Acts 21:14-20: "He (Paul) rehearsed one by one the things which God had wrought . . . And when they heard it they glorified God.'' It was a beautiful, helpful sermon, in which the preacher made us feel that God had wrought by our ministry, and that God should have the glory.

After a short business session on Friday morning, T. A. Abbott, who for thirteen years has been Secretary of state missions for Missouri, gave us an inspiring address on ''The Greatest Work of All.'' Of course this greatest work was state mission work, and Brother Abbott made us feel we were neglecting a great opportunity in Indiana.

During the Christian Endeavor hour, which followed, addresses were given by H. A. Denton and A. B. Philputt. The afternoon session was devoted to a consideration of the relation of the district and county organization to the state work.

Friday was Educational Day, and it was one of the most interesting and profitable days of the entire convention. It was devoted chiefly to the consideration of the interests of Butler College under the two general topics, ''What Butler College can do for the churches,'' presented by A. B. Philputt and J. O. Rose, and ''What the churches can do for Butler College,'' by O. E. Tomes, Carl Van Winkle and Pres. T. C. Howe. In the afternoon some excellent addresses were given by leading professional men of the state, all graduates of Butler College, on ''The College and the Professions.'' More than usual interest was manifested in the day's program and all felt it was a great day for Butler College. When one remembers the large share that Butler College has had in the work done by the Disciples of Indiana, one wonders that more interest has not been taken in the institution. But this condition is not peculiar to Indiana and Indiana promises to lead the way in atoning for any neglect of duty in this respect. With the recently greatly increased endowment and with the interest in this institution constantly growing, the future of Butler College is full of promise.

The sermon Friday evening was preached by C. H. Winders, of Indianapolis. Saturday was children's day at the park. On Sunday—also Convention Day—those who remained heard a sermon in the morning by E. E. Davidson, of Washington, and in the evening the closing convention sermon by J. M. Rudy, of Greencastle.

Thus closed a convention excellent in every respect save only in attendance. The opinion seems to prevail very generally that Bethany Park is not the place, and July not the time to hold the state convention. The state board was instructed to secure, as far as possible, an expression of opinion from the ministers of the state concerning the time and place of holding the next convention, and to act accordingly. The committee on ways and means recommended that an earnest effort be made to raise $10,000 for state work next year; that the apportionment system be adopted in raising the state fund, and that a permanent fund of not less than $50,000 be secured as soon as possible. Austin Hunter, of Indianapolis, was for the fourth time elected as president of the board, which also means president of the convention. Other officers elected were W. H. Allen, of Muncie, vice-president; F. P. Smith, Indianapolis, secretary, and W. S. Moffett, of Indianapolis, treasurer.

H. A. Denton, W. R. Warren, J. H. Mohorter and A. L. Orcutt were all present to present their different departments of our national work. Miss Una D. Berry, W. E. M. Hackleman and Leroy St. John rendered valuable service in furnishing music for the convention. The reports of J. O. Rose, sec., and T. J. Legg, evangelist, were filled with encouraging things and revealed the possibilities of the Indiana brotherhood when thoroughly enlisted in the work. Special mention should be made of the liberality of Marshall T. Reeves, of Columbus, who supports his own state evangelist, Wm. Chapple, who is doing excellent work.

Indianapolis, Ind. C. H. Winders.

Concerning the Proposed Union at Rockford, Ill.

Since it is quite generally known that negotiations have been in progress for several months past looking toward the merging of the Central Christian and First Baptist Churches of Rockport, it is perhaps fitting that a statement should now be made to the public. It is about seven months since committees were appointed by both churches and conferences were begun. After a great deal of time and labor had been spent by the two ministers, a plan of union and constitution were drawn, and finally approved by the joint conference committees. The new church was to be equally a Baptist and a Christian Church, so far as ecclesiastical and fraternal relations with the respective communions with which each is connected are concerned, although it was specifically stated in the introduction, ''This is a Church of Christ.'' The new organization was to be called ''The United Church,'' with ''First Baptist-Central Christian,'' in small type underneath; the Lord's Supper was to be observed the first and third Sundays in each month; the gospel invitation was to be extended at the close of each regular preaching service; all missionary and benevolent money was to be divided equally between the boards of the two bodies. The First Baptist Church has a holding society which holds their property, and which, according to the peculiar statute under which it was incorporated, can not be dissolved without jeopardizing the rights of the property holders. So the members pledged themselves to change the name of this society wherever it appears in the constitution, to correspond to the name of the new spiritual body. In the meantime, the Central Christian Church agreed to deed their present property to the Society of the United Church, and place the deed in escrow until the proposed changes were actually made. A little more than a month ago the Central Christian Church, by a large majority, voted to approve of the proposed union under the terms of the plan of union and constitution referred to.

The Baptists did not wish to act until they had received denominational advice. The Rock River Baptist Association left the matter of advising the First Baptist Church with the missionary committee of that organization, instructing them to seek wider counsel from the leading Baptist ministers of Chicago. The Chicago men whom they consulted unanimously approved of the merger. After a long and tedious delay the missionary committee finally reported that they could see no reason why the union should not be consummated. A meeting of the First Baptist Church was called for the purpose of voting on the question. On the eve of this meeting this committee sent in a ''supplemental report,'' which reversed their former opinion and strongly disapproved of the union. This latter report, together with the hostile attitude of one or two of their prominent members, had a marked effect upon the sentiment, and the vote resulted in a bare majority of one in favor of the union. They then adopted the following resolution, and addressed it to ''The Pastor and People of the Central Christian Church'': ''Whereas the chairman of the missionary committee of the Rock River Baptist Association has issued, in the name of the committee, a 'supplemental report,' qualifying their original action and disapproving of the proposed union of the First Baptist and Central Christian Churches of Rockford; and,

''Whereas, the previous unanimity of the First Baptist Church for this union, as expressed by repeated votes, has thus been shaken so that it appears that a large number of its members now believe that union is not feasable;

''Resolved, That in the judgment of the pastor and people of the First Baptist Church, a union, otherwise greatly to be desired, is regarded as impracticable at the present time.''

Hence the whole matter is to be dropped after many weary months of labor and anxiety. Speaking from a broad point of view, it is greatly to be regretted that the project must be thus defeated, although conditions have come to be such that a harmonious union would not now be possible. The basis of union, however, was fair and just, and no vital, scriptural principle would have been sacrificed. It is not true, as has been stated in the Baptist ''Standard,'' and elsewhere, that the new organization would have been distinctly a Baptist church. It would have been ''The United Church,'' (the words 'of Christ' being plainly implied), of Rockford, seeking to help answer the Master's prayer, ''that they may all be one.'' W. D. Ward.

[As our readers are interested in every attempt at union, we think it well to give publicity to the foregoing statement. We think it wise, under the circumstances, that this union was postponed. Any union effected by mere majorities is not likely to prove satisfactory or lasting. We trust the two churches will continue to cultivate fraternal relations, and cooperate in every way practicable, so that the union, which is inadvisable now, may become feasible in the future. There is only one caution we wish to add in connection with the subject of union of our churches with Baptists, or any other kind of church, and that is, that due attention be given to the question as to whether the union proposed will hinder or help the church in its testimony in behalf of Christian union and New Testament Christianity. It is not simply a question of economics, or of increased numerical and financial strength, but whether it will be possible for the united church to bear witness to the evils of division and the demand for Christian union. If this is secured, other things can ordinarily be easily adjusted.—Editor.]

You Can Attend College

At half regular rates. Bible department, by working part time. Term opens September 7. Write Charles J. Burton, Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING
IN THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS
Two Cents per word, per insertion.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Texas Notes.

Our work is progressing nicely. The financial stringency has interfered but little.

The state convention nas reached a high-water mark in enthusiasm, in large plans for work and in liberal giving. A vigorous summer campaign is being pushed in various sections of the state. Strange as it may seem, most churches in Texas would prefer to have their meeting in the summer time. The reports thus far have been excellent.

Mrs. Boggess and I closed our winter and spring campaign in Central and South Texas in June. Seven meetings were held. Four new churches were organized, with the work set in order, and preachers located to carry the work forward. These new churches are in promising new towns, several of them along the gulf coast. Several preachers have been located in that great new section of the state. There are many other prominent towns where churches ought to be established and new ones strengthened. This is pioneer work, such as is being pushed in the field of Texas.

A great field of promise is the Panhandle. Our summer campaign in the Panhandle is being carried forward by the writer and wife and State Secretary J. C. Mason and daughter. An interesting meeting has just closed at Lubbock, where the church was strengthened, a Bible school was organized, a C. W. B. M. auxiliary started, a pastor located and money raised for a church house. Lubbock is a fine little county seat of promise, fifty miles from the nearest railroad station, but has a fast automobile connection, and will soon be supplied with a railroad. This evangelistic team is now assisting in a meeting at Claude, a county seat near Amarillo. Meetings in several other prominent places are planned as sieges of this campaign. The Panhandle is coming to the front, and that, too, with a very fine class of people coming from other states.

M. M. Smith is in a meeting at Bethel, an "Anti" stronghold. Charles Chasteen is assisting at Gordon. A. D. Rogers is at Aquilla. A. E. Dubber is in a successful meeting at Cooper.——The Panhandle district convention will be held at Claude, beginning August 11. The Northeast Texas convention will be held at Longview, beginning August 30.——Camp meetings at Fentress and Rule will be held in August. The Texas brotherhood is building in a more permanent way, and more vigorously, hence are anticipating larger reports than in any previous summer campaign.

W. A. Boggess, State Evangelist.
Station A, Dallas, Texas.

Campbell-Hagerman College.

The Campbell-Hagerman College, Lexington, Ky., though the youngest of our schools for the higher education of girls and young women, has from the very first ranked among the oldest and best in the completeness of its equipment, in the size and character of its student body, and in the quality and range of the work accomplished. It has one of the handsomest plants in the entire South, and its location near the center of Lexington, Ky., furnishes an educational environment not surpassed anywhere in the world.

The College offers instruction in six departments, as follows: Literature and science, music, art, expression, physical culture domestic science and business. There were about one hundred and twenty pupils in the music department during the last session. Though only five years old, the college already has to its credit one hundred and twenty-six alumnae in the literary and science department alone, a record not surpassed certainly, if equalled even, by any school of similar rank in the South. Besides a large local patronage, the college enrolled last season pupils from Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi, Tennessee, Florida, Louisiana, Virginia, New Mexico, Minnesota, Missouri, West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and Kentucky. The junior class, the past session, numbered forty-five members, so that it may be safely predicted that the senior class next session will more than maintain the high general average of twenty-five graduates made during the past five years.

Much attention is given to the religious culture of pupils at Campbell-Hagerman College. The Bible is a regular text book in the junior and senior classes; one-half hour each morning is devoted to worship in the college chapel, at which all pupils are required to be present. All boarding pupils are required to attend the regular church services at least once each Lord's day, at the church designated by their parents. In addition, the Y. W. C. A.. each session enrolls a goodly number of the boarding pupils, furnishing a splendid field for religious culture and training for practical service.

Taken all in all, there is no better school for the training of young women, and President Hagerman has good reason to congratulate himself on the prosperity and promise of the noble work to which he has dedicated his life. For catalog, address Pres. B. C. Hagerman, Lexington, Ky.

Burnet J. Pinkerton.

An Advance at Findlay, Ohio.

The Central Church of Christ, of Findlay, Ohio, is enjoying an unprecedented building success. January 1 G. H. Sims came to us as our pastor. He, with others, felt that the mission, seven years old and meeting in a hall, could not succeed unless an adequate church home was secured. Brother Sims conditioned his coming on the erection of a house that would be a credit to us as a people and the city as well. A meeting was held in a hall under very adverse circumstances, and twenty-five souls in all were added to the congregation. A $1,900 lot was bought and paid for, the location being in the center of the city.

The corner stone of a beautiful structure, made of cement blocks, was laid June 21. The pilasters are of rock-faced blocks and the rest of the building of broken ashler, except the water table window sills and caps, which are of smooth-faced blocks like cut stone. Altogether the effect is of a very fine stone building. In dimensions it is 85x48 feet, with an auditorium 56x42 feet, and a Bible school room 24x48 feet. Both of these rooms can be thrown together. There are all necessary appurtenances of the modern church complete, and, better than all, we hope to dedicate out of debt.

Brother Sims acted as master of ceremonies. There were present with us to assist brethren from all over the nineteenth district. James White, Professor Brown, John Mullen, Benjamin Bolton, and Brother Read, of Bowling Green, took part. Dr. Griner, with the assistance of the Masons, laid the stone, and in a brief talk he explained the significance of each item as he laid it away in the enduring marble for the inspection of men yet to live.

The dedication of this new chapel will be in the early part of September. This is about eight months from the time Brother Sims first came among us, and the idea came to us that it was possible for us to build. Brother Sims said to us: "You can build a church in six months easier than you can in six years." We feel that we are to be congratulated on our almost marvelous success and that Brother Sims came among us and led us on, and that we have the spirit of faith and sacrifice to do great things for Christ. We feel very kindly to the loyal nineteenth district, the state secretary and the board who have had glorious fellowship with us in this work. We are planning to follow the dedication with a campaign for souls. Brother Sims will lead our forces in this effort, and his excellent wife will lead the daughters of music. A reception was given to Brother and Sister Sims recently on the beautiful lawn of Dr. Griner's sanitarium.

C. R. Griner,
Elder and President of Board.

Oklahoma Christian University.

As September 15 approaches, we are realizing that the second year will open with a very large attendance. Arrangements have been completed whereby we confidently expect that board will cost only about $2 a week in the dormitory on the club plan. We can now offer young people an opportunity of attending a Christian school at the very cheapest rate. Young preachers can attend here for an entire year for about $130, including room, board and tuition.

The university last year enrolled fifty-four ministerial students. All of these will return, and many more are writing us daily of their intention to be with us in September. Our Ministerial Association was a valuable thing to the students. C. C. Taylor is president and Orville Hodge is vice-president. They are Missouri boys, and are good ones.

President E. V. Zollars is now in Ohio, visiting his parents. He recently gave seventeen addresses in Oregon. Randolph Cook, the minister here, is a very fine man. Our students find a close friend in him. Prof. O. L. Lyon is spending his vacation at Pond Creek, where he does regular work in addition to his work as teacher. Prof. Reiter is in the University of Chicago for the summer. Prof. Horne is helping conduct some teacher institutes. I was the principal lecturer at the Oklahoma camp-meeting of the United Brethren, at Crescent City, Okla. I lectured on "Revelations and the Tabernacle." Very much interest was aroused, and I hope much good was done. I am sure that a better feeling between the brethren concerned was created. This is one step toward union.

The summer Bible College has just closed. There was a good attendance. My main course was Revelations. All of us enjoyed it very much. Next year we will offer a much more extended course.

Any one wisning to know about any feature of the university will receive a prompt reply if they will communicate with me.

Enid, Okla. Rolla G. Sears.

ESTEY ORGANS AND PIANOS
—THEY EXCEL—
In every quality necessary to make A PERFECT INSTRUMENT. Call or send for catalogues and full particulars.
THE ESTEY CO.,
1116 Olive St. - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

AULT & WIBORG
COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS OF PRINTING INKS
CINCINNATI, NEW YORK,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS.
This Paper Printed with Ault & Wiborg Ink

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS
in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them
PLEASE MENTION
THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

MID-SUMMER SLAUGHTER

SALE OF BOOKS!!

30 PER CENT DISCOUNT — On any of the Books listed below, while they last, or until withdrawn.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY - - - - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

AFTER THE PRIMARY, WHAT? by Rev. A. H. McKinney, cloth.$ .75
ALL ABOUT THE BIBLE, by Sidney Collett, cloth..... 1.00
ALMOST A MAN, by Mary Wood-Allen, cloth 1.00
ALONE WITH THE WORD, by G. Stringer Rowe, cloth..... 2.25
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY BIBLE DICTIONARY (large edition), cloth 1.50
ANECDOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, paper 35c, cloth ..... .75
ANTIDOTE TO CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, THE, by James M. Gray .75
AS JESUS PASSED BY, by Gipsy Smith, paper 35c, cloth..... 1.00
ATONEMENT, by Newman Hall, cloth..... .75
AUTHORSHIP OF THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY, by John W. McGarvey, cloth 2.00
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF GIPSY SMITH, by Gipsy Smith, cloth.... 1.00
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF SAMUEL ROGERS, cloth..... 1.00
BAPTISM IN SCRIPTURE AND ART, by J. T. Christian, cloth. 1.00
BELIEF OF UNBELIEFS, THE, by W. H. Fitchett, cloth..... 1.25
BETWEEN THE TESTAMENTS, by Rev. D. Gregg, cloth..... .75
BIBLE CHARACTERS, by Rev. Alexander Whyte (6 vols.), per set 5.00
BIBLE DICTIONARY, by William Smith (enlarged edition) 1.50
BIBLE SCHOOL, THE, by A. H. McKinney, cloth..... .60
BIBLE SCHOOL PEDAGOGY, by A. H. McKinney, cloth..... .50
BIBLE AS GOOD READING, by A. J. Beveridge..... .50
BIBLE STUDY POPULARIZED, by Frank T. Lee..... 1.50
BIBLE STUDIES FOR TEACHER TRAINING, by Charles Roads, cloth 60c, pape. ..... .40
BIBLE TEACHER'S GUIDE, by James A. Worden (2 vols), set. .50
BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR, THE, by Joseph S. Excell, cloth.... 2.00
NEW TESTAMENT, set (29 vols), per set..... 30.00
OLD TESTAMENT, Set (15 vols.), per set..... 18.75
BLACKBOARD IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by H. T. Bailey, cloth.... .75
BLACKBOARD LESSON, by John Ritchie, cloth..... .50
BLACKBOARD CLASS FOR SUNDAY- SCHOOL TEACHERS, by Florence H. Darnell..... .25
BLESSED LIFE, THE, by Prof. H. J. Hofmeyer, cloth..... 1.00
BLOOM OF GIRLHOOD, THE, by Pauline Page, cloth..... .25
BLUEGRASS REGION OF KENTUCKY, THE, by James L. Allen, cloth 1.50
BRIGHT IDEAS FOR ENTERTAINING, by A. B. Linscott..... .50
CAMPAIGNING FOR CHRIST, by J. V. Coombs, cloth..... .40
CHALK: WE CAN DO IT, by Mrs. Ella N. Wood, cloth..... .75
CHARLES FORCE DEEMS, by Charles Force Deems, cloth.... 1.50
CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON, by Rev. J. J. Ellis, cloth..... 1.00
CHILD FOR CHRIST, by A. H. McKinney, cloth..... .50
CHILDREN'S PRAYER, THE, by James Wells, cloth..... .75
C. H. M'S NOTES ON THE PENTATEUCH (6 vols.), per set.. 2.50
CHINA AND AMERICA OF TO-DAY, by Rev. Arthur H. Smith, cloth 1.25
CHRIST AND PROGRESS, by David James Burrell, cloth..... 1.20
CHRIST'S SERVICE OF LOVE, by Rev. Hugh Black, cloth..... 1.25
CHRIST AND SCIENCE, by F. H. Smith, cloth..... 1.25
CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE, by Hannah W. Smith (Mrs. Pearsell Smith), cloth..... .50
CHRISTIANITY'S STORM CENTER, by Charles Stelzle, cloth.. 1.00
CHRIST'S VALEDICTORY, by R. F. Sample..... 1.25
CHRIST FROM WITHOUT AND WITHIN, THE, by Henry W. Clark, cloth 1.25
CHRISTIAN'S RELATION TO EVOLUTION, THE, by Franklin Johnson 1.00
CHRISTIAN CHURCH HISTORY, by George P. Fisher (large crown edition) 3.50
CHRISTIAN PASTOR AND THE WORKING CHURCH, by Washington Gladden 2.50
CHURCH OF CHRIST, THE, by A Layman, cloth..... 1.00
CHURCH OF THE KINGDOM, THE, by Washington Gladden, cloth ..... .50
CHURCH POLICY, by W. L. Hayden, cloth..... 1.00
CITIZENS OF TO-MORROW, by Alice M. Guernsey, cloth 50c, paper ..... .30
CITY TEMPLE SERMONS, by R. J. Campbell..... 1.00
COMMENTARY ON BIBLE, by Matthew Henry (6 vols.), $8.00, half morocco 10.00
COMMENTARY ON OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT, by Jamieson Fausett and Brown, cloth $5.00, half morocco 6.00
COMMENTARY ON ACTS, by J. W. McGarvey (2 vols. in 1), cloth 1.00
CONTINENT OF OPPORTUNITY, THE, by Francis E. Clark, cloth 1.50
CONCORDANCE, by A. Cruden, cloth $1.00, half leather..... 1.50
COURAGE OF THE COWARD, THE, by Charles F. Aked, cloth 1.25
CULTURE OF CHRISTIAN MANHOOD, THE, by W. H. Sallmon, cloth 1.50
CULTURE OF SIMPLICITY, THE, by M. I. McLeod, cloth..... 1.00
CRITICAL GREEK ENGLISH CONCORDANCE, A, by Charles F. Hudson, cloth..... 2.00
CYCLOPEDIC HANDBOOK OF THE BIBLE, THE, by Angus-Green, cloth, large ed..... 1.50
DAILY ALTAR. A PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR, by J. H. Jowett ..... .25
DAUGHTER'S DANGER, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake, cloth..... .25
DAWN AT SHANTY BAY THE, by Robert E. Knowles, cloth.... 1.00
DAYBREAK IN THE DARK CONTINENT, by W. S. Naylor, cloth .50
DEATH OF CHRIST, THE, by James Denney, cloth..... 1.50
DEITY OF JESUS CHRIST, THE, by S. W. Pratt, cloth..... .50
DEVELOPMENT OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, THE, 1780 to 1905 Official report of the eleventh International Sunday-School Convention 1.00
DIFFICULTIES AND ALLEGED ERRORS AND CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth..... .50
DISCOURSES ON PHILIPPIANS, by F. A. Noble, cloth..... 1.00
DIVINE IN MAN, THE, by F. A. Noble, cloth..... 1.00
DIVINE UNITY OF THE SCRIPTURES, THE, by A. Saphir, cloth 1.50
DOWN IN WATER STREET, by S. H. Hadley, cloth..... 1.00
EDEN AND GETHSEMANE, by Alex Stewart and others, cloth.. 1.00
EDERSHEIM'S BIBLE HISTORY, by Alfred Edersheim (7 vols), per set, boxed, cloth 3.50
EFFICIENT CHURCH, AN, by Carl Gregg Doney, cloth..... 1.25
EMPIRE OF LOVE, THE, by W. J. Dawson, cloth..... 1.00
ETERNAL IN MAN, THE, by James I. Vance, cloth..... 1.00
EVANGELISTIC NOTE, THE, by W. J. Dawson, cloth..... 1.25
EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY, by J. W. McGarvey, cloth.. 1.50
EXPOSITIONS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE, by Alexander MacLaren, net, per set..... 7.50
Second Series—Six volumes: Deuteronomy; Ruth; First Kings; St. Mark (2 vols.); Leviticus; Joshua; First Samuel; Second Kings to chapter VII. Acts (vol. 1); Numbers; Judges; Second Samuel.
Third Series: Acts (vol. 2); Gospel of St. John; Second Kings, from chapter 8; Chronicles; Ezra; Nehemiah; Esther and Job; Proverbs and Ecclesiastes.
EVOLUTION OF NEW CHINA, THE, by William N. Brewster 1.25
EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE (26 vols.), per set, cloth..... 16.00
EXTEMPORE PRAYER, by Rev. M. P. Talling, cloth..... 1.25
EZRA, NEHEMIAH and ESTHER, by A. H. Sayce, cloth..... 1.00
FACES TOWARD THE LIGHT, by S. Stall, cloth..... 1.00
FAIREST GIRLHOOD, by Margaret E. Sangster, cloth..... 1.50
FAITH AND CHARACTER, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth..... .75
FASCINATION OF THE BOOK, THE, by E. W. Work, cloth.... 1.25
FAMOUS HYMNS OF THE WORLD, by A. Sutherland, cloth.... 1.20
FAMOUS WOMEN, by M. B. Wharton, cloth..... 1.50
FIFTH GOSPEL, THE, by J. M. P. Otts, cloth..... 1.25
FIFTY MISSIONARY PROGRAMS, by B. M. Brain, cloth..... .35
FIRST PRINCIPLES, by M. M. Davis, cloth..... 1.00
FIRST PRINCIPLES AND PERFECTION, by J. S. Lamar, cloth.. .75
FIVE-MINUTE OBJECT SERMONS TO CHILDREN, THE, by S. Stall 1.00
FORWARD MOVEMENTS OF THE LAST HALF CENTURY, by A. T. Pierson 1.50
FOUR GOSPELS TRANSLATED FROM THE GREEK, by George Campbell, cloth ..... .50
FOREIGN MISSIONARY, THE, by Arthur J. Brown, cloth..... 1.50
FORTUNE OF THE REPUBLIC, THE, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth 1.20
FROM FACT TO FAITH, by J. M. Gibson..... .75
FRONT LINE OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MOVEMENT, THE, by Rev. F. N. Peloubet..... 1.00
GEORGE H. C. MACGREGOR, by D. C. Macgregor..... 1.50
GOD'S MESSAGE TO THE HUMAN SOUL, by J. Watson (Ian Maclaren), cloth 1.25
GETTING ONE'S BEARINGS, by Alexander McKenzie..... 1.25
GOSPEL FOR THE NEW AGE, AND OTHER SERMONS, THE, by Bishop H. C. G. Moule..... 1.00
GOSPEL IN ISAIAH, THE, by Charles D. Robinson..... 1.25
GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW, by F. N. Peloubet..... 1.25
GOSPEL PREACHER, THE, by Benjamin Franklin, set of 2 vols., per sent..... 2.00
GRACE BEFORE MEAT, by A. R. Wells, cloth..... .25
GRADING THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by J. W. Axtell..... .50
GROWING CHURCH, THE, by C. B. McAfee..... .50
GROWING PASTOR, by J. G. McClure ..... .50
HADLEY S. H. OF WATER STREET, by J. Wilbur Chapman, cloth 1.25
HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS, A, by John H. Kerr, cloth..... 1.50
HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS, A, FOR HISTORICAL STUDY, by Stevens and Burton, cloth..... 1.50
HEART SIDE OF GOD, by A. E. Keigwin..... 1.00
HEART OF THE GOSPEL, THE, by Rev. James M. Campbell, cloth 1.25
HEATHENISM UNDER THE SEARCHLIGHT, by W. Remfry Hunt, cloth 1.25
HEBREW PROPHECY, by E. V. Zollars 1.00
HIGHEST CRITICS VS. THE HIGHER CRITICS, THE, by L. W. Munhall..... .75
HIS FRIENDS, cloth ..... .25
HIS GREAT APOSTLE, by Barton and Strong, cloth..... .25
HIS LAST WEEK, by Barton and Strong, paper..... .07
HIS LIFE, by Barton and Strong, cloth..... .25
HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BIBLE LAND, THE, by George Adam Smith 4.50
HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, by C. A. Young, cloth..... 1.00
HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BIBLE LANDS, by J. B. Calkin, cloth 1.12
HISTORY OF SPRINKLING, by L. C. Wilson, cloth..... .50
HISTORY OF PREACHING, by Rev. J. A. Broadus, cloth..... 1.50
HOME CLASSES AND THE HOME DEPARTMENT OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Dr. M. C. Hazzard..... .55
HOLY LAND AND THE BIBLE, by Rev. C. Geikie (2 vols.), per set 5.00
HOW A MAN GROWS, by John R. T. LATHROP, cloth..... 1.25
HOW TO BRING MEN TO CHRIST, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth 75c, paper ..... .25

(Continued on Next Page.)

HOW TO CONDUCT A SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Marion Lawrance, cloth 1.25
HOW TO PLAN A LESSON, by Marion C. Brown, cloth..... .50
HOW TO PRAY, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth..... .50
HOW TO SUCCEED IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, cloth 50c, paper..... .25
HOW TO TEACH THE LITTLE FOLKS, by B. Tyler and Mrs. Partridge ..... .25
HOW TO WORK, by A. R. Wells, cloth..... .75
HOW WE GOT OUR BIBLE, by J. Patterson Smyth, cloth..... .50
HUCK'S SYNOPSIS OF THE FIRST THREE GOSPELS, by Ross L. Finney 1.00
HUMANITY AND GOD, AND OTHER SERMONS, by Samuel Chadwick 1.50
INCARNATION AND RECENT CRITICISM, THE, by R. J. Cooke 1.00
IN DEFENSE OF THE FAITH, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, cloth..... .40
INDUSTRIAL CONFLICT, THE, by Samuel G. Smith, cloth..... 1.00
INDWELLING SPIRIT, THE, by J. M. Campbell..... .75
INTEGRITY OF THE SCRIPTURES, THE, by John Smith..... 1.25
IN THE HOUR OF SILENCE, by J. E. McFadyen, cloth..... 1.00
IN THE SECRET OF HIS PRESENCE, by G. H. Knight, cloth 1.25
INVESTMENT OF INFLUENCE, THE, by Newell Dwight Hillis, cloth 1.25
IS CHRISTIANITY TRUE? cloth ..... .75
ISLAM AND CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA AND THE FAR EAST, by E. M. Wherry, cloth..... 1.25
JESSE BEN DAVID, by James M. Ludlow, cloth..... 1.00
JESUS, THE MESSIAH, by Dr. A. Edersheim, cloth..... 1.00
JESUS MY SAVIOR, by J. Thompson, cloth..... .60
JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE ANOINTED OF GOD, by P. Cook, cloth ..... .75
JOHN HALL, PASTOR AND PREACHER, by John Hall, cloth.. 1.50
KEYS OF THE KINGDOM AND OTHER SERMONS, THE, by R. J. Campbell ..... .50
KINDERGARTEN BIBLE STORIES, OLD TESTAMENT, by Laura L. Gragin, cloth..... 1.25
KINDERGARTEN OF THE CHURCH, THE, by Mary J. Chisholm Foster 1.00
KINDERGARTEN SUNDAY-SCHOOL, THE, by F. Beard, cloth .75
LEGION OF HONOR: TEACHER TRAINING LESSONS, by Prof. H. M. Hamill..... .15
LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL, THE, by Rev. W. J. Conybeare and J. S. Howson..... 1.50
LIFE AND WRITINGS OF GEORGE EDWARD FLOWER, by Isaac Errett 1.50
LIFE OF CHRIST, THE, by Frederick W. Farrar..... .85
LIFE OF CHRIST, THE, by Rev. C. Geikie, 2 vols. in one..... 1.25
LIFE OF JOSEPH PARKER, THE, by Joseph Parker..... 1.75
LIFE OF PRIVILEGE, THE, by H. W. Webb Peploe..... 1.00
LISTENING HEART, THE, by John A. Kern cloth..... 1.00
LISTENING TO GOD, THE, by Rev. Hugh Black, cloth..... 1.25
LITERARY STUDY OF THE BIBLE, THE, by Richard G. Moulton 2.00
LITTLE FOLKS BIBLE TALES, cloth 20c, boxed set of 12.... 2.40
LOOM OF PROVIDENCE, THE, by Robert MacKenzie..... 1.00
LORD'S PRAYER, THE, by Rev. A. Saphir, cloth..... 1.50
MACLAREN'S SERMONS, by Alex. Maclaren (4 vols.), cloth, per copy 1.50
MAKING OF AN AMERICAN, THE, by J. A. Riis, cloth..... .75
MAKING OF A MAN, THE, by James W. Lee 1.25
MAKING OF THE SERMON, by Rev. L. H. Pattison..... 1.50
MANHOOD'S MORNING, by J. A. Connell..... 1.00
MANUAL OF THE FOUR GOSPELS, by T. H. Stokoe, cloth.... 1.25
MARKS OF A MAN, THE, by Robert E. Speer, cloth..... 1.00
MASTER'S QUESTIONS TO HIS DISCIPLES, THE, by G. H. Knight 1.50
MATERNITY WITHOUT SUFFERING, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake .50
McGARVEY'S SERMONS, by J. W. McGarvey, cloth..... 1.00
MEANINGS AND METHODS OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE, by H. W. Clark 1.00
MEMOIRS OF A. CAMPBELL, by Robert Richardson, cloth..... 2.50
MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN LIBRARY, per copy $1.00, (18 vols.) 10.00
MISSIONARY'S MANUAL, THE, by A. R. Wells, cloth..... .35
MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Martha B. Hixson, cloth ..... .50
MODERN CRISIS IN RELIGION, THE, by George C. Lorimer.. 1.00
MODERN METHODS IN CHURCH WORK, by G. W. Mead..... 1.50
MODERN METHODS IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK, by G. W. Mead 1.50
MODERN READERS' BIBLE, by R. G. Moulton, the 1 vol. edition, cloth 2.15
MODERN READERS' BIBLE, by R. G. Moulton. leather (22 vols), each 60c, cloth, each..... .50
MODERN SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT AND HIS WORK, THE, by J. W. Pepper..... .10
MODEL SUPERINTENDENT, A, by H. Clay Trumbull, cloth.... 1.25
MOSAIC LAW IN MODERN LIFE, by C. B. McAfee, cloth.... 1.00
NATURAL WAY IN NORMAL TRAINING, THE, by Patterson Du Bois. cloth..... 1.25
NEW LIFE IN THE OLD PRAYER-MEETING, by Rev. J. F. Cowan, cloth 1.00
OBJECT SERMONS IN OUTLINE, by Rev. C. H. Syndall, cloth.. 1.50
OLD TESTAMENT EXPOSITIONS, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, cloth.. 1.00
OPEN CHURCH FOR THE UNCHURCHED, THE, by J. E. McCulloch. cloth..... 1.00
ORTHODOXY IN THE CIVIL COURTS, by J. H. Edwards.... .75
ORGANIZED SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by J. W. Axtell, cloth..... .50
OUR DAILY BREAD, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.. .15
OUR DAILY LIGHT, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY GUIDE, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY PORTION, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY FOOD, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges.... .15
OUR DAILY DUTY, by Rev. James Smith, cloth, gilt edges..... .15
OUR MOSLEM SISTERS, by Annie Van Sommer, cloth..... 1.25
OUR REDEMPTION, by J. A. Noble, cloth..... 1.00
OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK AND HOW TO DO IT, by C. R. Blackall, cloth 25c, paper..... .10
OUTLINE HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS, by Prof. M. B. Riddle ..... .25
PACIFIC ISLANDS, by D. L. Pierson, cloth..... 1.00
PARABLE OF THE KINGDOM, THE, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan 1.00
PARLOR GAMES, by E. Hollister..... .60
PASSION FOR SOULS, THE, by J. H. Jowett, cloth..... .50
PASTOR'S COMPANION, THE, by M. R. Drury, leather..... .75
PASTORAL AND PERSONAL EVANGELISM, by Charles L. Goodell, cloth 1.00
PATHS TO THE CITY OF GOD, by Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, cloth. 1.25
PATHS TO POWER, by Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, cloth..... 1.25
PEDAGOGICAL BIBLE SCHOOL, THE, by Samuel B. Haslett. cloth 1.25
PENCIL POINTS FOR PREACHER AND TEACHER, by Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce, cloth..... 1.25
PERENNIAL REVIVAL, THE, by William B. Riley, cloth..... 1.25
PHILLIPS BROOKS, by Alexander V. G. Allen (large edition).... 2.50
PHILIPPIAN GOSPEL, OR PAULINE IDEALS, THE, by Prof. W. G. Jordan 1.25
PHILOSOPHY OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE, THE, by Henry W. Clark..... 1.25
PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION, THE, by Harold Hoffding..... 3.50
PICTURES FROM PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, by C. H. Spurgeon.. 1.00
PICTURED TRUTH, by Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce, cloth..... 1.25
PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, THE, by John Bunyan, cloth..... 1.50
PILLAR OF FIRE, THE, by J. H. Ingraham ..... .90
PLEA AND THE PIONEERS IN VIRGINIA, THE, by Frederick Arthur Hodges 1.00
PRACTISE OF PRAYER, THE, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.. .75
PRACTICAL PRIMARY PLANS, by Israel P. Black, cloth..... 1.00
PREACHER PROBLEMS, by William T. Moore, cloth..... 1.50
PREACHING N THE NEW AGE, by A. J. Lyman..... .75
PRICE OF AFRICA, by S. E. Taylor..... .50
PRINCE OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID, THE, by Rev. J. H. Ingraham ..... .90
PRINCETON SERMONS, by Joseph Parker..... 1.50
PRIMER ON TEACHING, by John Adams, paper..... .25
PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES, by F. N. Peloubet and Professor Amos R. Wells 1.25
PLEASANT EVENINGS ..... .50
POSITIVE PREACHING AND MODERN MIND, by P. T. Forsythe 1.75
POWER FOR WITNESSING, by A. F. Ballenger..... 1.00
PRACTICAL HANDBOOK ON SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK, by Rev. L. E. Peters, cloth..... .65
PRIMARY GRADUATING EXERCISE, by I. P. Black..... .10
PRIMARY TEACHERS' FRIEND, by Mrs. O. Atwood..... .20
PROBLEM OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, by James Orr..... 1.65
PROPHETIC IDEAS AND IDEALS, by Prof. W. G. Jordan, cloth 1.25
QUEENLY MOTHER, THE, by Margaret E. Sangster, cloth..... 1.50
QUESTIONS OF MODERN INQUIRY, by H. A. Stimson..... 1.25
QUIET TALKS ON JESUS, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON PERSONAL PROBLEMS, by S. D. Gordon, cloth ..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON POWER, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON PRAYER, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
QUIET TALKS ON SERVICE, by S. D. Gordon, cloth..... .75
RAND-McNALLY BIBLE ATLAS: HISTORICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE, ILLUSTRATED, THE, by Jesse L. Hurlburt 1.75
RELICS OF PRIMEVAL LIFE, by J. W. Dawson, cloth..... 1.50
REPRESENTATIVE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE, THE, by George Matheson 1.50
REVIVAL ADDRESSES, by R. A. Torrey, cloth..... 1.00
REVIVAL AND PASTOR, by J. O. Peck..... 1.00
ROBERT CLARK OF THE PANJAB, by Henry Martyn Clark, cloth 1.75
ROBERT GORDON, A STORY OF THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION, by J. E. Beadles, cloth..... 1.25
SALOON KEEPER'S LEDGER, THE, by L. A. Banks, cloth.... .75
SCENES AND SAYINGS IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST, by James H. Snowden 1.50
SCOT OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, THE, by John Watson, cloth 2.00
SECOND COMING OF CHRIST, THE, by L. G. Broughton, cloth ..... .50
SECRET PLACE: THOUGHTS ON PRAYER, THE, by R. A. Montgomery ..... .50
SELECTED STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST, by Laura H. Wild 1.00
SELFHOOD AND SERVICE, by David Beaton, cloth..... 1.00
SEVEN SORTS OF SUCCESSFUL SERVICES, by Rev. J. L. Hill, cloth 1.50
SERMON BRIEFS, by H. W. Beecher, cloth..... 1.00
SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISM, by Rev. D. M. Canright, cloth.... 1.00
SHEPHERD PSALM, THE, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, cloth..... 1.25
SHORT INTRODUCTION TO THE LITERATURE OF THE BIBLE, by R. G. Moulton..... 1.00
SIDE LIGHTS ON IMMORTALITY, by Levi Gilbert..... 1.00
SIGNS OF GOD IN THE WORLD, by John P. D. John..... 1.00
SILVER LINING, THE, by J. H. Jowett, cloth..... 1.00
SIMPLE THINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE, THE, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan..... .50
SINGULAR ACTIONS OF CONSISTENT CHRISTIANS, THE, SOCIAL EVENINGS, by Amos R. Wells, cloth..... .35
SOCIAL PERIL, by S. Stall..... 1.00
SPIRITUAL LIFE OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by Rev. J. W. Chapman ..... .35
SPURGEON'S PRAYERS, by C. H. Spurgeon, cloth..... .75
SPURGEON'S SERMON NOTES (4 vols.), per set..... 2.25
by William Secker 1.00
STUDENTS, AND THE MODERN MISSIONARY CRUSADE.. 1.50
STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL OF JOHN, by George P. Eckman.... 1.00
STUDY OF THE PARABLE, THE, by A. R. Habershon..... 1.50
STUDY OF CHILD NATURE, by Elizabeth Harrison..... 1.00
SUNDAY-SCHOOL MOVEMENT IN AMERICA, by M. C. Brown, cloth 1.25
SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUCCESS, by Amos R. Wells, cloth, gilt top 1.25
SUNDAY-SCHOOL PROBLEMS, by Prof. Amos R. Wells, cloth.. 1.00
SUNRISE IN THE SUNRISE KINGDOM, by John De Forest, cloth .50
SUPERINTENDENT'S HANDBOOK, by J. W. Axtell, leather.... .35
SUPERINTENDENT'S HELPER, by Rev. J. L. Hurlbut..... .25
SUPERINTENDENT'S BOOK OF PRAYER, by E. W. Pell, cloth .50
SUPREME CONQUEST, THE, by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, cloth.. 1.00
SUNDAY-SCHOOL ORGANIZATIONS AND METHODS, by Rev. C. Roads ..... .35
TAKING MEN ALIVE, by C. G. Trumbull, cloth ..... .60
TARBELL'S GEOGRAPHICAL MANUAL: PALESTINE IN THE TIME OF CHRIST, by Martha Tarbell..... .25
TEACHER, CHILD, BOOK, by A. F. Schauffler, cloth..... 1.00
TEACHER'S HANDBOOK, by J. W. Axtell..... .35
TEACHER'S MEETINGS: THEIR NECESSITY AND METHODS, by H. C. Trumbull ..... .50
TEACHING PROBLEM, by J. W. Axtell..... .50
TEACHING AND TEACHERS, by H. C. Trumbull..... 1.25
TEACHINGS OF THE BOOK, THE, by Willett and Campbell.... 1.25
TEACHER'S COMMENTARY, THE, by F. N. Peloubet..... 1.25
TEACHINGS OF JESUS, THE, by Dr. George B. Stevens..... .80
TEACHINGS OF JESUS CONCERNING WEALTH, THE, by Gerald D. Heuver..... 1.00
TEACHINGS OF NATURE, THE, by Charles H. Spurgeon..... 1.00
TEACHER AND TEACHING WITH THE MASTER, by Rev. C. S. Beardslee ..... .50
TEMPTATION OF JESUS AND INTERPRETATION, THE, by A. M. Stewart..... 1.25
TESTIMONY OF CHRIST TO CHRISTIANITY, THE, by Peter Bayne ..... .75

(Continued on Next Page.)

THAT ALL MAY BE ONE, by A. R. Wells, cloth	.75
THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE, by A. Whyte	.40
THEOLOGY OF CHRIST'S TEACHING, THE, by John E. King	2.50
THREE YEARS WITH THE CHILDREN, by Amos R. Wells, cloth	1.25
THINGS THAT ARE SUPREME, by James G. K. McClure, cloth	.75
THRONE OF DAVID, THE, by J. H. Ingraham	.90
THROUGH THE BIBLE WITH A GUIDE, by David L. Holbrook	1.00
TIMOTHY'S STAND-BY: THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL MAN, by Joseph Clark	.25
TORREY AND ALEXANDER, by R. A. Torrey, cloth	1.00
TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST, by Frank W. Gunsaulus, cloth	1.00
TRIED BY FIRE; THE WAY INTO THE HOLIEST; CHRIST IN ISAIAH; OLD TESTAMENT HEROES, by B. Meyer, cloth, each SAMUEL, THE PROPHET; ZECHARIAH, THE PROPHET OF HOPE; DAVID, SHEPHERD, PSALMIST KING; JEREMIAH, PRIEST AND PROPHET; JOSHUA AND THE LAND OF PROMISE; MOSES, THE SERVANT OF GOD; ABRAHAM, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH; ELIJAH AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER; ISRAEL, A PRINCE WITH GOD; JOSEPH, BELOVED, HATED, EXALTED.	1.00
TWENTIETH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT, THE, complete, cloth	1.00
TYPICAL MISSION IN CHINA, A, by W. E. Soothill, cloth	1.50
TYPICAL NEW TESTAMENT CONVERSIONS, by F. A. Noble	1.00
UNIVERSAL ELEMENTS OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, by Charles Cuthbert Hall	1.25
UNIVERSALITY OF JESUS, by G. A. Johnston, cloth	.75
UNREALIZED LOGIC OF RELIGION, THE, by W. H. Fitchett	1.25
UPDIKE'S SERMONS, by J. V. Updike, cloth	1.00
UPLIFT OF CHINA, THE, by A. H. Smith, cloth	.50
VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST, by James Orr	1.50
VISION OF CHRIST, THE, by William Miller	.50
WAIFS OF THE SLUMS AND THEIR WAY OUT, by Leonard Benedict, cloth	1.00
WAYFARERS OF THE BIBLE, by David James Burrell, cloth	1.00
WAYS OF WORKING, by A. F. Schauffler, cloth	1.00
WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? vols. 1 and 2, per set	1.50
WHAT A YOUNG BOY OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall, cloth	1.00
WHAT A YOUNG GIRL OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mary Allen	1.00
WHAT A YOUNG HUSBAND OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall, cloth	1.00
WHAT A YOUNG MAN OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall	1.00
WHAT A MAN OF FORTY-FIVE OUGHT TO KNOW, by S. Stall	1.00
WHAT A YOUNG WIFE OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake	1.00
WHAT A YOUNG WOMAN OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mary Allen	1.00
WHAT A WOMAN OF FORTY-FIVE OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mrs. E. F. A. Drake	1.00
WHERE THE BOOK SPEAKS; OR MISSION STUDIES IN THE BIBLE, by A. McLean, cloth	1.00
WHITE CHURCH, by A. C. Pierson, cloth	.75
WHY IS CHRISTIANITY TRUE? by E. Y. Mullins	1.50
WILL THE WORLD OUTGROW CHRISTIANITY? by Robert P. Kerr	1.00
WINSOME WOMANHOOD, by Margaret E. Sangster	1.25
WIT AND HUMOR SERIES, cloth, pocket edition, each American Wit and Humor; Wit and Humor of American Statesmen; English Wit and Humor; Irish Wit and Humor; Scotch Wit and Humor; French Wit and Humor; German Wit and Humor; Wit and Humor of the American Pulpit.	.50
WOMEN OF THE BIBLE, by Mrs. S. T. Martyn	.75
YALE LECTURES ON THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL, by H. C. Trumbull	2.00
YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE, by Robert Young, cloth, large ed.	5.00
YOUNG'S BIBLE TRANSLATION, by Robert Young, cloth, large edition	4.00
YOUNG MEN WHO OVERCAME, by Robert E. Speer, cloth	1.00

AN EDITORIAL CAUSERIE

Do you want books "worth while" at reasonable prices?

It is only because they are not cognizant of this opportunity or familiar with the character of books offered that many readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have not yet availed themselves of the discount sale of some of the list of the Christian Publishing Company.

This is not merely a preacher's library. There are books—great books—that ought to be in all preachers' libraries, and of course on the young preachers' shelves. But here are books for the father and mother—and for every child. Take the series by Dr. Stall and Dr. Mary Allen. No books of more practical value have ever been published. They discuss, from the Christian and scientific standpoint, questions that the average person simply passes by. Hundreds of young boys would be saved years of misery if they could read "What a Young Boy Ought to Know" under the careful direction of a loving parent. The other volumes of the series are mentioned in the list.

But the books are for the most part for those interested in Christian activity, though the sweep is much broader than the ministry or the pulpit. For instance, you believe in and pray for Christian union. In these days you and your brotherhood are not alone in having that belief and making that prayer. Read, for example, "That All May be One" by Amos R. Wells, managing editor of the "Christian Endeavor World," or "That They All May be One" by the great Scotch preacher, Dr. Alexander Whyte. These may not voice your own thoughts, but they show you the drift of things and buttress up your faith that the Master's prayer shall be answered.

Are you one of those miserable people who know three hymns by heart and can sing a dozen more with the book? Is your interest in church music slight? You ought by all means to buy and study Mr. Sutherland's "Famous Hymns of the World," a book resulting from a series of articles in a popular magazine. This is no exhaustive work on hymnology, but it will put new life into your singing. Mr. Sutherland demonstrates, by an abundance of illustrative material gathered from both historical and contemporary sources, that these great songs of the soul do uplift and comfort all manner of men in hours of trial and in the presence of duties that demand a higher inspiration than material things afford. The reading of such a book will give you a new vision of the meaning of the songs of Zion.

Are you interested in the liquor question? Dr. Banks' "The Saloon Keeper's Ledger" is a telling argument about the little good this individual does and the great harm.

How? How to do things? Christianity in action! This is what we are becoming more and more concerned about. "How to Bring Men to Christ." Dr. Torrey, the widely-known evangelist, has some thoughts on this subject from his experience. "How to Conduct a Sunday-school." There are thousands of superintendents and teachers interested in that theme and Marion Lawrance is the expert director of methods and ways. "How to Work"—with some plan, some forethought, some aim. You will find Amos R. Wells is always practical in advice and exceedingly helpful.

But there are other books on doing. "Modern Methods in Church Work" and "Modern Methods in Sunday-school Work" are, to use a hackneyed phrase, "exceedingly suggestive." Then you will get great help from Dr. Schauffler, another expert, whose "Ways of Working" and "Teacher, Child, Book" are both valuable.

For the student and Biblical investigator there is a wealth of material. Smith's "Bible Dictionary" is, of course, a standard work, and there ought to be no reduction on it. There are sets of "The Biblical Illustrator" that has proved a rich mine to hundreds of preachers. Matthew Henry's "Commentary," while old, is sufficiently meritorious to have become a standard. You will not accept everything he presents, but you will find him very helpful. In the line of exposition, too, is that magnum opus, "The Expositor's Bible," which can now be had in a cheaper edition. Every preacher, too, will receive great help from the "Modern Reader's Bible" by that distinguished scholar whom we stole from England. Another book by Dr. Moulton ought to be mentioned at the same time as of great practical value—"The Literary Study of the Bible."

Concordances, harmonies, cyclopædias and histories are necessary accessories to books on exposition, or criticism, an "old Jerusalem Gospel" sermon or a finished effort to present the Master to men of to-day in the highest literary form. You can pick and choose from Cruden to George Adam Smith, Dr. Calkin or George P. Fisher, with one of the latest of publications.

And look at the sermons. The man whose style is bald and lacking in graces of embellishment, should read Gunsaulus. "Paths to the City of God" is a companion volume to "Paths to Power," while another of his books is "The Transfiguration of Christ." Dr. Gunsaulus has not "rushed into print." For many years he has been the best known preacher in the city of Chicago, and has attained a national reputation as a man of great platform power. But only within the last few years has he published volumes of his addresses. Prof. Wilkinson, in his recent book, "Modern Masters of Pulpit Discourse," has included Dr. Gunsaulus in the list with such men as Beecher, Brooks and Spurgeon. We believe that the reader of any of the books we have mentioned will concede that Prof. Wilkinson does nothing but justice to the Chicago preacher.

And talking of preaching, we would introduce another master of the art who has just landed on American soil from the Old Country. Dr. W. L. Watkinson has come over to attend the Northfield conference. He is not a college-educated man, though you would not know it by the reason of any lack of finish in his sermons. He entered the ministry almost untrained, and, in spite of the forbidding environments of a parish of iron furnaces and mines, he learned to devote himself to books and study as well as men and nature. He is one of the most epigrammatic of speakers,, and any book by him is well worth having on your shelf. "The Supreme Conquest" is one of his best.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Bentonville, Aug. 2.—There have been five additions, all adults, at our regular services not reported. I preached also Lord's day evening at union evening service.—J. W. Ellis.

Illinois.

Flora, July 26.—Baptized two men yesterday—one a prominent business man. I close my second year here next Lord's day, moving to St. Elmo to enter evangelistic work.—C. M. Smithson.

Findlay, July 27.—We had five baptisms yesterday, making 103 in the last seven months.—John A. Bare, minister.

Versailles, July 27.—We had two additions last evening—one by letter from the Baptists. This makes six added since I came. The church is taking on new life, and in the fall we hope to have a meeting with home forces.—B. S. M. Edwards.

Kansas.

Sharon, July 27.—Three added yesterday by letter—C. H. Brown, a minister, with his wife and daughter. Brother Brown has recently moved on his farm near this place and preaches at other points. Our revival begins August 1, lead by E. A. Newby, of Alva, Okla. M. B. Engle will hold a revival meeting at Hazelton in August.—S. E. Hendrickson.

Sedan, July 28.—Three young ladies made the confession and were baptized last Lord's day, and a young man was added by statement. Three others, not yet reported, have recently been received—two by baptism and one by letter.—L. S. Harrington.

Latham, July 29.—Our meeting is nine days old and there have been 21 additions.—Edward Clutter, evangelist.

Fredonia, July 28.—There have been eight added since last report. Three of the number were confessions.—J. H. Johnstone.

Kentucky.

Princeton, July 20.—Our two-weeks' meeting closed last night, resulted in 80 accessions to the church—39 by confession and baptism, 7 from other organizations, and 14 by letter, statements, etc. This was the largest ingathering Princeton has ever had. The preparatory campaign conducted for several weeks under the direction of the evangelist proved very helpful, and as a direct result 14 came at first service. Our evangelist was R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro. He is too well known to need any word of commendation. We had him in a previous meeting and considered ourselves extremely fortunate to secure him again. Our Bible school was greatly helped by his lectures. He gave eight of these to teachers and officers. Our singing evangelist was J. E. Sturgis, of Butler, Ind., a thoroughly consecrated Christian gentleman, who won his way into our hearts and moved people by his gospel songs. He organized a Sunbeam choir, which added much to the success of the meeting. —Charles W. Barnes, minister.

Ghent, July 29.—The church here will long remember July 27, when 27 people were received into the fellowship, this being a result of a two-weeks' meeting conducted by Evangelists W. H. Pinkerton and J. Herman Dodd. There were 21 confessions and baptisms and 6 by statement. Brother Pinkerton is an exception to the rule, "A prophet has no honor in his own land," for he was born and reared here, served as pastor of the church for three years in the beginning of his ministry, and has held two meetings for us in the last four years. He is held in highest esteem because he is a man of exceptional strength. Brother Dodd is not only a sweet singer, but a preacher of ability as well.—J. B. Yager, pastor.

Princeton, July 27.—Two men, both heads of families, made the confession at last night's service.—Charles W. Barnes.

Massachusetts.

Brockton, July 22.—We have had eight good confessions and one by statement since June 23. L. F. Sanford, our pastor, has been preaching in such a way as to have good results. We are praying and working for more additions.—J. T. Gardner.

Missouri.

Salisbury, July 27.—There was one confession at the regular service yesterday and the work prospers.—G. H. Bassett.

White Oak, July 26.—There were two added by confession and baptism, and one from the Baptists united with us.—Challie E. Graham.

Queen City, July 31.—We closed at Wyocena with 14 confessions and organized an adult Bible class. The whole community is wonderfully interested in the study of the word. We did not organize a church but may in the future. Everything at Queen City is being done that can be by the young and energetic pastor, Brother Kellog, and his members to have a good meeting.—Joel Brown.

Clinton, July 29.—Our meeting closed at Anderson on Sunday night. There were 27 additions in the three weeks. At the start there were 36 of our people here unorganized. We effected an organization, leaving a congregation of 63 members. We also raised $800 altogether to build a church and it is now being erected. It will be the first Christian church building in McDonald county. We raised also money for fourth-time preaching and Clark Smith, of Mt. Vernon, will give his attention to this work. The brethren feel much encouraged. My next meeting at Mt. Horn church, in Lawrence county, begins August 5.—W. S. Hood, evangelist, under the state board.

Canton, Aug. 1.—There were four additions at Ocean Wave Church, Ralls county, July 26—three by confession and one by letter.—Edwin T. Cornelius.

Ohio.

Gloucester, July 25.—We closed a short meeting at Taylor Ridge church and 14 obeyed the gospel. My terms are free-will offerings, entertainment and railroad expenses. I can be addressed at Gloucester.—Dr. Alfred Farrar.

Oklahoma.

Pond Creek, July 27.—We had a baptismal service yesterday. There have been two additions this month and four since last report. The interest is fair for the hot weather. The Ladies' Aid has recently purchased a fine piano.—O. L. Lyon, minister.

Elk City, July 30.—We had four adults united last night. T. M. Myers, who has held three other "church meetings," as he calls them, is doing the preaching.—John R. Cantrell.

Davis, July 30.—We closed a three-weeks' meeting, M. S. Dunning doing the preaching. There were 45 accessions—22 baptisms, 20 by statement, and three coming from the Free Baptists. Brother Dunning preaches in a clear, forceful and convincing way. He is the pastor's friend. Nearly all the accessions were adults, and among those baptized was a man 85 years of age. The religious sentiment of the town and community has never been so intense. The pastor and people are rejoicing.

I also held a week's meeting at Mill Creek, 21 miles from here, where the church had gone down, there having been no service for two years, and the building was rented for school purposes. I preached seven times and worked from house to house. The result was about 20 accessions, mostly by baptism, a Bible school organized, and arrangements made for half time preaching. With a little aid from our state board this would soon be a strong church. "I hope to be with them the second Lord's day in August." This makes a total of 108 additions in my work since January 1, mostly by baptisms.—A. J. Edmondson.

Oregon.

Brownsville, July 25.—We are in a meeting here where we have labored about two weeks with ten additions at the time of writing. The prospects are good for success, though we are having warm weather. Brother Olson is preaching with power. Many are, for the first time, learning the difference between the gospel and the theories of man. I am directing the music, and my sister, Mrs. Callison, is doing the solo work. We will close the first of August and begin a meeting at Puyallup.—C. C. Curtis.

Springfield, July 29.—Three added since last report—one by letter—two by relation.—E. C. Wigmore.

Pennsylvania.

Taylorstown, July 27.—We had a good day yesterday and one united with us from the Baptists. New song books were installed. The work in all departments is doing well. The audiences grow larger.—J. H. Moore, minister.

Texas.

Lampasas, July 27.—The meeting at Frost resulted in 11 being added to the congregation—three by confession and baptism—three restored and five to take membership. V. L. Graves, of Blooming Grove, gives one-fourth time to this church.—Ernest J. Bradley.

Waxahachie, July 27.—Four added yesterday, making 25 in my first two months here.—J. B. Boen.

Haskell, Aug. 1.—We closed a successful meeting of two weeks with J. T. McKissick as evangelist and C. M. Williams as song director. There were 25 accessions—11 by baptism, and the others by letter and statement.—James N. Thomas.

Van Alstyne and Plano, Aug. 1.—Already there have been over 30 added, chiefly men and by primary obedience. L. D. Sprague is singing.—Richard Martin.

El Paso, July 27.—Five united on Lord's day and two the Sunday before.—H. B. Robinson.

Terrell, July 27.—Our three-weeks' meeting, held by W. T. Hilton, of Greenville, closed with 54 additions—27 by confession and baptism. Brother Hilton did us some excellent work and is leaving the church united, hopeful and happy. Willard Ogle, of Paris, was the efficient leader of the song services.—G. Lyle Smith.

Washington.

Seattle, July 28.—There were four added to the Queen Anne church Lord's day, July 19. Three of these were by letter and one by confession and baptism. The work presses steadily forward. On July 27 there was one added by letter. Charles S. Medbury, of DesMoines, Ia., preached for the congregation in the evening. The address was a masterly one, and was thoroughly enjoyed by the large congregation. The fellowship which we have one with another is a glorious thing.—J. L. Greenwell.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

FOR SALE.—Hotel; 25 rooms furnished; 3 1-4 acres in lot. Splendid location. Paying business. Price reasonable. Owner wishes to retire. F. Grimes, Sumner, Wash.

WE HAVE an actual gold mine in operation at Rawhide, Nevada, machinery installed and taking out ore. All Christian men, we need a little more money to secure returns from the smelters; will let you in on the ground floor with us and treat you right. L. W. Klinker, Los Angeles, California.

NURSES WANTED.—By the Christian Hospital, St. Louis, Missouri. Fifteen young ladies between twenty and thirty years of age, with at least a grammar school education, and all right, morally and physically, to enter our training school for nurses. For terms address Supt. of Christian Hospital, 5881 Plymouth ave., St. Louis, Mo.

ROOMING HOUSE.—To close an estate the splendid rooming and boarding house of Mrs. Laura Miller, deceased, situated at Hiram, Ohio, is now offered for sale. It is in close proximity to the college and Christian Association buildings. It is heated with steam and lighted with electricity. It has always been a popular rooming house and could be utilized as a hotel. Price reasonable. Write O. G. Hertzog, Hiram, O.

Church Supplies, Etc.

EVERYTHING for rally day. Full line of samples, ten cents, postpaid. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelists and Ministers.

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

D. H. SHANKLIN, evangelist, Normal, Ill., uses stereopticon, charts and furnishes singer if desired.

WANTED.—A minister for half time at $600.00. Membership 200. Half time nearby town at $500.00. Particulars in first letter. Address G. P. Harding, clerk, box 73, East Prairie, Mo.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write HINNERS ORGAN COMPANY, PEKIN, ILLINOIS, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

THIRTY-SIX DOLLARS AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS plus 25 1-2 hours a week pays for all the privileges of an up-to-date school. Catalogue free. Address School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF

CHURCH GOODS

No matter what you want, write to us about it.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis

Send for our Catalogue.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

People's Forum

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Your space under the name of "People's Forum" is one of the most interesting departments of your weekly. It is especially interesting because of its fairness, and more especially because the Editor shows neither fear nor partiality, except that fear and partiality for truth and right which makes for righteousness.

When we read the paper of Earle M. Todd on "Evangelism for the Times," we naturally expected it would make a stir, yet hardly thought that he would be misquoted by the so-called exponents of fairness and truth. Brother Todd is a "progressive," so progressive that while his paper on "Evangelism for the Times" is true, it is ten years in advance of the times. But it is an eye-opener, it has shown faults that do exist; it has revealed an emotional condition that is not apostolic, and a means of acquiring numbers that is not unto salvation. But has anyone a right to term Brother Todd a critic or faultfinder? He is not, and never has been, opposed to the "professional" evangelist; on the contrary, he has had a deep-hearted sympathy for him and does deplore the environment which surrounds the evangelist, and almost compels him to resort to methods which, to say the least, are questionable, in order to record numbers. The true evangelist, pastor, and church-worker will read, mark, and inwardly digest this most excellent paper of Brother Todd's, and acquire the good qualities that are brought out, at the same time discarding the faults and errors noted if he possesses them. We are to win the world for Christ, but the world can only be won for him by reaching hearts and not emotions only. There are some who can only be won through their emotions; the error is often made by stopping when the emotions are reached.

Brother Todd is not a young man in nonage, an old man in dotage, a madman or a fool. He is one whose heart has been touched with the burning desire to carry out the great commission, one who has passed from darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel of the New Testament. a man who is deeply spiritual, and is loved by many on both sides of the Atlantic for his loving gentleness. To call him bitter, caustic, rash, or a critic, in the faultfinding conception of the word, is to declare that the one so speaking does not know him. Brother Todd believes that it is his duty as a leader of men to correct a fault as well as to commend a virtue. All honor to such men as him, B. B. Tyler and others who show us our faults that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Bluefield, W. Va. D. R. Moss.

IT IS NOT in words explicable with what divine lines and lights the exercise of godliness and charity will mould and gild the hardest and coldest countenance, neither to what darkness their departure will consign the loveliest. For there is not any virtue the exercise of which, even momentarily, will not impress a new fairness upon the features, neither on them only, but on the whole body the moral and intellectual faculties have operation, for all the movements and gestures, however slight, are different in their modes, according to the mind that governs them —and on the gentleness and decision of right feeling follows grace of actions, and, through continuance of this, grace of form.

Ohio District Conventions.

August 27, 28, Thursday and Friday, District No. 23, Liberty Chapel.

September 1, 2, Tuesday and Wednesday, District No. 7, Fairview.

September 3, 4. Thursday and Friday, District No. 5, Martinsville.

September 8, 9, Tuesday and Wednesday, District No. 8, Belle Center.

September 10, 11, Thursday and Friday, District No. 1, Croton.

September 12, 13, Saturday and Sunday, yearly meeting, McArthur.

September 15, 16, Tuesday and Wednesday, District No. 14, Athens.

September 17, 18, Thursday and Friday, District No. 24, Ironton.

September 19, 20, Saturday and Sunday, District No. 18, Orange.

September 22, 23, Tuesday and Wednesday, District No. 10, Harrison.

September 24, 25, Thursday and Friday, District No. 25, Piqua.

September 29, 30, Tuesday and Wednesday, District No. 3, Leipsic.

October 1, 2. Thursday and Friday, District No. 2, Toledo, Norwood avenue.

October 9, 15, New Orleans national convention.

October 20, 21, Tuesday and Wednesday, District No. 4, Millersburg.

October 22, 23, Thursday and Friday, District No. 9, Salem.

October 24, 25, Saturday and Sunday, District No. 16, Flushing.

October 27, 28, Tuesday and Wednesday. District No. 6, Shelby.

October 29, 30, Thursday and Friday, District No. 19, Prairie Depot.

The above schedule of district conventions has been arranged in the interest of our state work this fall. A suggestive program has been sent to all secretaries with the hope that all programs will be definitely arranged in ample time for speakers to prepare thoroughly on subjects assigned them. The announcement of this list of conventions makes possible also a thorough advertisement of the time and place of the various conventions so that the brethren generally throughout the state can plan to attend these gatherings. Let us make these fall conventions count mightily for our work in Ohio. H. Newton Miller,

Cleveland, O. Corresponding Secretary.

Church Furnishings and Supplies

THE NEW
PRAISE HYMNAL
The Latest and Greatest Church Music Book
Prices $50 and $70, per one hundred copies
Returnable copies mailed for examination
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE,
528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O., or 41-43 Bible House, N. Y.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Write for Catalog by number only.
C-131 Church Furniture | School Desks S-131
L-131 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs S-131
B-131 Bank Furniture | Office Desks O-131
E. E. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION CUPS
Our "Self-Collecting" Tray saves "ONE FOURTH" Cost of other systems. Send for an outfit to use on trial before purchasing. Address,
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 150, Lima, Ohio

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References Correspondence Solicited

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST
By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905
A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.
For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

THE
TEACHER TRAINING HANDBOOK
By MARION STEVENSON

YOU WANT IT
1. Because it is the most complete teacher-training book published.
2. Because it will teach your class how to study the Bible.
3. Because it teaches the class the Bible rather than something about the Bible.
4. Because it makes the most thorough work possible.
5. Because it has been adopted as a college text book.
6. Because it gives a true view of Old and New Testament History.
7. Because it is the only teacher-training book published which gives New Testament Institutions.
8. Because it gives a working knowledge of Bible Geography.
9. Because it is up to date on Bible School organization, and pedagogy.
10. Because it received the unanimous approval of the International Committee.

Manilla binding, 224 pages.
Single copy, 30c, prepaid. Five or more copies, not prepaid, 25c each.
Limp cloth, 40c each.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

GOD'S DIFFICULTIES IN BLESSING MEN.

Topic August 12.—Mark 6:1-6.

Was Jesus only the carpenter's son? This is the question of the ages. It was but natural that his old neighbors should question: "From whence hath this man these things? And what wisdom is this that is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?" Nor was it at all strange that they should ask: "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James and Joses and Juda and Simon? And are not his sisters here with us?" But it does seem a bit queer that they should be offended at him, while admitting the marvelous character of the works that he had performed.

There is an element of the pathetic in the language of Jesus at the attitude of his old friends and even of his kindred. "A prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, and among his own kin and in his own house." It has always been thus. We are slow to appreciate the real goodness and greatness of our intimate acquaintances. It is usually the preacher we haven't got, the fellow we read about in glowing reports in the papers, that we wish we had, while the man we have may be a real teacher sent of God. The pathetic and often the provoking thing in these last days, as in the days of the Great Teacher, is lack of appreciation of the real worth of patient, plodding preachers and workers in the neglected fields everywhere. Of course, that we are not appreciated as we think we ought to be does not prove that we are prophets, or worthy as the Master was. This matter of appreciation of others is a delicate question. It is not always easy for us to see and understand the work that is being done by those round about us. We are too close to them and the events of their lives to judge of their historical value. Historians recognize this in writing estimates of living men, or of those who have been recently active in the affairs of state. One generation stones the prophets and the next builds their monuments. Jesus knew the ways of men.

"And he could there do no mighty works, save that he laid his hands on a few sick folk and healed them." The reason he could do so little there was because of their unbelief. Twice Jesus is said to have marveled—once at the faith of the centurion, whose son he healed, and again at the unbelief of his kinsmen and neighbors at Nazareth. Why could he do no marvelous works there? For the simple reason that unbelief paralyzes alike our own efforts and the efforts of others. Unbelief is the source of indifference, which is the deadliest thing in this world to all enterprise, spiritual and otherwise. If you want to kill the church just be indifferent.

But what are we to do when unbelief and consequent indifference makes it seemingly impossible to do anything in a community? Do as Jesus did. Marvel—sometimes we can't help wondering at the attitude of folks, our own folks, too; but go right on, as the Master did. "He went round about the village teaching." By and by some will hear and heed the message. It is significant that the record of the calling and sending out of the twelve follows immediately in Mark's narrative. Perhaps it was not so in point of time, but it was in the work of the Master. And all of his chosen disciples, save Judas, who betrayed him, were from Galilee. Against all the unbelief of the people, Jesus went right on with his work. And the Carpenter of Nazareth has come to his own. And those who follow him will come to their own, though neglect and even persecution fall to their lot, as to the Master whom they serve. For the servant is not greater than his Lord.

Christian Endeavor

August 16, 1908.

LESSONS FROM THE SEA.—Ps. 107:23-32.

DAILY READINGS.

M. God Controls the Sea.	Ex. 14:15-21.
T. Christ Calms the Sea.	Matt. 8:23-27.
W. The Sea Praises God.	Isa. 24:13-15.
T. Seafarers in His Hand.	Acts 27:21-26.
F. The Sea, God's Instrument.	Jonah 1:12-15.
S. The Sea, God's School.	2 Cor. 11:23-27.

OTHER HELPFUL SCRIPTURES.

Job. 26:2-14; Psa. 33:7-9; Jer. 5:22; Matt. 14:25-31; Rev. 8:8-9; 10:2-8; 15:2.

There are sinners who, like Jonah, fleeing from the face of God, go down to the sea, so the cares and the pleasures of the world, away from the solid land of humility, quiet and grace. They occupy themselves in many waters in needless toils and excessive pleasures, and yet even there God does not leave them, but causes them to see his works and wonders even in the deep of their sins, by giving them timely and sufficient warnings, and alarming them with fear of the abyss.—La Blanc.

2. Mankind before they are redeemed are like a ship in a stormy sea agitated with passions, tossed up and down with cares, and so blown about with various temptations that they are never at rest. This is their calmest state in the smiling days of smooth prosperity; but afflictions will come, the afflictions of sin and Satan, and the world will raise a violent storm, which all the wit and strength of man can not escape. He will soon be swallowed up of the devouring waves, unless the same God who created the sea speak to it "Peace, be still."—Wm. Romaine.

3. We are all in the same situation the apostles of the sea were when they were alone in the evening in the midst of the sea, and the winds and the waves were contrary; against which they toiled and rowed in vain, until Christ came to them walking upon the sea, and commanded the winds to cease and the waves to be still. Upon which there was a great calm, for they knew his voice and obeyed. . . He is as almighty in the spiritual world as he is in the natural. Into whatsoever soul he enters, he commands all the jarring passions to be still, and there is indeed a blessed calm.—Wm. Romaine.

4. If the sailor can do nothing so wise, and ofttimes indeed can do nothing else than trust in the Lord, so is it with us in the storms of life. Like the mariner, we must use lawful means for our protection, but what are means without the divine blessing?—Plummer.

5. Blessed be God for the gift of his beloved Son, the only Harbor of Refuge for poor tempest tossed sinners! We may think lightly of it now, but in the coming day of gloom and wrath, when "the rain descendeth and the floods come and the winds blow," they only will escape who are sheltered there.—Gosse.

6. Christ has passed from our view into the heavenly mount of God, and we have perforce to launch out here on the stormy sea of life. But shall we not, in even the darkest and most troubled hour, remember all He has done for us? His miracles of mercy and power in the past—all His goodness? And can we forget that the shepherd of Israel, of His own people, neither slumbers nor sleeps, and that in the hour of need He will appear to our aid?—Christian Endeavor Quarterly.

UNDERFEED AS A CHURCH AID

Furnace that Yields Clean Heat and Helps Cut the Treasurer

There is Scriptural warrant for the assertion that cleanliness is one of the Christian graces. No problem greater than the heating proposition faces church boards, upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility in building new edifices or caring for churches already built. It IS a responsibility and hundreds of official boards have learned by delightful experience that the

Peck-Williamson Underfeed Furnace

Saves One-Half to Two-Thirds of Coal Bills

Church Treasurers will appreciate what these figures mean. There is nothing speculative in them. This is not a promise of doubtful fulfillment. It is a truth plainly stated and supported by experiences of thousands. CLEAN, even heat is assured by the Underfeed and as all the fire is on top, smoke and gases, wasted in top-feeds, are really consumed in the Underfeed and turned into heat. Ashes are few and are removed by shaking grate bar as in ordinary furnaces. Cheapest slack yields as much heat as highest priced anthracite. Just figure the difference in cost and

KEEP THE SUM SAVED IN THE CHURCH TREASURY

Attorney W. C. Crumpton, of the Evergreen (Ala.) Baptist Church, gives this voluntary testimony to Underfeed worth:

"As a member of the Building Committee of the First Baptist Church of this place, I had the pleasure of advocating the installment of two Underfeed furnaces made by you. A season's use of these furnaces has impressed me with the fact that no mistake was made in their selection, in fact we could not be better pleased. These furnaces are numbered No. 735 and No. 739, respectively, and we have burned in them the cheapest grade of soft coal and they have given us absolutely no trouble. For economy in the use of fuel as well as the attention necessary to keep them in order, I recommend the Underfeed furnace without the slightest hesitation, as being the best on the market."

We'd be glad to tell you of other churches whose officials are just as well pleased and to send you a lot of letters—facsimile testimonials in our Illustrated Underfeed Booklet.

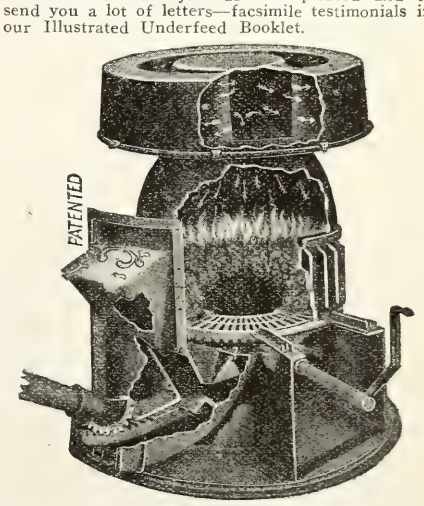

Illustration shows furnace without casing, cut away to show how coal is forced up under fire, which burns on top.

Heating plans and services of our Engineering Department are yours—ALL FREE. Write today, giving name of local dealer with whom you prefer to deal.

THE PECK-WILLIAMSON CO.

405 West Fifth St. Cincinnati, Ohio

CONGRESS OF EVANGELISTS

Bethany Park, Ind., July 28, 1908.

Indiana day of the "First Congress of Evangelism" opened at Bethany Park almost on schedule time. In the absence of Z. T. Sweeney James Small became chairman of the meeting and welcomed the congress in "the name of the old light, the old song, the old gospel, the old devotion and the old evangelism."

Said he, "Making converts for Christ, we are above criticism." "Living what we love, we don't need clergymen in our brotherhood."

The address of W. E. Harlow preceding the "Royal Hoosier Introductory Service" showed most careful thought and was well delivered and received. In his five-minute talk Brother Harlow said that a New Testament evangelism would solve most of our problems; that 90 per cent of our additions came in special efforts; that without this special effort we shall become a "disappearing brotherhood;" that the evangelistic service marks the new birth and countless other precious privileges in the lives of the multitudes and that we should faithfully contend against the opposing forces of evil with the gospel of Paul, James and John and bring this country to Christ. S. M. Martin was introduced and said that he had early found a higher calling than that of being president and that the fruits of one's ministry show whether one has been called to it or not. The brief speeches of the evangelists were interspersed with songs of the singing evangelists, and Frank Huston was the first called. He responded with "Going Home to Glory." W. H. Book said that the strong point of preaching was found in God's word; that if you want to stir up a sensation in the average community "just open the old Book and preach from it." Be aggressive, that is, rub the fur the wrong way. The Bible is up to date. We need not fear higher criticism half so much as lower living. The evangelistic work is attractive because of its zeal and fire. Each Christian should be a live wire in gospel work. Miss Una Dell Berry was next introduced and sang beautifully, "Crucified." The subject of J. V. Coombs' address was "The Superiority of New Testament Evangelism." He claimed that just as the New Testament is superior to any creed, as God is to man, as the Great Teacher is to every other teacher, just so is New Testament evangelism superior to every other kind. The trouble with scholarship is that it will not sit at Jesus' feet. Christianity is the finality in religion. The New Testament gives a complete system of morality and salvation. The speaker offered $1.000 for a single new thought not found in the New Testament and said that when "new thought" did not come from the Old Book we had something better. S. D. Colyer, of South Carolina, was presented and he asserted that he was glad to be "In the Old Summer-time, under the old Apostolic Tree." He thought that we were just beginning to exercise ourselves in the evangelistic work and that there is no power but the "gospel power," that neither science nor spiritualism can save sinners. At this point George Hime, of Australia, sang "Shining as the Stars." J. L. Brandt approved of the congress in its scope, genius and design and said that no meeting of this year portends greater good. Our brotherhood has set the example in preaching Christian union and the proclamation of a universal gospel and why not lead also in a congress of evangelism? The speaker thought that the greatest thing of our brotherhood was a conviction on the question of soul-saving. He seemed to have little patience with the "Higher Critics who viewed the field from some lookout mountain."

Mr. Welcome, of Youngstown, O., sang "Oh. Make Me Clean, Without, Within," after which D. R. Dungan gave an interesting and well received talk in which he said that we could not use the methods of any other religious body because the message determines the best method and we had a distinct message. Our success lies in the message we bring. L. E. Sellers, who has recently entered the evangelistic field, felt that the evangelists were liable to overlook the pastor, whose painstaking work and sacrifice were as much responsible for the evangelistic success as anything else, that it is the local pastor who enters into the sorrows, burdens and trials of the people and that the secret of the evangelist's success lies in the work of the pastor. W. S. Buchanan said that the evangelistic spirit was as essential to the life of the church as the steam is to the engine. Said he: "Jesus uses two great words, 'Come' and 'Go.' We are not told to convert the world, but to preach the gospel and let the gospel convert the world. We ought to stir the people to think of the coming of Christ again. Our watchword should not be 'Back to Christ,' but 'On to Jerusalem.'" John T. Brown asked the question, "Why evangelists and the evangelistic meeting?" To get a pointed answer he asked those who had confessed Christ in such a meeting to stand. About forty stood.

Brother Romig, of Canada, thought that the evangelistic congress was the greatest step of our brotherhood this year. Had he a thousand lives to live he would live each one as an evangelist. We all should be evangelistic and preach Christ and him crucified. The weakness of Millennial Dawnism and such movements is that they do not save souls. A telegram of sympathy was sent to Marshall T. Reeves, after which a very capable singer from Illinois sang, "I'm redeemed, but not with silver; bought, but not with gold," and the morning session adjourned.

Tuesday Afternoon, July 28.

At the beginning of the morning session there were not more than 250 present, but there were almost 500 present during the afternoon session, which was opened with a song service led by J. Ross Miller, and a brief prayer by W. H. Book. F. M. Rains, in a masterly way, presented a symposium upon "Evangelists and Missionary Work." His first speaker was W. R. Warren, who said that we had enjoyed a century of evangelism, that Campbell, Stone and Scott were evangelists and that they were progenitors of a race of evangelists, that they and their followers made each one whom they baptized feel that he was ordained to the work of an evangelist. Each centennial aim is evangelistic. We have our personal, our Bible school, our journalistic, our collegiate evangelism. Our work, however, is not merely the work of the engineer corps, nor that of the temporary garrison on the frontier, but we have the fortresses of sin to take by storm and by siege.

Roy L. Brown emphasized the point that the evangelist had great responsibility in his teaching and the example set. C. S. Brooks, in speaking of "Men and Missions," said that while the cry used to be when the men of the community gathered to raise the barns, "He, Oh, He," nowadays, when it comes to raising the church work, the cry is, "She, Oh, She." He would not disparage woman's work, but thought that men should undertake much greater things than had been attempted. God has always used men, as lawgivers, prophets, apostles and preachers. God's work can not be left to the women alone. Mrs. M. E. Harlan gave a talk on the relation of the C. W. B. M. to evangelism and sustained her theme that all the organizations' work is evangelistic. In supporting this statement she took up in some detail the work in various fields. L. C. Howe claimed that the greatest enterprise ever undertaken by man is the salvation of his fellowmen. This should include our whole country and no field is greater than the Inland Empire of 1,200 by 600 miles. He was glad that this great work had been entrusted to the buoyant Christian Endeavor Heart.

J. C. Burkhardt spoke of "The Spirit of Evangelism" as the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth as he went through Palestine seeking men who needed aid, who gathered the people from the hedges and highways that they might sit at the supper. The sermon, the preacher and the church are justified for their existence in proportion to the spirit of evangelism. A. L. Orcutt, in discussing, "What We Owe to the Old Evangelism," said that our marvelous growth was due to our evangelistic type of work. Our evangelism has always suited the times and has had abiding results. The old evangelists were missionary evangelists, serious men with a serious message. The speaker regretted that there was so much levity in the modern evangelistic meeting. He said that the old evangelists were found more often in the closet praying for souls than at the telegraph office reporting numbers.

The remainder of the afternoon was taken by an address by S. M. Martin, in which he told many interesting stories and anecdotes and gave some good readings.

V. W. B.

[Other sessions of the congress will be reported.—Ed.]

The Home Department

When We are Rich, We'll Lovers Be.

BY FRANK HONEYWELL.

A young man wedded once a wife
Who'd never known a care;
He loved her as he loved his life,
For she was sweet and fair.
He nobly then resolved that she
A mansion soon should own—
"We'll work until we're rich," said he;
"Then live for love alone.

"When we are rich, we'll lovers be,
Sweetheart, as ne'er before,
From care our lives will then be free
And happy evermore;
And in our joy we'll never part
From love's unending dream:
Let's labor hard a while, sweetheart,
Though hard the labor seem."

They labored hard, well pleased to see
A modest fortune grow.
"Let's cease our labors now," said she;
As we resolved, you know."
But he had caught the fever now
To be a millionaire,
Nor saw the care lines on her brow,
Nor knew what put them there.

"When we are rich, we'll stop," said he;
"Sweetheart, but not before.
We're hardly rich as yet, you see:
We need some thousands more.
We'll work on just a few more years—
Cheer up, don't look so blue:
A million soon will dry your tears
And make a queen of you."

His fortune grew a million. Still
This man was not content;
And sorrow filled her life until
Her form with care was bent.
A few more years—he stood beside
The spot where she was laid,
And from his mem'ry could not hide
This promise often made:

"'When we are rich, we'll lovers be,
Sweetheart, as ne'er before.'
Oh, how in mem'ry comes to me
Her angel face of yore!
Now in my wealth I only see
The precious price it cost:
'When we are rich, we'll lovers be'—
Unless our love is lost."

A Real Surprise Party.

"Where are you goin', ma?" asked the youngest of the five children.

"I'm going to a surprise party, my dear," answered the mother.

"Are we all goin', too?"

"No, dear. You weren't invited."

After a few moments' deep thought:

"Say, ma, then don't you think they'd be lots more surprised if you did take us all?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Grumbling at the Weather.

The temptation to find fault with the weather assails us when it is too hot or too cold, too wet or too dry, too dusty or too damp to suit our convenience. A prolonged spell of rain is sure to be annoying to somebody with whose purposes it interferes, while a season of drought when the soil is parched, the grass brown and the leaves withered on the trees, is equally disheartening to somebody else. Surely about the weather, if about anything in the universe, we may trust the One who rolls the stars along, and who gives us at his pleasure the sunshine and the rain. To grumble at the weather does us no good, sets a bad example to those who hear us, and never changes the course of the winds or the movement of the tide so much as a fraction in their ordered way. "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world." Since the weather will not adapt itself to us, why should we not conform ourselves to it, without foolish fretting? Most of us have ascertained that a good way to be comfortable in summer is to go on with our business without concerning our minds with the temperature. Time may be wasted in trying to keep cool when we would really be cooler were we pressing on with our pursuits without making a fuss. To dress lightly, drink sparingly of iced beverages, walk in the shade and refrain from undue emotion, is the part of wisdom during the heated term. All this may be attended to without once grumbling about the weather, which day in and day out is a gift to us from the good hand of God.—Margaret E. Sangster.

Non-Church-Going Nations.

Wilber F. Crafts says that the Sundayless and Sunday-breaking nations are poor. Poor physically—Italy once and France twice in ten years, have cut down their standards for soldiers because they are not strong physically. Poor mentally—they have the greatest illiteracy. Poor morally—they have the most vice. Poor financially—their workmen, despite more hours per day and one more day in the week, get the lowest wages; and they are also the worst off politically, vibrating between the extremes of despotism and anarchy. Joseph Cook said, "It does not seem to me accidental that Switzerland, Germany, Scotland, England, and the United States, the countries of Protestant churches and where the people are church-going, constitute almost the entire map of self-government."

She Also Had a Pet.

When the thin woman in the long gray ulster sat down in the subway car opposite the fat woman holding a bright little Scotch terrier, it could be seen at once that they had points of common interest and that those points of common interest consisted of dogs.

"What a dear little fellow he is," chirped the thin woman.

"Isn't he dear?" cooed the fat woman, smuggling her pet so closely that he had to sniff for breath.

"Mine is a French poodle," ventured the thin woman. "I hear those gray terriers are coming into style, though."

"Yes, they're all the rage," said the fat woman. "I had to give up fifty for Sandy."

A handsome young woman who occupied the seat by the thin woman was an interested listener to the colloquy. She was good-looking enough to attract attention anywhere, and she looked as if she loved everything in the world, including dogs. She leaned over and gave Sandy's head an affectionate pat, and Sandy tried to lick her gloved hand.

"You love dogs, too?" said the fat woman.

"Oh, yes," was the reply, "who could help it?"

"What kind is your pet dog?" came the eager query.

"Mine? Oh, I haven't any dog. My pet is a baby."

And the fat woman and the thin woman raised their brows, turned up their noses, and grew coldly silent, just as if someone had said something to shock their sense of modesty.—New York Press.

An American who was traveling in Europe when he visited the Vatican, the residence of the Pope, asked to see the cattle-pens. The attendant was very much surprised, and said: "Cattle-pens? Why, we have nothing of the sort, signor." The response was, "Where in the world do you keep the papal bulls?"—Outlook.

How to be Healthy.

DAILY READINGS.

M.—Our bodies are sacred. Lev. 19:27, 28.
T.—They should be kept pure. 1 Cor. 6.12, 13.
W.—Temples of the Holy Spirit. 1 Cor. 3:16, 17.
T.—Cheerfulness and health. Prov. 17:20-22.
F.—A triumphant life. 1 John 5:4, 5.
S.—A good conscience. 1 John 3:20-22.
S.—The body a temple. 1 Cor. 6:19,20.

The sin of squadering health by wrong living is often visited, by the law of heredity, from the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation. To take care of our health is not only a duty to ourselves, but a duty to those who are about us and to those who are coming after us. Men often sacrifice health for the sake of appetite, pleasure, and money, and then sacrifice these things with the hope of regaining their health again.

The following hints will be of practical value to all who may observe them.

I. WHAT TO AVOID.

1. Intemperate eating, or drinking, or sleeping, or working.
2. Intoxicating drinks of all kinds.
3. The use of tobacco or opium. The active principle of tobacco is nicotine, which is an energetic poison, and exerts a pernicious effect on the nervous system, tending to stimulate it to an unnatural degree of activity.
4. The patent-cure-all-medicines of any and all kinds. As a rule, they do more injury than good.
5. Eating incompatible or indigestable foods.
6. Eating irregularly, or on untimely occasions.
7. Working to exhaustion, either with the hands or the brain.
8. Unnecessary exposures to bad weather.
9. Shutting out the sunshine and pure air.
10. The blues, as you would the smallpox.

"When you are feeling grouchy, let the sunshine in;
When your face gets feelin' hard, crack it with a grin.
Don't be 'fraid of wrinkles, tear loose with your mirth;
An old face laughter-wrinkled is the sweetest thing on earth."

11. Going into a sick room without carrying with you a few rays of sunshine.

II. SOME THINGS CONDUCIVE TO GOOD HEALTH.

1. A good conscience.
2. A clean body.
3. An honest business.
4. Regular and temperate habits.
5. A cheerful disposition.
6. Genial associations.
7. Freedom from debt.
8. Abundance of the grace of God.
9. Harmony with the will of God.
10. When sick or wounded, consult a good physician.
11. Prayer for the more abundant life. (John 10:10.)

Guibollard looks at his watch with concern. "I don't understand it," he says to his wife, "what has happened to my watch? I think it must want cleaning." "No, papa," chimed in little Fanny, "I am quite sure it is clean, because baby and I have washed it in the basin."

Quenches Thirst

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

It makes a refreshing, cooling beverage, and wholesome tonic—superior to lemonade.

THE BIG BROTHERS OF NEW YORK

BY JOHN T. FARIS

"If you believe that a boy in the open is better than a boy in jail, you are in sympathy with the Big Brothers. If you believe that a boy unaided can not always overcome the tendency of unfortunate environment, or be happy and good without any of the things which make for happiness and goodness, you concur in the Big Brother Platform. If you are willing to do something yourself to help a boy you may at once become a Big Brother, and we can supply the very boy who needs you to brother him a little, to give him some fun, to show him how to be manly, to take some of life's handicap off his underfed body and undeveloped mind."—The Invitation to Big Brothers.

A busy New York lawyer who spends his mornings at the Children's Court, where he is deputy clerk, and his afternoons far up in the St. Paul Building, was called to his office telephone. Now, if this had turned out to be a business message, it would probably have been disposed of very promptly. But when the lawyer learned that it was the executive secretary of the Big Brothers' movement, he forgot business, and talked as though he had hours instead of minutes at his disposal. The half of the conversation heard by a visitor in the office was something like this:

"Yes, I have several commissions for you. Henry A—— wants a little brother as soon as you can get him; he asks us to be sure he is a difficult youngster to deal with.

"Got that? Well, Arthur S—— says the Brother he has had for some time is so far out of the woods that he isn't kept busy looking after him. So he wants you to select another Brother for him. He doesn't want any easy case, either; we must give him the most difficult problem we can find. That's all to-day. Good-by!"

The Beginning.

Back of these messages is a story. Three years ago last October, Ernest K. Coulter—whose words at the telephone have just been told—was invited to address the men's club of the Central Presbyterian Church, New York City, of which Wilton Merle Smith, D. D., is pastor. He told of the work of the Children's Court, with which he has been connected from its beginning in 1902, gave a vivid picture of living conditions in the congested districts from which come most of the boys who appear in the court, and made known his conviction that these boys were victims not so much of heredity as of environment.

As he spoke, he thought it was a pity that such a fine body of men should be content to meet simply to listen to talks on social problems. What a power they might become if they would do as well as listen! What a blessing they might be to scores of boys of whom he knew, if only they understood the need as he understood it!

All at once one of the men interrupted him with a question: "Is there anything we can do?"

The quick-witted lawyer, who had not expected this turn in the program, thought he would take advantage of the opening. "Yes," he said, "if you really want to do something, and are not afraid of a fairly reasonable task, I want to ask each man here if he is willing to be the friend of at least one boy who has been in the Children's Court. Show the boy that some one cares whether he gets on or not. Be a friendly adviser to him. Help him to get out of his environment. Be a sort of a big brother to him."

The movement was born then and there, and the name, spoken without premeditation, stuck. The Big Brother Movement it has been called from the moment when, stirred by Mr. Coulter's appeal, and responsive to Dr. Smith's earnest plea to adopt the suggestion, forty men pledged themselves each to look after one boy. There were business and professional men among them. Some of them were students. All lived in good homes and had been accustomed to three square meals a day. They were, by this agreement, to come into touch with boys who knew what it meant to be content with one poor meal a day, and sometimes did not get that; and many of whom lived in the streets.

From the outset it has been understood that the movement was to have no connection with the Children's Court. No case is touched until it has been disposed of by the judge in charge.

The First Little Brother.

The first of the men to go in search of a Little Brother was directed to a miserable cellar in the San Jose Hill district. The father was dead. The mother seemed to be in the last stages of consumption. There was no fuel, no food, and no medicine in the house. An older brother was out of work. Emil, the boy who had been in court—charged with taking part in a "stone fight" between rival neighborhood "gangs"—had been for some time the mainstay of the home. He earned a penny whenever he could, usually by doing odd jobs and selling papers, dodging the truant officer all the time.

It was early impressed on the men that, ordinarily, no money help should be given—they should give themselves. But here financial assistance was absolutely necessary. A light apartment was rented; the sick mother was given a physician's care; a position was secured for the older boy; the younger lad was placed in school by his Big Brother from the Church, and was provided with a place where he could work after school hours.

Three years have passed. The mother is still living, and in comfort. The Little Brother has become a manly boy of sixteen. He has responded to the care of his Big Brother. Some time ago he showed an aptitude for designing, and a position was secured for him in which he would be able to develop his talent.

Ernest was another lad who went from the court room into the hands of a patient Big Brother. To-day he is a trusted employee of a large financial concern. Three times he has been promoted.

Gratitude.

The first forty boys who were "brothered" by the men of the Central Church organized themselves into a club. Ernest was the first president. When the Men's Club invited this club of their Little Brothers to be their guests at dinner, Ernest's Big Brother sat by his side.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

52 RAILROADS are employing our students. Attend on credit and pay after a position is secured. NO POSITION, NO PAY. 5 teachers of railroad experience. Largest and best equipped school in the West. Attendance doubled last year. Car fare paid. Write for Catalog.
CHILLICOTHE TELEGRAPHY COLLEGE,
754 Irving Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

William Woods College
For Young Women
Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.
J. B. Jones, Pres. Fulton, Mo.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN
Sixteth Session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture. New Laboratories. Splendid Campus, Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on request.
E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

BETHANY COLLEGE
Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environments well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET, Bethany, W. Va.

MIAMI UNIVERSITY THE FAMOUS OLD COLLEGE OF THE CENTRAL WEST
(Supported the by State of Ohio.)
85th year opens September 16th. Free Tuition. Low cost of living. Wide range of studies. Thorough instruction. Christian influences. No saloons. A well-equipped gymnasium with specially trained physical director. Beautiful campus of sixty-five acres. Splendid buildings. Modern equipment. Write for catalogue and handsomely illustrated bulletin to the President.
GUY POTTER BENTON, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ohio.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY
CANTON, MO.
A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.
Send for free illustrated Catalog.
Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

Then came a trial. The president of the Boys' Club was called on for a speech! Bravely he rose to the occasion, and said:

"Gentlemen and friends, I have the honor to thank you for your kind hospitality and trouble. You have taken on yourselves to let us feel your generosity and friendship, which I believe we hardly deserve. As we can not retaliate your favor at present, we hope that you will be paid by us, not by inviting you to dinner, but by becoming men on whom you can look in future and say with pride, 'He used to be one of the boys of our club.' * * *"

"And that boy, I verily believe, would at that moment have been in the reform school if one of the men had not gone to his help," Mr. Coulter said, when he had related the incident.

A Big Brother was called to Europe on business. His Little Brother had been a "tough" boy, though doing splendidly while his Brother was near. But during his absence the boy fell in with the old crowd, and was brought a second time to the Children's Court.

"Please don't tell Mr. Lewis," was his plea. "If he had been here this would not have happened."

When Mr. Lewis returned to the city he found the boy in the House of Refuge. He visited him there, and devoted himself to him when he came out. To-day he is doing well.

Early in January, 1908, a boy was arrested for selling transfers. In court his story was told. His parents were dead, and his aunt compelled him to pay her five dollars a week for his board. As a butcher's boy he earned three dollars. It was necessary to make up the balance. The judge decided that environment was the difficulty here, and he was glad to parole the boy. A Big Brother was found, who secured him work in a hospital as messenger boy, where he is paid seventeen dollars a month and board, with a chance for some schooling.

In his gratitude, whenever he can secure a stamp, he writes to his Big Brother. Here is one of the letters:

Dear Friend: I am riting a few lines about my new home. I like it very much I am very pleased with it I was waiting to no what day I was going to get of but I could not wait any longer I hope you are not mad at me for not riting any sooner. As soon as I get a day of I will come over. * * If the lady would not ot given me this envelope I would not have got a letter yet. * * *

Some Suggestions for Big Brothers.

As each Big Brother is given a Little Brother he is handed a leaflet on suggestions. A few of these are:

You can't enter into real sympathey with him till you know the life he lives, the air he breathes.

Find out where the boy spends his evenings. Most of them spend their time in the street. It is your business to provide a better place—more attractive—not to you, but to the boy.

Invite him to your own home, and make him feel that he is welcome. It will perhaps be a new revelation of "home" to him.

Invite him to call on you at your office or place of business. He must understand something of your life if you wish him to look on you as a brother.

Take him to a ball game with you. There is no better way of "warming up" to a boy and getting him to "warm up" to you like cheering together.

Don't patronize. You may know more about virtue, but the boy probably is a better expert on temptation.

Find out whether he attends Sunday-school or church, and take him with you to your own.

Get him to assume some responsibility, and realize his duty to help others; for example, help a blind man across the street; observe little habits of politeness.

Above all remember that you are a Big Brother, that you were once a boy, and be patient. Your boy is not yet a man; it is your task to make him one.

Just at first nothing is said to the boys about attending church or Sunday-school; the Big Brothers do not wish to frighten them. But in almost every case they find their way to church. Of the original Central Church club of forty boys there is scarcely one who is not now in Sunday-school. Their teachers say that some of their best boys are Little Brothers.

One night last winter Dr. Smith, who never loses an opportunity to help in the movement, spoke to the boys at a monthly meeting. In closing, he said:

"Come down to the church and see me, boys!"

Not long after, on Sunday evening, five ragged boys came into fashionable Central Church after the beginning of the service. Two of them had not had a hair-cut in months. The church was warm, so as they walked up the aisle they took off their coats. Then, resplendent in red flannel undershirts, they took seats. They were recognized as boys from the club, and were given a cordial reception.

The growth of the work made necessary the organization of the executive council. C. H. Holbrook, a student at Union Theological Seminary, was chosen secretary. The city was divided into half a dozen districts. Now, when the name of a boy is reported to the secretary, it is referred to the district organization in the center nearest his home.

For other men's clubs have taken up the work so well begun at Central Church, until there are now about six hundred men in the city who have devoted themselves to the interests of Little Brothers. On November 15, 1907, at a Big Brothers' dinner, more than thirty different organizations, all engaged in this work, were represented. One hundred and twenty-five Big Brothers were present.

At a meeting of the Men's Club of Central Church, a month later, David H. Greer, the Hon. Elbridge T. Gerry and the Hon. Stewart L. Woodford spoke of the splendid results already apparent. They agreed that many municipal and social problems can best be solved by just such activity. The boys who get into trouble

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

A Christian Home and High Grade College for Girls and Young Women

College Preparatory, Full College and Special Courses. Faculty of experienced specialists. Superior advantages in Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science and Physical Training. If you want good care, culture, thoroughness and satisfactory results, investigate.

For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. W. T. MOORE, President.
Columbia, Mo.

200 College Place,

BUTLER COLLEGE

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

Elegant buildings, over one hundred rooms. Preparing to erect $50,000.00 worth more of buildings.

Campus, eighty-six acres. Creeks, springs, native forests.

Cost for tuition alone $5.00 per month; for board alone $12.00 per month; for board and tuition in College home $16.00 per month. Four Universities are represented in the Faculty.

The College gives Ministerial, Classical, Philosophical, and Scientific Courses.

The school has neither hazing, nor secret fraternities; does not desire to enroll boys and young men who are unwilling to stand for clean habits and worthy characters.

Correspondence invited. Address J. HOPWOOD, Lynchburg, Va.

31 STUDENTS of the CHILLICOTHE BUSINESS COLLEGE placed last year as instructors in business colleges. Other schools recognize us. 90 students placed in BANKS. 53 Typewriters. Position secured or tuition refunded. Write for free Catalog.

ALLEN MOORE, Pres.,
3883 MONROE ST., CHILLICOTHE, Mo.

are, as a rule, leaders. If they are started in the right direction they will be a tremendous help to the community. But if they are left to themselves they will be a tremendous cost, since they will drag down others with them.

There are a few failures, of course. The secretary, who keeps a card record of all the boys and of the Big Brothers in charge, reports that less than a dozen of the six hundred whose names are on file have come back to the Children's Court. Two of these have been reclaimed, and are now doing well.

The Joy of the Work.

The boys are not alone in receiving benefit. The Big Brothers themselves share in the blessing. Their faces shine with a new light. They begin to realize what the giving of the least bit of self to a brother in need will do for them.'' They are learning the message of Lowell:

''Who gives himself with his alms, feeds three—
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me.''

The end is not yet. The movement is still spreading in New York City. And from other cities come inquiries from those who are eager to see Big Brothers at work for the boys of their own communities. In at least one city the work has already been organized, and these Big Brothers, by lifting up their stumbling Little Brothers, are trying to follow him who came ''not to be ministered unto, but to minister.''—The Sunday School Times.

Small Beginnings of Mighty Movements.

In an article entitled ''A Hundred Years of Temperance,'' the Rev. William E. Barton, D. D., has lately given in the ''Youth's Companion'' an instructive and entertaining account of our first century of temperance movements. 1908 is a year of centennials. He reminds us that only a hundred years ago began a systematic effort to plant missions; that just a hundred years ago the slave-trade was outlawed; and that April marks the centennial of the first temperance society of America:

The first temperance society known to have existed in the United States was organized in Moreau, Saratoga County, New York, in April, 1808. The founder was Dr. Billy J. Clarke. There were forty-three members.

The constitution of the society provided that ''No member shall drink rum, gin, whiskey, wine or distilled spirits . . . except by advice of a physician or in case of actual disease (also excepting at public dinners) under penalty of twenty-five cents. . . . Provided that this article shall not infringe on any religious rites.''

Surely this was broad enough! But it is said that some other societies, in copying the pledge, made a further exception in favor of raisings and elections! There are men now living who remember when churches were ''raised'' with free distribution of liquor.

There were other organizations that gave incidental help to the infant movement. There still exist in New England certain societies of women for work in foreign lands whose legal name is ''The Female Cent Association'' for New Hampshire or Massachusetts. The story of their organization is this:

A body of learned ministers had gathered in the home of one of their number to pray for the conversion of the heathen world. Their prayer was not accompanied by fasting; and their dinner was served with wine. At the dinner the wife of the entertaining minister proposed that each Christian man present should give to his wife a cent for each glass of wine he drank, and permit her to contribute the cent to the work of saving the heathen. The gentlemen present began the movement, each one laying beside his wine glass a great copper cent of the old-time sort, and the hostess eagerly collected them, and refilled the glasses at a cent a glass. Such a movement inevitably tended to remind Christian men how many glasses they were drinking, and how much larger would be the total of their gifts if they gave the full value of the wine, and how much better they would be without the wine. So the women's societies of America began with the money paid by Christian men to their wives for the wine they drank when praying for the heathen.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

PASTORS' COLLEGE: CHAMPAIGN, ILL.

New and unequalled road to the ministry. Musty studies omitted. New courses, new soul-winning ideas and methods of work. Entrance only in September. Only one year in college, three years' study in active service, then graduation. Learn how to think, how to speak, how to work, how to live long, how to cure nervous disorders by the sane, scientific and Christian Emanuel Movement.

Power, freshness, energy, zeal in this up-to-date system of training. Practical and economical. A limited education no barrier to entrance, it may be a handicap. Roosevelt never dreamed of so strenuous a catalogue. Write.

COTNER UNIVERSITY Bethany (Lincoln), Nebr.

COLLEGE OF ARTS, four courses, four years each. Classical, Sacred, Literature, Philosophical, Collegiate, Normal, leading to A. B.—COLLEGE OF MEDICINE—DEPARTMENTS of Sacred Literature and Education. Combine six year course leading to degrees A. B. and M. D. Grants State Certificates, grade and life. SCHOOLS of Music, Business, Oratory, Art. ACADEMY accredited by state.

Beautiful location. Connected with Lincoln by electric line. New gymnasium. New heating plant building. First Semester opens September 7th, 1908. Second Semester opens January 26th, 1909. Address. W. P. AYLSWORTH, Chancellor.

"IN THE HEART OF THE BLUE GRASS."

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING

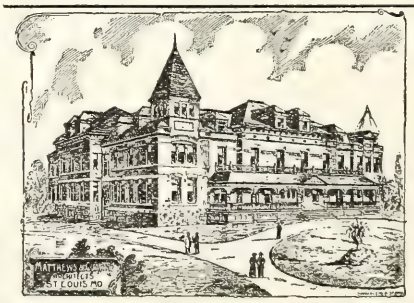
KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

Attend Transylvania University. A standard institution with elective courses, modern conveniences, scholarly surroundings, fine moral influences. Expenses reasonable. Students from twenty-seven states and seven foreign countries. First term begins September 14th, 1908. Write for catalog to-day.

President' Transylvania University, Lexington,

Campbell-Hagerman College

For Girls and Young Women. Begins its next session September 14, 1908. Large Faculty of scholarly men and women. Thoroughly equipped Departments of Music, Art and Expression. Confers A. B. and B. L. Degrees. 126 graduates in the regular course, in the last five years. Between 60 and 70 graduates in the special Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Departments of Bookkeeping, Stenography and Typewriting. School of Domestic Science. Well equipped Gymnasium. Splendid new buildings with all modern conveniences. For catalogue address, B. C. HAGERMAN, Pres., Lexington, Ky.



CARR-BURDETTE COLLEGE

AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, ART AND EXPRESSION

In location, building, climate and health conditions, home furnishings, department equipments and faculty Carr-Burdette is the peer of any Young Ladies' Boarding School North or South. Experienced educators have so adjudged it. It is select and limited in number. Building and grounds deeded to the Church free from debt. Bible taught every day. Write at once for catalogue and read for yourself, or visit us and see for yourself. Address,

SECRETARY, CARR-BURDETTE,
Sherman, Texas.

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

DES MOINES IOWA

A well-equipped co-educational school, located in the Capital City of Iowa. Enrollment this year exceeds 1,850. Ten well-equipped University Buildings. More than one hundred trained teachers in the faculty. Excellent Library facilities.

COLLEGES AND SCHOOLS; Liberal Arts, Bible, Law, Medical, Music, Education, High School.

THE COLLEGE OF EDUCATION offers courses for teachers in all departments of our public schools from the kindergarten to the high school, including courses for supervisors of music and drawing.

THE UNIVERSITY HIGH SCHOOL offers the usual preparatory courses, and thorough courses in all business subjects, including shorthand and typewriting.

Send for announcement of department in which you are interested.

SUMMER TERM OPENS JUNE 20. FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 14.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

From Long Beach, Cal., comes the following tantalizing invitation: "Just step over and watch the breakers awhile this evening, for they are simply grand. If you can't leave Felix, bring him along, for I see ladies with dogs in their arms." (You would certainly have to have Felix in your arms if you got him near the breakers. I should therefore be obliged to leave him at home, for I never take him in my arms. Sometimes company who call on us take Felix on their lap and in their arms, imagining that he is treated that way by the family. I fancy he thinks less of them for doing so. It is only my personal opinion, and worth no more than I am, that she who fondles a dog in her lap and he who holds a cat in his arms becomes more or less of a dog herself and a cat himself.)

This card from Dallas, Texas, regarding the Elks' convention, is addressed directly to "Felix Ellis": "We are so sorry that your folks all went off to Missouri and left you, so you could not come down to the convention." (Our postmaster asked me in the afternoon if I received the card for Felix, and remarked: "I not only have to know every person in town, but the very cats!" However, I fancy Felix is the only cat in Arkansas who receives souvenir postcards. Our postmaster is Mr. LeForce. He is the republican in Bentonville.)

Mrs. S. M. Gibbins, Chelan, Wash.: "Some time in June I sent 50 cents, to be used in getting Drusie that heavier dress, but found later that I had sent the letter to the Christian Publishing Company, and my letter intended for them to you. Perhaps living near the mountains, where the air is so light, has something to do with my brain, causing me to make a mistake so silly." (I do not remember receiving a letter meant for the company; but, then, I live in pretty light air myself.)

Two sisters, Buncetown, Mo.: "Enclosed find $4 for Drusie. Our prayer is that our heavenly Father may bless the Advance Society."

Mrs. James Hultz, Osawatomie, Kan.: "I have just been reading the Av. S. letters, and I had to smile when you said that Felix has plenty of hay in the barn to sleep on, and I wondered if it had not been shipped from Kansas. I have been in Arkansas." (I suppose that means that you didn't see any hay when you were here? I can't tell you about this hay of Felix', as I bought it with the barn. It may be Kansas hay. It has a weatherbeaten, sunburned appearance, as if it had passed through four or five tornadoes and had never seen a tree growing within twenty miles of a farmhouse. Yes, I think it must have come from "up North.") "I send 20 cents for Drusie's shower party." (Good! What's the matter with Kansas?)

Myrtle McNeely, Collierville, Tenn.: "I have just taken an examination on Part V of Teacher Training Course, and am tired writing, but will send my mite for Drusie's shower. I am not a member of the Av. S., but read the letters with great interest. I read the last seven splendid serial stories that ran on the Av. S. page. I am quite unable to say which I liked best. I have never seen any letters from this part of the state. I feel as if I knew a great many of the older members of the Av. S. I suppose Felix is enjoying his hammock these hot days and still shedding his hair. Best wishes for Drusie in far-away China. Mamma adds 25 cents for Drusie." (Poor Felix! His hammock has worn entirely out. The hole grew so large that he had to strain his legs to keep from dropping to the ground. To keep cool now he has to lie on the cistern. But I am determined not to try to take up a collection from the Av. S. for our cat. Our missionary and orphan are as many as we can do justice to. But he sheds. After everything else wears out, Felix still sheds.)

Flossie Davis, ever faithful, sends her thirteenth quarterly report, and writes from Des Moines, Iowa: "I've had my report ready for a week or two, but forgot about sending it until I read last night in the paper where my other one was mentioned. I suppose the lovely rains we have been having extend to Arkansas, don't they? Last night the clouds were so threatening we thought we were going to have a "jimmycane," but it soon blew over. It is dinner time and I am dreadfully hungry." (As this was written on June 19, we trust by this time Flossie has had something to eat. I do not think they have "jimmycanes" in Arkansas; at least I never heard of one. Umbrellas are what we have when it is threatening. We expect to have a heavy shower on August 12. Everybody who sends 10 cents for Missionary Drusie furnishes ten drops of the shower. It began to sprinkle up in Missouri, and it is getting pretty wet around the house here. At the Christian Endeavor Society last night Cleo Layne gave 10 cents to help the downpour. She is a little girl who always reads her Bible reference when asked to take part. She is not one of the large girls who say, "Please excuse me.")

Murray, Neb.: "That 10-cent shower for Drusie was surely a happy thought; and sending along another dime for some one who is 'near and dear' is a happy thought, too. I enclose $1, half for Drusie, half for Charlie. You see I have a tender spot in my heart for our orphan. It is well for him to be independent, but don't let him suffer want before he gets a foothold." (I have news for the society about Charlie, but must postpone it till this shower quits falling.)

Mrs. F. A. Potts used to write always from Chattanooga, but now she sends her twenty-ninth Av. S. report from Wauseon, Ohio. Her last report shows 1,747 lines from Riley, 206 from Holmes, 101 pages of Macaulay's History of England; and among the books read for the quarter (her extra work over and above the required rules) my glad eye notes "Old Fashioned Girl" and "Adnah."

J. B. Mayfield, Butler, Mo.: "I enclose 50 cents from Mrs. Mary J. Wordy for Charlie, she said. She could not call to mind the last name, but seemed to think you would know [and right she is]. I think from what she said he is a boy or a young man being educated, perhaps, by the gifts of friends." (J. B. Mayfield seems to be groping in darkness, but he is certainly feeling toward the right direction.)

Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "The 10 cent shower is just the thing! I send a dime now and will speak to my friends later. What have become of our old friends, Nannie D. Chambers, Madge Masters and Ruth Day? Best wishes to Felix!" (Anyway, you are one of our oldest members, and we're glad to see you again. You'll be interested to know I have a letter from Bertha Beesley's mother, which we'll have to save till next time.)

Nora Boyer, Morrellton, Mo.: "It is raining here to-day quite hard, and that reminded me of Drusie's dime shower, so I'm sending 10 cents. Give my regards to Felix. It is nearly four years since I last wrote to the Av. S., but I've read our page just the same, and hope that Drusie may do much good in far-away China and that orphan Charlie may make a success of his life, so that all of us may be proud of him."

Here is a typewritten letter on intensely yellow paper, signed "Merry Widow." All I can tell from the postmark is that it comes from Missouri: "I enclose 10 cents for Drusie's shower; how is Charlie getting along?" (That I hope to tell you in our

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

$135 PAYS 48 WEEKS

Tuition, Board and Room Rent. 1200 students, 26 Instructors. Professional, University Preparatory, Common School and Musical courses. Car fare paid. Attend on credit. Send for free catalog.

CHILLICOTHE NORMAL SCHOOL,
60 Normal Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

FORTIETH YEAR.

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.

Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address

MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.

Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.

HIRAM COLLEGE

HIRAM, OHIO.

From a Students' Symposium in the "Hiram College Advance":

What are a few essential characteristics of a strong, although perhaps small college, which are worthy of our attention and should induce us to favor it above all others?

First, a healthy environment for study; in the next place, able and manly professors with whom a student can form intimate associations, and lastly a deep spiritual life sustained and encouraged by the influences brought to bear in the community. As these three phases are to be found in the Hiram life, I rested my decision in choosing the "Old Hill" as the spot on which to spend college days.

The Home-coming issue of the "Advance" containing the symposium entire, the inaugural address of President Bates, a poem by Jessie Brown Pounds, articles by Judge F. A. Henry and Profs. E. B. Wakefield, B. S. Dean and G. H. Colton, and many other things of interest, also catalog and full information, sent free on application to J. O. Newcomb, Secretary, Hiram, Ohio. Mention "The Christian-Evangelist."

next article.) "I don't believe in making apologies, but this paper speaks for itself. However, it is all I have, except official stationery." (Are you Gov. Folk?) "Have you forgotten the 'Second Year With the Woodneys' that you promised us? Some of us haven't, at any rate. Don't you think you are just a little bit prejudiced about Felix? Now, my cat is absolutely the dearest and"— (I will not publish the rest of this exaggeration). "But of course every mother's duckling is a swan, so I can't blame you much. Teddie likes for me to read to him about Felix." (No, this can't be the governor.) "He thet it was very unkind of you to leave Felix at home when you went to Missouri." (That simplified spelling, taken with the name "Teddie," leaves no doubt that this is an official belonging to our postmaster's party.) "Now, I won't tell you not to publish this, because I know you wouldn't think of such a thing, anyway." (You see I have yielded to your subtle persuasion.) "What is your opinion of the Merry Widow hat?" (It is smaller than the hat.) "Don't you think it a nuisance at church?" (More than half the pleasure of wearing a large hat at church is on account of the discomfort it affords other people. I, for one, will not add to that wicked enjoyment by expressing my views on the subject.)

A Friend, Northville, S. D.: "For a long time I have read the Av. S. letters with much interest. I hope the good work may long continue. I send $1 to help the shower for our dear missionary. May the Lord's blessing rest upon the shower of August 12."

No name: "I am an old lady, and it occurs to me to send a dime for Drusie's shower for every state I've lived in. I was born in Kentucky, lived in Illinois several years, and afterwards in Missouri and Arkansas. I love all four states and send a dime for each. I love Drusie—the life of one such does more missionary work at home than in China. All glory to the Av. S. and the author of the letters, and dear Brother Garrison, and even that old cat. I see a Missouri woman has been elected to the head of the National Federation of Women. Mrs. Mary Alden Ward, of Massachusetts, received 390 votes, but Mrs. Philip N. Moore, of Missouri, received 516. Hurrah for Missouri!"

Drusie Malott, Pi Yang Hsien, Honan, China: "Your letter of May just came. I acknowledge with grateful thanks once more $10 from the Av. S. It truly seems more and more marvelous to me, as the months go by, that God has raised up such kind friends to help me in this work. I have prayed him never to let me depend upon an arm of flesh, for I know he uses others for his purposes. Some friends and home churches from whom I naturally expected most, have manifested no interest in the work, while God has put it in the hearts of the Av. S., and others whom I have never met, to support me in the missionary field. Well, I praise God for the Av. S. and their wonderful interest. May his blessing and reward be yours and theirs!"

George L. Gordon, of Velardena, Mexico, sends a drop to our shower, and tells me he has a card from the C. W. B. M. missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, of Monterey. The Fullers are hunting up the scattered Disciples in Mexico. It was at Brother Fuller's church in Sherman, Texas, that I ventured to raise my voice in the congregation, much to the surprise of the choir.

When you read this page it will be about one week to August 12. Don't let the day slip by you without helping a little to make the water drip from the eaves. I haven't published all the letters sending drops to the shower, but will in the course of time. Please note that this week six more states are represented. This makes twenty states that have thus far shown an active interest in Drusie's shower. I wish it might be made twenty-five. Who lives in a state as yet unrepresented who will send 10 cents for the honor of his commonwealth? And who, living anywhere on earth, will swell the music of the falling rain? This is our last call for our missionary's 10-cent shower, and after this (I hope) the deluge!

Bentonville, Ark.

Sentence Sermons.

Nothing is more deceptive than love of self.

An honest doubt is always a door to some higher truth.

The trend and purpose of your whole life—that is your prayer.

The length of life hereafter may depend on its breadth now.

They who know their Father never are far from their Fatherland.

It's not much use for an empty life to worry about its immortality.

If you would have peace without, you must be content with war without.

Our hunger for immortality may be the best evidence that we shall inherit it.

Many a man thinks he is fighting sin when he is only flaying his neighbor's foibles.

There's a world of difference between attention to details and absorption in trifles.

It makes all the difference whether money is life's motive or only a part of its mechanism.—Chicago Tribune.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the late prime minister of England, was noted for his tact. A young Liberal had several times voted against the government, and the whip asked the prime minister to deal with him. Sir Henry invited the offender to tea. He talked pleasantly and humorously of many subjects. At last the young man said, "Sir Henry, you did not invite me to speak about these things?" Sir Henry, with an arch expression and uplifted finger, said: "You bad boy! You bad boy!! You bad boy!!!" That was all, but it accomplished its purpose.—Exchange.

General Grant' Firm Stand.

When General Grant was in Paris, the President of the Republic invited him to attend the Sunday races. He knew that to refuse such an invitation from the President of France, would be considered especially discourteous by the French people, and yet he politely declined the invitation, saying, "It is not in accord with the custom of my country, or with the spirit of my religion to spend Sunday in that way. I will go to the house of God."

The Making of Character.

Do not let us suppose that character requires great circumstances for the making. Character can be made in poor circumstances. There are huge manufactories in this country, with magnificent machinery, with chimneys belching forth clouds of black smoke to pollute the air, where they turn out carpets of the most wonderful aspects, which would almost make you ill to look at, and which perish quickly in the using.

Far away in the East, in some poor little hut, an Eastern workman is working with threads of many colors beside him. He has been toiling for years, and when he has finished he will have turned out a single square of such beautiful coloring and such perfect workmanship that when it comes to this country it will be bought at a great price, and the owner's great-grandchildren will see it fresh and beautiful. So much for the great manufactory and the whirling wheels and the noise and the smoke; so much for the quietness and obscurity of a single workman!—Rev. John Watson, D. D.

Does your school use

Christian Publishing Company's

Bible School Supplies?

Papers,

Quarterlies,

Picture Cards

and Bible Lesson Picture Roll

These are the Very Best

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

VOLUME XLV. ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 13, 1908. Number 33.

The Christian-Evangelist.

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER, B. B. TYLER, W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 3712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.
Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.
For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 1027
Editorial—
"Striving Together" 1028
The Miraculous Element in the Bible 1028
The Saving Faith 1029
Notes and Comments 1029
Current Religious Thought 1030
Editor's Easy Chair 1031
Contributed—
The Voice of Yesterday. Jessie Brown Pounds 1032
Evangelism for the Times. Earle Marion Todd 1033
The Church and Men. Arthur Holmes 1034
New Orleans, Our Convention City. W. M. Taylor 1036
Gleanings from the International S. S. Convention 1037
Protestantism in Mexico 1037
Heathenism Under the Searchlight. W. Remfrey Hunt 1038
Our Budget 1039
Evelyn M. Gordon 1042
News from Many Fields 1043
The National Teacher Training Institute 1044
Adult Bible Class Movement 1045
Evangelistic 1046
Sunday-school 1047
Christian Endeavor 1048
Midweek Prayer-meeting 1048
People's Forum 1049
Obituaries 1049
The Home Department 1050

The New Orleans Convention

OCTOBER, 1908

—VIA—

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD

Leaving St. Louis Oct. 7th, at 1.50 P. M.
Arriving a New Orleans next day at 10.30 A. M.

RAILROAD FARE--round trip, - -	$18.25
Sleeping car (single berth) both ways,	4.50
" " (double berth) " "	9.00
St. Charles Hotel (European) per day,	1.00

In the matter of board at New Orleans, the delegates may go to the St. Charles Hotel at $1.00 and up per day, or may find much cheaper lodging elsewhere. Full particulars sent on application, but let us urge those who intend to take over the

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD

to send to us their names and addresses so that we may keep them fully advised, and otherwise keep in touch with them.

Sincerely,
W. Daviess Pittman
Business Manager.

Does your school use

Christian Publishing Company's

Bible School Supplies?

Papers,

Quarterlies,

Picture Cards

and Bible Lesson Picture Roll

These are the Very Best

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 13, 1908. Number 33

Current Events

There are four states in which a George Junior Republic exists—New York, California, Connecticut and Maryland. A national association has been formed, the aim of which is to utilize these states as a nucleus for the foundation of a "George Junior Nation," which, with respect to the larger problems of national government, will do a work similar to the education given at Freeville in practical affairs of local self-government. The value of these republics is not in their name, which conveys no meaning, but they must be commended for the work they are doing in the way of stimulating "strays" to reclaim and discipline themselves.

Strays

The House of Representatives, by a decisive vote, recently defeated the plan for the restoration of the canteen. Some leaders in the army, and especially some women of society, have made efforts to bring in the old ways again. For several years the appropriations for the soldiers' homes in the sundry civil bill carried a limitation forbidding the payment of any money to an institution where a bar or canteen was maintained for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The limitation was omitted from the bill this year, failing in the committee on appropriations by a tie vote. When the item was reached in the sundry civil bill in committee of the whole an amendment, inserting the usual limitation, was adopted, 167 to 46.

Beer and Soldiers.

The British Anti-Opium Society announces the suppression of the opium dens in Hong Kong and Ceylon by order of the British government. In Hong Kong 40 per cent of the revenues have, until now, been derived from the sale of opium, and possibly a similar proportion in Ceylon. An international opium commission is being formed, with the cordial assistance of the United States government, in which Great Britain, Italy, France, Holland, Japan and China will, it is expected, unite for the complete prohibition of opium in all their territorial possessions in Eastern Asia and adjacent islands. So far so good. But action on the part of these governments is what is needed, not merely a commission. The average American, who cares nothing whether opium be sold in his own city, can not be expected to take much interest in depriving the far-off Chinaman of his dope. The pity of the whole thing is that the white man forced the traffic and the yellow man has tried to break the bonds put on him.

To Abolish Opium.

President Roosevelt has turned his attention just now to consideration of the interests of the farmer of the nation, both as to the practical duties and results of his occupation and as to his life and social welfare. He includes the farmer's wife in his purview, extolling her as a person than whom there is none more important, "measured in influence upon the life of the nation."

Life on the Farm.

The President wants to know, through the instrumentality of men more intimately conversant with agricultural affairs than he, what the present conditions of agriculture and of farm life are, and in what way they may be bettered by national care. He holds it to be a duty of the nation to look out for and aid the farmers specifically, as the foundation of the national prosperity, and he says that ultimately the states, through their agricultural departments, must collaborate with the national authority in this work.

Mr. Roosevelt intends to talk to Congress on the subject next winter, and to obtain information on which to base his communication he has appointed a commission on country life and has asked that the commission report to him next December. He recognizes the inadequacy of the time allowed for the commission's work, but he declares that there is only one other material question of greater importance before the people at the present time, and he therefore asks the commissioners to give him the benefit of what is already known, rather than undertake an extensive investigation, and to make recommendations as to the best solution of what he calls the problem. The single exception which he makes as of greater importance than this of life and work is the question of conservation of the country's natural resources.

Among other things, Mr. Roosevelt wants to know how to induce the children to remain on the farm and follow the occupation of their father. He believes that the American farmers are better off than their predecessors, but says that they have not kept pace with the advancement of the nation as a whole in the matter of their personal well-being.

To gather this information for him and to formulate the problem and means to its solution, the President has turned to men representative of the East and Middle West, whose attention has been wholly or largely given to such questions, naming as chairman of the commission Prof. L. H. Bailey, of the New York Agricultural College at Ithaca, and for Professor Bailey's associates, Henry Wallace, of "Wallace's Farmer," of Des Moines, Ia.; Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst; Gifford Pinchnot, of the Federal Forest Service, and Editor Walter H. Page, of the "World's Work," New York.

President Roosevelt deals at length with the subject and his apointments, in an explanatory letter to Professor Bailey, which he sent to him from Oyster Bay.

The medical fraternity has in the years gone by been divided on the subject of the effect of alcoholic beverages. More and more the opinion is unifying that it is an injurious effect. This is seen in medical literature, it is witnessed in the class room, and less and less do the hospitals employ alcohol. Associations, too, are being formed, wherein physicians and scientists make active protest against use of liquors. For instance, a committee of the International Association of Physicians, organized last August at Stockholm, Sweden, has issued the following appeal, which it is desired to give as wide a circulation as possible, for signatures and endorsements are to be gathered throughout the world. It is entitled "An Appeal by the Physicians of all Lands to all Rulers, Governments, Legislatures, all Educators, Teachers and Ministers, and all who have a sincere interest in the welfare of our race and coming generations." It then proceeds: "We, who belong to the medical profession and have by study and experience been especially enabled to recognize the true nature and the effects of alcoholic beverages, hereby declare that we are thoroughly convinced that these beverages are altogether unnecessary and in every way injurious, so that we believe the evils arising from the indulgence in intoxicating drinks can and should be eliminated and avoided. Above all, the youth should be taught by precept and example and protected by legal enactments, so that they will abstain from alcoholic liquors. We declare that it is our conviction that this course must be pursued to insure the future sobriety of the race, which is the foundation of its prosperity and progress." Signed first by Dr. Holitscher, Pirkenhammer, Germany; Dr. Stantesson, Stockholm, Sweden; Dr. Ridge, Enfield, England; Dr. Stein, Budapest, Hungary; Dr. Vogt, Christiania, Norway; Dr. Laitinen, Helsingfors, Finland; Dr Olrick, Frederiksvaerk, Denmark.

Physicians Appeal.

Editorial

"Striving Together."

An esteemed brother, who has been visiting one of our conventions and mingling with the people, writes that he often heard the sentiment expressed that our religious papers should come together and lend their united influence for the unity and advancement of our cause. This is particularly true, he says, of our two most widely-circulated and influential journals. The blame for this lack of unity was laid on these two papers—the "Christian Standard" and The Christian-Evangelist. The chief blame, he thought, was laid upon the former, but the latter was not held to be without fault in the matter.

It is always interesting to learn how the brethren feel on any subject that relates to our general enterprises, and especially those who have the interest of the Cause at heart enough to attend our great assemblies. Their feeling on this subject is eminently proper, and that it has not found greater manifestation in the past has been one of the painful surprises to us. It is not our purpose to plead blamelessness in this matter of lack of unity, but there are some facts not known to the brotherhood at large which, if we felt at liberty to state, would, we are sure, go far to exonerate us from blame in this matter. We may find it necessary to publish these facts later, but let it suffice now to say that the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist has resorted to every honorable method known to him to come into fraternal co-operation and unity of understanding with his Cincinnati co-laborers on things of fundamental importance to our unity and well-being. We have felt deeply and keenly the need of such unity between us, and there has been no greater burden on our heart, during the past few years, than the lack of such unity and the resulting consequences in the brotherhood. If there is anything remaining to be done on our part to secure this end, we would be glad to know what it is. So anxious are we about the matter, that we would be glad to refer the whole question to a large committee of wise and impartial brethren, who might advise our editors on the subject of their attitude toward each other and to the interests of the Cause at large.

It is not our thought that it is possible, even if it were desirable, that all our papers should take exactly the same view of every question, with no differences of judgment whatever. That is not to be expected, nor is it at all necessary, in order to oneness of aim and fraternal co-operation. We ought to agree on certain general lines of policy, affecting the welfare of the whole brotherhood. Take, for instance, the matter of our missionary societies: Few things are more vital to our future welfare than the growth of our missionary work. In order to have a better understanding on this subject we have recently asked our brethren of the "Christian Standard" to define their attitude to our present missionary organizations. The Christian-Evangelist has been giving large space to these general interests of the brotherhood, without any desire or expectation of financial remuneration. It expects to pursue the same policy in the future. We feel that we owe this to the cause of Christ, which we are seeking to advance. Now, if the "Christian Standard" will define its position on this subject, and if it can say that it is friendly to, and intends to aid, these missionary societies in their work, through its columns, there is one matter of general interest on which we can heartily co-operate. Then we can take up other questions and seek to reach an agreement as to our policy concerning them. We are still waiting, and the whole brotherhood is waiting, for the "Christian Standard" to define its present attitude, and its future policy, toward our existing missionary societies.

The Miraculous Element in the Bible.

There is no doubt that, to the modern mind, the miracles recorded in the Bible offer objection to belief in its truthfulness or historicity. This is partly true, because of the false idea of what a miracle is, and partly, perhaps, to the materialistic tendency which science is apt to foster in the minds of those who pursue it. The old idea that a miracle is a violation of the natural law, that is to say, of God's law, which was once a popular view, is not wholly obsolete. In that sense of the word "miracles do not happen." In fact they do not "happen" in their true sense. When events have occurred above the order of nature, implying the presence of a supernatural force, they did not "happen," but were designedly brought about for the accomplishment of some worthy end.

It is admitted by all, except by materialists, that there is a spiritual world, as well as a material world. It is also admitted that this spiritual world is above the material as the animal kingdom is higher than the vegetable, and that, in turn, is higher than the mineral. As each of these kingdoms has its own laws and forces, which are of a higher order than those operating in the realm beneath it, so it is not difficult to believe that there are in the spiritual realm a set of forces and laws peculiar to that realm, and higher in their reach than are the laws which operate continuously in lower realms. In other words, as the vegetable kingdom controls the mineral, the animal the vegetable, so the spiritual is above all, and rules over all. For, after all, these various realms or kingdoms make up one universe, with one supreme and controlling Power that unifies all, and uses all for its own higher purposes.

Why should it be thought a thing incredible that the personal God, who presides over the spiritual universe, should, in the carrying out of his gracious and beneficent purpose in the world, bring to bear certain laws and forces of the spiritual world, which, for the time, supersede, or bring into subjection, the lower forces? As a matter of fact, we know that man does this by the superior intelligence which he possesses. He does not violate any natural law when he makes water run up hill, or flashes intelligence around the world, but he brings to bear other forces higher than those which ordinarily operate, for the accomplishment of what he believes to be a desirable or worthy end. If man can do this, it ought not to trouble those who believe in a personal God to understand how he, with the infinite forces under his control, might here and there, through history, at such junctures as infinite wisdom might select, bring to bear a higher law or a spiritual force, which would produce an event or an effect which would have been impossible under the operation of ordinary forces.

We apprehend that the root of the difficulty, after all, is the full recognition of a personal God, immanent in the world, using it and controlling it in order to realize, at last, his wise and gracious purposes. Unless we come to understand that the Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, has not abdicated his throne to a vicegerent, which we call natural law, and that this law is but the outgoing of his infinite will, we are liable to stumble at the supernatural. But with that fact granted, it is not hard to believe that here and there, both in the realm of nature and of grace, he has brought to pass events which find their only possible explanation in the exercise of his holy will in bringing into operation spiritual forces which have dominated the material in carrying forward that orderly development which marks the history of the earth and of mankind.

The proper place to begin with what we call the miraculous element in the Bible, is Jesus Christ. One who attempts to account for Christ on natural principles, ruling out the supernatural, will find himself, as thousands of others have found themselves in similar efforts, attempting the impossible. Jesus Christ is a sublime fact that rises above the natural order, and demonstrates the reality of the spiritual universe and its intimate connection with our earth and with humanity. But if the supernatural manifests itself indisputably in the history and personality of Jesus Christ, for the purpose of effecting the salvation of man, it ought not to be thought incredible that it should have manifested itself in less degree whenever and wherever, in God's wisdom, it seemed necessary in order to accomplish the same end. In other words, the appearance of Jesus Christ on the stage of human history, with the sinless character which he manifested, with the supernatural power that characterized his deeds, with the supernatural wisdom that marked his teaching, with his submission to crucifixion for our sins, when he might have successfully resisted all opposing forces, his resurrection from the dead, his ascension on high, his sending the Holy Spirit, together with all the glorious and indisputable series of events which have resulted from these facts, is such a manifestation of the spiritual universe, and of God's infinite concern for human welfare, as to make credible every well-attested record of miracle or sign which has a part in the great unfolding and carrying forward of God's purpose in history.

In view of this series of Christian facts to which we have referred, what is more reasonable than to suppose that God was preparing the world for this manifestation of Christ in the history of his chosen people, and that this history should bear the marks of his supernatural guidance and power? And so when we come to study the miraculous, or supernatural element of the Bible, in the light of Christ and his gospel, it ceases to be an offense to reason or an obstacle to faith, but is seen to be the necessary and inevitable out-flowing of superhuman wisdom, power and grace, for the accomplishment of divine aims and ends.

The Saving Faith.

"Only believe." The words are in the New Testament. The phrase is the burden of a popular revival song. It is the exhortation of hundreds of evangelists and ministers of churches of importance. This kind of faith-salvation has been wrought into literature. The phrase has become a shibboleth of a propagandism that even fails to take account often of the general confession wherein we are told "we have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and we have done those things which we ought not to have done."

There is a saving faith. The jailer at Philippi was told: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Jesus himself used an expression of similar import when he said, "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." These and other scriptures teach there is a saving faith. But the modernists use the phrase without grasping its meaning. They limit it in its scope and give it a universal meaning where there was a special application. For, if we examine all the scriptures, "faith alone" is dead; therefore to "only believe" must fall short of a saving faith. James tells us distinctly that faith without works is dead. The saving faith is one that leads to surrender and obedience, and any other kind of a faith or belief is not a saving faith in the New Testament sense. The jailer believed, but his faith went forward into action, and the same hour of the night he was immersed. When those who were converted in their hearts on the day of Pentecost wanted to know how they could be saved Peter did not tell them to "only believe"; they were also to "repent and be baptized." Christ himself put faith and obedience together: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The faith that saves is not one controlled by the misunderstanding, ignorance or prejudice of man. If God in his wisdom and goodness can make allowance for all these we must not cheapen our manhood by minimizing in any way the easy conditions which he has given whereby we may co-operate with him in our own salvation and lay hold on him by faith in, and obedience to, and life in his son, Jesus Christ.

Notes and Comments

The best apologetic for the Church of Christ is evangelism—a sane evangelism. A religion in practice is a religion believed. The best way to cure doubt is to save souls.

Presbyterians are asking for their boards this year as follows:

"Home missions, $1,200,000; foreign missions, $1,650,000; college board, $200,000; ministerial relief, $250,000; publication and Sabbath-school work, $220,000; church erection, $150,000; education, $125,000. The Freedmen's board should have $200,000.

In another place will be found a final word from Brother Todd concerning his paper on "The Evangelism for the Times." It is proper, after all that has been said pro and con concerning this paper, that he should make the statement which he does. It is natural that the paper should have received some criticism, but we have received many more commendations than adverse criticisms. The spirit of the paper was entirely misapprehended by some of its critics. It will be observed, from Brother Todd's statement, that The Christian-Evangelist was not the only paper that desired Brother Todd's address for publication. One of the staff of the "Christian Standard," who heard the paper read, commended it in high terms, and wrote two or three letters for the manuscript before he secured it. This was entirely creditable to its journalistic taste and enterprise.

Dr. H. L. Willett recently gave a lecture on Old Testament miracles to his class in the University of Chicago, which is, no doubt, giving him more notoriety than he anticipated or desires. The secular press likes to get hold of statements of public men that will create a sensation. Dr. Willett's lecture was of that kind, judging from newspaper reports. When a preacher or lecturer of distinction undertakes to point out exaggerations and legendary elements in the Bible, and to call in question its miraculous features, he is sure of an audience on the part of the newspapers. We have learned to be cautious in accepting newspaper reports on such subjects as accurate accounts of what was actually said, but it seems reasonably certain, from various accounts and reported interviews, that Professor Willett has either reached some new conclusions with reference to the miraculous element in the Bible, or that he has not exercised his usual caution in stating his position. In an editorial elsewhere we deal with "The Miraculous Element in the Bible," which presents a point of view from which we have no difficulty with the supernatural, either as a possibility or as a probability, when God's purposes require the manifestation of such extraordinary power.

When Dr. Willett declares that "no man has the power to change the laws of God for the government of the universe" he is hitting a very fragile man of straw. That is something very different from affirming that the God who controls all forces, material and spiritual, and whose will is the law of all realms, may, at any time he sees proper, so use these higher forces as to overrule what we call the natural order. The professor is quoted as expressing the belief "that some of the New Testament miracles may yet become clear through the discovery of science." Must we, then, wait until science has shown us how Christ was able to perform these miracles before we can accept them on the authority of those who were specially qualified to give us a report of His sayings and doings? This is not the way of faith; it is rather the way of one who is seeking to walk by sight or by knowledge, rather than by faith. If Professor Willett accepts the fact of the ressurrection of Christ—the most stupendous miracle of the New Testament, unless it be Christ's own personality—without waiting for science to shed light upon the question of how it was possible, why should he withhold his acceptance of other reported miracles of Christ until science has illuminated them? We dare not, it seems to us, deal with the miracles of the Bible, and especially with the great facts and deeds in the life of Christ, on this principle.

We regret these reported utterances from our scholarly and talented Brother Willett. We are sure he is conscientious in uttering them, and believes that in so doing he is relieving the Bible of some of the difficulties which it presents to certain minds. While crediting the sincerity of his motives, we can not think that he has reached a finality of judgment on these difficult questions. It would have been better, in our judgment, for him to have postponed any deliverance on the matter of the supernatural element in the Bible until his own mind had reached a degree of certainty of conviction, which it is evident, from statements attributed to him, he has not yet attained. If faith must wait on science for its gospel, then we have no gospel nor can we have. Science has never shown us, and never can show us, the secret of the incarnation, nor explain to us the marvels of Christ's power and wisdom and goodness, nor reveal to us the mystery and meaning of the cross, nor make clear to human reason the sublime facts of His resurrection from the dead, and His ascension to the right hand of God.

Current Religious Thought

"May the Lord have mercy on the pessimist! I wish such might live by themselves on a Robinson Crusoe Island. I would be one to do their baking and mend their 'duds' and let them stay. We sometimes sit in silence with such people, for a pleasant remark will bring forth a snub, and I just like to 'talk back.' I have often wished that I had a house in a tree-top like that rheumaticky man in Washington, who experimented to escape his malady."—Lily Rice Stahl.

"Happy is that minister who can truly say: 'My church is not my field: it is my force. I am not required to confine my energies to it; I have the joy to work through it.'"

"A 'Liberty League,' composed of saloonists, wholesale liquor dealers, and drinking people, is about as complete a piece of unintentional satire as has ever been perpetrated. The pretense by these interests that they are struggling for a 'principle' when everybody knows that it is for their trade, is so hollow that thoughtful people will not be deceived."—Southwestern Presbyterian.

The length to which many people have gone in imitating the school girl's expressions of "the sweetest thing" kind is creating a distaste in many quarters. For instance in the "Herald and Presbyter" we find the following editorial:

"The 'Texas Baptist' notes the disposition of certain evangelists to 'overwork the superlative.' Every big meeting is 'the biggest.' Every town is 'shaken to its foundations.' 'The Standard' thinks that this is not confined to evangelists. Even pastors and laymen of fervid temperament have been known to overstate facts by too liberal use of terms which find expression only in the superlative degree. A scant use of adjectives is an evidence of strength. The positive statement of facts may be weakened by placing them in comparative terms. A 'great meeting' may have all the elements of greatness, but when it is 'greater' than another it at once has entered the arena of competition. When, however, it is the 'greatest' meeting ever experienced it must be surpassingly great and eclipse all previous records.

"Some use the superlative of other things than meetings. We have known ministers damaged by over-enthusiastic friends who could only express their appreciation by superlatives. We saw a letter only a few weeks ago which described a minister as 'the best preacher, pastor and all-round man in the state.' The letter did no good, and possibly did harm. It fell into the hands of a pious and sensible, but rather slow-going and matter-of-fact elder, who said: 'Bosh, I know him. He is a good man; but the best in the state, not much.'

"The 'Standard' thinks that even some preachers fall into the habit of talking in the superlative, in order to emphasize facts or convince people that the Lord is doing great things in their fields. Sometimes people who love their pastors magnify their work or devotion in this way, but no truth or fact is more truthful, or is more firmly established by covering it with superlatives. On the other hand, the force of a fact is often diminished by magnifying it too much, and the veracity or good judgment of the narrator is apt to be called into question. If a pastor is a good preacher, he need not be the 'best preacher in town.' If some pastors serve upon hard fields they are not called upon to advertise a lost cause by notifying the world that they have the 'hardest fields' known. Congregations have a way of growing in some instances to greatness and superlative bigness without tangible demonstration of increase. "It is usually safe to go no further than positive statements. The man who has come to the use of superlatives has reached the limit of his power. When greatness and renown are dependent upon adjectives for support, they are easily overthrown by simple facts. Superlatives belong only to the superhuman.'"

Bishop Potter, whose death we recorded last week, used to relate with gusto a story about a high caste Unitarian minister of Boston who, upon being welcomed by the Apostle Peter at the celestial city, put up his eyeglass and, surveying the inhabitants, turned to Peter and said: "It's rather a miscellaneous collection, is it not, your reverence?"

Says the sprightly Dr. J. B. Gambell: "Far be it from us to deny to any Baptist the right to raise a fuss; but we would insist that some rights should be used sparingly, and all of them wisely."

"If we would save our nation from the danger of a fate similar to that which befell the Hellenic republics more than 2,000 years ago, we must have a fresh baptism of political idealism. * * * The demand of the age is for reconstruction of a reasonable religious faith. Whoso can build it anew on a basis which neither physical science nor historical criticism can assail—him I shall regard as the benefactor and helper of our time."—J. G. Schurman.

"The churches of all denominations are, at this season, enjoying the ministrations of strangers, and the result seems to be salutary. The daily journals find it worth while to give room on their editorial pages for comment on this subject, and one representative observes that the great field of religion affords room for countless diverse views, all of which may be enlightening and ennobling; therefore the habit which has grown up in this city and elsewhere in recent years in inviting distant preachers to supply the various pulpits during the summer is an excellent one. On the other hand, some members of the press express the view that, when a church affords an opportunity to its minister to give himself a time of recuperation, he should improve it, to the strengthening of himself for the discharge of his obligations at home, and that the fee paid to these already well-paid ministers, if given at all, should be given to their less favored brethren in the ministry. Among the laity there is observable not a little bitterness rightly or wrongly, at the prevailing custom of pastors abandoning work in their own field to minister to some other field—or 'graft,' as it is sometimes ungraciously put. But the alternative would seem to be no vacation for the pastor, which would be hard, or no preaching for the church during his vacation—unless, indeed, laymen could be drafted for that service, which, perhaps, would not be a bad idea."—Examiner.

If we could just see ourselves as others see us! Here, for instance, is how Dr. Lincoln Hulley sees some things in religious work and workers. Of course, it does not apply to all. But any man might examine himself by its common sense standard. Pride is what ruins or prevents the best success of many a man. Says Dr. Hulley:

"A good many ministers imagine that they are teachers who are not. They mistake fluency and fervency for intelligence. A man must be a thinker as well as a talker. He should be able to concentrate rather than ramble. A good many preachers are in their anecdotage. They spin yarns and call that preaching the Gospel. The teaching element is wholly lacking, and the anecdotes have as little gospel in them as the higher criticism.

"Nearly everywhere one finds Christian people hungry for the Word of God. The minister scolds because they don't come to church, although he has nothing but skimmed milk to offer them. They want meat, and don't even get good milk. The minister may be using methods that don't work any more, and telling stories that are no longer fresh, and, having no resources to draw on, is altogether flat and stale.

"Too many men go into the ministry without resources and without disciplined minds. Education gives both. The man who does not have them makes fun of them. He affects to rely upon the Holy Spirit, and affirms that the other man relies on his brains and books. The man with brains and books may have just as much of the Holy Spirit as the man without them. There is no inherent reason why he should not. Brains and books are not against the Spirit of God. There is nothing so arrogant as ignorance. It plumes itself and prides itself as having more of the Spirit of God because it is ignorant, and certainly, of two men having the Spirit of God, the man with brains and books is the better equipped. That is why our young ministers ought to be educated. The twelve disciples went to the greatest seminary in the world, presided over by the Man of Galilee."

The "Liberals" are perpetually urging a Creedless Church upon men as the ideal condition and final goal of Christianity. That will easily resolve all difficulties, settle all differences, and speedily bring in the day when the theological lion and the religious lamb shall lie down together. Principal Forsyth has lately given his view of the Creedless Church in words that Christians, especially Protestants, will do well to ponder. He says:

"A church of free thought would be no church at all, but the most sectarian of sects, and the most scholastic of schools. There is something almost boyish in the aggressive use of a pulpit for a free-thought propaganda. What is certain, if the history of Christianity proves anything, is that, without the theology of an atoning cross, criticism of Christ or laudation of him gets the better of worship or even reverence; Christian faith can not survive; and Christian ethic has no foundation in God. Subjective faith can not last without objective. Faith as a frame of mind can not endure without a faith in which to believe. We must always have what our fathers had—the grace of God, its ground in Christ, and its grasp in faith. If the world's moral need were ever driven to choose between a rationalized, sentimentalized Protestantism and Rome, it is to Rome it would fall, because of the objective and evangelical element which rationalism destroys but which Romanism only perverts. If Protestantism is to live on, it can only do so by a maintenance of those dogmatic principles which are so strong an element in Roman-Catholic ascendency. A creedless church must, sooner or later, turn out a dead church."

Least of all should American Christians permit themselves to be beguiled by such proposals from the "Liberal" camp. In the experiment of New England Unitarianism they have had absolute demonstration that a Creedless, Crossless Church is a "Dead Church."—The Bible Student and Teacher.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

The summer night has a music and a charm different from, but not inferior to, those of the day. There is a stillness about the night, when the wind goes down with the setting sun, that brings out into distinctness the quieter voices of Nature. The stars, too, seem to shine out of the deep, far-away heavens like angel eyes watching over a sleeping world. To-night their radiance is somewhat dimmed by the half-full moon, whose silvery beams lie upon lake and land. The subdued music of the waves breaking along the shore is the only sound that breaks the stillness of the night. How many deeds of darkness have been hatched and executed under cover of the night! And yet there is much in its silence and shadows, in its mystery and majesty, to awaken the soul to solemn and serious thought. It has a ministry for the soul as well as for the wearied body. It invites to meditation as well as to repose. In its deep stillness it summons the soul to the bar of its own judgment, and causes to pass in review the scenes and incidents of the day. Eternity and the spiritual world seem more real to us under the awe-inspiring mystery of the night than in the garish light of day. Conscience, with its still, small voice, may be heard now when the hurry and bustle of the day have given place to the stillness of the starry night. Who can gaze up into the stellar depths at God's infinitude of worlds and not feel rebuked for all his vanity and self-conceit? How it broadens, too, our conception of God to realize that he whom we call Father is Creator and Lord of all those shining orbs that keep their nightly vigils in the far-away spaces in which they move! Sing on, O lake, your song in the night, and shine on, you gentle stars, and you shall minister to other souls as you have ministered to ours, with your power to soothe troubled hearts, and to call the mind to higher and holier thoughts!

All night the lake has sung its song, and with the dawning of the day it has increased in volume under the influence of a stiff, cool breeze that sweeps down from the north. The atmosphere is crystalline this morning, and the shore-line stands out with distinctness for fifteen or twenty miles on either side. Out on the bosom of the great lake "the stately ships go by," some under steam, with a line of smoke marking their course, and others under canvas, with their bellied sails standing out against the line of the horizon. Speaking of the clear crystal air reminds us of what we have before mentioned, that up here on the lakeside we seem to be able to see with greater distinctness, not only material objects in the distance, but also questions which relate to our present and future well-being. We have found it a delightful practice, in the early morning hour, when everything is still save the voice of the lake and the whispering of the wind through the pines, to read the Sacred Writings which have come down to us across the centuries, sanctified by the religious experiences of so many of our race. We are particularly fond of reading the Psalms, at such times, for there always seems to be a beautiful harmony between the spirit that breathes in these ancient hymns of Israel and the scenes and sounds of Nature. One can readily believe that many of these great songs were written amidst the scenes of Nature, for there is in them the roar of many waters, the deep reverberations of thunder, the gentle ministry of falling rain, the brightness of the shining sun, the majesty of the high-vaulted heavens, with their starry hosts, spring, with its young life and beauty, summer with its harvest and heat, autumn with its decay, and winter with its treasures of ice and snow. Surely with these psalmists the God of Nature was the God in whom they believed and trusted, as a help in every time of need.

Among other books which we are reading during the summer is Andrew Fuller's "The Full Blessing of Pentecost." This well-known writer on spiritual themes and author of many books, lays stress upon a phase of Christianity which, we fear, is too much overlooked by many Christians of to-day. One need not agree with all his exegeses or interpretations, but he can hardly fail to feel the stimulus of his devout spirit, and to experience an increased desire to be "filled with the Spirit," as Paul exhorted the Ephesians; or, as he states it in another place, to be "filled with all the fullness of God." These are the high and sublime ideals of the Christian life which, though they may never be fully realized, should be constantly sought as the real end of our personal salvation, and as the means of being more effective in the salvation of others. What preacher, what church official, what private member, if he be sincere in his Christian profession, has not yearned for greater usefulness, for greater power and success in awakening in others the sense of sin, and their need of salvation? Is it not clear that the New Testament remedy for this conscious inefficiency is a larger measure of the Divine Spirit, fitting us for service in Christ's kingdom? There is an easy-going optimism with reference to our own spiritual state that is equally as fatal as pessimism in its effects on the soul. The man who is not occasionally startled into something of alarm over the discovery, in his own heart, of the presence of thoughts, desires, ambitions and aims which are inconsistent with Christ's ideals, is, perhaps, not looking beneath the surface of things, and needs to pray, with one of God's saints of old:

> "Search me, O God, and know my heart;
> Try me, and know my thoughts;
> And see if there be any evil way in me,
> And lead me in the way everlasting."

Another book which, on the suggestion of a friend, we are reading, is "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," being the Lyman Beecher lectures on preaching, Yale University, 1907, by Dr. P. T. Forsyth. If any of our preachers have missed the volume, they would do well to secure it and read it. Later we shall publish a review of it, but our purpose now is simply to call attention to it as a book for the times. It is a refreshing thing, in these days, to read after a man who carries his positive faith, which is the ancient faith, along with a modern mind—that is, a mind that is aware of all that modern research has discovered in its bearing on faith and the religious life. It takes such a man to speak to this age with the greatest profit. If one has no positive message, no strong grasp on great fundamental truths of the gospel, no matter what his learning may be, his speech will be as "a sounding brass and a clanging cymbal." But if he have faith, and is yet unacquainted with modern thought, while he may do good in a limited circle, he can not carry his message with convincing power to the questioning thought of our time. Learning, in its highest reaches, and in its widest scope, never seems half so valuable as when it is wedded to a profound faith in God, in spiritual realities and in the gospel of our salvation. In such a union Christianity finds its highest expression, and makes its strongest appeal to the human heart and conscience. Dr. Forsyth's emphasis of the cross of Christ as furnishing the key to history, and to any proper understanding of the Bible, of man, and of God, is especially commendable. To miss that central fact, is to doom ourselves forever to an inadequate conception of sin, of salvation, and of the infinite grace of God in Christ.

Our population here at the beach is now at about its highest, though there is room for several others, and the weather is at its best. The cool, bracing days, and the cooler, starry nights are a tonic to tired nerves, and whet one's appetite to its keenest edge. Speaking of appetite, reminds us of the strings of fish brought in yesterday from the pier by men, women and children—enough to serve the tables for several days. Mrs. T. P. Haley is one of the most successful and enthusiastic fishermen on the beach. Brother Haley has been suffering with one of his periodical rheumatic attacks, but is much better at this writing. Prof. Richard B. Moore and his wife arrived a few days ago from London, where they have been spending some time, and Paul Moore, Assistant Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, is expected this forenoon. Bro. F. P. Arthur and family are now at their new cottage on the hill south of us, in Garrison Park. A very pleasant and happy surprise was given them a few evenings since on the occasion of their twenty-third wedding anniversary. Some of their friends here at the Park presented them with an elegant lamp for their new cottage. The presentation was made at an informal social gathering on the front veranda of the Moore cottage, "The Inglenook," and Brother Arthur responded in his usual happy vein. Brother George A. Campbell, of Chicago, addressed the union meeting at the Methodist church in the morning and Bro. F. P. Arthur at night. There were good audiences at both meetings, and the discourses were much enjoyed. We hereby extend a cordial invitation to any of our friends who are thinking of joining our summer colony here to visit us, if possible, during the present month, if only for a short time. It takes only a few days in this fine air, and amid this beautiful scenery, to give one an incurable longing to return for a longer sojourn here amid the pines and hills, and fronting the great lake with its marvelous sunsets, its varied tones and colors, and its unceasing song of praise.

The Voice of Yesterday

By

Jessie Brown Pounds

A poem read at the Hiram Home-Coming, June 24, 1908, Hiram, Ohio.

One night as sunset fires burned low,
I mused upon the long ago;
The voice of the sad whip-poor-will
Brought back the past of Hiram Hill;
Each passing breeze a memory woke;
Each fluttering leaf some dear name spoke.
They came, whom we thought far away,
Beyond our touch or call to-day;
They came, whom we have long called dead
Their favorite paths again to tread.

About me faces crowded fast—
The eager faces of the past,
In glory of immortal youth,
With eyes whence leaped the quest for truth,
And wistful lips, which seemed to say,
"We are not dead, nor far away"—
Sweet girls, in whom the prophecy
Of future Edens seemed to be;
Brave boys, with youthful arrogance
Demanding sway o'er circumstance.

"You are not real," I told them then;
"You live in realms beyond our ken,
In shadow, not in substance. O!
Were you but flesh and blood, I know
What bursts of joy would greet you nere,
What acclamations and what cheer;
What were the sudden throb and thrill
Should all come home to Hiram Hill."

"But we are real," with one voice
My guests made answer. "We rejoice
With our successors; evermore
Our lives in theirs we still live o'er;
Their failures and their conquests share,
And this the word we to them bear:
'Be true! be true! be steady-eyed,
Unswerved by passion or by pride;
O, you who front the day, be true,
And fail not, lest we fail with you!"

They faded with the sunset glow,
These visions of the long ago.
When twilight closed the whip-poor-will
Had hushed his song, and all was still.

A sadness on my spirit pressed;
"O yesterday, O true and best,
Would I could call you back," I said,
"O yesterday, whom men call dead!"

Then, issuing from the twilight shade,
A figure came, and on me laid
A hand—a figure, stately, tall,
The face grave, and yet sweet withal.

"My name is Yesterday," so said
My stranger guest. "Men call me dead,
But they mistake. I live for aye,
And never very far away.
For evermore in ministry
I walk among the things that be,
Not as an alien far aloof;
Sometimes I speak in stern reproof,
Sometimes in warnings, thundered loud
To one, but noiseless to the crowd;
Sometimes in yearning tenderness
My memories on men's souls I press.

"You call for me, and I am come,
But better that my lips were dumb
Than that, in coming, I should say
No word of blessing for to-day.

"Still lives the College on the Hill,
And in her I am living still;
What is her mission to an age
That scorns the poet and the sage;
That measures service to the race
By standards of the market-place?

"What was her mission long ago?
But this: To bid her children know
What highest Self lay hid in each,
What utmost power of deed and speech,
What heart of hope, what strength to rise,
What godlikeness of sacrifice.
Her lesson then that none need fear
The taunts that reach the outer ear;
But that each dread, more than the death
Which merely stills the mortal breath,
The awful voice which speaks within—
The scorn of his own Might-Have-Been.

Ah, well they learned the lesson then!
When drums beat out the call for men,
It reached the patriot souls that knew
Here was their summons to be true.
Mere boys—the most of them—were they,
In the first rosy flush of day,
Called from the schoolroom to the field.
Their all, unquestioning, to yield;
Theirs was life's all in little space—
Not living at life's even pace,
But all the passion and the power
Called out and spent in one brief hour.

For them, the march, the homesickness,
The battle's awful strife and stress,
The sudden charge, the storm of fire,
The one wild, longing, death-desire
For home and friends; then, stilling all,
The patriot's joy in duty's call.
For them, perchance, the death-trench bed,
Unmarked, save by the stars o'erhead;
The common grave of those who give
Their names and lives that truth may live.
In dying, as in living, still
True to the truths of Hiram Hill.

And not for these alone the good
Incarnated in herohood;
For bravery through the weary years,
Through disappointment and through fears,
By passion's bounding pulse unthrilled,
When youth's expectancy is stilled,
Is braver none the less. For some
There came no call of beating drum;
But ever, o'er the world's mad din,
The still small voice that speaks within.

Some, in the nation's councils high,
Have scorned to speak a seemly lie,
Have scorned to purchase worldly gain
At price of their own soul's disdain.
They, with their faces toward the light,
Have dared dispraise to do the right,
Their lips in noble utterance still
Brave with the speech of Hiram Hill.

"But, ah!" you say, "not all have thus
Bequeathed a heritage to us.
Some failed in the hard test of life;
Some trailed their colors in the strife."
True, and it evermore must be
Their chief reproach, that they shall see
The vision of their nobler part,
And hear the censure of the heart.
Thrice punished, that false Lancelot
Who sees the gleam, but follows not,
Who bears, to bid his knighthood quail,
Remembrance of the Holy Grail.

But what of those who follow on
The path heroic souls have won?
What of to-day, and those who yet
Their mark upon the world shall set?

For them, hear thou the word I say:
There never yet has dawned a day
But needed nobleness e'en more
Than any age which went before.
If men were true before, sublime
To serve as well a newer time,
Men's faith and sacrifice must be,
Would they the newer time set free.
Upon the victories of to-day
To-morrow's selfishness will prey;
Does Science to new treasures lead?
Her footsteps mark the path for Greed;
To guard the past, the present must
Be victor over Mammon's lust.

Not easy to be true, you say?
No,—never harder than to-day;
This is the age of haste and gold;
Men hurry to be rich and old;
Because the time is short, they waste
Its treasure, with the sluggard's haste.
They laugh at nim who stays to sip
The honey from the clover's lip;
"Go to!" they cry; "The way wears on;
Get gold before its hours are gone!"

This is the day for prophets. "Lo,"
Men cry, "What is, but what we know?
What know we, if we see it not?
We know that poor man's lot,
For this we see. We know that gold
Buys ease and comfort. This we hold
As gospel: Let us drink and eat,
For we must die, and life is sweet."
Oh, for the prophet lips to teach,
And prophet-lives of nobler speech!
For those who see with mystic's eyes,
Through changing clouds the changeless skies,
And hear, above the storm's wild roll,
The sybil voices of the soul.

Beloved College on the hill,
Do thou thy mission still fulfill;
Discover to thy children yet
The world that God in each hath set,
And bid them all, where'er they be,
Be true to Him and true to thee!"

* * * * * *

The figure vanished. Darkest night
Encompassed me. But, clear and bright
The North Star shone. So thou dost still Shine on, O College on the Hill,
And far astray we ne'er shall be,
While we shall fix our eyes on thee!

SERMONETTES.

C. F. Ladd.

The mission of the church is missionary.

It takes more than a white tie and a long-tailed coat to make a Christian.

The Church of Christ is not a mutual admiration society.

Some folks won't march if they can not head the procession.

Reader, has it ever occurred to you that as a Christian, you have something to do? Are you doing it?

You can not be a Christian on the installment plan.

Every Christian should practice his profession.

Evangelism for the Times By Earle Marion Todd

It was to be expected that the delivery at one of our national gatherings, and the subsequent publication in a leading religious journal of an address frankly critical of any tendency among us would arouse some feeling and call forth some expressions of resentment. We are not fond of criticism of ourselves, especially by one of ourselves. We are still painfully self-conscious. But when criticism touches on evangelism, and suggests that there are grave faults that want remedying and reactionary tendencies that want checking, and hints that we are in danger of losing our pre-eminence in that department of Christian enterprise unless we adjust our methods and message to the altered conditions of our time, it is touching perhaps the most sensitive spot in our denominational anatomy, and most men will think twice before they are guilty of an act of such temerity.

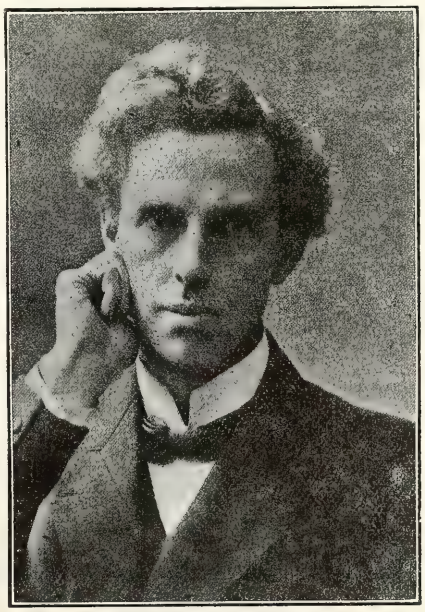
The present writer did think twice and more than twice. But he was profoundly impressed with the need for straightforward speaking on this vital theme. There was much discontent among the churches and pastors. Many of the churches were abandoning all special evangelistic effort, not because they could afford to dispense with it, but because they had had a dose of the wrong kind. Pastors were hard put-to to secure the services of an evangelist who would project and carry through his campaign in accordance with high spiritual and intellectual ideals, and were unwilling to make a compromise in these respects. The competent and conscientious evangelist, like the careful motorist, was made to suffer on account of the blunders of the ignorant and unscrupulous. The situation is clearly put in a paragraph in an English journal just to hand this week. Referring to an address on "Why Some Ministers Fail," by "the popular American touring evangelist," Mr. Sunday, the writer says:

"Mr. Sunday's outbreak has raised the whole question of professional evangelism in America, and seems to be stimulating a spirit of suspicion such as now exists in England with regard to the real value of the contributions made by organized evangelism to the Kingdom of God."

In these circumstances, and feeling that there was ground for dissatisfaction with some features of popular evangelism, and room for anxiety as to the effect of certain types of evangelism on our general work, I felt that what was needed in the interest of evangelism itself was frank and perhaps somewhat thoroughgoing criticism. But it must not be the criticism of an enemy of evangelism and evangelists, but of one who profoundly believed in evangelism as the primary function of the church, and who, because he believed in it and loved it, desired to save it from tendencies that would inevitably destroy it, and with it the movement which it existed to serve. It was in this spirit that I wrote, and I have no occasion to regret that I wrote as I did.

I would like here to enter my protest against the assumption that any thing in the whole range of our Christian activities is exempt from honest and thoroughgoing criticism. Criticism is a servant, and its function is to serve the highest things. A thing may be too mean or too insignificant to merit criticism, but it can never be too great or too holy. Frank criticism is the highest compliment that can be bestowed on any individual or institution. Praise may be hypocritical in its professions of admiration—is perhaps more often hypocritical than otherwise—but criticism is a never-failing mark of respect, and constructive criticism is one of the truest services that any man can render the Church of Christ. I will put up my Bloomington address, severely critical as it is, against the high-sounding eulogies of evangelism of some of our writers, as a testimony to my devotion to evangelism and regard for the good and worthy evangelist.

I could have wished that there might have been some serious criticism of the address by those who do not agree with its positions, but nothing of the kind has come to my notice. It has been hinted that I was not qualified to speak on the subject—that I had to speak from hearsay, and that I wholly misrepresented the facts. As has been pointed out editorially in this paper, the address was first prepared for the New York State convention in June, 1907. It was the secretary of that convention, himself a most competent evangelist, that asked me to give the address and to make it critical of our evangelism, and he gave as the reason for his request my wide acquaintance with our own evangelism as well as with evangelism in general. When J. V. Updike was alive and in his prime, he and I were co-laborers in two of the most successful meetings—one in Kansas and the other at the University Church, Des Moines, of which I was then the pastor. I have loved few men as I loved J. V. Updike, but I was not blind to his faults—faults that were serious enough then, sixteen years ago, but that are infinitely more so to-day, as they are reproduced and accentuated in his successors. From the memories of those meetings I got some of the material for my Bloomington address. Since then I have labored with other of our leading evangelists and have at one time or another heard most of the rest; I have carefully watched their methods and have noted the development of certain tendencies with no little solicitude as to the outcome. I have read all that has been written among us on the subject that has come under my notice, and have talked with pastors and evangelists of all shades of opinion in order to get their point of view. I have studied the question also—and this is most important—from the point of view of the non-church-goer. The result was, as noted above, the deep conviction of the need of frank criticism, resulting in the address which is now under discussion. So far from condemning wholesale our evangelists, I have simply condemned practices—practices that are in more or less general use by some of our evangelists, and that are looked upon with apprehension by all the more spiritual and intellectual portion of the brotherhood, and that are unwillingly submitted to on the part of many of the churches in a spirit of praiseworthy self-abnegation, because they would do nothing to hamper the evangelist in his work. All that I have said has been in the interest of the worthy evangelist, and only those whose practices are indefensible, and who are unwilling or unable to do evangelistic work in harmony with the higher spiritual and intellectual ideals that prevail to-day, have any occasion to feel aggrieved.



Earle Marion Todd.

The fact of the matter is, we are at the parting of the ways. Before the end of the second decade of this century our evangelism will either be the best in the world—as it already is in some respects—or it will be the worst in the world; the best if, with the incomparable New Testament evangel, it realizes that the twentieth century is not the nineteenth, and sets itself to the new tasks of the twentieth century; if it insists on the highest standard of character, refusing admittance to the brilliant pulpiteer who has recourse to evangelism because his reputation is such that it is impossible for him to remain long in one place; if it insists on deep spirituality and high intellectual training; if it sets its face like a flint against the non-rational; if it eschews denominational evangelism wholly; and if it antagonizes the things, and the things only, that make for a degraded manhood and womanhood;—the worst in the world if it fails to recognize the evil of certain pronounced tendencies, and allows them to develop and bear their legitimate fruit.

It has been objected to that a pastor should have been asked to present such a paper at the congress and it has been urged that only an evangelist (professional) is competent to speak on such a theme. But this feeling is not shared by the better evangelists. They know that an evangelist does not remain long enough in a field to see the real result of a meeting; he knows only by hearsay the effect of his message and methods on the church and the community. The pastors are the only ones who know what popular evangelism is doing for the churches, and the kind of evangelism that will meet the demands of the times.

The reception of my address has been favorable beyond anything I could have hoped. One brother, indeed, an evangelist not personally known to me, but of whom I had formed a favorable opinion, writes me that I will not live long enough to wipe the stain from my record, and assures me that he is praying that I may have a change of heart, which he thinks I need. But this is exceptional. The almost unanimous feeling both at New York and at Bloomington was that the criticism was a timely one. And since its publication I have received letters from north, south, east, and west, from both preachers and laymen, expressing similar sentiments. The "Christian Standard" has been especially anxious to secure a copy of the manuscript for publication in their columns, writing many times about it, and assuring me that they were with me for better things.

It is to be hoped that before the "breeze" subsides we may yet have some frank writing about the issues that have been raised; it can not fail to be fruitful. But in concluding this paper, I beg leave to suggest two problems for our consideration and solution, and I will let two of our evangelists state the issue in their own words. The first is from the private letter to me above referred to; the second is the opening sentence from an article by Herbert Yeuell in the "Christian Standard" of June 27, and which, I suppose, was intended as a reply to my address, though Brother Yeuell does not do me the honor to mention either me or my address. But here are the problems:

Problem I.

"I will confine my statements to our own people. There are five times as many evangelists in the field to-day as we had ten years ago. Five times as many revivals are being held. Not only so, but five times the number of people in each revival are being brought to Christ. Evangelism was never so popular, never so efficient, never in such demand since the days of the apostles."

Five times the number of meetings, and five times the number of converts in each meeting, gives twenty-five times the rate of increase. Problem: Why, ten years ago, were we increasing at the rate of 84 per cent per decade, whereas to-day, with an evangelism (as alleged) twenty-five times more efficient, we are barely holding our own?

Problem II.

"That there is a growing antagonism toward modern evangelism is proved from the fact that a large number of churches of all denominations are trying to do without protracted meetings. There is an increasing tendency among scholarly ministers against employing the services of an evangelist to assist them in the art of increasing the membership of their churches."

Problem: Ascertain the cause of this growing antagonism.

A little thinking along these lines can not but be fruitful of good. I am far from insinuating that the whole responsibility rests with evangelism; only the superficial and self-sufficient pastor will be unwilling to accept his full share of the blame. But the problem is the problem of the day with us. It is a problem of life and death. It is no time for bandying words, as some seem disposed to do, but for hard thinking and sincere heart-searching. It is a problem that will not be solved without pain and humiliation on our part.

No doubt the Hand that has guided us through the other crises in our history will guide us through this.

Manchester, N. H., August 1, 1908.

THE CHURCH AND MEN

The Address of which we print this week a second installment was read at the Tenth Annual Congress of the Disciples of Christ, at Bloomington, Illinois.

By Arthur Holmes

Religious and Educational Work Secretary of the Pennsylvania R. R. Y. M. C. A.

(Continued from last week.)

The Employers' World.

A little closer study of the employe class seems to break it up into wage-earners and others. The "others" includes salaried employes, principally clerks. In their social alignments and sympathies they are so closely allied with the employer class that their minor differences must be overlooked. Farm hands, too, go unconsidered.

The employe's world is usually comprehended in the labor problem. On that account much confusion has arisen. This appears in a recent writer, who, after remarking the alienation of the masses of the church, says, "If the alienation be radical, we should seek the cause either in the fundamental teachings of the religion or in the principles of organized labor." (Ibid, above). Simple indeed would be the problem if this were true. The bare statement that not 25 per cent of all workingmen are enrolled under the principles of organized labor is sufficient to point out the fallacy of it. Workingmen and labor organizations, on the one side, and Christian religion, the Church and the Bible, on the other, must be kept distinct.

The world of the toiler can be considered in its economic, social and personal, or psychological aspects, the last dealing with the laborer's thoughts and feelings.

His economic world is like that of the employer, but on a lower plane. His life is a battle, too, but a battle not for a fortune, but for bread. Competition is keen. Jobs, good jobs, are few and applicants many. In the last census (1900) the number found to be unemployed at some time during the year was 6,458,964, or 22.3 per cent of all workers over 10 years of age, engaged in gainful occupations. Thirty-nine per cent of the male workers were unemployed, or 2,069,546 persons were idle from four to six months in the year. These figures are for the country as a whole, and for all industries, including agriculture. In manufacturing alone the unemployed rose to 27.2 per cent of all the workers. ("Poverty," by Robert Hunter). The constantly employed is given as 50.19 per cent. Success under these conditions goes to the man of brawn, of physical skill and bodily health.

Since co-operation is at present only partial and affecting only the establishment of wage-scales, the workingman's motive is individualistic. He must look out for himself. He must hold his job against all comers, however true his pity may be for unfortunate toilers. That he does pity them is shown by the most beautiful flower of all human love, the charity of the poor to the poor; a charity turned into brotherhood by the alchemy of equal destitution.

As Maurice Hewlett says:

"Only the poor love the poor,
And only they who have little to eat,
Give to them who have less."

Of such charity the Christ may well say:

"He who gives himself with his gift, feeds three, Himself, his hungry neighbor and me."

As his motives are economically individualistic, so his ambitions are for material things. A good house, good clothes, good food, a bank account are the hopes which still act as the chief spur to many. The par excellence of attainment is to live as his employer does. Why not? Is not this possibility for every man America's chief boast? Is not such success everywhere lauded to the sky? The Carnegies, Vreelands, Westinghouses and Schwabs are his models. Their ideals are his ideals.

Beyond the economic world lies the social one which has been fairly studied in late years. The writings of the Socialists, Robert A. Wood's "The City Wilderness"; Peter J. Roberts' "The Anthracite Coal Communities," the Hull House Papers, studies of the government Bureau of Commerce and Labor, of the two Van Vorsts, Wykoff, Spahr, Simons, Sinclair and others, through fact and fiction, have painted a fairly accurate picture of the workingman's exterior. How he lives, eats, sleeps and works have been described too often to need detailed repetition.

The inner life of the workingman has been but little studied. He himself has neither the ability nor the time to analyze his thoughts or emotions and set them in delectable literary form. Attempts by others to perform the task have usually taken the form of fiction. Scientific investigators are stopped on the threshold of the toiler's soul. The feelings of a freezing and starving Wycoff with only his own will between himself and a table d'hote dinner, and the feeling of a bona fide workingman with a starving family at home, are as similar as the pains of a fasting monk and those of a soul eternally damned. A Miss Van Vorst may describe the work-places of factory girls, but as long as she is stayed with the knowledge of a little bag of gold dollars safely sewed up for an emergency, she can not fathom the heart of the girl out of work, alone on the streets, halting between the blackness of the river and the brilliancy of the great white way.

Yet the emotions of the working people are the sources of their actions oftener than their environments. Here it is that religion must make its appeal, must find its lodgment if anywhere. To us what a workingman thinks, and most of all what he feels, become questions of weighty importance.

I wish time and ability would permit me to draw an accurate picture of the workingman's character. Lack of both compel a mere suggestive touching of these silent, but I believe fundamental, states.

The first is pride. He is proud of his physical strength and despises clerical weakness; proud of his manual skill, and discounts book-learning; proud of his productions as something practical, useful and concrete, and unappreciative of intellectual or spiritual accomplishments, theories or dogmas. A job well done gives him a feeling somewhat akin to that of an artist. He has produced something. Where nothing was, now something is, and he beholds it and knows it is good. To impress him it must be something concrete, something valuable,—a stone wall, a house, and a machine.

The second is egoism. His greatest longing is to individualize himself. This, taken with his pride, becomes vanity. It breeds jealousy of his fellowmen and suspicion of any paternalism or patronage from other social classes. He feels himself as good as any man. This has been the stumbling block to well-minded philanthropists and employers. The welfare work planned by them has received but scanty gratitude from the recipients. The word of a writer in the "Outlook" (March 7, "Letters from a Workingman") are worth quoting: "There is one thing about the Super that we admire hugely. He never makes a splurge about social welfare work." . . . "He hasn't introduced any kindergartens or day-nurseries, . . our boys would resent anything that seemed like paternalism. Somehow, that's the temper of the American workingman. He hates like the mischief to feel like anybody owns him, or is trying to baby him. Comparatively few workingmen would have anything to do with a plan which seemed to have back of it the spirit of patronage or paternalism."

Then to this he adds another motive, suspicion: "Somehow, it seems to the fellows that when a firm is too good about such things they must have something up their sleeves, and sooner or later it will come out. It is too much like a 'con' game, you know. We have been taken in so often that we are mighty suspicious of anything that seems like special favor, out of which the boss isn't going to make more than we get out of it" (p. 553-4).

Examples of this are the piece-work system, the southern cotton mill school buildings and teaching coupled with a contract demanding the services of children over eleven in the mill. No wonder a strike occurred in a factory noted the world over for its welfare work. The independent wage-earner bitterly resents any paternalism as breeding, on the one hand, house servants, and on the other hand divinely appointed custodians of the world's wealth.

This same suspicion makes him alert to any shams in those who preach to him. Such keenness can not be fooled. No superficial reasons will suffice. No pretensions will escape. The man who stands before the workingman is naked, though he be thrice locked up in the steel of complacent superior knowledge, manners, dress and breeding. Before him are men taught to be humble and to look blank, but who are sharper than any two-edged sword piercing to the dividing of the bone and the marrow. I can never forget my trying to lead the singing at a shop meeting, and after the first verse did not go well, attempting to gloss over my deficiencies by saying, "That was not very good singing. I don't know what is the matter to-day." Immediately I was stricken dumb by a sixfooter calling out from a back seat, "We got a bum leader, that's what's the matter!"

I believe that this is the chief reason, too, why the average workingman has not wholly swallowed our hair-splitting theology. Questions of the trinity, theories of atonement, sectarian claims, fine points of exegesis, since they do not affect his daily life, he good-naturedly passes on to the doctors of divinity, being sure that they can find much in them to talk about.

He is firm in his belief in God, in the divinity of Christ and his matchless goodness, in a hereafter where justice will be meted out to those to whom the church imputes righteousness as well as the rest. Usually he does not believe in a hell of perpetual torment, unless it be for the rich and hypocrites. Mixed with his religion is much superstition, due, of course, to his ignorance; and a general fatality, due, probably, to his helpless condition in society. His theology conforms more to the new than to the old, to the moral view of the atonement than the legal; but it must contain mystical elements to help out his short-paced reasoning powers. A "judgment of God" is an easier explanation of sudden death than the study of sanitation or hygiene.

This desire for individuality receives its hardest blow from the method of modern production. A man becomes a part of the machine. He is merely a means to an industrial end, an atom, a number, a unum quid. Before him drags out the years of hopeless monotony. Nobody who has not gone through it can understand the feeling of pouring out one's precious personality in one long, drab round through unending years, months and days, making the same motions, doing the same few things.

One writer tells this: "A vagrant whom I once saw had for five years made two movements of his hands each second, or 23,760,000 mechanical movements each year, and was, at the time I knew him, at the age of thirty-five, broken down, drunken and diseased, but he still remembered his period of slavery sufficiently well to tell me that he had 'paid up' for all the sins he had ever committed 'by those five years of hell'" ("Poverty," p. 228).

If anyone asked me for the most common cause of workingmen's vices I would say "monotony." If you conceive man's emotions as a pyramid, you can imagine that monotony reduces the finer and higher ones and leaves only the lower and meaner ones. These are crude and sensual. Only gross excesses will appeal to them. The temptation to a hilarious spree becomes understandable. Sexual passions are not checked by other richer feelings. Broad jokes and melodramatic plays attract him.

This may be contrary to the former fashion of easily assuming that all the workingman's woes were due to his intemperate drinking. That day of superficial sociology has passed and sufficient unto it was the evil thereof. To-day it may almost be said that workingmen are as temperate as any other class of people. Reports by Carrol D. Wright go to show that the average workingman's family spends 25 cents a week for liquor. As one-half of the families investigated reported no expenditure for drink it would leave 50 cents a week as the amount spent by the drinkers. Only one quarter of one per cent of idleness is charged to that source. This is due (a) to the increased intelligence of men on this point, (b) to the heavy penalties laid upon the drinker by employing firms and corporations. For the workingman the day is gone, when, to be a first-class mechanic, he must be a large consumer of whiskey. The oft-heard formula, "He gets drunk, but he is a mighty fine mechanic," assumed the force almost of a cause and effect relation. It has been proved essentially untrue. It is further due, too, to a better understanding of drinking. Now it is believed that poverty is a cause of drinking as well as drinking a cause of poverty. Long hours of labor, worry, bad cooking, insufficient food, badly kept homes, no social out-let,—all of these are looked upon more in the light of causes of drunkenness than results, especially in making drunkards of young men.

The third characteristic is his ambition. I have already said that he is ambitious for material things. To get rich is an American birth-right. All the glamour of gold is not confined to the poor immigrant. The American working-boy feels its glow and dreams of riches as a maiden does of her prince charming. His first rude awakening comes when the fact is discovered that riches in this country are for the few only; that 1 per cent of the people own 54.8 per cent of the wealth, that 38.1 per cent are poor, and 50 per cent more are very poor all the time. ("Poverty," p. 45).

If this former ambition to become rich now smoulders to the mere ember of getting a living, what must be his horror to find further that about 4,000,000 people in this country are already dependent upon the public for relief, and that his own family can never hope to be more than two weeks from destitution. ("Poverty," p. 2.)

The constant dread of losing his job becomes a lively torture. No toiler, no matter how skilled, is certain of escaping that. In a moment, without warning, without regard, without feeling, the terse, implacable "notice" may read to him the heart-sinking doom that his place, his livelihood and that of his family are gone.

"Modern life," says Mr. John Hobson, "has no more tragical figure than the gaunt, hungry laborer wandering about the crowded centers of industry and wealth, begging in vain to share in that industry and contribute to that wealth; asking in turn not the comforts and luxuries of civilized life, but the rough food and shelter for himself and family, which would practically be secured him in the rudest form of savage society" ("Poverty," p. 32).

In two weeks he faces want. The one most dreaded specter of his life—pauperism— has found him at last. To make merely a living has been humiliating; to be forced on charity is against nature, monstrous, hateful beyond contemplation, or crushing to suicide.

To quote from a charity worker, "The decision to apply for public aid is perhaps the greatest crisis in the life of the poor. Hundreds and hundreds of men at such times leave their families and become vagrants. I have known many men to whom the ignominy and disgrace of receiving public charity was worse than death" ("Poverty," p. 72).

Out of this disappointment, out of a thousand petty persecutions, slights, ignorings, comes the most constant feeling of workingmen, their sense of oppression and injustice.

Such is the American workingman, not the semi-vagrant, semi-pauper, semi-loafer, but the man of family, with a stout body and a brawny arm, with skilled hands and a keen mind, diligent, upright, emotional, unreasoning, temperate and moral above the lowest or the uppermost classes, once simple and enthusiastically ambitious as a child, now driven by a warped egoism, cowed with a terror of being out of work and forced on charity, with a soul raw by countless injustices, and poured around all a gray and melancholy waste of ignorance on the simplest problems and values of life. Yet such men form the stable element in America's national life; they wear out in its industries, they die in its wars; they make its homes; upon their shoulders are borne its weight of toil and taxes; upon their hearts are branded its sorrows and sufferings.

ALMOST A SHADOW

Gained 20 lbs. on Grape-Nuts.

There's a wonderful difference between a food which merely tastes good and one which builds up strength and good healthy flesh.

It makes no difference how much we eat unless we can digest it. It is not really food to the system until it is absorbed. A Yorkstate woman says:

"I had been a sufferer for ten years with stomach and liver trouble, and had got so bad that the least bit of food such as I then knew would give me untold misery for hours after eating.

"I lost flesh until I was almost a shadow of my original self, and my friends were quite alarmed about me.

"First I dropped coffee and used Postum, then began to use Grape-Nuts, although I had little faith it would do me any good.

"But I continued to use the food and have gained twenty pounds in weight and feel like another person in every way. I feel as if life had truly begun anew for me.

"I can eat anything I like now in moderation, suffer no ill effects, be on my feet from morning until night. Whereas a year ago they had to send me away from home for rest while others cleaned house for me, this spring I have been able to do it myself alone.

"My breakfast is simply Grape-Nuts with cream and a cup of Postum, with some times an egg and a piece of toast, but generally only Grape-Nuts and Postum. And I can work until noon and not feel as tired as one hour's work would have made me a year ago." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

New Orleans, Our Convention City

By W. M. Taylor

In Order to See and Appreciate New Orleans Properly Our Delegates Should Know Something of Its History.

It is in the heart of this great world metropolis that the Disciples of Christ are to gather in our International Christian Missionary Convention next October 9-15, and it behooves us to gather in such numbers and to bring such a spirit as will mark a new era in the religious history, at least of this city, which is destined to exert a great influence over the whole world.

"The First French Colony."

The First French Colony was founded on the shores of Biloxi Bay in 1699 by Iberville, a Canadian of French extraction. Meanwhile his brother Bienville sailed down the Mississippi to its mouth, where the French fleet was moored. Before reaching the mouth he met an English vessel under command of Captain Bard. The captain told him that he was examining the banks of the river to select a good site for an English settlement. Bienville told him that the French had already taken possession of the country and made it a dependency of Canada. Captain Bard then turned around and sailed to the Gulf.

"The Petticoat Insurrection."

Among the early arrivals in the French Colony founded by Iberville and Bienville were twenty young girls who were sent by the King of France to be married to the Colonists. In 1706, these girls becoming indignant at being fed on cornbread, held the first public meeting of women on the American Continent. They threatened that if things did not improve they would return home at the first opportunity. In a few days they were placated and remained loyal and faithful wives. The uprising is known in history as "The Petticoat Insurrection."

"The Founding of New Orleans."

Noting some unsatisfactory features in the location of the Biloxi Settlement, and dreaming of a great port near the mouth of the Mississippi River, in 1718 Bienville determined to select a more suitable site for the capital of the colony. Taking with him fifty picked men, he came upon the site of the old deserted Indian village "Houmas," which was located 110 miles from the mouth of the river. Here he decided to build his city. He called it New Orleans, after the Duc D'Orleans, who afterwards became Louis XIV of France. It was in 1723 that New Orleans was made capital of the colony. The same year the infant city was visited by a hurricane that lasted three days, utterly ruining the crops and destroying many houses and the shipping in the harbors. Many of the settlers were so discouraged that they desired to leave New Orleans. But Bienville persuaded them to remain and rebuild the city.

"The First Declaration of Independence."

In 1763 Louisiana was ceded by France to Spain. The colonists bitterly resented the cession and sent the first Spanish governor back to his country; then the most influential citizens rose in revolution against Spain and declared the independence of the colony. This was the first declaration of independence on American soil.

"New Orleans a Dependency of Cuba."

Spain sent a fleet and 2,600 picked men to punish the conspirators. LaFreniere, the leader of the revolution, met a mysterious death while on board one of the Spanish ships, and five of his companions were sentenced to be hanged; but not a man in the colony could be found willing to act as hangman; finally these men were shot and the other conspirators were sent to Havana and confined in Moro Castle, and New Orleans was made a dependency of the Island of Cuba.

"Reconciliation and Amalgamation."

The next Spanish governor was Don Louis Unzaga. He completely won the colonists; he married a Creole lady, and the officers of his court and army also married Creoles. Finally the reconciliation and amalgamation of the inhabitants became complete, and both French and Spanish worked in harmony for the up-building of the city; and their efforts were augmented by the coming of many wealthy and titled refugees from San Domingo.

"Ceded Back to France, Then to the United States."

The first of October, 1800, a secret treaty was concluded between the King of Spain and Napoleon Bonaparte for the French Republic. Napoleon, being at that time in war with England and fearing that New Orleans would be seized by that power, ordered his ministers to enter into negotiations with the United States. The negotiations resulted in a treaty which was signed at Paris in 1803 by which France ceded Louisiana to the United States; and when Napoleon was informed of the treaty, he made the celebrated remark, "This accession of territory strengthens forever the power of the United States, and I have just given to England a maritime rival that will, sooner or later, humble her pride."

The American government took possession December 20, 1803, just a few weeks after the retrocession of Lousiana to France; the people bitterly resented being sold "like a lot of cattle," and appealed to France, but Napoleon was too busy changing the map of Europe to pay any attention to them.

Louisiana was admitted into the Union April 30, 1812, as a state. On January 8, 1815, General Andrew Jackson and his band of Creole and American soldiery won a famous victory over the British on the Plains of Chalmette; this great conflict is called the "Battle of New Orleans."

"Under American Regime."

With the American domination a marvelous period of prosperity began. Ancient barriers were demolished, forts torn down and the city spread away up and out beyond her original limits. Differences growing out of trade arose between the Creoles and Americans, and the latter built an American city above Canal Street; the greatest rivalry prevailed between the two sections of New Orleans, but as time passed on, Creoles and Americans, seeing the necessity of union, laid aside their differences and reunited under one municipality.

In 1861 Louisiana seceded from the union; in 1862 New Orleans surrendered to Admiral Farragut, martial law was declared and General Butler was put in command, this condition continuing until the close of the struggle. New Orleans suffered greatly during the war, her commerce was destroyed and for many years after the war business was at a standstill, but revival of trade began twenty-five years ago and progress has been astonishingly rapid ever since.

New Orleans, spread out over an area of 195 square miles, has a population of nearly 400,000, has the best street car system in America, is spending $25,000,000 in municipal improvements, her docks accommodate ships from all over the world, she is leading the markets of America in sugar, cotton, rice, and fruit, and is advancing rapidly in all lines of export and import trade.

ON THE CROSS.

ELMER ALLEN BESS.

O his human heart was crying
From the depths of bitter grief,
That the Father had forsaken,
Or declined to send relief!

And our human hearts have heard him,
And, because they feel the same,
Call that grieving soul our Master,
And revere his sacred name.

Hearts akin may find a courage
In the sorrows both must feel;
And, because his soul has suffered
Poignant pains to others real,

We can call him Lord and Master,
And obtain his faith to bear
What our earthly crosses offer,
And our woes divinely share.

EXHAUSTION
Made Worse By Coffee Drinking.

There's a delusion about coffee which many persons not necessarily chemists only, are fast finding out.

That exhaustion from long hours of hard mental or physical work is increased by the reaction of coffee, rather than relieved, is a well-known fact. A prominent music professor found the true state of the coffee evil, and also the remedy. His wife tells his experience:

"For over thirty years my husband taught music 6 days a week and 12 to 14 hours a day. None too robust, such constant work made a drain on his strength so that he was often quite exhausted by Saturday night.

"He formed the habit of drinking strong coffee regularly with his meals. Occasionally when he did not have his coffee he would suffer from headache, nervousness and weakness. This alarmed him and me also, for we feared he was becoming a slave to coffee.

"About that time we heard of Postum and decided to try it. At first we did not like it, but soon learned it should be boiled 15 minutes after boiling commences, and when served hot with cream and a little sugar, it was a drink fit for kings.

"My husband found he was gaining in weight while using Postum. He was rid of constipation, his headache disappeared and his nerves became strong.

"Now at 61 he is still able to work at teaching, selling instruments or superintending the farm, and can out-work many younger men.

"He has never gone back to coffee and says he never will. Recommending Postum to other is one of his hobbies. We are happy to say all our children drink Postum and are fond of it."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich., Read, "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Gleanings from the International S. S. Convention

One of the principal addresses at the International Sunday-school Convention, was that of M. A. Hudson, of Syracuse, N. Y., founder of the great men's Baraca Sunday-school class, which counts a membership of 300,000 grown people. Mr. Hudson spoke upon his favorite subject of "Adult Bible Class and Soul Winning." Three years ago in Syracuse, where he was a prosperous merchant with three large retail stores, he sold out his business to give his life's work to the Sunday-school movement without salary. Seeing what great good might be accomplished through determined effort he organized the first, or mother, association of Adult Bible Class Workers, which has since grown at the rate of 100,000 members a year.

Went Right After Them.

Mr. Hudson spoke at length upon his subject, and his address was listened to with great interest. He told of his founding of the Baraca class, and of how the inspiration had come to him through a knowledge of the fine results that were obtained through slight effort in interesting men in Sunday-school work. He said that he made the problem of getting men into the work his life's business, and that he did not merely issue invitations to them and stop, but he "went after them."

"To be literal in delineating the kind of work we did," said Mr. Hudson, "we simply never allowed a man to rest until he did join. Failure was a thing unknown, and a thing we would not accept. Upon the first day we send one of our men out to see a prospective student; he is urged to join our class. From that day until the day he joins our class we send some one to see him. He never gets a moment's rest until he does join, and then we can so interest him in our work that he will in turn become an ardent 'canvasser' and will visit his friends each day until they also join.

Tenacity of Purpose.

"We say to these men, 'Come join our Bible class.' We find them in the banks, or in their offices or on the street. The man replies, 'No, much obliged; this is my rest day, and I'm going to see the ball game this afternoon.' Then we tell him, 'Well, we are going to have you sooner or later, so you might as well come in now.'

"Again the next day we call and see him; maybe we make an impression in the first few days, but if we don't we keep right on after him. Later, as soon as we enter the door of his business house his companions will say laughingly, 'Might as well join, Brown, there's no getting away from it.' Then Brown succumbs and becomes a life-long, active worker. The next day we send Brown back to see his companions, and they, too, are visited until they join.

"Once the men are inside the work they never quit, and they become so interested in the great work as it is carried forward on its magnificent scale that they will do anything for the movement."

Mr. Hudson then told of how the work is carried on in the classes. Work, he said, is the thing that keeps all the thousands of members actively interested. They are appointed to the different branches of it, become a part of it and will no longer forsake the Sunday class for a ball game or any other attraction. His hearers were greatly impressed with the remarks of the founder of the great Sunday-school movement, and by special request a pantomime illustration of the working of such a class was given in the Warren Memorial Church which was one of the most enjoyable features of the day's program.

The Baraca class was seated in the front pews of the church while the big banks, factories and stores were situated in different parts of the church, and emissaries were sent out to visit them from the class and to bring the members in.

A Whole Village in the School

How men get men: "We're going to have you sooner or later, so you might as well come now."

"Bad Men" Run Out of Town.

In line with the magnificent work carried on by the big Adult Bible Class Movement, the address of D. H. Marbury, of Birmingham, Ala., who told of "How An Entire Village Was Won for the Sunday-school," was one of the most enjoyable features of the day. Mr. Marbury's remarks were most interesting as well as amusing, as he told of how in reality every man, woman and child in a small village of 351 inhabitants in Alabama had been brought into the Sunday-school. The only one individual that the Sunday-school was unable to procure as a member was run out of town.

"We had the only church in the entire village," said Mr. Marbury, and we were determined that that one church should, in one respect, be the greatest in the world. We decided that we would have every man, woman and child in the entire village become a member of the Sunday-school in that church.

"At first we had much difficulty. Many of the residents of the town advanced the same old excuses that have been worn out years ago. But we kept steadily to our work, and one by one they came in.

"At last, only one man in the entire town remained who would not attend the Sunday-school; we used every means available to have him join, but he would not, whereupon we decided to make our record complete and have him join anyway.

Surround His House.

"One Saturday night we took every male resident of the town and surrounded his house. After the first hours of early dawn we awaited his coming from the house anxiously, but the gentleman had received word of our intended coup and had seized the opportunity to spend the day in fishing. Balked by this move, we were undaunted.

"Preparing for the next Sunday we set guards over his house Friday evening, when he was seen to enter, and there we waited until Sunday morning, so we could go in and get him and take him to Sunday-school. The gentleman remained in close seclusion until Sunday morning, when we went into his house and hauled him away to the church to attend his first meeting.

"He didn't like this at all, and finally things became so unpleasant for him that he left the town, when our record was complete."

The audience hugely enjoyed the story of the kidnaping of the remonstrative individual and voted the village of Alabama a great success in procuring workers.

Protestantism in Mexico

New York, August 8.—In a report made public to-day of the work of the American Bible Society in Mexico during the past fiscal year, the society's agent relates that one of the most notable features of the present development of Mexico is the growth of religious tolerance. In June, says the report, "over six hundred Protestants of all denominations gathered in Guanajuato for a Convention of Sunday-school Workers and Young People's Societies.

"Thirty years ago Protestant missionaries were stoned and driven out of this same city of Guanajuato, and one may still see the house in which they were besieged for a whole day and night before they were rescued by government troops.

"While the convention was in session the visitors received only courtesy on every hand. The governor of the state permitted the convention to visit in a body the historic old prison, 'La Alhondiga,' from whose parapets, ninety-seven years ago, dangled the heads of the patriots who fought with Hidalgo for their country's freedom.

"The governor also met and cordially welcomed a committee from the Young People's Societies, sending a pleasant message to the convention, and expressing the desire to possess a collection of the essays and discourses which might be presented during the sessions.

"All of which goes to show that Protestantism and religious liberty are making great strides in Mexico; and one of the potent factors in this progress has always been the work of the American Bible Society."

One of the very extraordinary events of the year, continues the report, was the renunciation of the Catholic religion by Senor Antonio Valiente y Pozo, a Spanish priest, who is now in the ministry of the Methodist Church South in this city. La Imparcial, probably the most widely read of all the Mexican dailies, published an interview with him the other day after his sermon of renunciation. I translate part of the interview, whose publication in a secular paper was rather remarkable.

Being asked what led him to take this step, Senor Valiente replied: "I commenced to study the Bible and to discover the difference between its teachings and those of the church. I tried to rid my spirit of the doubts that assailed it, but they were so many and so serious that I was obliged to analyze them in order to banish them. I struggled against my conscience and against inherited religious beliefs, because my parents were Catholics. At last I comprehended that the truth is in the gospel as found in the Bible, and not in Romanism."

The fact that all this could be chronicled in a Mexican daily paper, to be read by thousands of Catholics, indicates a prodigious change in public opinion in this city. Protestantism in Mexico is now a factor to be recognized and reckoned with. Thousands of the younger people of this city and the republic in general are being brought up in the Protestant faith, and religious tolerance is becoming something more than a name.

HEATHENISM UNDER THE SEARCHLIGHT

We reprint herewith some extracts from a most interesting book which W. R. Hunt, one of our missionaries at Chee Cheo, China, has published, through Morgan & Scott, London, and the Christian Publishing Company. Price $1.00.

Star Signals.

There is in the Chinese schools a legend current to the effect that Confucius, in China, at least 500 B. C., had prognosticated the imminent advent of a deliverer, and that later disciples were sent in search of the celestial sign. The famous sentence in the Classics quoted in support of this "unconscious prophecy" reads: "Among the peoples of the Western regions, there is to appear a sage." It is not considered seriously by most sinologues, though many of the disciples of Confucius, including the Emperor Ming of the Han Dynasty, construed it to mean Buddha.

In the first book of Mencius, there is another striking passage which reads: "We have waited long for our Prince (or Son of Heaven). His coming will be our reviving." It is a strange coincidence, too, that the very last word or hieroglyphic used for "reviving" is the same generic character used in the Chinese language to signify the name of Jesus—the Restorer, Reviver, Giver of life, and Redeemer of the race.

Girl for Sale.

A girl of sixteen, and of pleasant appearance, whose parents recently died, offers to sell herself, in order to raise funds to provide for their burial in becoming style.—Apply, etc.

Such cases are numerous. It is not an abnormal condition in the social and religious life of the people. But it is a sad commentary on the rude delusions as well as the painful devotion in which these votaries of crude forms of religion command our sympathetic attention.

The little children live in dread of the pictures of the Buddhist hells shown by the mendicant priests—exhibiting regions with lakes of blood, hills of knives, mortars for grinding sinners, tongue-pulling instruments, bridges of snakes, cauldrons of boiling oil, saws for cleaving bodies asunder, villages of wild dogs, and beds of serpents. Such a priest—a man?—stripped of all his disguises could not be placed anywhere in Christendom without his being looked upon as a monster, or as a curiosity.

Spiritual Bloodhounds.

Again, the native press is a great formative factor. It is alive to the fact that China is in a great transition stage. It is advocating the sending out of "spiritual bloodhounds" to seek a new religion; and, moreover, it is highly favorable to the synthetic attitude taken by Japan in regard to what the future religion of the state shall be. The Chino-Japanese rationalistic and anti-dynastic literature is, unfortunately, liberating forces which it can not control. Ideas are gaining ground among the millions of students, that a powerful state can be maintained without God. Nothing can so effectively riddle this false situation with shafts of light, as a sound, safe, and scientific Christian literature.

Only a recent issue of a native newspaper contained the following forcible statement by one of the young reformers. He said: "If the eyes and ears are open, reliable information can enter; and if the heart and brain are exercised, proficiency will result. The ears and eyes are the foreign periodicals; the heart and brain are the colleges; and the circulation is the railway."

Chinese Surgery.

The chief surgical instrument of the Chinese physician is a long needle, which, sometimes heated, sometimes cold and infected, he thrusts into various parts of the body where the evil spirit causing the disease is supposed to secrete itself. Into liver or neck, knee or elbow joint, it is thrust, setting up irritations or abscesses, or rendering the part forever stiff. A sick person may have prescribed a piece of human flesh, cut off from the body of a slave-girl or other person. A filial child may willingly donate to a sick parent this piece of flesh either to be eaten or plastered on to the diseased part. Friends and neighbors with all the humdrum of beating gongs and incantations will gather around a sick babe, and by screaming seek to drive away the evil demons thought to be causing its convulsions. The babies of the poor are strapped to the backs of their older sisters, and the little eyes face the sun all through the glare of the day. Dust, dirty washcloths, and the presence of specific diseases, do the rest to rob many a child of sight almost before it begins to see.

Superstitions and Absurdities.

Certain acts have a prescribed value. Merits and demerits are assigned. Buying a coffin, setting free birds, fish, crabs and shrimps that are offered for sale, are all rewarded. Destroying books of false religions, gathering up scraps of printed paper, will bring good luck for a thousand days

He who uses lettered paper to kindle a fire will have ten demerits and itchy sore legs. He who burns it in a filthy place, twenty demerits, sore eyes and blindness. Levelling a grave is punished by fifty demerits; digging up a corpse by a hundred; killing a male child by two hundred. Nothing as said about destroying unwelcome girl babies. The list of rewards and punishments goes on ad infinitum.

Should a fire occur, the unfortunate loser is beaten by the official for carelessness, and is not allowed inside any other house for three days. The "fire devil" has to be avoided. Should the vicitm be able to convince the magistrate that it was a "heavenly fire," caused by a fox spirit, etc., etc., he may then avoid a beating, and possibly have his house turned into a shrine or a temple. In a drought or a flood certain city gates are closed. If there is great heat, the "south" gate which rules the "fire element" is closed; if floods destroy crops, the "north" gate which controls the "water element" is closed. The elements must be kept in equipoise, or heaven and earth might collapse.

"Calling back the soul" is a weird and vague idea. By rivers and ponds, over city walls, and by doorsills, voices day and night moan and call to the souls to return to the bodies of people who are sick or demented. Some eat a "charmed" egg, decorate and carry a bird to the Chen Hwang Miao—or God of the City Temple—and ask at the ten departments of Hades if the soul is detained there, and pray that it may folloy the perfume of incense back to the home.

Recently an official astronomer was whipped with bamboo for a miscalculation. When gambling, or about to gamble with cards or dice, the family order the eyes of the idol to be covered up until the game is over. A god that is cunning enough to see through their cheating would not be tolerated. Upon a missionary remonstrating with a heathen for burning paper money, and all the paraphernalia at the grave of a departed relative, the mourner motioned him to be silent, saying: "Hush! that stupid idol doesn't know any better. Do you think we'd be so foolish as to put in genuine coin?"

Chinese Customs.

There is no courtship in China. Brides do not see the faces of their bridegrooms until after the ceremony is over. Sometimes the bridal trosseau is worn for three days and three nights. During this time a genuine exhibition of modesty demands that the bride keep her eyes closed for three days.

The Chinese eat rice three times a day. They ply their chop-sticks as dextrously as we do knife and fork. To them our use of the knife is barbarous. At table superstition enters in, and the places are appointed with regard to signs, age and direction from which guests come. The head and hairdress are peculiar. They do not seem to realize that the queue is the badge of servitude forced upon them by the conquering Manchus. Moustachios are not worn until the man is over forty years of age. Married women have the hair pulled out over the forehead. At a glance you can tell whether a woman is a maiden, engaged, or married. The elite cultivate long finger-nails. Some of them are eight inches long; at this coveted length they are encased in a silver or bamboo shield which runs up the sleeve. Funeral services are costly, and are held in highest esteem. Filial sons will present aged parents with a beautiful coffin, which is often kept in the guest room in the house. Incense burns around it night and day to keep away evil influences. When a person dies, the body is elaborately dressed and paper money is piled in the coffin. This pays the way to Nirvana, bribes the spirits, and wins soul-rest.

The children in school read and study aloud. Each tries to outdo the other in shouting; the prevailing idea being the greater the noise the deeper the impression on the stomach. The intellect is located in the bowels. The schoot terms for the year in some village schools read thus: "Ten bushels of wheat, ten bushels of fine wheat, a picul of salt, twenty pounds of pork, a keg of wine, a gallon of hemp-oil, two pounds of sugar, a bunch of incense, and a congratulatory packet of sweetmeats."

Some of the Oriental customs are as fascinating as they are peculiar. Their politeness is extreme and often wearisome. One of the happy things about greeting is that friends shake their own hands. Hats are kept on as a mark of respect in calling. No one would think of presenting his or her own card. Spectacles are taken off when addressing the guest. Women and girls will not sit on the other end of a bench where a man is sitting. Should a guest enter the room, they retire. In the mission churches the men and women are separated by an aisle; often a red screen hangs between. There is no flirtation in the mission churches. Asking a few girls to sing in the church choir would be an irreparable insult. In many mission schools, however, this hypersensitiveness and false modesty is being overcome.

Some of their customs appear to us to be childish in the extreme. For instance, an old man can sit for hours enjoying flying his musical kite. If for no other reason than that the music of its horn can please the spirits of wind and air, he seems to revel in its rest and leisure. The theater is as sacred as the church. Both men and women smoke tobacco and opium. A man will kill himself to spite his neighbor. Policemen, soldiers, and sailors carry umbrellas while on duty.

Our Budget

—Remember the Annual offering for Church Extension begins Sunday, September 6.

—It pays to make the money, which God has trusted us to use, do perpetual service in our Church Extension Fund.

—Our Church Extension Board has helped to build over seventy church homes since last October. The Board expects to make its best report at New Orleans.

—Last year 1416 churches, as churches, sent offerings to the Church Extension Board. There ought to be a great increase this year.

—We are indebted to C. H. Winders for his admirable report of the Indiana State conventions. Brother Winders was for eleven years at the seat of the State University of Missouri, and he now occupies the pulpit at another important seat of culture, and we hear very enthusiastic reports about him.

—The country church will have large space in our next issue.

—It is time to make your plans for the New Orleans convention.

✣ ✣ ✣

—A new minister at Rock Rapids, Ia., is Harry M. Stribeck.

—E. H. Hart, of Williamson, W. Va., is ill with typhoid fever.

—The Oklahoma Convention will meet at Shawnee, August 24-28.

—Sherman Kirk has been supplying the pulpit at Ft. Smith, Ark.

—The brethren at Morehead, Ia., are being served by John Hankin.

—G. W. Ogden has organized a teacher training class at Dotham, W. Va.

—McPherson and McKinney begin a meeting August 5 at Ladonia, Tex.

—M. M. Smith reports "peace" in the little congregation at Cookville, Tex.

—The church at Granger, Tex., needs a minister. Address A. D. Reeder, clerk.

—A storm completely wrecked the Christian church at Richland Springs, Tex.

—Frank L. Van Voorhis, of Shawnee, Okla., will assist in a meeting at Edmond.

—A great missionary conference is to be held at Alliance, O., beginning August 15.

—The church building at Mystic, Ia., is being improved with an outlay of over $2,000.

—G. N. Weaver has moved from Breckenridge to Timpson, Tex., where he formerly labored.

—E. S. Bledsoe closed his work at Red Oak, July 12, and now finds a broad work at Big Springs, Tex.

—Herbert Smith, pastor of the church at Follansbee, W. Va., is making a summer visit to England.

—It is reported that a new church building will be the result of Charles E. Freeman going to Cherokee, Ia.

—C. F. Martin, of Overton, Neb., will close his work there September 1 to attend Cotner University.

—The church building enterprise of the congregation at El Reno, Okla., goes forward slowly but surely.

—The church at San Antonio, Tex., is preparing to erect a modern building. A good lot has been secured.

—The North Park Church of Indianapolis, where Austin Hunter ministers, will put in the foundation for a new church edifice this fall and put up the building early next summer.

—J. S. Hawkins, of Prior Creek, Okla., closes his work there with August for further educational advantages.

—J. G. Slayter, of Pittsburg, Pa., recently gave an address to the teacher training graduates at Canton, O.

—A very happy occasion at Charles City, Ia., recently was the supper given to the ladies of the church by the men.

—S. W. Brown and wife leave Kansas to assist in the music, Sunday-school work, etc., at University Place, Des Moines.

—Evangelist H. G. Bennett, who has been in Canada for some months, will conduct a tent meeting at Bushnell, Ill., this month.

—At Chester, Nebr., the corner stone of a new church building has been laid, J. E. Davis, of Beatrice, delivering the address.

—There was healthy optimism at Florence, Colo., where Walter Carter reports growing audiences and deepening interest.

—The Northeast District Convention will meet at Cedar Falls, Ia., August 25, 26. The new church there extends a royal welcome.

—The Northwestern Texas camp meeting is in session at Ruth, August 1-16. Randolph Clark and J. T. McKissick are the preachers.

—H. H. Saunders, late of Kingfisher, Oklahoma, has gone to Vancouver, British Columbia. B. L. Allen, of Olney, Ill., has succeeded him.

—The San Marcos camp meeting is now in session at Trenton, Tex. A. E. Dubber and J. T. Ogle are two of the strong men taking part.

—H. E. Knott, of Des Moines, has taken the place of S. J. Mathieson, who had to give up his work at Las Animas, Colo., by reason of ill health.

—Charles A. Chastain has been asked to take the work at Oak Cliff, Dallas, Tex., in September, when Egbert R. Cockrell returns to his University work.

—Otis Hawkins and his congregation at Lake Charles, La., have engaged Hamlin and Daugherty for an evangelistic campaign to begin immediately after the convention.

—"We believe in keeping busy and that lends to interest which is the life of an organization." According to M. L. Crossley this is the secret, in part, of the success at Nelson, Neb.

—The West Virginia Convention will be held at Clarksburg, September 15-18. Among the outside speakers in addition to national secretaries will be A. E. Cole and Crayton S. Brooks.

—Walter P. Jennings, by the courtesy of his congregation, has been taking hot baths at Marlin, Tex. It will be remembered that he was in great danger from appendicitis some time ago.

—There is lumber on the ground for a new building at Risel, Tex. A meeting was just held there under a large brush arbor. There were twenty-one additions and J. H. McWhirter was the evangelist.

—The "Colorado Christian Herald" suggests that the convention for 1910 should go to Denver, which now has one of the greatest assembly rooms of the country with acoustics that are almost perfect.

—W. S. Johnson, late of Estherville, Ia., recently delivered a sermon at the Chautauqua there which was characterized by the editor of the local paper as a very fine one and much appreciated by those who heard it.

—At the Ministerial Institute, which is to be August 17-22, at Beatrice, Neb., S. D. Dutcher will speak upon the separation of Disciples from the Baptists, and Dr. E. D. Curry, pastor of one of the large Baptist churches of Omaha, on the possible reunion of the Baptists and Disciples.

—Mrs. Candace Lhamon Smith is lecturing in Missouri this summer under the direction of the State C. W. B. M., and on Sundays supplies Dean W. J. Lhamon's pulpits during his Chautauqua season.

—J. H. O. Smith recently took the place on the program of Senator Carmack at the Chautauqua at Winfield, Kan. His subject was "Gumption," which he treated in a homely, direct style that won his audience.

—There is hope of a reorganization and rebuilding at Redding, Ia., where C. E. Chambers is in a tent meeting. The church there was burned a few years ago and the insurance money lost through the failure of a bank.

—The Northern California Convention has just been concluded at Santa Cruz. George H. Combs was the chief speaker. The Southern California Convention continues till August 16 at Long Beach, and Charles S. Medbury is the chief speaker there.

—J. W. Yoho makes the report that one state evangelist preached twenty sermons during June and received the large sum of $7.02. None of these men, even in our larger states where our brotherhood is greater numerically and wealthier, receives adequate compensation.

—O. E. Hamilton has just landed in New York from Liverpool after a world tour. He is available from September on, or, at least for October, November, and December, and would like to get in touch with a good evangelistic singer at once. He may be addressed at Pomona, Mo.

—An Annuity of $500 has been received by the Church Extension Board from a friend in Pennsylvania. Many such gifts should come to this Board, because they build churches at once. For information write to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—We cordially second the suggestion of George F. Crites that some good brother, with a little cash to spare, purchase a tent for the use of the West Virginia Christian Missionary Society. We hope there will be this coming year a great evangelistic awakening in those districts that were so intimately associated with the work of the Campbells.

—M. S. Johnson has accomplished good work at McAlester, Okla. The school has become so large that it can not be seated in the building, and use is being made of the Tabernacle erected for the meeting lately held. The church expects to have at the Shawnee convention the largest delegation of any church in the state traveling a similar distance.

—Elmer Ireland, Des Moines, Ia., asks, "Will you please cite one instance in the New Testament where one baptized believer was received into a local church?" We would refer our brother to the second chapter of Acts, where about 3,000 were added unto the original disciples, all of whom, we presume, were baptized believers. Could Brother Ireland point out any instance of anybody but baptized believers being received into any local church in New Testament times?

The New Hope
Is the Best Remedy for the Drug and Liquor habits
HOME TREATMENT can be administered
J. H. GARRISON, President
Correspondence invited. Address New Hope Treatment Co., 2712 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.

—Nelson Trimble is showing much enterprise in his conduct of the work at the Christian Center Bible Institute, Baltimore, Md. He gets out a little leaflet bulletin and every week it is varied. Among other things he has arranged for some courses in church history and other subjects that will be helpful both to those who are identified with our work and to those who know little about it.

—J. H. Jones has been at Bolivar, Mo., four and a half years, during which time there have been 200 added to the church, a new parsonage built, and a lot secured for a new building. J. V. Coombs holds a revival here this month in a large tabernacle. The Centennial aim is "Five Hundred in the membership and the foundation laid for a new church building."

—W. A. Dameron preaches for the church at Prairie View, Ralls Co., and for Fairview and Salem churches, Randolph Co., and Fairview, Macon Co. For this last church he has worked three years, and can give a good report of it. He has been with the others but a part of this year, and finds them earnest supporters of the work in a general way, and influential in the local community.

—F. M. Cummings was called to the pastorate at Marceline, Mo., on October 1, 1907, from Sedan, Kan. All departments of the church are in good running order. A special aim is to become fully acquainted with the truth for our time, to acquire an intense desire for the betterment of human life and conditions, and to co-operate with others to this end, having as our motto, "The Union of All for the Good of All."

—For the first time in the history of Eureka College the class of 1908 issued an Annual. It is called "the Tub." This volume is full of valuable information and beautiful pictures of college buildings and interests. It has already done the college great good and is destined to do still more good. The proceeds from the sale of the Annual will go to the college for the reseating of the chapel, which has been recently frescoed and otherwise improved.

—We wonder how the exciting finish finished. When the State Secretary for Illinois made his last call, there were but two more Sundays in the missionary year. This is the way he put it: "The race is getting exciting, only two laps remain out of fifty-two. The Illinois Christian Missionary Society is running a desperate race against Expense, Appropriations, Special Calls, Missionary Meetings, New Fields and Dying Churches. Has your congregation sent an offering? The missionary year closes July 31."

—The church at Cameron, under L. O. Bricker's ministry of four years, has taken front rank. It has an enthusiastic men's organization known as the Men's Sunday Evening Club, an Adult Bible training class of about 100 members, one of Missouri's largest C. W. B. M. auxiliaries, a very live Young Ladies' Mission Circle, a lodge of the Knights of King Arthur for the boys, a great Bible school and Endeavor societies, a Deaconess Board, and other kindred organizations. Some have been reached, and new standards set, while others will be realized. Such a record speaks well for both the minister and the people.

—Our congregation at Paragould, Ark., which recently dedicated a handsome new building, free of debt, was organized in 1885, and the following year the construction of a house of worship was undertaken, this being, perhaps, the first brick house ever erected in Paragould. There are but few survivors among the original membership. The church deserves great credit for carrying out its plan so successfully in the midst of the financial panic. It now has the finest church building in the city, with a seating capacity of about 1,000. Four men are especially to be mentioned as having shouldered the big end of the burden. They are L. C. Thompson, J. T. Hester, I. C. Leggitt, and J. A. Morgan.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST

By a Layman. TENTH EDITION SINCE JUNE, 1905

A history of Pardon, the evidence of Pardon and the Church as an Organization. Scriptural Discussion of Church Fellowship and Communion. THE BEST EVANGELISTIC BOOK. "No Other Book Covers the Same Ground." Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York and London, Cloth Binding, Price $1.00 Postpaid. Write J. A. Joyce, Selling Agent, 209 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, for special rates to Preachers and Churches.

For sale by Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

—We have received a very handsome souvenir in memory of Mrs. O. A. Carr, whose death was announced in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last November. The memorial takes the form of a booklet bound in black morocco. It is edited by J. Breckenridge Ellis, contains a picture of Mrs. Carr and the college in which she was so much interested, a memorial tablet presented by the students, and the monument over the grave. There is a biographical sketch and an estimate of character by Prof. A. C. Riall, and communications from many of her friends and pupils. The Christian Publishing Company has a few copies of this little volume which will be sent to those interested for $1.50 per copy. This is merely to defray the expense of publishing and there is profit to no one.

—We regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Sue E. Grant, which recently occurred at Woodland, Cal. She was one of our pioneer educators, having opened the first school in Eureka, Ill., which afterwards became Eureka College. She married Prof. Grant, who was a member of the faculty of Christian University, and she was one of the first teachers in Christian College, Columbia, Mo. She was a woman noble in character, of intellectual attainments, and always a pleasant companion.

—W. E. Garrison, who for twelve years has been a regular staff contributor to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, writing the Current Events and the Sunday-school lesson, and part of the time serving as assistant editor of the paper, having recently accepted the presidency of the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, asks to be relieved of his work on the paper. His new position not only imposes heavier duties and responsibilities upon him, but it removes him to a much greater distance from the office, where regular and speedy communication with it would be more difficult. His relation to the Editor of this paper forbids us to make such notice of his resignation as his long connection with the paper and the high character of his work would otherwise justify, but we must be permitted to express our deep regret at the circumstances which have made necessary the separation of his life work from our own. We do not say that we have never dissented from any position he has taken, but the instances have been marvelously few, considering the amount he has contributed, and he has never been taught that his opinions must harmonize with our own in order to be absolutely correct. Our readers, we are sure, will join us in extending good wishes for his continued success in his chosen work in the land of his adoption.

Our Men Again in the Jungle.

Word comes from Bolenge, Africa, that Ray Eldred and L. F. Jaggard have just returned from a twenty-five days' itinerate and exploration in the jungles of the Congo. They preached the gospel in a great many villages. The missionaries had with them the stereopticon given to the Mission by Miss Ella Ewing. The natives came in throngs to see the pictures and marveled greatly at the story of love thrown on the screen. Dr. Jaggard had been in Africa but a few days, yet he entered into the hardships of this long, perilous trip with heartiness. Brother Eldred says: "On this trip Dr. Jaggard and I waded in swamps, with the water many times up to our waists and quite often deeper than that. Two different days we were drenched to the skin, and on one day had to go so all day long." At one time they had to cross a difficult swamp with a river in the midst of it. He says of this experience: "The native canoes were so small that but two or three at most could go at one time, so the canoes had to make four trips. We were all day getting to the village on the other side of the river. The canoes were so small that on that day at four different times a canoe sank with everything in it." Mr. Eldred and Dr. Jaggard were both capsized in the river and had to swim for it. Mr. Eldred further says: "That night we had the pleasure of sleeping on wet beds with wet clothes and wet blankets. Making us a hot supper and taking a little medicine as a preventative, and giving a little to each of the men, we rolled up in our wet blankets and went to sleep, thankful that we still had the blankets to roll up in and for the protection that had been over us and our carriers during the day."

We expect to publish the full letter in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF

BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE

No matter what you want, write to us about it.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

The Union Movement in Ontario.

The subject of Christian union is being discussed by the great majority of the people in this part of Ontario. Many people are asking themselves, and others, the reason why the Church of Christ is divided. This, it seems to me, is a good sign. People must think before they are likely to change their ideas in life.

In Kilsyth we have tried to keep in touch with the union movement as it is discussed by the religious press. Bro. J. I. Carter, who preceded me as pastor at Kilsyth, did much to foster a brotherly feeling with all Christian people. Since I took up the work we have gone further.

In January I was brought into touch with the Baptists in this vicinity, and through the friendship that has grown between Baptists and Disciples, I thought it wise to try and bring both bodies closer together. The result is as follows:

An agreement has been reached between the Baptist church at Tara and the Church of Christ at Kilsyth, and the Baptist Home Mission Board and myself, whereby the Kilsyth church agrees to co-operate with the Tara Baptist, giving the latter church an afternoon service. Geo. F. C. Welsman.

Kilsyth, July 28.

The Oklahoma Christian Missionary Convention.

As most of the brethren of Oklahoma know, the state convention is to be held in Shawnee, August 24-28. The time is drawing near and we must be doing. Our aim is to have 500 visiting delegates. We must reach the number. A great, active, growing brotherhood like ours should not think of or be in the least satisfied with anything less. Each church is entitled to a representative for each twenty-five members or major fraction thereof. Be sure and appoint these at once and furnish them with credentials. Everything possible is being done to prepare for the great gathering. On behalf of the local church I take pleasure in extending a most cordial invitation to all to attend. It will be a delight to us to entertain you. The city invites you to come and will join us in bidding you welcome. Let us do something at this convention of which we will be proud. Brethren of Oklahoma, come! Write to the undersigned, giving number and names of delegates, or for any information.

Frank L. Van Voorhis.

Shawnee, Okla.

Ordained to the Ministry.

The last letter written by Sister Moses to Mrs. Kelley contained the suggestion that her dearest friend, Sister Louise Kelley, be ordained a minister. The Disciples of Christ everywhere know of the close, sisterly fellowship of those godly women. Sister Kelley cherished that parting word as a call to wider usefulness and believing more doors for service of Christ would open to her if ordained, she asked to be formally set apart to the sacred office of the ministry. This was done at the First Church, Berkeley, Cal., July 26.

W. P. Bentley, one of the elders of the church and an old friend of Sister Kelley, assisted the pastor in a tender ordination service. The local congregation witnessed for the first time the New Testament example of "fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands." The church was brought into blessed comradeship with her, which will enlarge its sympathy and vision through the years to be.

Not less active in C. W. B. M. work, but more liberty in her public ministry, is the hope and prayer of this gifted, spiritual woman. May the holy enthusiasm and inspiration of her messages win multitudes to the standard of the conquering Christ.

I commend unto you our sister, who is a servant of the church everywhere; that ye receive her in the Lord, worthily of the saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever matter she may have need of you: for she herself also hath been a helper of many and of mine own self.

Berkeley, Cal. I. N. McCash.

Illinois State Convention.

The State Meeting of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society will be held at the Central Y. M. C. A Building, Chicago, this year on August 31 to September 4.

The representation is by delegate and a certificate is mailed to each church and minister along with the big poster and program. Each contributing church is entitled to one delegate unless it has 200 or more members; in that case it is entitled to two delegates. Delegates to be entitled to a vote must bring the blank certificate duly filled out by the clerk.

The Chicago brethren give lodging and breakfast to those only who notify them of their coming. A card all ready and properly addressed is mailed to each church and preacher. Just fill out and mail it.

Yes, visitors will be cordially welcome at the State Convention as of old. Just come on, you good folks!

When you arrive in the city, go at once to the Palmer House and register in order to be assigned to your stopping place. This is a proper protection to both the delegates and visitors, and the brethren of Chicago.

And when you register, please hand in the One Dollar from your church on the Convention Expense Fund. It is a little sum to you, brethren, but it means much to our society. Kindly bring or send the dollar.

If you can not possibly send representation—perish the thought—just mail the dollar from your church to us here at the office.

Come on, brethren, in large numbers.

J. Fred Jones, Sec.

Bloomington, Ill.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY NOTES.

A Mistake Corrected.

It was announced some weeks ago in the papers that $15,000 had been pledged by our people of Oregon for a steamer for the Congo. This was an error. Dr. Dye's telegram, through some error in transmission, read as above, when it should have read $2,300. This splendid sum was pledged at the Oregon state convention. It has since been increased to over $3,000. An active committee has been appointed and steps taken to push the matter with enthusiasm until the $15,000 is reached. A steamer for our great work on the Congo is one of our most needed enterprises.

Encouraging Gain in Receipts of the Foreign Society.

We are pleased to report that the month of July shows a good increase all along the line over the same month last year. The total gain for the month has been a little over $9,700. The tide has turned. Every effort needs to be put forward now to bring up the receipts all along the line. We must depend mainly on the churches and Sunday-schools. It looks as though the receipts from these two sources could be brought to what they were last year in spite of the hard times. Let every church and Sunday-school which has not sent an offering this year do so at once.

New Missionaries for the Field.

It is the purpose of the Foreign Society to send out thirteen new missionaries to the various fields in September. The effort was made to send fifty new workers this year. All together thirty have been appointed. Eight have already been sent, nine will be held over until next year and the remaining thirteen will sail if the funds are available to send them. The whole 50 could probably have been found and sent if the financial depression had not come. The names of those who expect to sail in September are as follows: J. C. Archer and wife, of Newton Falls, O., graduates of Hiram College, who will go to Jubbulpore, India; Dr. Z. S. Loftus, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., who go to Japan; Miss Eva Raw, Hiram, of Drake, who goes to the Philippines; Miss Sylvia Siegfried, Hiram College, who goes to Cuba; H. A. Eicher, Hiram, O., India; Miss May Hiatt, Eureka College, Japan; C. F. McCall and wife, University of Missouri and California, respectively, who go to Japan; Miss Eva Raw, Hiram, to China; W. B. Alexander, Hiram College, to India; Miss Nellie Grant, India, and Chas. P. Hedges, of Bethany College, to Bolenge, Africa. These are a strong, well-trained group of young people. They will represent the Christian Church with credit in our distant fields.

F. M. Rains,
S. J. Corey,
Secretaries.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Advertisements will be received under this head at the rate of two cents a word each insertion, all words, large or small, to be counted and two initials being counted as a word. Advertisements must be accompanied by remittances to save bookkeeping.

Business Opportunities.

FOR SALE.—Hotel; 25 rooms furnished; 3 1-4 acres in lot. Splendid location. Paying business. Price reasonable. Owner wishes to retire. F. Grimes, Sumner, Wash.

WE HAVE an actual gold mine in operation at Rawhide, Nevada, machinery installed and taking out ore. All Christian men, we need a little more money to secure returns from the smelters; will let you in on the ground floor with us and treat you right. L. W. Klinker Los Angeles, California.

Church Supplies, Etc.

EVERYTHING for rally day. Full line of samples, ten cents, postpaid. Get catalogue L. American Blackboard Company, 810 Olive st., St. Louis, Mo.

Evangelists and Ministers.

GEO. L. SNIVELY, 773 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, general evangelist, dedicator, pulpit supply.

D. H. SHANKLIN, evangelist, Normal, Ill., uses stereopticon, charts and furnishes singer if desired.

Musical Instruments.

ORGANS.—If you require an organ for church, school, or home, write Hinners Organ Company, Pekin, Illinois, who build Pipe Organs and Reed Organs of highest grade and sell direct from factory, saving you agent's profit.

Schools and Colleges.

SEND for catalog of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Departments—Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Biblical, Commercial and Music. For ladies and gentlemen. Address Pres. Carl Johann, Canton, Mo.

On Fruits & Cereals

BORDEN'S PEERLESS BRAND EVAPORATED MILK

(UNSWEETENED)

Is Delicious

EVELYN M. GORDON

E. M. Gordon was born in Bombay, July 8, 1870. He came of godly parents and was reared in a Christian atmosphere. His grandfather was a Baptist missionary, and the home influences which surrounded his early life were elevating and uplifting. Baptized at the age of fourteen, he never knew the time when he was not a Christian. His parents were Baptists, but he never joined any church, preferring to be called a Christian, although he had never heard of the existence of such a body of people who called themselves simply Christians.

He entered the Baptist Theological College at Serampore, Calcutta with the idea of ultimately going into the ministry, but for a brief period joined the staff of the Bombay Guardian, a weekly newspaper published in Bombay. It was at this time that he met Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Adams, of the Christian Mission, Bilaspur, C. P., India, and formed a friendship with these godly people which not only influenced his whole life, but was the means of his joining the F. C. M. S., and working at Mungeli, C. P., India. His mother was opposed to his taking up work at so early an age at such a lonely place, but E. M. Gordon was made on the same lines as the apostle Paul, and the call meant to him obedience even unto death. His motto was, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." He worked alone for five years, away from any Christian influence, meeting with dangers and difficulties, with no human companion save God and nature. What this meant to such an introspective character one could readily understand as you looked into his spiritual face and felt the pressure of his strong hand.

There was not a single Christian at Mungeli when he started the work, but after sixteen years of toil and labor he left last year a church membership of three hundred Christians, four hundred boys and girls studying in the various schools, a leper colony of eighty men and women, a Christian village settlement where orphan boys and girls of our mission started agricultural work, and two out-stations. He was a firm believer in the economy of missions and carried on this work alone with the help of the native brethren, working and praying for a self-supporting church at Mungeli. "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit." He worked strenuously during the famine, and the government officials sought his help and advice as to the best means of helping the people. He made the study of the life of the people his aim, so as to reach them better, and wrote several articles for the Royal Asiatic Society, of Bengal. He recently published a book entitled, "Indian Folk Tales," and translated the Gospel of Luke in the dialect of the district for the Bible Society, in Allahabad.

Death was no strange thing to him; he had faced it in cholera epidemics and smallpox, during famine and plague and he was always ready for the summons. A few days before he left for Hopkinsville, he said to one he loved, "If I had my life to live over again, I would go to the same place, work among the same people, and if I had money I would use it among those same people and live down everything as before." "But," said his companion, "you have suffered so much physically and mentally." He said When a man is sinking in the mire, you must stretch down your arm, touch him, bring him up and save him, but you must first get the contamination of the mire. Christ went through the same thing to save men. He was called gluttonous and a wine-bibber, and can I be thought anything less? He suffered—I suffer."

During the last few weeks of his life he suffered with his head, and his physician in Philadelphia has since said that any shock mentally would have been enough to snap the cord of his beautiful life. He left his family in perfect health apparently, had a farewell prayer and started on his long journey to Hopkinsville, and from there to the "Father House."

His life was lofty, sublime and great; nothing mean or petty entered into it. His death manifested a sublimity and grandeur which will be a precious memory to those who loved him. His body rests in Hopkinsville, where he was known and loved. His grave will be a sacred place to the dear ones there, and he would have chosen to rest there, since he had been denied the privilege of resting among the people for whom he lived and died in Mungeli.

Anna M. D. Gordon.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Ministerial Exchange.

W. A. Haynes, of Mt. Sterling, Ill., has four weeks this autumn, during which time he can hold a meeting for any church desiring such.

A. L. Zink, of Clayton, N. M., can hold a few meetings beginning in September.

S. V. Williams, 355 Greenwood, Kankakee, Ill., will correspond with any church desiring services of a competent evangelist, with or without a singer, for September or November.

George T. Smith, of Mechanicsburg, Ill., is open to employment for a revival or pulpit supply, beginning the third Lord's day in August and continuing three or four weeks.

As We Go to Press.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Murray, Ky., August 10.—In a pleasant meeting here; 37 additions first week; E. D. Bourland a splendid pastor to work with. —Fife and Son, evangelists.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Atlanta, Ga., August 10.—Great service last night with hundreds turned away; 36 to-day, 103 to date; we praise God for the victory; only those knowing the circumstances can understand what a marvelous meeting this is. Herbert Yeuell is a master workman and the people clamor for his return.—Bernard P. Smith.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Guthrie, Ky., August 10.—Seller and St. John in great meeting here; hardest field in western Kentucky; 1,000 in tabernacle yesterday; 45 accessions first week.—T. E. Roberts.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St Louis, Mo.

Union Gospel Songs

PREPARED FOR BIBLE-SCHOOLS, YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS, PRAYER-MEETINGS, CHURCH SERVICES AND SPECIAL OCCASIONS

BY

Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans

This Book Contains 234 Songs, Mostly of the "Gospel Hymn" Type, and is Especially Suited to Revival Services.

EDITIONS AND PRICES.

	Postpaid Per copy	Not prepaid Per dozen	Not prepaid Per hundred
Cloth Binding	35c.	$3.50	$25.00
Board Binding	30c.	2.75	20.00
Limp Cloth Binding	25c.	2.25	16.00

This is an excellent book, and we believe it will find an honored place in our brotherhood soon. It is a new book, recently published.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

From Prince Edward Island.

The work in Prince Edward Island is taking on new life; the church in Charlottetown, the capital, had been without preaching for nearly two years until John H. McQuerry was secured in April and in June a very satisfactory meeting was held with Mitchell and Bilby, evangelists.

The brethren at New Glasgow have not had preaching for over a year but have now secured A. J. MacLeod, formerly the New Brunswick-Nova Scotia evangelist, and he is already at work there.

At Summerside the new house has been dedicated and A. N. Simpson, of Toronto, Ont., is located with them temporarily, but they have a permanent minister in view. The annual convention was held at Summerside on July 11-13, and it far exceeded expectations in every way, as it was probably the best convention our people have ever had on the Island. On Saturday night A. J. MacLeod, of New Glasgow, delivered the opening address; E. C. Ford, of Picton, N. S., preached Sunda y morning; the new church building, which is complete in every way, costing $4,000, was dedicated in the afternoon, John H. McQuerry, of Charlottetown, preaching the sermon; C. Brooks Voorhees, of Montague, was the evening speaker. The sessions on Monday were devoted to business, Sunday-school and teacher training work, closing on Monday night with a sermon by A. N. Simpson, of Toronto. The brethren seem to be greatly encouraged by the convention and are hopeful for a much greater work being done the coming year, plans having been made accordingly.

I. Warren Leonard, of Worcester, Mass., is temporarily supplying the pulpit in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; he will return to his work in the Bible college at Lexington in September.

J. H. Williams.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.

Georgia.

I spent from June 27 to 23 in a meeting at Nashville. The writer did the preaching. Professor Bradbury, of Rome, led the singing. The audiences from night to night were the largest ever seen in the town. It was our first attempt at organization in that town. We organized with 25 good people. W. Henry Griffin and James M. Griffin are the elders and Remer L. Higgs and M. S. Griffin are the deacons. This young church is deserving and has bright prospects in that important center. The South Georgia district will take the church in charge and perhaps hold a meeting there before the close of the year.——My next meeting will be at Girard, Burke county. We have no church in that town, but I am going there to preach the gospel, to baptize the people and to organize a church. ——David Arnold, of Hampton, just home from Drake, preached two good sermons at Acworth July 26. He made a good impression.——Lon Hadaway, of Illinois, is visiting "home folks" at Hampton and will hold two meetings for Harrison Jones in the Griffin district.——F. L. Adams, of Atlanta, is holding a meeting for Corinth Church, Walton county.—— W. B. Shaw, of Southeastern Orphanage fame, is doing successful "protracted meeting" work in Georgia.——All things considered the meeting just held at Dublin by Evangelist Allen Wilson must be classed with our best meetings in Georgia.——Evangelist Herbert Yeuell is stirring Atlanta as never before. Some of our national evangelists are coming to us and causing the denominations to give us recognition. The recognition may not be very heavenly to some of the denominations, but it is recognition all the same and beneficial to the cause for which we plead.——The Georgia Legislature is at present probing our convict lease system and laying bare unparalleled meanness of the state's managers of the system. From the evidence reported in our daily papers these managers and their allies have been expert grafters for years. Impeachment is too good for them. Punishment pronounced and literal should be meted out to them. E. L. Shelnutt.

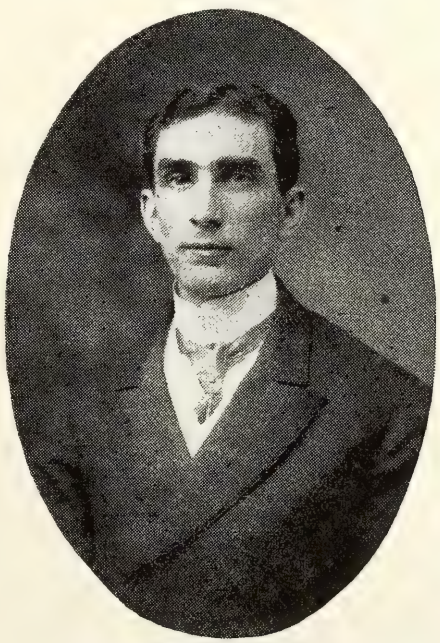
Acworth.

New Church at Nelsonville, O.

Sunday, July 19, marked the opening of the new $13,000 home of the saints at Nelsonville, O. The building is of native brick and appears as shown herewith. The plan is on the Akron style, the finisn in oak with green on walls and cream ceiling. There are classrooms, bathing-rooms, study, auditorium, Bible school room and two vestibules on the main floor. The basement has kitchen, dining-room, toilet-rooms and a large Sunday-school room yet unfinished. A Bible school of 600 ean be accommodated. President Bates, of Hiram, dedicated the building and took a collection of about $6,000. Brother Cook says of him, "Bates outdid himself in preaching and is surely great on money-raising. His method is absolutely the best ever seen." E. S. DeMiller, of Cleveland, under whose ministry the building project was started, preached in the afternoon before the communion service.

On dedication day 453 attended Bible school and offered $50. In two years of ministry Scott Cook has added about 100 members. There is perfect harmony and bright prospects at Nelsonville. A meeting for this fall is already planned. Brother Cook is a most worthy son of one of the most worthy fathers among Ohio Disciples. May heaven's blessing be upon him and his Nelsonville parish.

C. A. Freer.



W. S. Cook, Nelsonville, O., pastor Christian Church.

New Christian Church, Nelsonville, O.

Prohibitionists in Council.

The greatest gathering ever held in the interest of temperance reform was the National Prohibition convention recently held at Columbia, O. It was certainly a pleasure to be in that great crowd of 1,235 delegates with many alternates and visitors.

Many men who were familiar to our brotherhood were there and were very prominent in the convention. Brother Fillmore, of Cincinnati, had charge of the music and with a large chorus did excellent work. O. W. Stewart, that prince of Prohibitionists, was a great factor in the convention. No other speaker received such attention. He had charge of raising the campaign fund and certainly he has no peer in raising money. I delivered an address before the Woman's Prohibition Club of America, which held its national convention at the same time. Mrs. Anna Sloan Walker, of Decatur, Ill., is the president of the club, and she is a faithful Disciple. Dr. D. R. Dungan was a conspicuous figure in the Iowa delegation. Brother McLain, of Hiram, O., was also a prominent worker. F. W. Emmerson, of Freeport, Ill., who four years ago was the candidate for governor of Kansas, was also to be seen, and time would fail to mention the host of brethren who were there. The interest of the brethren in this great reform shows why the Christian churches are such a strong factor in the fight against the saloon.

It was indeed a great convention and this year the men who assembled in Columbus will help make history.

J. R. Golden.

THE NATIONAL TEACHER TRAINING INSTITUTE

One of the rarest spiritual treats as well as a surpassingly profitable week was spent at Bethany Park, Indiana, in the Teacher Training Institute, August 1-6. I am personally indebted to my brother Herbert Moninger, who made such a week possible to me and hosts of others, and who conducted it successfully and in beautiful spirit.

The program was so full and the simultaneous meetings in consequence were so many that I could not get to them all, as much as I desired to do so. The first day I heard with profit Professor C. T. Paul, of Hiram, Ohio, and readily understood the appreciative words spoken concerning his work. I heard my old school friend, E. A. Cole, of Washington, Pa., conduct a Teacher Training class in his skillful way, and understood why he is so successful in building up a great home school and in impressing himself upon the Bible school world in western Pennsylvania. I had the pleasure also of hearing my old instructor, J. W. McGarvey, deliver a lecture and give a quiet evening talk.

J. W. Kersey was there to tell us of his great class, which meets on Monday night. He said the attendance of over seven hundred was easily explained. For two years he had been conducting a Monday night class for popular Bible study with an attendance of three hundred and fifty. Upon the foundation and prestige of such a successful work he built up his great teacher training class. He told of his methods of conducting the class, and at another occasion taught a training lesson to a large audience.

O. W. Lawrence, of Decatur, Ill., said his class of 800 grew out of the necessity of caring for 350 new converts which came into his church at the close of the Sunday meetings. Once started, nothing could stop the growth of the class, which soon enrolled the best people of the city. Brother Lawrence said his program for a class meeting was as follows: a single stanza of a hymn was sung and a brief prayer was offered; the lesson was then outlined and the outline written on the blackboard; after a few minutes of drill, the blackboard was turned and the class was drilled from memory until they had the outline in mind; frequently the class would be divided into sections for a drill by the old spelling match method; review, and review, and more review and then some more. Any one can have a great class if he is willing to work like Brother Lawrence.

The Lord's day brought great sermons from Miner Lee Bates, president of Hiram College, W. E. Harlow, S. M. Martin, of California, Wallace Tharp, of Pittsburg, Pa., and Charles Reign Scoville. Twenty-one coaches of people came in on the morning trains and the electric road added hundreds more. From 6,000 to 8,000 people were on the ground and crowded in and around the Tabernacle and the Tent for the sermons and the communion services.

The Model Bible School was the feature of the afternoon. P. H. Welshimer, assisted by a corps of helpers, cared for it. 1306 were enrolled in the Adult Department, 650 were in Brother Moninger's outdoor Teacher Training class, 229 Intermediate and Junior pupils were in the tent, there were 200 Primary and Beginner pupils, and in groups on porches, in tents, all over the grounds, special teachers gathered 1,330 more, making at first count 3,715 in the Bible school. A revised report was read at the evening session, making the total attendance at the Model Bible school 4004.

On Monday the work continued as usual in three sections, the Tabernacle, the Tent, and in the Y. P. S. C. E. auditorium. Miss Farris and Mrs. Settle gave expert instruction in the problems of the Juniors, and Mrs. Buxton not only gave her fine work in the Primary problems, but also presided over the sessions in the Y. P. S. C. E. auditorium every day.

W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., gave a great address on "The Sunday-school as an Anti-saloon Force." The great audience filled the auditorium and gave hearty applause.

Tuesday was a great day. P. H. Welshimer told how he built up his great class, which numbers 1,000. Roy L. Brown, of Bellefontaine, O., President R. H. Crossfield, and Mrs. T. W. Grafton told how they built up their great Adult classes. How simple their method is! In the words of Roy L. Brown, all you have to do to have a great Bible class is to "work eighteen hours a day for seven days in the week for eighteen months." These great Bible class teachers demonstrated that they not only worked hard, but also found that the hard work paid a hundred fold.

L. L. Farris was present to tell how the greatest Home Department was built. Mrs. Williams, of Portsmouth, O., told how she built up the greatest Cradle Roll department. P. H. Welshimer told what the superintendent did between Sundays. Miss Nannie Lee Frazier told Bible stories in her inimitable way. Many a preacher said he believed his sermons would do much more good if he would learn to tell a Bible story as Miss Frazier tells them.

S. S. Lappin and T. W. Grafton told how to work with the boy, and all who heard went home determined to try. There were Bible knowledge contests between various states, and Kansas, after tribulations, won out in the finals.

W. C. Pearce was there with the ripe knowledge of an expert in his calling and with the blessing of his spiritual power. He gave himself to his specialty, the Adult Bible Class Movement. E. O. Excell was there with his smile and his "thank you," and everybody sang. The Netz Sisters were there and sang everywhere and at all times and smiled and sang more, and everybody loved them more and more. Their concert was a rare occasion. Russell Conwell was there and invited us all to open diamond mines in our own dooryards. J. M. Kersey gave his lecture on "Force and Counterforce." Earle Wilfley gave a stereopticon lecture on teacher training.

And over all this richness presided "that man Moninger, who smiles at you like a girl," as President McGarvey expressed it.

State Bible school men were there, Settle of Kansas, Gilliam of Oklahoma, J. H. Bryan of Missouri, DePew of Illinois, C. L. Organ of Iowa, Robert M. Hopkins of Kentucky, and L. L. Farris, who will very soon take up the work in Ohio.

A conference was held by the State Bible school men and the editors of the Bible school literature of the Standard Publishing Company and the Christian Publishing Company concerning the coming year's great campaign. This will insure the strength and success of harmonious action all along the line. The coming Bible school program for New Orleans was also considered and some plans were discussed for Pittsburg, 1909.

The only note of regret expressed during this great Institute was that the attendance was not twice or thrice as great. No gathering of our people has developed greater spiritual power and value. Honor to whom honor is due.

Marion Stevenson.

Good Reports from the Philippines.

Good reports come from the Philippine Islands. The work there, however, is running away with our missionaries. We have not nearly enough missionaries to supply the calls that constantly come. Dr. Pickett, of Laoag, reports 750 treatments in the hospital during May. He also dedicated a new native chapel during the month and reports twenty-two baptisms for the month. There were also twenty baptisms in our provincial churches surrounding Manila during the same period.

Moving the Armourdale Christian Church.

For the third time in five years the Armourdale Christian Church, of Kansas City, Kan., has been devastated by the flood waters of the Kaw River. Located here in the valley among a population of 12,000 laboring people, our church had in a measure recovered from previous disasters and was prospering. The church was considerably damaged. Six feet of water stood in the church. The furniture was nearly a complete loss. The membership was scattered and a number of these will not return. The city mission committee of Greater Kansas City immediately set about the matter of giving aid. After viewing the situation, a plan was formed to move our building to higher ground. This plan has the backing of our churches of Kansas City, Mo., which have so generously aided us before, and are now in an effort to raise $800 to assist us. We will secure a $400 loan from the Church Extension Loan. For the rest of the funds needed we are looking to the churches of Kansas. They are planning now to help us. We can not speak too highly of the spirit of helpfulness that the churches of Kansas City have manifested toward us. Our people are greatly encouraged. The moving of our church to the proposed site will put it above danger line and give permanency and the best location in the district. To put our church in good repair on our new location will require an expenditure of about $1,800. We have every reason to believe that we shall soon be in our building again.

Bert E. Stover, minister.

A Complete Line

of

BAPTISMAL SUITS

GUARANTEED BEST QUALITY

Write to us for full information and prices.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF

CHURCH GOODS

No matter what you want, write to us about it.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

100,000 Men, 100,000 Women, 10,000 Organized Adult Bible Classes in Our Bible Schools Before the Centennial

At Bethany Park last week a number of our state Bible school men were discussing their plans for next year with Herbert Moninger and myself, and it seemed good to us all to rally our churches and Bible schools to attain the above aim. It is a very modest undertaking for our great Bible school host, and can be realized.

It was the consensus of opinion that no class should be accepted as an organized class until it had the International Certificate of recognition as an evidence that it had passed the test of the International standard. Send to the superintendent or secretary of the Adult work of your state and ask him for the application blank for the certificate for your class. The application properly filled out and accompanied with twenty-five cents will get the certificate. If you do not know who the state official is, write W. C. Pearce, 806 Hartford Building, Chicago, Ill.

We have arranged with W. C. Pearce, Superintendent of the Adult Department of the International Sunday-school Association, to report all Adult classes which are organized in our own schools in the United States. This will enable you occasionally to check up and see if your class has been reported. Brother Pearce told us that many Adult classes supposed they were organized until they tried for the certificate of recognition and discovered that they had overlooked some small matter.

Marion Stevenson.

◈ ◈ ◈

Standard of Organization for Adult Bible Classes.

1. The class shall be definitely connected with some Sunday-school.

2. The class shall have the following officers: Teacher, president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. It shall also have at least three standing committees, as follows: Membership, devotional, and social. It is not required that these committees be known by these particular names, but that the class have three committees which are responsible for these three kinds of work.

3. The class shall consist of members who are sixteen years of age or over.

This standard represents the minimum of organization rather than the maximum. In establishing it the Adult Department Committee endeavored to consider the needs and conditions in the average Sunday-school, and to voice the practice existing throughout the international field.

Any Bible class meeting this standard, upon application to their state or provincial Association, and furnishing the names and addresses of class teacher and president, with 25 cents, will receive an International Certificate of Recognition.

◈ ◈ ◈

A Centennial School and a Living Link.

We had two good treats here. Brother Warren was with us and spoke morning and evening. We found yesterday that we had reached our Centennial aim two months ago, "All the church and as many more in the Bible school." This makes us rank fifth in the line in this county. Our average attendance for last six months was 212. We have 320 enrolled in main school, 80 in Home Department and 52 on Cradle Roll, with 210 on church roll.

We have enough pledged to make us a living link in foreign field next year. Largest teacher-training class in state. The Lord has certainly blessed us richly. My ambition is to use these blessings as a foundation for greater work in future.

Cameron, W. Va. W. E. Pierce.

◈ ◈ ◈

Another Century Class.

Another Adult Bible Class—"The Men's Bible Class," which I have the honor to serve as teacher,—has crossed the century mark. We register 105 men now on our roll. We have the International charter and some additional lines beside. We organized the first Lord's day in September, 1907, and crossed the century mark in nine months. At organization we only had four men pledged. We are lining up our class for men in the Sunday evening services during the summer months.

I send herein application card we used.

Wm P. Shamhart.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

◈ ◈ ◈

New Movement Class at Canton.

We have organized a Men's New Movement Adult Bible class with sixteen members. After three weeks the enrollment was forty. It gives promise of being a fine factor in the development and growth of the church. Few movements among us are more important just now than the enlistment of men in the Lord's work. The Bible class idea gives a fine foundation on which to build intelligently and permanently. We hope to double our present membership before many weeks. W. R. Allen is our teacher, and F. M. Harrison superintendent.

Canton, Ill J. G. Waggoner.

◈ ◈ ◈

A Fine Class at New Castle, Ind.

An organized class of young men in the Sunday-school of the Main Street Christian Church, of New Castle, Ind., was founded by Mrs. Ed. Jackson, our present teacher, about 1905. It set about at once to enlarge the class. But it increased its attendance very slowly, until of late, since the town has grown. The officers only worked the harder. To this end frequent business meetings and occasional class receptions and many socials have been held. Class attendance cards were printed and used with good results. After the officers were elected they had printed an invitation card to be used by any and all members, which we have found more successful than attendance cards. In addition to these invitations the officers wrote postal cards to members not present the Sunday before asking a more regular attendance. The class has assumed the name of the "Young Men's Bible Class," having for their motto, "Do Right." The teachers and officers are young business men, consecrated to the work of our Lord. The young men of the class are always willing to assist in the church work, and do all they can in behalf of our Savior. This class is supporting a missionary; they have a social, needy and sickness committees; they look after the members of the class, also the members of the church, whom they know are sick and try to see in what they can help them; they also send flowers to their members, or the members of the family when sick. They also look after parties who are in need all over the city. They attend to the welfare of the class in the way of socials and entertainments. In this way we keep in a closer touch with our members. Our class also works in harmony with the young ladies of our church in all ways. George W. Shopp.

◈ ◈ ◈

An Enthusiastic Believer.

The Sunday-school is growing and has begun to tax the capacity of the church. The latter part of last year I recommended the plan of organized classes, and we now have a men's class, a women's class, and a young ladies' class. The results have been very satisfactory. Taking a class of unruly boys, the despair of several teachers, I have recently organized them on a plan similar to that applied to adult classes. The attendance is now doubled and a better behaved or organized class can't be found. I am an enthusiastic believer in organized classes, for it gets everybody busy.

H. H. Cushing.

Gloversville, N. Y.

The Young Men's Bible Class, New Castle, Ind.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arizona.

Bisbee.—Eight have been added to the little band of workers here in the last two weeks. Sixteen since I began.—W. E. Spicer.

Arkansas.

Harrison.—There were 34 additions during a two-weeks' meeting held by H. A. McCarty. The interest was good and the services resulted in a better understanding of our plea by the people. Brother McCarty was assisted by his daughter, who is a fine choir leader.—L. C. Clenderin.

California.

Los Angeles.—August 2 I closed a fine down-town tent meeting under the auspices of the Broadway Church. The meeting was a seed-sowing campaign and it is thought that the Broadway church, which is only six blocks away, will reap the harvest. The tent was crowded at every service and the last evening great crowds were standing around the outside.—O. P. Spiegel.

Illinois.

Winchester.—Four have been added to the church here since last report.—Lew D. Hill, minister.

Indiana.

Hammond.—Five added to our church here last Sunday. The interest still keeps up.—C. J. Sharp, minister.

Iowa.

Akron.—Have been supplying for the church here the past five weeks. Three added during that time. W. T. Radcliffe recently closed a good year's work here and is now located at Riverton.—O. L. Adams.

Estherville.—I have just closed four months' supply work here with 11 additions. H. H. Utterback begins his work here August 9.—W. S. Johnson.

Kansas.

Chanute.—Two were added to the church here last Sunday. We are not taking any vacation, but on the other hand are doubling our efforts during the hot weather.—G. W. Kitchen.

Kentucky.

Audiences and interest continue fine at the Third Christian Church. One baptized last night, one received by letter and one reinstated. —W. S. Gamboe, minister.

Mexico.

San Louisito.—Enrique Westrup, missionary of the C. W. B. M. at Monterey, Mexico, has just closed a four-days' meting in San Luisito church, with 20 confessions. The people of this church are very thankful for their new house and feel their responsibility and show a desire to work. A new building has just been provided for this congregation at a cost of a little over $1,000. It is very well located, being but four squares from the central market of Monterey. Since January 1 Mr. Westrup has received 47 persons into the church at Monterey and its suburb, San Luisito.—Mrs. M. E. Harlan.

Missouri.

Bevier.—Have just closed a three-weeks' meeting with the church here. Seventeen additions. The work here has taken on new life. I will begin a meeting at Mt. Sinai, Mo., August 18.—J. T. Sapp.

Calhoun.—We began a meeting with the minister, J. D. Babb, eight days ago. He has had 30 additions at regular services during the past six months. Forty-four added during the first week of our meeting. We hold our meetings in the City Park. Hundreds in attendance every night.—F. M. Neal.

Chaffe.—Our meeting here is two weeks old. Evangelist B. H. Whiston and wife are with us and are doing fine work. Twenty-six additions up to the present time and we expect many more. Interest in Bible school work is growing. —A. H. Patterson.

Wheeling.—Five added to the church here since last report. We expect to begin a series of meetings October 1.—W. H. Hook.

Michigan.

Belding.—Two added last Sunday at the regular services. Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work is in a flourishing condition.—O. W. Winter, minister.

Nebraska.

Goose Lake.—We have just closed a two-weeks' meeting at this place. This is a new field. There were nine confessions and the meetings were held in the Union church. We are to hold another meeting for them next June.—Albert Miller.

Oklahoma.

Elk City.—The editor of the leading paper of this city joined the church here in our meeting, which has just closed. Eight of those who came in during the meeting have been heads of families. The Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work has taken on new life.—T. M. Myers.

Ohio.

Cincinnati.—I have been preaching for the Fourth Christian Church here during the past three weeks. Three have been added during this time.—Y. W. B. Smith.

Texas.

Van Alstyne.—Evangelist Richard Martin and Gospel Singer L. D. Sprague are in a fine meeting here. Hundreds are coming from the country, and the hourly interurban service enables those from neighboring towns to attend the meetings. People are coming from as far as Sherman, 15 miles to the north, and a number were up from Plano, 30 miles to the south, Sunday night. The meeting is being held outdoors; the entire block in front of the church being taken up with seats and vehicles. Brother Martin is a true man of God, and has exerted a powerful influence for good in this community. Men who come miles to hear him are loud in their praises; he is holding hundreds night after night in close attention. He is not only winning souls but is sowing seed for the future. Brother Sprague, aside from his beautiful solos, is leading a great chorus choir admitted by all to be superior to any ever heard in our city. Notwithstanding the fact that this field was well gleaned even to the Bible school, there have been 28 additions to date, people coming every night.—G. F. Bradford, minister.

Granger.—Spicer and Douthit have just closed a very successful meeting with this congregation. The first five days of the meeting were held in the church, but on Sunday night we moved to the opera house in order to have more room. The house was crowded to standing room and many were turned away. In all there were some 33 additions. One feature of the meetings was the fine work of the Presbyterian pastor. He showed himself to be truly a great-hearted and good man. Brother Douthit is a great leader of song and his solos were a rare treat. Many homes were made happy because souls had been turned to Christ. The church, which had been in a sleepy condition, took on new life, and a pastor, Brother R. Jackson, was secured as one result of the meetings.—A. D. Keeder.

Utah.

Salt Lake City.—Twelve additions and three baptisms during July at the regular services.—Dr. Albert Buxton.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS OF
PREACHERS' SUPPLIES
No matter what you want, write to us about it.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

Popular Hymns No. 2

BY

C. C. CLINE

This book contains 256 gospel songs and church hymns, selected especially for public worship in our churches, prayer-meetings, revivals, conventions, Sunday-schools, young people's meetings, etc., etc.

EDITIONS AND PRICES.

	Postpaid Per copy	Not prepaid Per dozen	Not prepaid Per hundred
Cloth Binding	.30c.	$3.00	$25.00
Board Binding	.25c.	2.50	20.00
Limp Cloth Binding	.25c.	2.00	15.00

The author of this book has given to the public a worthy successor to Popular Hymns, without duplicating it. The book is well adapted to the new methods of Bible School and Christian Endeavor work, as they now exist.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS, MO.

Sunday-School

August 23, 1908.

FRIENDSHIP OF DAVID AND JONATHAN.—1 Sam. 20:30-42.

PREPARING THE LESSON.

David and Jonathan. How beautiful and appealing is the story of the love of these two men! How remarkable it is under the circumstances! How great an influence upon David for good the love of Jonathan was we can only imagine. David's respect for Saul doubtless was due in large measure to his love for Jonathan. David's patience under trial was also helped by the love of Jonathan. See in this respect 23:16.

You will wish to study the whole story of the affection of these two men. Read first 18:1-5. Then read 19:1-7, 20:1-42, 23:14-18. Read yourself into the story; try to imagine what it meant to Jonathan to love David after he discovered that David was to be king. Note Jonathan's loyal defense of David from the accusations and suspicions of his father Saul. Note what Jonathan endured in reproach from his father as well as in self-denial of his own ambitions. Read David's lament over Saul and Jonathan, 2 Sam. 1:17-27.

THE HEART OF THE LESSON.

What is friendship? What will it endure? What will it renounce? What will it give? These are questions suggested and answered by a study of Jonathan's course toward David. Read in connection with this story the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

The power of love is illustrated in the help Jonathan's love was to David. Who knows but that his faith might have failed him and his life turned into bitterness but for the love of Jonathan. David needed such a love as this to furnish the atmosphere in which his life would develop into the character which Jehovah could use in his great purpose.

God sent to David all the possible experiences of life, the bitter and the sweet, prosperity and adversity, love and hate, honor and shame—nothing was lacking in the development of his great nature. God needed a great man, and in this book of First Samuel we are observing the processes by which David came to be what Jehovah wanted and needed. Let us thank God for sending this great love of Jonathan into his life just here.

LESSON PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, help me to know that to those who love God all things work together for good. Help me to learn from these experiences of David how thou art working with me to make me what thou desirest for thy use. I thank thee for thy love more wonderful than that of David and Jonathan which came into my life with the love of Jesus. May it transform me into thine own image.

Changes.

Barnett, James A.—73 West North street to 319 North Broad street, Galesburg, Ill.
Beckler, H. E.—118 Church street, Mongahela, Pa., to Belle Center, O.
Bennett, H. G.—Yorkton, Can., to 509 West Russell street, Monroe, Wis.
Bledsoe, E. S.—Italy to Big Springs, Texas.
Bryan, J. C.—Williamsville, N. Y., to Grandville Center, Pa.
Bush, A. J.—Corpus Christi to Wichita Falls, Texas.
Chapline, George F.—Holly Springs to Jackson, Miss.
Crutcher, James N.—Higginsville to 524 Shukert building, Kansas City, Mo.
Dalton, W. L.—Perry to Walter, Okla.
Dohoney, E. C.—Amarillo to Paris, Texas.
Ellis, George H.—Core West, Va., to Nezperce, Idaho.
Harbord, C. L.—Canton to 3016 Euclid avenue, Kansas City, Mo.
Hopkins, J. A.—Winston-Salem, N. C., to Bethany Beach, Del.
Horne, John McD.—Des Moines, Ia., to Ballston, Va.
Idleman, Finis—Des Moines, Ia., to Grand de Tour, Ill.
Longanecker, F. M.—429 West Walnut street, Kalamazoo, Mich., to 405 Beauregard street, Charleston, W. Va.
Maple, O. D.—Fredericksburg, Va., to Mount Ranier, Md.
Murphy, H. R.—Clay Center to Effingham, Kan.
McCallum, Donald C.—1 Divinity Hall, Cambridge, to 43 Cleveland avenue, Everett, Mass.
McPherson, Chalmers—Waxahachie to 614 Granger street, Fort Worth, Texas.
McQuerry, John H.—Charlottetown, P. E. Island, to Lord's Cove, New Brunswick, Can.
Nance, Thomas G.—Texico to Clovis, N. M.
Norris, B. F.—Ash Grove, Mo., to Arlington, South Dakota.
Olney, Olin O.—Rutland to Quaker City, O.
Pearn, William—Cristoval, Canal Zone, to 1525 Eighth street, New Orleans, La.
Pegrum, Robert—Milton to Yarmouth, N. S.
Polson, C. A.—Soldier, Kan., to Exira, Ia.
Porter, R. L.—709 North Boulevard to 210 St. Hypolite street, Baton Rouge, La.
Read, T. L.—Eureka to Chapin, Ill.
Richardson, W. F.—1016 Lydia avenue, Kansas City, Mo., to 504 South Kentucky avenue, Roswell, N. M.
Robinson, H. B.—404 Arizona street to 915 North Stanton street, El Paso, Texas.
Romine, E. M.—Hinton to Marlow, Okla.
Ryan, William D.—Ashland, Ky., to Winona Lake, Ind.
Shreve, J. T.—Memphis to 227 Ohio avenue, St. Joseph, Mo.
Smith, Charles E.—901 Sixth avenue to 751 North Main street, Marion, O.
Smith, G. T.—Dexter, Mo., to 212 Third street, Danville, Ill. (Vermillion Heights.)
Smith, M. M.—Atlanta to Greenville, Texas.
Smith, O. Alvin—Gonzales to North Waco, Tex.
Spear, M. S.—Middleport to Bucyrus, O.
Stauffer, C. L.—Dana to Dallas City, Ill.
Stuckey, J. H. Kansas City, Kan., to Bertram, Texas.
Trundle, Dan—Columbia, Mo., to Rialto, Cal.
Vanmeter, M. C.—Kalkaska to Williamson, Mich. Mich.
Williamson, Guy B.—Chattanooga, Tenn., to Wichita, Kan.
Wilson, B. Alvin—West Paulet to Grafton, O., No. 1.
Wray, B. L.—137 Drury avenue to 128 North Hardesty avenue, Kansas City, Mo.
Zerby, Guy L.—Tampico to Concord, Ill.

BIBLES and New Testaments

Send for Catalogue and Prices.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
St. Louis, Mo.

Historical Geography of Bible Lands

We can now sell this splendid work by the great geographer, John B. Calkin, M. A., for $1.15, post paid. It contains 180 pages, besides 14 accurate maps. This should be in the library of every preacher and all other students. Order before this edition is exhausted. Another may not be so low priced.

The Christian Publishing Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Bible Lesson Picture Roll

Each Leaf 27 x 37 Inches,

Containing a picture, beautifully colored, illustrating the lessons.
These rolls are well mounted, strong and durable. Thirteen leaves in each roll a leaf for each lesson in the quarter.

PRICE, prepaid, 75 cents.

Picture Lesson Cards.

Size 2¾x4 Inches.

A reduced fac-simile of the above; put up in sets containing one card for each Sunday.

PRICE for set, per quarter, 2½ cents.

Of all Bible school helps for the little folks, this roll and these cards are the best.

Bright colors catch the infant eyes at once, and the lesson is learned through the eyes of the little ones before the teacher can explain by word of mouth.

If you have never used them, do so beginning with next quarter; but, NOW IS THE TIME TO ORDER from us, so we will get them to you by the last Sunday of this quarter.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

Christian Endeavor

August 23, 1908.

VACATION RELIGION.

DAILY READINGS.

M.	Appreciation and Contentment.	Ps. 16:5-9.
T.	Eating and Drinking.	Eccl. 2:22-25.
W.	Light-heartedness.	Eccls. 3:11-14.
T.	Studying Nature.	Ps. 65:5-13.
F.	Choosing the Best.	Phil. 4:8, 9.
S.	Summer Sojourners.	1 Pet. 2:9-12.
S.	Topic.

"The devil never takes a vacation" is the ugly word that is sometimes spoken when some tired servant of God proposes to go away a little while and rest. It is sufficient answer to say, "Neither does God take a vacation, but the devil's servants do when they can, and God's people may do so if they wish." In fact, the Son of God himself invited his wearied disciples to come to one side and rest.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is an old and true saying, true no matter what a man's work may be. Even a dead, insensate machine will last longer and do more work if it have periods of rest. The locomotive that has carried a long train in swift flight for hours goes to the round house for a rest before the return trip.

This topic comes at the close of the vacation season. Before many days most of you will be on your way for the work of the winter. What kind of a vacation have you had? Do you go back home and to work with physical strength renewed? If not, is it because you have sought dissipation and not recreation?

Do you return with your heart younger, or with a weight that indicates some burden you have added which you might have left? Is there a feeling of disappointment, or of unworthiness, or shame? Have you left undone the things you ought to have done? Have you done the things you ought not? Are you stronger or weaker in heart and life for the days before you? Would you do differently if you had it to do over again?

Or do you return home feeling that you have gained much in every way during your release from your daily task? Are you physically refreshed? Are you in better spirits? Does life look brighter? Have you a better ambition for your task? Do you feel that you have made some spiritual gain?

What is your spiritual record for your vacation? Were you as conscientious in regard to your Christian duties as you try to be at home? Have you been as faithful at the church services? Has the minister singled you out from among the summer visitors of his town as a faithful Christian? Has he seen you at his prayer-meeting? Has he found you willing to help in the Bible school and in the Endeavor Society?

Or did you excuse yourself from all this by saying it was your vacation time? Look at the scripture lesson for this evening's meeting. Jesus and his disciples went aside to rest, but welcomed an opportunity to work, and after they had served the multitude, they went out to a larger work with new strength. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

May the coming season be your best in his service!

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

WHAT DOES GOD REQUIRE OF MAN?

(Topic Aug. 19: Micah 6:6-8; Psalm 51:16; Matt. 23:23.)

The finest summary of the divine requirements to be found in all the Bible is this eighth verse of the old prophet, Micah: "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good. And what doth the Lord require of thee save to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

It is such fine sentiments as this that commend, or should commend, the word of God to all right thinking men. Nor is this just a fine sentiment. It expresses the real tone of the book. There are records that seem to indicate otherwise, for the Bible is the story of Man, struggling upward from ignorance and barbarism. It is the oldest record of civilization. And any story of civilization must take account of the follies and failures of individuals, communities and nations. We are to read the Bible in the light of the past, which was at best but twilight. History, as someone has defined it, is "His story." And this is true, despite all the blackness of the background.

In nature the storm and blackness of the tempest make a background for the rainbow of His promise. So with human strife and all the bitterness and blackness that find place on the pages of history, and in the records of the Bible. God has set his rainbows in the clouds and darkness that are round about his throne. And he has set his rainbows of promise and of peace round about the thrones of earthly kings, even in the midst of corruptions and conflicts that flow from the jealousies and wickedness of human hearts. It is not strange, therefore, that we find imperfections in the records of the race, in the Bible as in all earthly histories.

The truly wonderful thing is to find such summaries of all divine revelation and human experience as this in Micah, in these sorrowful days when the best of men was as a "briar" and the "most mighty worse than a thorn hedge," and the godly man had perished out of the earth. I don't know what you think about it, but I am going to cling to the old Book which commends itself to my heart and compels me to hold fast my faith in God as my Father, who asks nothing of us but what is good.

The Master also set his seal of approval to this splendid summary of the prophet. The weightier matters of the law are "judgment, mercy, and faith," which are the same as justice, mercy and humility—the sort that makes men willing to walk with God. For the essence of all true faith is genuine humility. To humble ourselves to walk with God is the expression of our faith. And we may well doubt our own or the faith of another which does not make us really and rejoicingly humble. Faith is the upreaching of the finite after the Infinite, the holding out of human hands to the Hand that makes all histories and that holds all destinies.

Pimples on the Face

Those annoying and unsightly pimples that mar the beauty of the face and complexion will soon disappear with the use of warm water and that wonderful skin beautifier,

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Sold by all druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

REMEMBER, WE FURNISH ALL KINDS O.

ENDEAVOR SUNDRIES

No matter what you want, write to us about it.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis

Everywhere
¢
Shoppers and Business Men
tired people and thirsty people—nerve worn and brain weary people—people who just like to tickle the palate occasionally with a delicious beverage—all classes, ages and sexes
DRINK
Coca-Cola
The Satisfactory Beverage
Has more to it than wetness or sweetness. It relieves fatigue of brain, body and nerves; quenches the thirst as nothing else will; refreshes and pleases.
GET THE GENUINE
Delicious—Wholesome—Thirst-Quenching

People's Forum

For a Pure Ministry.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I had the pleasure of attending the recent convention of the churches of Christ of the state of Missouri. It was a great intellectual and spiritual feast. The most interesting session to me was the Bible school session. The spiritual life of our children was the subject—the material for the Church of the Living God on the morrow. No wonder much time was spent in discussing ways and means to bring about great results in this mighty work. Look at the children and their pure, innocent lives that must be led into channels of right and power. No wonder we listened so attentively to splendid addresses.

Here were the men who were to stand before them, whose influence by word and example was to be a power before them.

But in all, there was little said in regard to a clean ministry and upright, manly superintendency. Being of a reflective mentality, I found myself thinking upon the great force of example. I was indeed surprised, as I stood on the steps of this magnificent Boulevard Church after such inspiring sessions, to note the number who boldly lighted their cigar and stood puffing, or took from their pockets a wallet, containing not money, but tobacco, and took their chew, and behold the number of these who registered as pastor of some church,—whose business it was to proclaim the unsearchable riches of God and his Christ, commanded by the Word to first "take heed unto himself;" men supposed to be petitioners of that religion which James says is "to visit the fatherless and the widows, and keep himself unspotted from the world." And the latter admonition is the biggest. It's not so great a thing to visit the widow and orphan. But it is a big job for some folks to keep unspotted from the world. Some of these men say they "can't quit." I would advise that they try the "power of God" on it.

But as I looked over these preachers I noted also that there were even evangelists that did chew, and spit, and smoke. And where do these stand? As the ambassadors of Christ, standing before men with the pure message of love. When once I spoke to an evangelist about personal purity, and cited his weakness, he quoted James 5:20: "He who converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." And he took much comfort and another chew. Brethren, where shall we draw the line before these little ones? Echo sounds "a mill stone" and "the depths of the sea." And then I noted, too, that some of these that did chew and spit and smoke are supported by the Church of Christ in Missouri. How inconsistent! Some of our children down here giving to help buy a man's tobacco while he is teaching others and their children to be pure and clean and holy. And here organized leagues of boys and girls to fight that filthy evil which has sunk its poisonous fangs into so many of our men—yea, and shame on us us— women, too. God help us to know "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

Yours for a pure ministry,

West Plains, Mo. G. G. Horne.

Send for our Catalogue.
Christian Publishing Company,
St. Louis, Mo.

Obituaries

Notices of deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the money with the copy.

BETCHER.

After five months of unremitted suffering the soul of my dear wife was called to its rest. What she suffered no human being can guess. For during the past five months she was unable to move a limb without help, and then it was very painful, even though we did it in the tenderest way we could. She was troubled with what the doctor called a malignant ulcer in the stomach. About three weeks ago septic fever set in and from that time she began to get weaker. She suffered patiently. Never did she murmur, but always believed that no harm would come, for God was near.

On Sunday night after returning from church I noticed that her mind was beginning to wander. On Wednesday morning she recognized us for the last time and at 12 o'clock, June 27, her spirit took its flight to that eternal home of which she was just as sure as she was of her earthly home. On Tuesday night, as was our custom every night, I sang a song, "Back From the Long Ago," and she joined in one verse, but she was asleep when I finished the last verse.

Her body sleeps in Rapides Cemetery. I have received many kindnesses at the hands of our friends here, and many sympathetic letters from brothers and sisters. I want to thank all for these, and pray that when you are called to pass through such an hour you may have the same kindnesses shown you, also, that the Good Father may be to you what he has been to me.

Alexandria, La. L. A. Betcher.

BRANT.

John Brant, of Isabel, Kan., who, for the past two years has been in the Bible school of Drake University, died July 3. Brother Brant was ordained to the ministry about a year ago; he was 25 years of age, and a life of great usefulness seemed to be before him. He sickened and died inside of a week before reaching home from Drake University.

C. W. Van Dolah.

Hutchinson, Kan.

DARNOLD.

For the second time within a little over eight months the Christian Church at Glasgow, Ky., has been called upon to give up a greatly beloved minister. November 13, last, Elder J. E. Payne, who was dearly beloved by his congregation and held in the highest esteem by the entire community, died after a lingering illness of cancer. The church realized that his place would be hard to fill, but divine providence seemed to direct us to Elder O. W. Darnold, of Lexington, who commenced his work February 1, and at once won the hearts of all the people. Less than three months ago, he brought among us his beautiful and highly accomplished bride, having married Miss Ethel West, daughter of Mr. W. T. West, postmaster at Lancaster. In June he received his diploma from the College of the Bible at Lexington and to all human appearances he had a future as bright as the noonday sun. He was taken with typhoid fever and died July 19, within six weeks.

Mr. Darnold was born in Carroll county, Kentucky, twenty-five years ago, March 22, last, the eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Darnold, now of Taylorsville, Ky. He is survived by his parents, one brother, Mr. J. B. Darnold, a young minister, now in college at Lexington, and one sister, Miss Gertrude Darnold, who lives with her parents. He began preaching at 18 years of age, and has preached all his spare time, his field being almost entirely in Central Kentucky. The funeral was held at Pleasureville, Ky., the sermon being preached by Elder H. H. Webb, of Lexington, a close friend. Previous to the sermon, impressive memorial services were held over the remains by Messrs. Baeby, Higgins and Coombs.

The church at this place is bereft, and realizes that it will be an extremely difficult thing to find a man who can fill the place twice left vacant in so short a time, but it has a strong board of officers who will continue the worship during the interim, as they have done during so much of the last two years.

Glasgow, Ky. W. P. Coombs.

MATTHEWS.

Sister Martha Ankeny Matthews, daughter of Isaac and Eleanor Parker Ankeny, was born in Somerset, Pa., April 28, 1841, and died at her residence in Kansas City, Mo., July 9, 1908. She became a member of the Somerset church when about 17 years of age. She was educated in the well-known Pleasant Hill Seminary, near West Middleton, Pa., then conducted by the beloved Campbell McKeever. In 1866 she was married to Alexander B. Matthews, and in 1868 they moved to Kansas City, where they made their home during the remainder of their lives, Brother Matthews preceding her to the better land about four yeras ago. Three daughters were born to them, but one of whom, Mrs. Bixby Willis, of this city, survives her. Two brothers, A. T. and J. J. Ankeny, of Minneapolis, and one sister, Miss Valeria Ankeny, of Somerset, are left to mourn her loss. Sister Matthews was one of those beautiful spirits whose influence is like that of the warm sun and gentle rain upon the earth; no one could come within the range of her personal acquaintance without loving her, and being influenced for the better. She was devotedly loved in this church, of which she had so long been a worthy and consecrated member. Her memory is blessed, and her works will follow her. It was a sweet privilege to have been the pastor of so choice a spirit.

Kansas City, Mo. W. F. Richardson.

McCLINTOCK.

Mrs. Mary J. McClintock died July 27, 1908, aged 71 years, 6 months and 27 days. The funeral was conducted from her late home in Ludlow, Mo., by the undersigned. She was for 61 years a faithful Disciple of Christ.

Wiley Miller, Elder Christian Church.

Ludlow, Mo.

RUSSELL.

Capt. M. T. Russell, at Oakland, Cal., fell asleep June 30, 1908. Decline of health began four years ago and compelled him to leave Des Moines, Ia., where he was highly esteemed. Climatic conditions helped him temporarily; but a surgical operation a few weeks prior to his death revealed incurable ailments. Intense suffering was borne in faith and hope till the peaceful end was reached. Songs of Zion cheered this true patriot and soldier of the cross as the shadows settled over him. Out of the valley he sang, "Jesus Lover of My Soul." Captain Russell was born at Salem, Ind., 71 years ago; became a Christian early, married Miss Harriet Harlan in 1861, became captain of the Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, was given a special medal by Congress for heroism at Stone River, escaped from prison and served to the close of the war. He was a deacon in the Central Church at Des Moines forty years, served as park commissioner twelve years and filled other places of honor. He died in the fellowship of the First Church of Berkeley. The writer conducted the funeral services at the home and the body was cremated. Peace to his ashes. His battle is over and he is more than conqueror.

Berkeley, Cal. I. N. McCash.

Church Furnishings and Supplies

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Made of several materials and in many designs
Send for full particulars and catalogue No. 27. Give the number of communicants and name of church. "The Lord's Supper takes on a new dignity and beauty by the use of the individual cup."—J. K. WILSON, D. D.
GEO. H. SPRINGER, Manager,
256-258 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

BELLS BUCKEYE BELLS, CHIMES and PEALS are known the world over for their full rich tone, durability and low prices.
Write for catalog and estimate. Established 1837.
The E. W. Vanduzen Co., 419 E. 2d St., Cincinnati, O.

New S. S. Songs for 1908
Joy and Praise
By Wm. J. Kirkpatrick and J. H. Fillmore.
Up-to-date in ideas. The best ever. FREE sample pages. Returnable book mailed.
FILLMORE MUSIC HOUSE, 528 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.
or 41-43 Bible House, New York.

CHURCH WINDOWS
Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Jacoby Art Glass Co. St. Louis, Mo.
Dept. 3, Ohio and St. Vincent Aves.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS, MO.
Best of References. Correspondence Solicited.

The Home Department

The Great Guest Comes.

BY EDWIN MARKHAM.

While the cobbler mused there passed his pane
A beggar drenched by the driving rain,
He called him in from the stony street
And gave him shoes for his bruised feet.
The beggar went and there came a crone
Her face with wrinkles of sorrow sown.
A bundle of faggots bowed her back,
And she was spent with the wrench and rack.
He gave her his loaf and steadied her load
As she took her way on the weary road.
Then to his door came a little child,
Lost and afraid in the world so wild,
In the big, dark world. Catching it up,
He gave it the milk in the waiting cup,
And led it home to its mother's arms,
Out of the reach of the world's alarms.

The day went down in the crimson west
And with it the hope of the blessed Guest.
And Conrad sighed as the world turned gray:
"Why is it, Lord, that Your feet delay?
Did you forget that this was the day?"
Then soft in the silence a Voice he heard:
"Lift up your heart, for I kept my word.
Three times I came to your friendly door;
Three times my shadow was on your floor.
I was the beggar with bruised feet;
I was the woman you gave to eat;
I was the child on the homeless street."
—Delineator.

The Beauty Contest in Japan.

The newspaper beauty contest fever has reached Japan! Who says, "you can't hustle the East." The "Jiji Shimpo," the great newspaper of Tokyo and Osaka has offered prizes and called for photographs of the most beautiful women of each section of the country. In beginning this contest the papers announce, "We can not hope to compete with our Western neighbors in beautiful blondes, but we hope to excel them in beautiful brunettes."

The beauty of the house is order,
The blessing of the house is contentment,
The glory of the house is hospitality,
The crown of the house is godliness.

The Sermon Was Too Convincing.

It is hard for the preacher to determine the effect of a sermon. It generally has an effect, but, as in the following case, it may be quite opposite to the one intended.

The Vicar of Heaton, in England, had a parishioner who was a miser. For this man's benefit he preached one Sunday what he believed to be a strong sermon on the necessity of charity and philanthropy. He presented the duty and joy of giving in vivid colors, and thought the miser, at whom he looked often, seemed impressed.

The next day he met the man in the street.

"Well, John," said the vicar, "what did you think of yesterday's sermon?"

"It moved me deeply, sir," John replied. "It has brought home to me so strongly the necessity of giving alms, that honestly, sir, I've a great mind to turn beggar."

"I wouldn't cry like that if I were you," said a lady to little Alice.

"Well," said Alice, between her sobs, "you can cry any way you like, but this is my way."—The United Presbyterian.

Making the Best of One Another.

We may, if we choose, make the worst of one another. Every one has his weak points; every one has his faults; we may make the worst of these; we may fix our attention constantly upon these, but we may also make the best of one another. We may forgive, even as we hope to be forgiven. We may put ourselves in the place of others and ask what we would wish to be done to us and thought of us were we in their place. By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, love will flow back from them to us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain, and earth will become like heaven, and we shall become not unworthy followers of him whose name is Love.

The kingdom of God has no frontiers. Wherever there is sin and need, there Christ wants his kingdom established. No boundaries confine that kingdom to any little locality. It is world-wide and heaven-broad in its extent.

He Met His Match.

He was engaging a new stenographer and he bit off his words and hurled them at her in a way to frighten an ordinary girl out of her wits.

"Chew gum?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Talk slang?"

"No, sir."

"Make goo-goo eyes at the fellows when you're not busy?"

"No, sir."

"Know how to spell 'cat' and 'dog' correctly?"

"Yes, sir."

"Chin thru the telephone half a dozen times a day?"

"No, sir."

"Usually tell the office force how much the firm owes and all the rest of its private business you learn?"

"No, sir."

He was thinking of something to ask her when she took a hand in the matter and put a few queries.

"Smoke cheap cigars when you're dictating?" she asked.

"Why—er—no," he gasped in astonishment.

"Take it out of the stenographer's hide when you've had a scrap at home and got the worst of it?"

"Cer-tainly not!"

"Slam things around and swear when business is bad?"

'N-never."

"Lay for your employers with a club when they get caught in a block some morning?"

"No, indeed."

"Think you know enough about grammar and punctuation to appreciate a good stenographer when you get one?"

"I—I think so."

"Want me to go to work, or is your time worth so little that—"

"You bet!" he broke in enthusiastically. "Kindly hang up your things and let's get at these letters."—Judge.

Pointed Wit.

In one of the elevated trains of Greater New York the other day three gentlemen were engaged in conversation. They did not seem to be concerned as to how many in the car should hear them. They talked loudly enough for those nearest them to hear distinctly.

One of them, and the inference was that they were brewers from their conversation, said to his two friends: "We have got to get hold of the papers if we are ever going to head off this temperance Prohibition wave. We will also have to organize among ourselves (that is, the brewers) to reform the saloon."

One of the two, who seemed to be somewhat of a wit, said, in a humorous tone:

"Jack, I am thinking about starting a society to reform hell. Won't you join me?"

Tommie: But, mamma, fingers were made before forks.

Mamma: Yes, my boy, and dirt was made before pie, but you prefer pie, don't you, Tommie?—Yonkers Statesman.

Nuggets of Wisdom.

He who has no bread to spare should not keep a dog.

God gives every bird its food, but does not throw it into the nest.

It is a foolish sheep that makes the wolf its confessor.

It is more noble to make yourself great than to be born so.

Justice will not condemn even the devil wrongfully.

Knowledge is silver among the poor, gold among nobles and a jewel among princes.

The bird that flutters least in the air remains longest on the wing.

Of all dust thrown into the eyes of men, gold dust is most blinding.

The youth who was smoking a cigarette near the monkey's cage took another one from his pocket. "Would it do any harm," he asked, "if I should offer him one of these?" "Not a bit," responded the attendant. "He wouldn't touch it. A monkey isn't half as big a fool as it looks."—Chicago Tribune.

Be patient. Keep sweet. Do not fret or worry. Do your best and leave results with God. Believe firmly in God, in the fulfillment of his purposes and the march of his provinces. God's laws are immutable, and work with undeviating regularity. Walk in fellowship with God, and every year you will be a stronger, better, happier and sweeter man. Do not mar your peace by needless worry. Live by faith in God, who loves you. On some bright to-morrow you will come to anchor in the city of God.—George B. Vosburgh.

Not a Matter of Creed.

A man addicted to walking in his sleep went to bed all right one night, but when he awoke he found himself on the street in the grasp of a policeman. "Hold on," he cried, "you mustn't arrest me. I'm a somnambulist." To which the policeman replied: "I don't care what your religion is—yer can't walk the streets in yer nightshirt."—Everybody's Magazine.

FOR NERVOUS DISORDERS

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Especially recommended for the relief of nervous headache, exhaustion and insomnia.

READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS

in this issue, and, if interested, in answering them

PLEASE MENTION THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A DROP OF WATER IN A THIRSTY LAND

By MRS. M. J. ADAMS.

Usually the name of Chiquita brings up visions of a tall and slender maiden, but my Chiquita was short and round.

Round, partly because it was her nature to be so, and partly because little Baliro, the brother, spent so many of his hours, both waking and sleeping, in her arms. So Chiquita was round as to the shouders, as well as eyes—indeed, with Baliro perched on her back, or cuddled in her arms, the two resembled an animated interrogation point.

Had it been possible to have explained the resemblance to Chiquita she would have nodded, with a sparkle of eyes and a flash of white teeth: "si, si! it is many questions I ask, but no one knows; it is tondo (stupid), Baliro alone can answer, for when I say, 'Oh, why am I here in this world?' Baliro looks at me earnestly, so Bueno! I see. For Baliro, if for nothing else, I am useful; and so Baliro is wiser than the padre who could not tell me for what I am here."

Truly, Chiquita and the muchacho had plenty of opportunity for exchanging ideas. In an adobe house of one room, with no carpet save that which mother Nature spreads for all her children, there is a cheerfully small amount of housekeeping to do; and so it came to pass that after breakfast Chiquita and Baliro would go out to view the world—and after dinner they did the same. After supper, Baliro, apparently satisfied that the world would move on safely, consented to being deposited on his bed in the corner. Then, oh, joy! Chiquita was free; free to run from end to end of the street with Juan, Susanne, and the others, as they tumbled over each other in a Mexican game of tag.

Sometimes when Baliro had been more than usually heavy, this exertion was soon too much for Chiquita, and she would drop down beside the door of the next adobe and listen to the ting, ting, of Lopez's guitar. Lopez came every evening to play for Blanche. The listener by the door sometimes wondered if the two didn't get very tired of each other and the guitar night after night, and when she reached this point she would run away to the little hill just back of the village, where she loved to lie in the stillness and watch the stars in their mysterious corners and wonder did San Jose and San Juan in their little niches in the wall, did they know anything about what lay above and beyond that throbbing host of stars? And if so, why didn't they tell her in some way. Porque (why)? And why didn't the priest come again to Santa Vesta? Only three times could she remember his coming, and then he was much too busy to talk to her. Oh, how many strange things in this world! Who was Jesus? Was he a saint like San Juan? Surely not, for his name was in some way connected with the terrible march of the Penitentes, and that was so cruel, so dreadful! Chiquita's little soul sickened. She clenched her small hands and breathed hard and fast. Why did the saints and this Jesus make men do such horrible things? The mother always cried when any one spoke of the Penitentes. Porque?—but here a voice called, "Chiquita, muchacha," and the stars said good-night to Chiquita, and the day was over.

It was such a ragged little village in which our girl lived—there was one street which broadened out in its course to make room for the well and then twisted and wavered uncertainly until it ended in a deplorable group of adobes, doorless, windowless, and altogether forsaken.

And this was Chiquita's world, with a heaven of brass during the hot summer days, and a canopy of star-set blue at night. As far as the eyes could reach there seemed nothing but sweep of desert, and with its own peculiar and stunted growth; but when the air was wonderfully clear one could catch a glimpse of snow-clad mountains, so transient that they seemed more mirage than a vision of reality.

But Chiquita knew they were real, those mountains, for had she not one happy springtime journeyed with her father to the town which lay almost in their shadow? How every detail of that happy journey was recalled, and counted over and over as a miser counts his gold; for that one glimpse of the world had quite changed her life and her thoughts. The city was beautiful and the shops—grande! but oh, more wonderful and to Chiquita more beautiful, the stream of clear, cold water which flowed down from the mountains through the very streets. There was so little water to be had at home—the well from which they drew the daily supply, as did all their neighbors, was often low, and muddy with frequent disturbance; and the melons shriveled and grew brown, and nothing would grow for the want of water; but here there was so much! There were other strange things they saw during that visit. Right next to the house where they slept was a long, low adobe, in nowise different from many others in appearance, but such wonderful things seemed to be going on there. Such bright-faced, happy girls passed to and fro, and there were American ladies with fair faces who spoke so kindly to the girls, and night and morning there was such beautiful singing. The first evening Chiquita stood close by the window and listened. They were learning a song, which seemed to associate itself in the mind of the listener with the clear, cool stream which passed the door—"Jesus, the water of life, will give freely, freely, freely—to them that love him." Over and over they sang it, interrupted by the teacher's voice as she corrected and encouraged, and when Chiquita, tired with her journey, crept off to bed, the voices were ringing out true and clear. "Jesus the water of life will give."

Our girl watched her neighbors most eagerly, but it was not until the morning of departure that she mustered up courage to get as far as the door of what she heard

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

PASTOR'S COLLEGE

Champaign, Ill.

New road to the ministry. Especially for men and women of limited education and burning zeal. Only one year in college then training while preaching. Freshness, power, time, enthusiasm conserved. Catalogue ready.

52 RAILROADS

are employing our students. Attend on credit and pay after a position is secured. NO POSITION, NO PAY. 5 teachers of railroad experience. Largest and best equipped school in the West. Attendance doubled last year. Car fare paid. Write for Catalog.

CHILLICOTHE TELEGRAPHY COLLEGE,
754 Irving Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN

Sixt'eth Session opens Sept. 9. Regular College and Preparatory Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Physical Culture, New Laboratories. Splendid Campus, Attentive Home Care. Catalog and further information on request.

E. L. BARHAM, President, Camden Point, Platte Co., Mo.

EUREKA COLLEGE

A record of fifty-two successful years. Six substantial and convenient buildings, lighted with electricity and warmed by central heating plant. Beautiful campus shaded with natural trees. Biological and physical laboratories with modern equipment. Carefully selected library, including the best periodicals. Lida's Wood, girls' dormitory, known far and wide. Wholesome atmosphere. Eureka stands for the best. Courses offered: Collegiate, Preparatory, Sacred Literature, Public Speaking, Music, Art and Commercial.

For catalogue and further information, address ROBERT E. HIERONYMUS, President

TEXAS CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

WACO, TEXAS

Thirty-sixth year. Faculty from leading Universities of Europe and America. Graduates take advanced standing in the older American Universities. Music, Art and Oratory advantages unsurpassed in the Southwest. Three Grand Pianos, twenty-five new Upright Pianos and Pipe Organ in daily use. Up-to-date Practical Business College in connection, first-class Library and Reading Room, five well-equipped Laboratories, capacious Natatorium and modern Gymnasium. Athletics the best. Pure Artesian Water. Our own heat and light plans.

Box 111, CLINTON LOCKHART, Ph. D., LL. D., President.

BETHANY COLLEGE

Located among the healthful West Virginia hills. 68th year begins Tuesday, Sept. 22d. College courses offered: Classical, Scientific, Civil Engineering, Ministerial, Normal, Music, Art, Oratory, Shorthand and Bookkeeping. Also high grade Preparatory School, which prepares for any college. Special supervision given to young boys and girls. Environments well nigh ideal. No saloons in the county. Six well-equipped buildings. Two large dormitories. New trolley line now in operation connecting Bethany hourly with Wellsburg, Wheeling, Steubenville and other Ohio River towns. Expenses very low. Board, room and tuition for the college year as low as $124. Opportunities for self support. A loan fund for ministerial students. Apply at once for catalogue. Address, PRESIDENT THOMAS E. CRAMBLET,
Bethany, W. Va.

MIAMI UNIVERSITY THE FAMOUS OLD COLLEGE OF THE CENTRAL WEST

(Supported the by State of Ohio.)

85th year opens September 16th. Free Tuition. Low cost of living. Wide range of studies. Thorough instruction. Christian influences. No saloons. A well-equipped gymnasium with specially trained physical director. Beautiful campus of sixty-five acres. Splendid buildings. Modern equipment. Write for catalogue and handsomely illustrated bulletin to the President.

GUY POTTER BENTON, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ohio.

them call the "school-room." Then she looked so wistfully at the girls that a lady, who was sitting at the desk, said softly to one of those near her, "Nita, go and make the little stranger welcome."

But even Nita could coax her no farther than the door, so that at a word from the teacher Nita slipped down on the doorstep, inviting Chiquita to a seat beside her. After some little conversation, the visitor asked, shyly, but eagerly, "What does it mean, the song of last night?"

Nita looked puzzled. "Why, it means Jesus will give us the water of life if only we ask him."

"Does it come from the mountains like this?" with a sweep toward the street.

"Oh, no; from heaven," came the answer.

"Where the saints live?"

"Yes, and Jesus; but you know here they don't teach the saints—it is Jesus the Son of God, and he will send us the water of life and make us happy and good; but we must ask him. You should come here and learn!"

The teacher was moving gently down to join the two on the step when Chiquita's father called, and she darted off with a smile and nod to her new acquaintance. The teacher stood with Nita watching the burros, as they pattered down the street carrying Chiquita and her father back to Santa Vesta. "I wanted so much to speak with her," said the teacher, regretfully, "but perhaps it is better so. Pray, Nita, that she may have taken a thought of Jesus with her."

On the road to Santa Vesta the father was asking curiously, "What did she say to you, Chiquita?"

"I asked her about the song I heard last night; and she told me of all that she had heard."

The father smiled grimly. "The priest, if he ever comes again, will not be pleased to smile upon thee, Chiquita. He says we must have nothing to do with evil. He says all Protestants are wrong."

Chiquita shook her head dubiously: "My father, I can not think so. They look so happy and clean, these Protestants, and they seem to know so much."

The father sighed as he pushed back his sombrero.

"How can we know anything—no schools, and the padre coming just four or five times in a lifetime. Our souls are dry like our country, Chiquita, dry, dry and thirsty."

Chiquita looked up quickly. "'But the Protestants sang, 'Jesus the water of life will give.'"

The father sighed again as he turned to tighten his saddle straps. "It is all too much for us to understand. The mother asked the padre once to get us a Bible, but was very angry and said it was not for us to read, but for the father to interpret."

Chiquita gave a defiant little nod. "If we can not read, we can ask Jesus to send us the water of life. To-night, and every night, when we say the padre's prayers, let us also ask this." And the father answered to satisfy the child, and who knows—his own heart it may have been—Si, si, Chiquita."

Oh, how well she remembered it all! She could shut her eyes now and hear the tapping of the leather fringing on the saddle, and the strange, small sounds of the desert.

That was an end of the happy time forever. Before they reached home the father was complaining, and the next day he was burning with fever, and so strange that Chiquita was almost afraid of him. Day after day she watched with the mother beside him, while Baliro crept unnoticed about the door. Oh! the heat and the burning winds, with their burden of shaking sand; and the water so low and hot! Again and again would he call, "Water, water!" and Chiquita would hold the cup to the sick man's lips, only to hear him cry, as he pushed it away, "Jesus—water—life!" And then there came a day when he opened his eyes and spoke quietly to the mother "Si, si; that is it—the water of life; and Chiquita must also learn, and Baliro, and you."

Ah! many a night Chiquita cried softly to herself, as she went over that last day, and then with her tear-stained face turned up to the stars she would ask Jesus to send the water of life to the village of Santa Vesta, to the mother and to Baliro and herself—"For we are a very thirsty village, Jesus, and need it so very much."

Away in the East, thousands of miles from the little Mexican village, a group of men were gathered about a table discussing plans and studying maps. "Just here," one was saying, "right over the line of the main canal; we must follow them where it is possible. I should not have thought of touching Santa Vesta, but for this information about the ditch. As the matter stands, I think we should make the place one of the best points in the road. Irrigation will soon make the entire surrounding section a farming country, and we want to be right there early. I should recommend that our men push into Santa Vesta within sixty days."

In another room in the same great city a number of earnest-faced women were gathered around a table, also covered with books and maps. One was speaking rapidly, finger on the map. "I know that it seems a small place for new work such times as these, but my husband has thoroughly reliable information concerning the future of Santa Vesta. He says that within the next sixty days the Atlantic and Pacific will be running a daily train into the village." There was a chorus of interested exclamations, and when the earnest voice said, "Let us go up and occupy the land," they all responded, "Amen."

And in yet another room, a little later on, there were two women—one in the early flush of womanhood, the other in middle life.

"Mildred, you don't mean it!"

"Indeed, Auntie, I do. I am so free now"—with a little break in her voice—"and you know how she used to say,

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

A Christian Home and High Grade College for Girls and Young Women

College Preparatory, Full College and Special Courses. Faculty of experienced specialists. Superior advantages in Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science and Physical Training. If you want good care, culture, thoroughness and satisfactory results, investigate.

For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. W. T. MOORE, President.

200 College Place, Columbia, Mo.

HIRAM COLLEGE

HIRAM, OHIO.

From a Students' Symposium in the "Hiram College Advance":

What are a few essential characteristics of a strong, although perhaps small college, which are worthy of our attention and should induce us to favor it above all others?

First, a healthy environment for study; in the next place, able and manly professors with whom a student can form intimate associations, and lastly a deep spiritual life sustained and encouraged by the influences brought to bear in the community. As these three phases are to be found in the Hiram life, I rested my decision in choosing the "Old Hill" as the spot on which to spend college days.

The Home-coming issue of the "Advance" containing the symposium entire, the inaugural address of President Bates, a poem by Jessie Brown Pounds, articles by Judge F. A. Henry and Profs. E. B. Wakefield, B. S. Dean and G. H. Colton, and many other things of interest, also catalog and full information, sent free on application to J. O. Newcomb, Secretary, Hiram, Ohio. Mention "The Christian-Evangelist."

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

Elegant buildings, over one hundred rooms. Preparing to erect $50,000.00 worth more of buildings.

Campus, eighty-six acres. Creeks, springs, native forests.

Cost for tuition alone $5.00 per month; for board alone $12.00 per month; for board and tuition in College home $16.00 per month. Four Universities are represented in the Faculty.

The College gives Ministerial, Classical, Philosophical, and Scientific Courses.

The school has neither hazing, nor secret fraternities; does not desire to enroll boys and young men who are unwilling to stand for clean habits and worthy characters.

Correspondence invited. Address J. HOPWOOD, Lynchburg, Va.

31 STUDENTS of the CHILLICOTHE BUSINESS COLLEGE placed last year as instructors in business colleges. Other schools recognize us. 90 students placed in BANKS. 53 Typewriters. Position secured or tuition refunded. Write for free Catalog.

ALLEN MOORE, Pres.,

3883 MONROE ST., CHILLICOTHE, Mo.

"Daughter, let the Lord lead you and use you as he sees best. I can ask no greater happiness for you than this."

The elder woman looked up almost impatiently. "But, Mildred, you don't suppose for an instant that she thought of New Mexico? There is so much for you to do here—and with your education."

"Yes," Mildred replied, with a smile lurking in the blue eyes, "it is providential as you suggest, Auntie, that I have made such a specialty of Spanish."

Miss Health looked up quickly and laughed a little before she replied: "Well, my dear, if the Lord calls you to go I haven't a word to say, only that we'll miss you dreadfully. Perhaps in feeling that your beautiful life would be wasted in such work I have need to learn again the lesson of the alabaster box."

Ah, Chiquita, with your tear-stained face and sorrowful little heart, you have wonderful things to learn of the way in which God hears and answers the prayers of his little one. You are tired to-night; Baliro has been so heavy to-day, and the long street has seemed still longer as you carried your jar back and forth so many times for your mother's washing. But listen, muchaca; the men are digging, digging, and soon the waters from the mountains will be flowing past your very door.

And wonderful, most wonderful! away to the north hammers are ringing out a merry tune as the rails go down so quickly—oh, so quickly—oh, so quickly! The blue-eyed teacher has left her home and is coming to bring you light and joy. Very soon the iron horse will shake his smoky mane as he comes over the desert bringing you your heart's desire.

Ah, yes! for you, and the mother, and Baliro and all in the village of Santa Vesta the water of life is flowing. Down from the eternal heights of God's love it is coming and "the desert shall blossom as the rose." And the men who built the road for the iron horse and the men who digged the ditch—they think, foolish ones, that they were working out their own plans; but you and I know, my Chiquita, that our Father in heaven uses these small things to work out the plans of his loving kindness and tender mercies; and when Baliro is no longer a baby, but a great, brave boy, you will teach him to sing the song that is to you the sweetest of all, for you will have proved that

"Jesus the water of life will give Freely to them that love him."

A Modern Crusoe.

The experiences of Dr. A. Szielasko, a German geographer, are almost as interesting as those of Robinson Crusoe. He took ship for Antarctic waters, with scientific apparatus for securing data relative to unmapped regions. In sight of the Antarctic lands the ship was wrecked, and the scientist, with the crew, gained the shore in small boats. Dr. Szielasko had lost all his apparatus, but, undaunted, he constructed measuring instruments of wood, and began his explorations, tracing mountains, glaciers, and other physical features, and gathering notes concerning birds and animal life. As a result, while waiting for a ship to come along and rescue the party, he made a record of his data and put it into shape, so that it has been published in Germany. It is recognized as one of the most valuable of contributions to the world's knowledge of Antarctic lands.

50 Bible Students

Can attend college at half regular rates by working part time. Term opens September 7. Write Charles J. Burton, Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Hurtin's Bizness.

"Don't you know you're hurtin' bizness?" said the red fox to the hound,
"When instead of sleepin' peaceful you come snoopin', sniffin' round?
What's the good of all your barkin'? What's the use of all this fuss?
What were chickens ever made for if they weren't made for us?"

"Can't you see you're hurtin' bizness?" said the South Sea savage chief
To the fearless missionary who was sitting on the reef;
"I have seven white men captured that I want to sell as meat;
What were white folks ever made for if they weren't made to eat?"

"Don't you know you're hurtin' bizness?" said the robber in the jail,
While the stubborn sheriff listened to his almost tearful tale;
"Those who make and sell the jimmies, don't you see, are losin' trade While you foolishly confine me where no get-aways are made?"

"Can't you see you're hurtin' bizness," said the devil to the man
Who was steadily progressing on the live-and-let-live plan;
"You are keepin' men from fallin' who, if sorely pressed, might fall;
Why, if all men done as you do I would have no job at all."

—Chicago Record-Herald.

PROFITABLE VACATION.

BY DOROTHY STORRS.

The lap of Dame Nature is so broad, warm and comfortable that when the days of vacation come the temptation to curl down there and fall asleep is almost irresistible. The dear old soul promptly tucks a poppy pillow under one's head, wraps her weary guest in a patchwork quilt of sunshine and shadow, and orders her many-toned orchestra to such a distance that the music of wind and wave and bird only soothes and deepens slumbers. Hours, days, slip by; rest has done its blessed work, vigor returns to the worn brain, health glows in cheek and eye. Then the universal mother knows that she has something better than sleep for her child; she spreads a feast in his honor, brings forth her wonder book and volumes of fairy tales and tries to awaken him. Too often, alas! her efforts avail nothing—the sleeper merely yawns and turns to drop into a deeper torpor than before. Presently the period of vacation ending with sudden energy he rushes off to the city and—never knows what he has missed!

Granted that rest is often the first boon to be sought in taking a holiday, it does not follow that there are not better things in reserve for those who make the effort to find them. Indolence is the besetting sin of most of us—a habit of sleep-walking not easily overcome—but the rewards of nature are for those willing to devote time, attention and energy to seeking in her treasure house and learning the secrets she

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

$135 PAYS 48 WEEKS

Tuition, Board and Room Rent. 1200 students, 26 Instructors. Professional, University Preparatory, Common School and Musical courses. Car fare paid. Attend on credit. Send for free catalog.

CHILLICOTHE NORMAL SCHOOL,
60 Normal Ave., Chillicothe, Mo.

Oklahoma Christian University

Located at Enid, Oklahoma. One of the finest railroad centers in the southwest. Elevated region, bracing atmosphere and good water; excellent climate and fine buildings. A well equipped educational plant, one of the best west of the Mississippi River. Large and experienced Faculty, extensive courses—literary and Biblical. Superior advantages for Business Training, Music, Fine Art and Oratory. The following Schools and Colleges in successful operation:

I. College of Arts and Sciences.
II. College of the Bible.
III. College of Business.
IV. College of Music.
V. School of Oratory and Expression.
VI. School of Fine Art.
VII. Elective Courses in great variety.

EXPENSES MODERATE.

There is no better place in which to be educated than in a school located as this is in the heart of this great and rapidly developing southwest that offers better opportunities to young people than any other place in the United States. Preachers, Lawyers, Doctors and Business Men by the thousand are needed.

Next session opens September 15, 1908.

Send for catalogue to Miss Emma Frances Hartshorn, Registrar, Oklahoma Christian University.

E. V. ZOLLARS, President. O. C. U.

William Woods College

For Young Women

Competent Teachers; Student Government; Complete Equipment; Articulates with Missouri University; Full Literary Courses; Scientific Laboratories; Physical Culture; Expression; Art; Domestic Science; Voice; Piano; Business Course; Superb Dining Hall; Large Recreation Room; Sanitarium; Ample Campus; Tennis; Hockey; Basket Ball; Exceptionally Healthful Location.

J. B. Jones, Pres.
Fulton, Mo.

MISSOURI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

ONE YEAR FREE AT ROYAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, LEIPZIG, FOR THE HONOR GRADUATE.

Faculty of 30 graduate instructors. Vocal and Instrumental. Classes and private lessons. Languages, Oratory, Dramatic Art. Normal courses for Teachers. Boarding department for young ladies, one-half block from school. Careful supervision. Students met at train. Terms moderate. Write for Catalogue.

J. C. EISENBERG, DIRECTOR 2108 LAFAYETTE AVE.
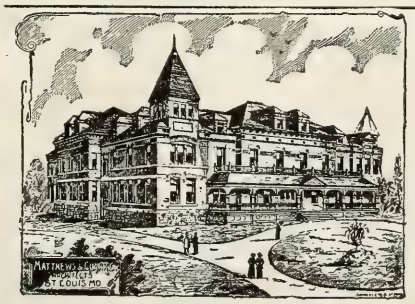
ST. LOUIS, MO.



CARR-BURDETTE COLLEGE

AND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, ART AND EXPRESSION

In location, building, climate and health conditions, home furnishings, department equipments and faculty Carr-Burdette is the peer of any Young Ladies' Boarding School North or South. Experienced educators have so adjudged it. It is select and limited in number. Building and grounds deeded to the Church free from debt. Bible taught every day. Write at once for catalogue and read for yourself, or visit us and see for yourself. Address,

SECRETARY, CARR-BURDETTE,
Sherman, Texas.

only can teach. It is a truism that even the best rest often comes not from loafing, but through change of occupation.

Children are a rebuke to their elders in this direction. Their quick eyes and eager, questioning tongues take nothing for granted and will make a greater number of wonderful discoveries in a week than average parents do in a month; yet with their maturer powers adults should have the advantage. The difficulty is that grown people allow themselves to be preoccupied with interests to escape from which they left home, or fall victims to inertia. There is nothing blase about a normal boy. How promptly he knows the number of cows, horses and chickens there are on a farm, to what breeds they belong, what crops are planted in each field, what vegetables grow in the garden, and the prospect for fruit in the orchard and through the berry patches, not to mention a large fund of miscellaneous information! Soon he recognizes the common birds, imitates their calls, and can show hidden nests to any sympathetic grown-up anxious to share his secret. Happy the child who is encouraged to give such confidences to father and mother! Happier still the families in which parents and children wander together along country roads or through the woods!

One of the strangest contradictions in human nature manifests itself in the fact that hundreds of people leave their homes every summer with the avowed intention of "getting close to nature," and yet carry with them the whole program of an elaborate city life, from "bridge" to formal dinner-giving. To such the real country is like a picture gallery as seen by a visitor untrained in art and having no catalogue. In either case contact with an enthusiast whose enthusiasm is founded in knowledge, comes like a revelation. Fortunately, bird classes have grown fashionable, and many fine nature books are published. The expenditure of a little time and zeal brings surprising results—each tree and plant develops individuality, the birds sing each his own song, and the buttercup and evening primrose no longer look alike. We walk through the country not as aliens, but as those who pause at every step to greet a friend or begin an acquaintance. Dull eyes and ears grow alert and eager, seeing new beauties on every side and discovering fascinating vistas which invite further study. As Tennyson says:

"The smallest herb or leaf can charm
The man whom nature's beauties warm."

But give her an audience and nature's appeal is almost universal among thinking people, and the avenues of observation are many. It is an interesting experiment to ask each of a group of persons to write his strongest impression in connection with some natural event, such as a storm, a sunset or a flight of birds. Every view is different and each may learn much from the others.

Some one has said that every scientist should be a poet, and Thoreau is called the "poet-naturalist." Nature's message to the awakened imagination is strong in proportion to the sensitiveness of the individual, and poets who know and love her must ever be our best guides and interpreters. What a privilege is ours to listen to "the lark's airy music" through Shelley's ears, see the daffodils with Wordsworth's eyes, or follow the brook with Tennyson! Few of us can become expert observers, fewer still have even a spark of interpretive genius; but any one of us who finds himself idling or dozing away the precious hours of vacation, may join in Stevenson's suggestive petition:

"Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake!"

—Interior.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

COTNER UNIVERSITY Bethany (Lincoln), Nebr.

COLLEGE OF ARTS, four courses, four years each. Classical, Sacred, Literature, Philosophical, Collegiate, Normal, leading to A. B.—COLLEGE OF MEDICINE—DEPARTMENTS of Sacred Literature and Education. Combine six year course leading to degrees A. B. and M. D. Grants State Certificates, grade and life. SCHOOLS of Music, Business, Oratory, Art. ACADEMY accredited by state.

Beautiful location. Connected with Lincoln by electric line. New gymnasium. New heating plant building. First Semester opens September 7th, 1908. Second Semester opens January 26th, 1909. Address. W. P. AYLSWORTH, Chancellor.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY
CANTON, MO.

A Christian School for the Higher Education of young men and women. Splendid location. New Building. Expenses very moderate. Departments: Preparatory, Classical, Scientific, Ministerial, Music.

Send for free illustrated Catalog.

Address, CARL JOHANN, President, Canton, Missouri.

FORTIETH YEAR.

HAMILTON COLLEGE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG WOMEN.

Famous old school of the Bluegrass Region. Located in the "Athens of the South." Superior Faculty of twenty-three Instructors, representing Yale, University of Michigan, Wellesley, University of Cincinnati, Radcliffe, and Columbia University. Splendid, commodious buildings, newly refurnished, heated by steam. Laboratories, good Library, Gymnasium, Tennis and Athletic Fields. Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Exclusive patronage. Home care. Certificate admits to Eastern Colleges. For illustrated Year Book and further information address

MRS. LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR, President, Lexington, Ky.

Next Session opens Sept. 14, 1908. $40,000 in recent additions and improvements.

Campbell-Hagerman College

For Girls and Young Women. Begins its next session September 14, 1908. Large Faculty of scholarly men and women. Thoroughly equipped Departments of Music, Art and Expression. Confers A. B. anl B. L. Degrees. 126 graduates in the regular course, in the last five years. Between 60 and 70 graduates in the special Schools of Music, Art and Expression. Departments of Bookkeeping, Stenography and Typewriting. School of Domestic Science. Well equipped Gymnasium. Splendid new buildings with all modern conveniences. For catalogue address, B. C. HAGERMAN, Pres., Lexington, Ky.

1798 TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY 1908

CONTINUING KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

On recommendation of the Board of Curators, and by authority of the Kentucky Legislature, the name Kentucky University is given up, and this historic Institution, on the very site and with the memories of the oldest seat of learning west of the Alleghenies, reassumes the name Transylvania. Kentucky Univerisity has done noble work and the new Transylvania will preserve the best inheritance of the past and grow with the larger work of this new time.

Transylvania University is a standard institution with elective courses, modern equipment, a strong faculty chosen from some of the best universities of America and Europe, and those surroundings which make for thought and culture. First semester begins September 14, 1908. Send for catalog to-day. PRESIDENT, TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY, Lexington, Kentucky.

SQUARETAIL, AN ORCHARD CHILD

By LYLE WARD SANDERSON.

"Alas! more trouble in Paradise!" exclaimed Miss Lou, and, picking up cushion and field glasses she wandered down into the orchard.

Now the orchard is the most beautiful place in the world; no one ever stays there long without finding it was all a dream about being grown-up and tall and having responsibilities and cares. There is nothing anywhere quite as bright as the sunlight in the orchard when it shimmers over the grasses; the softest breezes imaginable, sweet with the breath of the distant sea, stirs the grasses, which bend and bow and listen to the murmurings of the creek which winds about the foot of the orchard. The apple trees are very old and gnarled and twisted into curious shapes. Like a sentinel, a great white oak has hung over the water for more than a hundred years. Beyond the creek broad open fields slope away to dark pine woods.

When Miss Lou had come back to her old home in June she found the place, which had been closed for a year, quite overrun with grass and birds; indeed, the birds had taken complete possession. Flocks of purple finches fed like chickens about the door; the shy cuckoo stole from tree to tree; chipping sparrows perched on the roof and telegraphed, with sharp chip-chip, chip-chip-chip-chip, their messages to friends across the creek; tall blue herons, with heads drawn back and proud breadth of wing, came flying from beyond the woods to wade in the creek and fish for eels all the golden afternoon; but it remained for the robins to show the greatest audacity.

Mr. Squaretail, as Miss Lou had dubbed one particularly forward youngster, often perched and took a nap on the scraper on the side of her steps, or cuddled, like a tiny hen on a nest, on the door-mat; and when Miss Lou came out to sit on the steps, Squaretail's mother actually flew in her face, with a scream, and tried to drive her away.

"Whoever can be quarreling in a place like this!" questioned Miss Lou, and pushed her way through the grass till she came to the lettuce-bed.

"Oh, it's you, Squaretail, and, of course, you are hungry," she said to the fat young robin which hopped excitedly about.

Squaretail was an only child, so Miss Lou had concluded from her observations, and a spoiled one at that. All day long he chased his parents round, demanding, "More worms, more worms quick!" squealing at them, fluttering his wings rapidly, and holding his bright yellow mouth wide open. First his father, then his mother, toiled to satisfy his ever-increasing appetite. Miss Lou could see that they actually took turns, of about twenty minutes apiece, for Mother Robin had a curious white mark on her breast that easily identified her.

"Squaretail, Squaretail, you are as big as your father. Why don't you learn to dig worms for yourself, you spoiled young one?" said Miss Lou reprovingly, and strolled on down toward the old oak.

Something caught her eye in the Porter apple tree, and creeping near she saw two round little soft balls of fluff, with light spotted breasts, sitting very close together on a twig, while the third ball perched solemnly on another twig just below and a little to the right of the pair.

"Oh! you funny little things! Are you having your pictures taken to put on a Christmas card?" she exclaimed softly, and crept about to get a better view. Then she saw that each little ball was not perfectly round, but had the tiniest, funniest half inch of a tail which stuck straight down behind. The three little balls, sitting as erect and proud as a wee mite of a small boy in his first pair of trousers, looked so comical that Miss Lou laughed till she fell back into the grass where she established herself for observations.

"Who are you, baby dears, and where is your mother?" she inquired.

The three drew a little closer together as if to say: "Mother's away; she told us to keep very quiet till she came back."

"I wonder when she's coming," thought Miss Lou after awhile, as she watched a brilliant bluebird swinging on a twig. The bird appeared a bit nervous, and kept moving about from one tree to another until it drew near the trio, who at once began to squeal and flutter their tiny wings.

"O Mrs. Bluebird, I never dreamed they were your babies!" exclaimed Miss Lou in delight. "What dears they are! You must [illegible] I suppose they'll grow bluer as they get bigger. Aren't they hungry, though!"

Mrs. Bluebird, with a wary eye on her visitor, proceeded to feed the three in due order: first Bubby Bluebird, then Sonny, then the Little One. After giving a few quiet instructions, away she flew, while the trio waited patiently her return, "being good" to the best of their knowledge.

For a long time Lou watched as the bird came and went, but she saw no quarreling, no crowding or greediness among the little Bluebirds, and perfect behavior during their mother's absence.

"You at least know how to bring up children, Mrs. Bluebird," she said, as thoughts of her own supper caused her to turn homeward.

Baby finches were being fed in the short grass; baby song sparrows twittered softly in the low bushes; baby chippies perched on the old fence; Squaretail hopped after his parents, quite crazy over the feast they were bringing him; but, best of all, as Miss Lou focused her field-glasses, she discovered the little Bluebirds in a tree near by. They had grown wonderfully in the few days, and their wings seemed strong; but they made no attempt to leave the tree where their mother had placed them. All this some day later.

Suddenly from a bush, a gray catbird, acting as policeman for the crowd, gave a shrill cry of warning; the next second every bird and birdling, save one, made for cover. Mr. Squaretail, alone and unconcerned, hopped bravely along in the short grass.

Miss Lou, looking round the haystack for the reason of the panic, grew weak with fright at the sight of a long, lean cat crouched for a spring.

"Run, Squaretail, run!" she cried.

"Fly to the tree, fly!" shrieked Mrs. Robin, bravely dashing at the cat. But Squaretail had never done anything but exactly as he pleased; he saw no reason why he should leave his play, and so—there was a bound and a squeal, and the cat was gone. Alas! so was young Squaretail.

"O Bobbie Squaretail!" mourned Miss Lou, "why didn't you learn to mind your mother? Why didn't your mother make you stay safely in a tree like the little Bluebirds?"

It was no use pursuing the cat, which was now far under the barn.

Mrs. Bluebird perched lightly on an elm twig, began to sing a little. "My children always do as they are told," she twittered, with a pardonable pride.—Zion's Herald.

"SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS" ADVERTISING
IN THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
BRINGS SATISFACTORY RESULTS
Two Cents per word, per insertion.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

BUTLER COLLEGE

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA,

Is a standard co-educational college. It maintains departments of Greek, Latin, German, French, English, Philosophy and Education, Sociology and Economics, History, Political Science, Mathematics, Astronomy, Biology, Geology and Botany, Chemistry. Also a school for Ministerial Education. Exceptional opportunities for young men to work their way through college. Best of advantages for ministerial students. Library facilities excellent. The faculty of well-trained men. Expenses moderate. Courses for training of teachers. Located in most pleasant residence suburb of Indianapolis. Fall term opens September 22nd. Send for catalogue.

PREACHERS WANTED!

By the brotherhood, by churches, by district and state organizations. Our centennial aim is 10,000; we now have only half that number. The supply of preachers does not equal the demand. The College of the Bible exists to increase this supply. It asks for the names of intelligent and spritually-minded young men who are thinking of responding to this call of the Lord and his Church. The following are a few of the advantages which it offers to such young men:

(1) It is the only college of the brotherhood devoted exclusively to the training of preachers. Other Institutions have Biblical Departments; all of its resources are devoted to imparting of religious instructions.

(2) There are more ministerial students here than in any other institution of the brotherhood; 201 last session.

(3) It not only has a past but a splendid future. It is growing and new departments and courses are being added.

(4) Its association with Transylvania University enables its students to secure all necessary or desired classical and scientific training.

(5) More thorough training in the Bible than can be obtained elsewhere. Five professors.

(6) Means of self-help which are unsurpassed. (Write for leaflet on Aids to Self-help.

THE COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE,
Lexington, Ky.

Publicity Department.

THE WORLD-FAMOUS

Tissot Bible Pictures

A collection of 120 from the Old Testament and 120 from the New Testament

Size 5x6 and beautifully colored. Each collection in a convenient portfolio.

EVERY CHRISTIAN HOME SHOULD HAVE THESE PICTURES

And having made special arrangements with the publishers, we are in position to supply them at the remarkably low price of

$1.00 FOR EACH COLLECTION

Upon receipt of $1.00 we will send by mail, postpaid, either the Old Testament or New Testament collection,---the selection to be made by the purchaser.

OR

We will send these pictures to subscribers to "The Christian-Evangelist"

ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE

UPON THE FOLLOWING TERMS AND CONDITIONS:

1. A portfolio containing the full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $3.00 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full amount, $3.00, to pay the subscription for a period of two years. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are now paid.

2. The same offer as above to any subscriber who sends in $3.00—one-half of this amount to apply on his or her own subscription, and one-half for a new subscriber for one year.

3. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us $1.50 to apply on his or her subscription. Besides sending the portfolio free of charge, postpaid, we shall credit the subscriber the full $1.50, to pay the subscription for a period of one year. This offer applies to subscribers who are in arrears, or to those who are paid up and wish to pay that much in advance, from the date to which their subscriptions are paid.

4. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any NEW subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" sending us $1.50 for one year's subscription.

5. A portfolio containing a collection of 48 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any of our present subscribers who send us a new subscriber under the terms set forth in the preceding paragraph (No. 4). That is, we will send a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the new subscriber, and also a portfolio containing 48 pictures to the old subscriber sending us the new subscription.

6. A portfolio containing full collection of 120 pictures, either Old Testament or New Testament studies, free of charge, postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us two new subscriptions, accompanied by $3.00 to pay for same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old Testament or New Testament studies.

SPECIAL AND EXTRAORDINARY

7. Two portfolios, one containing the full collection of 120 pictures of Old Testament studies, and one collection containing 120 pictures of New Testament studies, both free of charge and postpaid, to any subscriber to "The Christian-Evangelist" who sends us three new subscriptions, accompanied by $4.50, to pay for the same for one year in advance. To each of the new subscribers we will send a collection of 48 pictures of either Old or New Testament studies.

We reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time, without notice.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

VOLUME XLV. NUMBER 34.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 20, 1908.

Concord Christian Church, Tazewell County, Ill. A characteristic country church.

The Christian-Evangelist

J. H. GARRISON, Editor
PAUL MOORE, Assistant Editor
F. D. POWER, B. B. TYLER, W. DURBAN, } Staff Correspondents.

Published by the Christian Publishing Company 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

All Matter for publication should be addressed to The Editor.
Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.
News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

CONTENTS.

Current Events 1059
Editorial—
The Young Minister and the Country Church 1060
A Vital Difference 1060
Newness of Life 1060
Notes and Comments 1061
Current Religious Thought 1062
Editor's Easy Chair 1063
Contributed Articles—
The Vision of Unity. William Durban 1064
The Country Church in Missouri. T. A. Abbott 1065
Our Country Churches in Indiana. J. O. Rose 1065
Kentucky's County Churches. H. W. Elliott 1066
The Illinois Country Church. J. Fred Jones 1067
The Country Church in Ohio.. C. A. Freer 1067
Let Fourth Time Mean a Week. Robert Simmons 1067
The Country Minister. J. B. McLeod, B. D. 1068
Our County Churches in Iowa. B. S. Denny 1068
Another Tour of African Swamps. R. Ray Eldred 1069
Our Budget 1070
The State of the Cause 1073
Revising the Church Roll 1074
A Good Example of the Country Church 1074
Nebraska State Convention 1075
Illinois Missionary Society 1075
The Walla Walla Convention 1076
Evangelistic 1079
Adult Bible Class Movement 1080
Midweek Prayer-meeting 1081
Christian Endeavor 1081
People's Forum 1082
The Home Department 1083

J. H. Garrison, President.
W. W. Dowling, V. Pres't. W. Daviess Pittman, Bus. Mgr. W. D. Cree, Sec.-Treas.

Christian Publishing Company

2712 PINE STREET - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

August 20, 1908.

To Our Subscribers,
Dear Friends:—

Within the past few days we have received a communication from the Post Office Department at St. Louis, reminding us of the recent Ruling of the Department at Washington, necessitating our taking from our mailing list all subscribers who are in arrears one year and over.

Since this ruling went into effect, we have frequently brought it to the attention of our subscribers, and thousands of them have paid up their subscriptions, but we regret to say that there are still a number whose subsriptions are in arrears for more than one year. and, unless we receive a remittance from them at once, the Post Office Department DEMANDS that we remove their names from our mailing list

Please look at the little yellow label on the front page cover, and if the date on it indicates that you are in arrears in paying your subscription for this paper, we will thank you to send us a remittance AT ONCE; otherwise, we will have to discontinue sending you the paper.

Please bear in mind that the orders from the United States Post Office Department are imperative, and that we dare not continue sending the paper, unless our subscribers who are in arrears pay up. We have faith in our subscribers, and believe that those now in arrears expect to pay us, and in many cases we would gladly extend their credit, but we have no choice in this matter. The remittance must be forthcoming, or we must discontinue the paper.

Sincerely,

W. Daviess Pittman

Business Manager.

BIBLES and New Testaments

Send for Catalogue and Prices.

❖ ❖ ❖

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
St. Louis, Mo.

Some Historical Works

Historical Documents (edited by C. A. Young) $1.00
Christian Union (J. H. Garrison) 1.00
Dawn of the Reformation in Missouri (T. P. Haley). 1.00
History of the Christian Church (Fisher) 3.50

Sent post paid by
Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

HOME DEPARTMENT
—AND—
CRADLE ROLL SUPPLIES

Buttons, Cards, Booklets, and everything else that is helpful in a Sunday-school.

Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Volume XLV. ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 20, 1908. Number 34.

Current Events

Trusting the People.

In the recent elections more power was given to the people. If the results are not all that were expected, it must not be at once concluded that the giving of the greater power is a mistake. In Missouri, for instance, where the new primary law was used for the election of the tickets, there is complaint that this is not a great success. The popular choice of its officials has long been an ideal of a democracy. But for many years ward politicians and bigger bosses have in large measure controlled many of the offices. If under a new primary direct election boss rule still, in a measure, has the victory, the inquiry had better be pressed a little wider than the law itself. The issue is, after all, with the voters. The evils of the convention system are known; the failures of the new primary law may readily become apparent. In either case the cause of failure is, first and foremost, the voter; but he has a better chance, it seems to us, to express his real self under the new law. When voters will take the trouble to inform themselves about candidates, not always giving infinite credence to the slate suggestions of party organizations, and will then go to the polls and vote for the men they have assured themselves are the best men, nothing could be better than the opportunity the new primary law presents. It may have certain defects, but these may be remedied. The time of the election might be changed with great profit. The farming element is unusually busy in July and August, and these are the months when in the larger centres, many of the men who would naturally stand for the best things in government are away.

❁

Mrs. Annie L. Lowry, of Philadelphia, was a woman with a kind heart. By her will she has bequeathed a large sum—half a million dollars out of an estate of $600,000—to institutions religious, humanitarian and for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Nearly fifty institutions and societies are mentioned in the will, and perhaps her bequests are the largest ever made in behalf of the dumb animals. She directed that $5,000 be invested for the benefit of her own cats and parrots. The singular feature of the will is—besides its generosity—that these pets are to be considered as having equal share in the income, and when they die the trust fund reverts to the other heirs.

❁

"Mother" Stewart.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Stewart, more widely known as "Mother" Stewart, is dead, at the age of 92. Her life was devoted to the temperance cause, and in 1873 she established the first Women's Christian Temperance Union in Ohio, at Osborn. Three years later she visited England and organized the first W. C. T. U. there. Out of this has grown a great organization that has done incalculable good. Mrs. Stewart was also a lecturer on behalf of the sufferers in the Civil War. Some years ago she became interested in Dowie's teachings, and for a time lived in Zion City.

❁

A few days ago what was thought to be a real "robbers' den" was discovered in a large city. But the finding of some dime novels led to the supposition, afterwards confirmed, that this was nothing but an imaginary "den" of some boys. This leads us to say that, notwithstanding this "find," the dime novel is losing its place and consequently its power. Mr. Carnegie may have much credit for this. The increase of public libraries has been a hard blow to vicious literature, while the exploitation of the West in a better class of periodicals and in a better style of writing has had its effect. Let the supply of good literature be plentiful and the market for the vile will diminish the more easily.

❁

A Revolution in Turkey.

There is a revolution going on in Turkey, though it is in the direction of constitutional government. To the great surprise of the civilized world, the sultan some days ago suddenly granted a Constitution and Parliament to the Ottoman people. How many of these know what is the meaning of those terms would keep all Europe guessing a whole year. But the concession is not, of course, a willing one. Per force of conditions, Abdul Hamid has yielded at last in the face of the unrest and dissatisfaction due to the agitations of the Young Turks. This party has been the thorn in the flesh of the sultan for many years. With this active foe to an absolute sovereignty, and plots and counterplots among his own followers, and the hardly-veiled hatred of most of Europe, the sultan's position has been a precarious one. Undoubtedly were it not for the jealousy of the Powers, Abdul Hamid's strength would have been sapped long ago. His concession now has been hastened by the increasing defection of his own subjects, but his action has caused a real sensation, so unexpected was it. While the new parliament may in itself accomplish little, it is a beginning of things, even though the mass of the people know nothing of the meaning of self-government. We have no right to expect from Turks or Russians a satisfactory self-government. Even educated Americans, with a hundred years of freedom and knowledge and experience, are not yet entirely where they will claim perfection. We may extend our sympathies to these people for hundreds of years under autocracy, and bear with them if they make some mistakes in their strivings to express a national freedom, or if they are slow in bringing all the people to an ideal. We may expect progress to be zig-zag. We shall not even be surprised to hear of some violent deeds being done, though we hope the progressive party has enough strength to control the fanaticism of the ignorant and the hatred of the leaders who have been in the ascendency.

❁

The conquering of the domain of the air goes on apace. Zeppelin has done marvelous things with a dirigible airship, and Wilbur Wright has astonished aeronauts with his aeroplane. The newspapers now announce that Mr. Edison, who, it was stated some weeks ago, will in the future devote himself to science for the pure love of it, waiving all financial considerations, has the plans for an airship which means a success not yet achieved by others.

❁

Quebec's Tercentenary.

The quaint Canadian city which has been celebrating three hundred years of life has attracted notice by its pageants and its parades in honor of this event. On July 19 there was a great parade of young French-Canadians, who assembled at Champlain's statue and covered it with flowers. On July 21 and again on July 24 there were pageants, while on July 25 there was a state procession attended by many distinguished personages. The aim was for Quebec and its visitors to see the city as it was three hundred years ago, and historic scenes were portrayed with ingenuity and at a large expenditure. Perhaps the most impressive scene was the review by the Prince of Wales and Lord Roberts, the great British general of an international force of about 20,000 troops on the Heights of Abraham. The title deeds to the famous old battleground, formerly owned by private parties, were turned over by the prince to the Canadian authorities. Quebec has a right to its celebration—more than St. Louis or Chicago to their jubilations. Good will come of it. And as Americans it would ill become us to criticise the expenditures. We burn up every Fourth more money than would pay for a dozen Quebec tercentennaries.

❁

It is to be hoped that the publishing of campaign receipts, which both Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft desire, may never end in the filing of itemized election expenses such as a candidate in Oklahoma, who set out as one item the fine he paid for whipping his opponent.

❁

At What Age Do We Die?

Poor Dr. Osler. Despite his theories, a man is not dead—unless he actually dies—until twice that age for the chloroforming, plus six years added to it. So say the insurance companies. One of them has just informed Gen. Daniel Rucker, father of Mrs. Phil Sheridan, that he is dead and that his policy has been cancelled and the money paid. The last item of the notice may prevent the ire that we might expect to arise when a warrior is in a matter of fact way told he is "dead." The statement is made and the action of the insurance company based upon mortality tables, under which system all lives are supposed to have ended before the age of 96 years is reached.

Editorial

The Young Minister and the Country Church.

We call special attention to an article which we reprint elsewhere from the "Intercollegian" on the "Country Minister," written by one who graduated with university honors. It would be difficult to exaggerate the value of that article to our young ministers, and to our cause in its present stage of development. There is, and has been for many years, a crying demand among us for a large number of younger ministers who are willing to accept places with village and country churches, grouping, it may be, some of the latter, at small salaries. The advantage of such training and of such time for quiet study as would come to them in these smaller churches, is of inestimable value.

We fear this fact is not fully appreciated by many young preachers. It is perhaps natural that, coming out of college, where they have been at expense for several years, they should desire to make the question of salary a controlling motive in deciding on a location. Sufficient consideration, however, is hardly ever given to the difference in the cost of living in the city and in the smaller towns and in country places.

It is said that Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, England, spent the first twelve years of his ministry with a small church in Southampton, where he attracted little attention. Speaking of this matter afterwards, he said: "You could have had a whole pew to yourself, and another for your hat." Yet who can tell how much these quiet years did in forming habits of study, and in laying the foundation for the large fame which came to him later as a preacher of the Word?

There are several considerations which ought to have an important bearing, especially on the part of the younger men in inducing them to seek a field of labor in the country, or with a small church. The first of these is, the needs of the country church in the way of pastoral oversight and regular preaching. Many of them are starving for just such care. This consideration in itself ought to prompt young men to go to such fields, on the ground that they are called loudest to the neediest fields. The second consideration is, that these young men need the quiet and the time which they would have in these smaller churches, for the reading and study and quiet meditation which must lie at the foundation of a great and successful ministry. A third reason for selecting such a field, is the fact brought out in the article referred to, that "the country and not the city is the spring-head of a nation's life." In such fields of labor one is most apt to come in contact with the young men who are, in later years, to become leaders in both church and state.

In view of these considerations, we make a plea for the country church and for the smaller churches in the villages and towns, where the small salary offered has its compensation in other things, which the young preacher needs even worse than he needs money. Finally, if it be said that such a course demands sacrifice of certain social advantages and opportunities, we ask, What great spiritual good is there promised to men that does not involve sacrifices? And it is to those who have the mind of Christ, and are willing to follow in his footsteps, that we make this appeal.

A Vital Difference.

In his "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," Dr. P. T. Forsyth, contrasting what he calls "Positive Theology" with the so-called "Liberal" theology, gives, among other things, this difference:

"The one modifies from age to age according to the intrinsic requirements of growing faith; the external Zeitgeist being but the occasion which releases the latent genius of belief. The other modifies wholly in the interest of scientific thought, whether physical, psychical, metaphysical, or critical, as if Christianity were a phase of civilization. The one regards the revelation of grace as autonomous, the other will have it licensed by the schools, or countersigned by the human 'heart.' The positive starts with the holy and saving Christ, the liberal with Humanity, rational or affectional. The one handles sin, grace and salvation according to the world's moral mutiny; the other deals but with weakness, ignorance and their evolutionary conquest, confirming the world in its pride of power. A modern theology, in a word, is demanded by an autonomous, evangelical faith; the liberal is prescribed by an aggressive, cosmological science." (Pp. 217, 218).

Here, indeed, is a vital difference. These are two very different conceptions of the gospel, but they both exist in the minds of men to-day, as is seen in much of our current discussions. Every one who thinks, knows, of course, that Christianity must adapt itself to the changing condition of the world, in order that it be effective in meeting the needs of men; but shall these modifications take place "according to the intrinsic requirements of growing faith," or shall the "external Zeitgeist," or the spirit of the age, instead of "being but the occasion which releases the latent genius of belief," be the molding and shaping influence which shall decide what Christianity is, or should be, in each particular age? In other words, does the gospel in itself possess the power of adaptability to the changing needs of men while maintaining its essential life and principles unchanged, or does it remain for the world-spirit, or the scientific cult of any particular period, to modify Christianity to suit its own ideas and changing moods?

If the latter of these conceptions be the true one, then all idea of reformation and of restoration is out of order. Any thought of a return to the true norm of Christianity, as we find it in the New Testament, would be out of the question if its development is not from original, essential principles, which are vital to its success. Every religious reformation that has accomplished any good for the world has originated, and been carried forward under the idea that in the holy Scriptures we have an authentic revelation of eternal, essential facts, truths precepts, principles and promises, by which our Christianity and our theology must be tested, and with which they must be made to harmonize. If that is a wrong conception, our own movement has no legitimate existence, and is an unwarranted interference with the legitimate course of things.

This difference manifests itself in the attitude which we may take toward miracles. If the scientific spirit of the age is to the effect that nothing ever happens, or can happen, outside of the natural order of things as we now see it, what our author calls "liberalism," would then say, the gospel must be modified according to the demands of science by eliminating the supernatural, or such part of the supernatural at least as science may be unable to bring within the scope of the natural. What our author calls "positive theology," that is, the evangelical faith, would say, the gospel, consisting of facts that are out of the natural order of things, as we see it, is an authentic revelation of God's infinite grace and truth, and is only subject to such modification in the method of its presentation as will best meet the demands of any particular age according to its spirit and genius, and does not accept orders from science, which has to do with the natural world, and not with the spiritual. In other words, it holds on to its gospel as the one divine and priceless boon to humanity which, through nearly two millenniums, has vindicated its divine origin and nature by the beneficent changes it has wrought in individual lives, and in the course of human history.

In another place our author says, "Of course, a modern positivity admits the reason as a critic of the Bible, of the mere sacred history, but not of the holy gospel. The gospel which recreates our moral experiences, in the end criticises us. We can not judge our judge." That is, as we understand it, criticism may deal with the record of God's revelation, seeking what information it can concerning choice of texts, dates, authorship and historical conditions, but it has no right to reject the revelation itself because it transcends the range and limitations of human reason. When God has spoken, as he has spoken to us in Christ, we may, indeed, inquire as to the meaning of his message to us, but we may not question its wisdom, its possibility, nor its capability of accomplishing what God intends it to accomplish.

In many other ways does this difference between a vital and evangelical faith and modern liberalism manifest itself. In the realm of social reform, in the wide circle of altruistic efforts, there is a tendency to omit the gospel, and substitute for it a sort of human philanthropy, in harmony, we suppose, with the demands of modern thought. But the positive theology and the evangelical faith, would say that the gospel itself, adapted to the special conditions of these various classes, which need our sympathy and help, is the only power adequate to accomplish these needed social reforms, and to bring about greater equality of rights, of privileges, and of the results of human toil. But especially in the field of religious reform does the difference to which we referred, manifest itself in the principles of reform which it advocates. Are we to reform the church and purify Christianity by bringing it into harmony with the spirit of the age, or by making it conform, more and more, to the spirit of Christ, and to the great facts and truths which make up his mighty gospel? The latter view is the one to which we are committed, and we do well to see that we remain true to it in all the problems which confront us, and in all the tasks which we are called upon to perform in carrying forward God's work in the world.

Newness of Life.

Perhaps nothing characterizes the apostolic ministry more than the matter of conversion. Evidently the gospel which the apostles preached, assumed all the time, and everywhere, that men were lost —"without God and without hope in the world." Jesus had come to seek and to save the lost, and for this very reason he was to be called Jesus, or the Savior. It was, furthermore, emphatically affirmed in the same gospel that a certain very distinct change was to take place in those who accepted the message which the apostles delivered. On the day of Pentecost Peter told the people that a very marked change must take place in them if they would receive the gospel's blessing. When Paul was sent to the Gentiles he was to "turn them from darkness to light, from the power of Satan to God," in order that they might pass from death unto life, or, in other words, become a new creation in Christ Jesus. It is scarcely worth while to enumerate cases. Whatever the term may be that best expresses the change, no one will dispute the fact that a great change in every man who became a Christian under the apostolic ministry really took place, so that after this change those who were alienated, lost, sinners, etc., were reckoned as saints, justified, sanctified and adopted into the family of God.

Now, is there any danger, at the present time, of gathering into our churches men and women who have never realized any such change as actually took place in all cases of conversion under the apostolic ministry? We do not say that every case of conversion was precisely identical in respect to the matter under consideration. Different temperaments, no doubt, must be taken into account. It is, also, true that difference of environment must be reckoned with in determining the signs of true conversion. We live in a very different age. Many of those who come into our churches come through the Sunday-school, or out of Christian families where they have never, at any time, been very far away from the requirements of the gospel. No one ought to expect the same experiences in all cases. But after making due allowance for different temperaments and different conditions with respect to environment, etc., it still remains true that to become a new creation in Christ Jesus means much more than is sometimes apparently supposed by those who are dealing with the souls of men. It is at this point where modern evangelism seems to us to be most at fault. The anxiety to secure a large number of additions creates a constant danger that people will be taken into the churches without much regard for the important change to which we have called attention. Of course, it is freely admitted that there is a danger on another side of this question. Extremes nearly always beget extremes. When the pendulum is lifted to one side it will usually swing to the opposite extreme when it is allowed freedom to do so. During the last century, in many cases, conversion had become almost a hopeless thing with many who would gladly have become Christians, had not the way been blocked by tests quite unknown to the New Testament scriptures. However, in swinging away from this extreme there has been, and is still, a tendency to go to another extreme, where little or no test at all is made, and certainly none that gives satisfactory evidence that souls have been "born from above" and have passed from death unto life. It seems to us the time has come when pastors of churches should give special attention to this matter, and while they should lay no burdens upon any one for which there is no authority in the New Testament, at the same time there ought to be more attention given to the real conditions which the apostles insisted upon in every case where converts are being made.

Do we look for some reason to explain the indifference of many professed Christians? Are we in search for the cause of the want of consecration? Do we wish to know why it is that so many church members seek first their own interests, and last of all the interests of the kingdom of God? We do not doubt that an answer to all these questions may be found in the faulty conversions to which attention has been called. "Men do not gather grapes from thorns nor figs from thistles." By their fruits we may know them. One of the chief drawbacks of the present day, in respect to the great plea committed to our hands, is the supreme indifference, or at least want of interest, which many manifest in that plea, until all their own selfish interests are provided for. And does this not indicate that they are still under the dominion of the old life? Newness of life undoubtedly assumes that we have cut loose from the dominion, not only of Satan, but of mammon, also, and that we are now the servants of Him who taught that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Indeed, this newness of life raises the question, can a man be really and truly a Christian in any high sense, if at all, while at the same time he gives to self the first consideration with respect to all the affairs of the present life? Surely when Christ taught that if any man would come after him he must deny himself and take up his cross and follow him, he meant more by this self-denial than is usually understood by the average church member of the present day. The New Testament view of newness of life, if practically illustrated by the churches of the present time, would soon revolutionize our hesitating, halting Christianity, and would solve the problem of the world's conversion to Christ long before the close of the present century.

Notes and Comments

"The Christian Messenger" is the title of a local church paper edited by Edward Scribner Ames, minister of the Hyde Park Church of Disciples of Christ, Chicago. In the July issue the editor has some paragraphs on our religious journalism. Our readers may be interested in the following comment on THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

"Even THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has become noticeably conservative during the past year. The writer was recently on a journey to a neighboring state and met an old friend with whom he has often talked religion and politics. At our first meeting, almost before greetings were exchanged, our friend said gleefully: 'Have you noticed any change in THE EVANGELIST this year?' We admitted we had. He said: 'Well, how do you like the change?' All we could say was, 'well, we agree that there has been a change.' It was one of the few things in which we had ever agreed, but we were yet far apart in our opinion as to whether the change was good. The change he had in mind concerns the position of THE EVANGELIST on the subject of Christian union. A few years ago that paper advocated federation between denominations and the reception of unimmersed members of other churches into an associate membership in our own congregations. It has grown strangely quiescent on the subject of federation and recently made a savage attack on George A. Campbell for receiving unimmersed persons into fellowship. * * * There is no doubt but the editor of that influential journal wants to be liberal and progressive. We only wish there was a sufficiently large and profitable constituency among the Disciples to give pecuniary justification to his highest ideals."

It is a little remarkable that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should undergo a change in its character of the kind indicated without attracting the notice of the Editor. We must confess that we are not aware of any such change. The idea that the paper has changed its position on the subject of Christian union is a discovery new enough to be patented. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands four-square for Christian union now, as it has always done, and believes that it is our chief mission as a religious body to promote it. The most astonishing statement, however, is the remark that "a few years ago that paper advocated federation between denominations, and the reception of unimmersed members of other churches into an associate membership in our own congregations." We believe the writer of the above paragraph incapable of knowingly misrepresenting our position; but that fact reveals in clearer light the confusion of mind in which he is involved on the subject of Christian union, federation, and the reception to membership of unimmersed members of other churches. The paper has not only been, but is yet, an advocate of federation between various religious bodies—that is, the co-operation of Christians of all bodies, as far as is possible without compromising conscience or truth. It has always opposed, as it does to-day, any change in the New Testament conditions of membership. As far back, at least, as fifteen years ago, we opposed this position in a series of articles in a discussion with J. S. Lamar. Later we opposed it in a discussion with J. A. Lord, who was then its ardent advocate, and still later with Brothers Morrison and Campbell. Strange that Brother Ames should be unacquainted with this history.

Another remark calls for some comment. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is said to have "grown strangely quiescent on the subject of federation, and recently made a savage attack on George A. Campbell for receiving unimmersed persons into fellowship." As to the "savage attack" on Brother Campbell, that is sufficiently recent for our readers to judge for themselves of its "savage" nature. What ground is there for the statement that the paper has become "strangely quiescent on the subject of federation?" That we have not discussed the subject as much during the current year as in the previous few years is quite true, as the period of discussion on the advisability of federation, on the terms which we have always advocated, closed with the approval of the Basis of Federation by an overwhelming vote at Norfolk last year. We had supposed that the confusion of receiving the unimmersed, with the subject of federation, was limited to a few rabid anti-federationists. There is not the slightest connection between the two, any more than there is between the approval of federation and any other error in doctrine, or practice, on the part of any of the co-operating bodies. This lack of clear thinking is surprising, coming from the source it does.

We can not close our reference to Brother Ames' criticism without referring to a suggestion conveyed in the last two sentences of the paragraph quoted, viz.: that the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is influenced in his editorial policy by pecuniary considerations. Now, the one criticism that has been made against his editorial management has been that he pays too little attention to pecuniary considerations, and shapes his editorial policy without reference to its effect upon the finances of the company, but wholly with reference to what he believes to be the best interest of the Cause for which the paper stands. No man who has ever stood close enough to him to know his motives, has ever accused him of withholding any statement of truth that he believes the interests of Christ's kingdom and of his righteousness require, because it would involve pecuniary loss. On that point we have a clear conscience before God. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has always been a conservative paper in the truse sense of that word, seeking to conserve the interests of the kingdom of God, and the unity of God's people. It believes in safe and sane progress, both in the knowledge of the truth and in the practice of the truth, and in maintaining an open mind for any new light which may break out from God's Word, or from His providential government of the world. But this policy is the result of a deep conviction of what is our duty in view of our responsibility as Editor, and not from any selfish consideration. We regret that it is necessary for us to say this. Even Paul was compelled to do a little "foolish boasting" in defense of himself against the unjust criticism which he received in his day.

Current Religious Thought

In an article on preserving the fruits of revivals, the "Religious Telescope" speaks truly as follows:

"If a new convert is not worth a pastoral call, he will hardly think that pastor's sermon is worth going to hear. The natural result in such a case is for a large part of the neglected converts to lapse back into the world. It is not their fault entirely. It is not the evangelist's fault. The charge is to be laid at the doors of pastors and present membership.

"We preserve the fruits of the orchard by putting them in cold storage but that is not the way to preserve the fruits of the revival. It is the warm heart which counts, the spiritual grip in the handshake, the glad tone of voice, the ability to call Mr. Smith Mr. Smith, instead of having to ask somebody else his name. In short, the real vital earnestness of a Christian life which converts like to see, and which they deserve.

"After the revival there must be an unusual amount of pastoral work; a prodigious amount. The more extensive the revival, the more pastoral visiting, advice and comfort will be required. If every one shirks this duty, whether he is a settled preacher conducting his own revival, or has engaged with other pastors and churches in a general campaign, let him not try to shift the responsibility to shoulders where it does not belong."

The "Cumberland Presbyterian," in a careful survey of the effects of the recent union of the Presbyterian and the Cumberland Presbyterian churches, points out a situation that we who are established for the union of Christendom may well consider. Says our contemporary:

"Looking over the field as a whole, we have neither seen nor heard anything but gain as a result of the union. When the field is divided up, however, it must be admitted that there are some localities where, considered by themselves, it appears that the immediate losses have obscured the gains. On the other hand, there are many churches which are rejoicing in the fact that union has made possible, in their local work, blessings which they never enjoyed before. In many instances, local churches, the one Presbyterian, the other Cumberland Presbyterian, have come together as one congregation and now have the constant care of a strong and faithful minister and are able to do the aggressive Christian work which was formerly beyond their ability. Aside from numerous instances of this kind, we know of many wholly Cumberland Presbyterian pastorates which, as a result of union, are supplied with such a ministry as they never knew before. For instance, a group of country churches which had never had a regular pastor, but were forced to put up with temporary supplies, have had a settled minister for nearly three years, and realize that they are developing as they never could have developed under former conditions. Another illustration: A comparatively weak church in a county seat has felt for years that all it needed was a strong leader to enable it to take a commanding position in the town, and do a great work for a hungry community, but it was not able to secure the type of man it needed. Union has made it possible for that church to secure a pastor, and the prospects are that in a few years it will be so developed that it will be able to stand alone and accomplish great good in a community where a strong church has an inspiring field of usefulness. Such illustrations could be multiplied. It appears, therefore, that the gain is not all of a general character, but that it is manifested in many local churches."

"The 'Michigan Christian Advocate' has the following to say on this subject that is very apropos:

"'Brevity is the soul of wit,' and the virtue of a sermon. The preacher of old could spin out his discourse to ninthly and tenthly, but the preacher of to-day must cut it short. It is said of Cotton Mather, that he had an hour-glass before him in the pulpit, and after the sands had all run out, he would invert it, and go on preaching, saying, 'Friends we will take another glass.' The preacher who would venture that now would find his congregation running out faster than the sand. Sharp, short sermons are the most popular and probably the best.

"But how long can a sermon be, and still be short? That depends. Campbell Morgan preaches fifty minutes and his crowded congregations call it short. Some sermons are long at forty minutes. Lincoln said a man's legs ought to be long enough to reach the ground. A preacher's sermon should be long enuogh to serve its fundamental purpose, and no longer. If a preacher can make the truth wholly effective in thirty minutes, why should he go on longer? Let him stop when he is done."

The "Outlook" finds a good text in George Herbert's "Pardon all but thyself." It concludes its editorial thus:

"It is a time for sharp definition of duty and righteousness; for a rigid holding of men to their obligations to themselves and their fellows; for stern applications of the law, and for just and impartial punishments. It is a time also for great charity in judging the motives of others; for great tenderness to those who are weak and fall by the way; for an unrelenting punishment of sin, and pity and tenderness for the sinner; for a Christlike abhorrence of evil and a Christlike passion for the rescue of the evil-doer. It is a time for divine charity for others, and for a rigid holding of ourselves to the highest standards of pure living."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

When we reach the middle of August here by the lakeside, we begin straightway to feel that our summer life in "The Pioneer," is nearing its close. True, there is a fortnight yet, or a little more, before we turn the key, put up the shutters and cross the lake, but time flies so swiftly here that we feel the time of leaving is upon us. These bright days, filled as they are, with tasks and duties, intermingled with such recreations as we are able to find time for, pass in rapid succession. Time never hangs heavily on the hands of those who are seeking to mingle a little vacation with their ordinary tasks and duties. But when one is released, even for a few hours, from the grasp of his daily toil, his reflective faculties, including memory, are apt, under these surroundings, to get busy with the past, the present, and their bearings on the future. Last night as a company of congenial friends sat on the sand around a bonfire on the beach, and sang some of the old war-songs, there were memories stirred which had long been sleeping. And often as we sit upon the veranda in a quiet hour, with book in hand, the eyes will wander from its pages out over the lake to a distant sail against the horizon, which starts a train of thought that carries us far from that of the author which we are reading. Not infrequently the noise of the multitudinous waves, breaking upon the shore, reminds us of that other vaster ocean, the roar of whose waves comes to our ears in these quieter moments. Most often, however, our thoughts graviate toward the present interests of the kingdom of God, and of that body of Christians with which we are indentified, whose chief mission in the world is to plead for the unity of a divided Christendom. How may that body maintain that breadth and clearness of vision, that catholicity of spirit and teaching, and so illustrate in its own life the unity in Christ Jesus for which it pleads as to enable it to accomplish, under God, that for which it has been raised up?

In such musings here on the shores of this inland sea we find great satisfaction in a truth enunciated by Gamaliel, in the early days of Christianity, namely, that if God be in this movement it cannot be overthrown by men. In so far as it falls into line with God's infinite purpose, and seeks to have His will done here on earth as it is done in heaven, it becomes a part of the divine movement itself, and no human arm can stay its progress. Whatever of human imperfection and weakness may be associated with it, and whatever error in teaching or practice may attach to it, or whatever disproportion of emphasis may, for a time, mar success—all this will pass away, but the essential truth will abide, and God will care for it and raise up men of true hearts and clear intellects and of heroic courage, to defend and propagate it, until it shall accomplish that whereunto it has been sent. We must believe that, if we believe in a God who concerns himself with human affairs, and especially with those movements which have for their object the fulfillment of his own gracious purposes. If it were not for that confidence in God, in his power to carry on his work in the world, the hearts of the bravest and truest defenders of his cause would fail them in the midst of so many manifestations of short-sightedness, lop-sidedness, and other marks of human imperfection. There have been times in our national history when the truest patriots, as they looked into the future, trembled at the prospect. But through one crisis after another God has led the nation on, and will lead it on, to the fulfillment of its great destiny. If God cares thus for nations which stand for human rights and human liberty, will he not much more care for those who are seeking to build up and extend over the earth, a kingdom which is to endure forever? In this faith and confidence we may do our best work and find our greatest peace.

The social instinct, which is one of the strongest in our nature, asserts itself here at the lakeside with even greater force, perhaps, than it does in the city. Indeed, one of the greatest benefits of these summer outings is the new associations into which we are brought, the new acquaintanceships which are made, and the strengthening of the ties of friendship. To-day a number of our friends north of the channel joined with a number of us south of the channel, in a union picinc at the upper end of Lake Pentwater under the oaks. It was a goodly party of friends that filled the little vessel that carried us up, and towed our row-boats. It is said that "blood is thicker than water," but faith is even stronger than blood, and so it happened to-day that those who sat together about the bountiful feast spread under the trees, were those, in the main, if not exclusively, of a common faith, and co-laborers in a common cause. Differ we may, and do, no doubt, on some questions, but we are united still in acknowledging fealty to a common Lord and Saviour, and to a movement seeking to unite the scattered children of God in him. It has been a great regret to all of us who are of this Way, that we have been deprived of the presence with us, in these little outings, of Brother and Sister Haley, who are here, by reason of Brother Haley's lameness, caused by rheumatism. We are anticipating, and making preparation for, a much larger colony of our people here the coming season. It is the conviction of those who visit these sightly grounds, traverse these shady ravines, and look out from its heights over the wide expanse of lake and surounding country, that nature has marked this spot as the scene for a summer colony of congenial spirits, seeking refuge from summer's heat, and rest and recreation of body and mind. Those who have its control in their hands are seeking not financial gain, or speculation, but to establish such a resort as will redound to the good of those who come hither, and to the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

This leads us to say that our chief motive in coming to this place, and opening up this resort, was, and is, that we might have a common meeting-place for a number of our ministers and business men, under our control and management, where the conditions would be favorable, not only for taking needed rest and recreation, but where, meanwhile, we might take such counsel together concerning the interests of our cause, and the best methods of promoting it, as would make it one of the agencies for cementing the bonds of unity and advancing the work of our Master. But for this thought and this hope we should not have undertaken an enterprise like this. W. T. Moore and wife, sharing fully with us in this desire and aim, are joining with those of us who were already connected, in a business way, with it, in making this place a sort of Mecca whither our brethren, seeking rest under the most favorable conditions, may come for a few weeks, or months, during the summer season. Besides a large meeting of our members in the G. A. R. hall, in Pentwater, last Lord's day, at which Brother C. C. Morrison, of Chicago, preached a very earnest and able sermon, there was a meeting, in the afternoon, at the pavilion above the bathhouses on the beach, on the Pentwater side of the channel, composed of the citizens of Pentwater and such of our summer visitors as desired to attend. Some weeks ago, noticing the small number of men resident here, who attended any of the church services, we expressed the desire to meet the men of the town somewhere upon common ground, and speak to them. The president of the village corporation being present, arranged for this meeting at the new pavilion, which has just been completed, at which we spoke to those who assembled, on "The Manliness of Christ," and the appeal which Christianity makes to men. It was a day which we trust will bear good fruit in the coming days.

There has been an autumnal touch in the breeze that has blown out from the northwest to-day, which has suggested many things to us. In addition to a great fall and winter campaign in extending the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist, we have been thinking of other instrumentalities for disseminating the truth for which we plead, and prominent among these, of course, is the coming national convention at New Orleans. Word has come to us, in a few cases, that some brethren are saving themselves for Pittsburg, and will omit the New Orleans convention. The best preparation we can make for Pittsburg is to make a great convention at New Orleans. If we can hold a great convention at this queen city, at the mouth of the Mississippi, in 1908, it will demonstrate our ability to hold a still greater one at Pittsburg in 1909. The New Orleans convention is destined, in our judgment, to be an exceedingly important one in which history of a far-reaching character may be made. Aside from the pleasure of visiting this quaint and historic city in the beautiful Southland, in the month of October, there are great and important questions to be considered, which call for our representative ministers and business men, and sisters, too, from all sections of the country. When our great missionary and other co-operative agencies meet in annual council to plan for larger and better work, there the friends of the cause they represent should gather, in large numbers, to furnish that moral support and enthusiasm necessary for the carrying forward of great enterprises. We sincerely hope, therefore, that the brethren and sisters, throughout our broad country are planning to attend the New Orleans convention, and make it a worthy predecessor to our coming Centennial.

The Vision of Unity By William Durban

Coincidence is at times phenomenal, especially at those periods of critical juncture in historical evolution which definitely mark the progress of the race. Thus, we will continue to wonder at the fact that Darwin and Wallace simultaneously struck upon the theory of development which brought in a new epoch in scientific speculation. I use the term speculation advisedly, instead of the term knowledge, because it is useless for even the greatest enthusiasts or the Darwinian school to claim that the famous evolution theory holds the field as exact knowledge. Candid thinkers are bound to acknowledge that it is hypothetically plausible in an extreme degree, but Agassiz in America, Quatrefages in France, Owen in England, and several of the great masters of science in Germany refused to pay homage at the Darwinian shrine. At this moment there is a much greater degree of division amongst scientific experts than very many superficial students imagine.

Clamoring for Reunion.

The above observations I have made in a preliminary way, because I have long felt that a certain degree of allowance should always be made for that great latitude of free opinion which must insure divisive sentiment amongst religionists. It is fatuous to talk of Christian unity as though it would be equivalent to positive uniformity of thought, sentiment, creed, doctrine, or organic system. Where there is real life, the closer the unity may be the greater will be the diversity of manifestations of vitality. We can always find uniformity in a cemetery, but we should never look for it in a living society, seeing that it is one of the indications not of life, but of death. Rome has always ignored the true philosophy of unity and has, by cruel coercion of conscience, aimed at securing a deadly uniformity. We are now face to face with a crisis long expected by many amongst us. Some of the best minds of this Old Country, and very many more in America, have for the last few generations been toiling to create a public sentiment in the shape of a collective aspiration amongst various bodies of Christians for the fulfillment of the Savior's prayer that his people might all be one.

As is always the case, revolutions come with a rush, and a new revolution has begun with what appears to be a sudden and startling upheaval. Those who are startled at the outbreak feel the sensation, because they have not been acquainted with what has been silently proceeding beneath the visible surface of society for years and years. The most marvelous manifestations in the spiritual universe correspond in their genesis with those in the natural sphere. In the dark and quiet night the deposition of the dew is utterly undemonstrative, but in the morning countless millions of pearly globules are seen pendant and glittering on blades of grass and petals of flowers. So does the dew of divine grace prepare for its own sudden display when the favorable juncture arrives for its apocalypse. We are hearing some singular utterances in England, and the most singular fact of all is that these are not isolated articulations, but are notes in a chorus which is swelling louder and louder. A great sermon was preached a few days ago in Westminster Abbey by the Dean of Westminster, Dr. Armitage Robinson, to a unique assembly consisting of the 250 bishops now present in London from all parts of the earth at the Fifth Pan-Anglican Congress. The subject of the sermon was Christian unity, and it has created a wave of amazement all over the United Kingdom, seeing that it was in fact a lofty and exalted exhortation to these august dignitaries to cultivate a spirit of fraternity with Christians of other bodies than the great Anglican Church; and, moreover, the dean proceeded to emphasize the expediency of actually and actively seeking Christian reunion on conditions honorable to both sides. He declared that this memorable Lambeth Conference had been distinguished by an unexampled recognition of the work of the divine spirit in those communions which are separated as yet from the Anglican, an unexampled desire to learn what these might have to teach, and an unexampled willingness to inquire how reunion might be accomplished.

The Famous Quadrilateral.

Here I may mention an incident which has just happened in my own experience, which is deeply significant of present tendencies. A few days ago I sat in one of the most important of the old parish churches in the neighborhood of London, listening to a sermon bp the vicar of the church, Canon Hough, a very distinguished preacher in the Anglican Church. He is exceedingly popular on account of his fluent eloquence and his broad sympathies. I had no previous idea what would be his topic, and therefore I was at once deeply interested when he announced that he intended to address the great assembly in his church on this very subject of Christian unity. As he was not talking to an audience of ministers or students, but to an ordinary congregation of public worshipers, the occasion was the more important and interesting. He proceeded to accentuate his own convictions that the time had come when it would be a disgrace to Protestant Christendom if speedy efforts were not made to arrange fraternal co-operation between Anglicans and Free Churchmen. He went on to refer to the noted Quadrilateral which was proposed some years ago at the Fourth Pan-Anglican Conference at Lambeth. Seeing that this proposed fourfold basis of reunion originated in the mind of the Rev. Dr. Huntington, rector of Grace Church, New York City, my American readers well know that its conditions are the acceptance of the Old and New Testament records, the historic episcopate, the two ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper, and the two ancient creeds, the Nicene and the apostles'. Canon Hough expressed the hope that ministers of communions outside the Episcopalian might be induced to allow Anglican bishops to lay hands upon them, and that bishops might see their way thus to recognize Free Churchmen as ministers of Christ equally with the clergy. The value of utterances like this lies not in any such proposals, but in the sympathetic yearning manifested in sermons from such sources. When bishops, deans and representative clergymen, addressing great congregations, plead anxiously for reunion, it must surely be admitted that this momentous subject is really in the air. And if this be so, why should we coldly regard such overtures simply because there may be incompatibility between the views expressed and our own opinion?

The Archbishop of Melbourne.

It has just fallen to my lot to enjoy a long talk with the Archbishop of Melbourne, who is one of this great regiment of prelates present in London. The same interest attaches to his talk, because in him we have another ardent advocate of this same movement in favor of a rapprochement on the part of all Protestant Evangelicals. He is no mere theorist or doctrinaire, as his energetic action has proved in Australia, where, in the colony of Victoria, he has initiated a scheme for securing close co-operation and ultimate corporate union between Episcopalians and Presbyterians. Moreover, he has been addressing the Lambeth conference in eloquent terms concerning his aspirations and attempts. Now, it may be judged, in the light of the various signs of the times that to some of us in England the record from Chicago, of the union of a Church of Christ and a Baptist church under the pastorate of Dr. Willett, comes as a grateful inspiration of new hopes as to what the future may bring forth.

JUNE.

By Mary Cary Blackburn.

The June of the year is done,
With its light and brightness free;
The June of the year is done,
Left only a memory.

The June of a life is done,
With its lilt and song and glee;
The June of a life is done—
All left's but a memory.

But June of Heaven will come,
With its rest and joy and life—
O June of Heaven will come!
At the close of earthly strife.

SKIN CLEARED

By Simple Change in Food.

It has been said by a physician that most diseases are the result of indigestion.

There's undoubtedly much truth in the statement, even to the cause of many unsightly eruptions, which many suppose can be removed by applying some remedy on the outside.

By changing her food a Kan. girl was relieved of an eczema which was a great annoyance to her. She writes:

"For five months I was suffering with an eruption on my face and hands which our doctor called eczema and which caused me a great deal of inconvenience. The suffering was almost unbearable.

"The medicine I took only gave me temporary relief. One day I happened to read somewhere that eczema was caused by indigestion. Then I read that many persons had been relieved of indigestion by eating Grape-Nuts.

"I decided to try it. I liked the taste of the food and was particularly pleased to notice that my digestion was improving and that the eruption was disappearing as if by magic. I had at last found, in this great food, something that reached my trouble.

"When I find a victim of this affliction I remember my own former suffering and advise a trial of Grape-Nuts food instead of medicines." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Country Church in Missouri By T. A. Abbott

To write the history of the country church in Missouri would be to write a history of this great restoration movement in our beloved state. Our preachers in the beginning were almost exclusively "farmer preachers." As such, they went to the people with whom they had most in common and over whom they had, therefore, the largest influence. Paul often exclaims: "To the Jew first and also to the Greek." Our people in Missouri seem to have said: "To the farmer first and then to the townsman." At least our first churches, and for many years our only churches, were in the rural districts.

I used to think this was a great misfortune, but in these late years my conviction has changed. As I have seen the tide of population moving from the farms to the towns and cities, I have been led to believe that the dear Lord was in it all for the good of his church. The church that is really strong in the country must eventually be mighty in the town and city. The great problem of the church in America to-day is the evangelization of the cities. In a state like ours the church that has a mighty rural membership, properly taught, ought soon to be a great power in the city. And it must be. No matter what of the past; the church that has not now, or does not soon obtain a grasp of the city, dies. God is saying to his church to-day, as he said to his prophet of old: "Go to that great city," and well for that church that hears the call and obeys.

We have in Missouri to-day 1,800 churches, and over half of them would be classed as country churches. I confess to a large difficulty here as to what is really a country church,—but let it go at that. These churches have been a mighty power in the spread of our cause in Missouri and the region beyond. The members were intelligent, versed in the scriptures, they were ready to give at all times a reason for the hope that was in them. It was personal work that these men and women did. In the home, field or workshop they were evangelists of the Lord unto whom had come a new light in life's way, which they were anxious that others should enjoy.

Nor was this all. I am sure that nine-tenths of our ministers came from the farm. Time and again I have tested it in conventions, and the proportion has been ever about the same. In these homes, where these fathers and mothers "spake often to one another," and to their neighbors, of the greatness and simplicity of this great plea, were born the lads that in their environment found that which caused them to look upon the life and work of the ministry of the gospel as being the one great thing to be desired. It was the joy of the congregation; it was the delight of the father and mother, to see these bright boys giving themselves to this work. Our cause in Missouri owns nearly all of what it is to these churches and these homes, from whence these splendid preachers of God's grace came.

But,—sad, isn't it, that that word should be needed?—a change has come. The one great problem of to-day is the country churches. How can we save them from destruction? How may we supply them with ministers? We have in the neighborhood of 300 of them in Missouri that do not have regular preaching. They have occasional services only. They are not living, vital organisms, performing all the functions of life, but are barely existing. The cause of the dearth of ministers among us is here; such churches and the homes from which their membership comes, do not produce boys that give themselves happily to the preaching of the word.

Somehow we must renew that spiritual life that was so strong in our fathers and mothers; the church must join with the home and the home with the church, not in a perfunctory, formal way, but in an agonizing, impassioned way, in prayer to the "Lord of the harvest that he send more laborers into his vineyard." The mothers and fathers must desire their boys to be ministers; it must get to be the one ambition of their lives, and the congregation must count it all joy when one of their very own gives himself to the cause of saving lost men.

Kansas City, Mo.

Our Country Churches in Indiana By J. O. Rose

In answer to a series of questions propounded by the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist concerning "our country churches," I have taken pains to search our records and sift our reports carefully that the following statements may be as accurate as possible. However, inasmuch as we have definite reports from but 460 of our 792 churches, some of these statements can be only conservative estimates.

The country church, strictly speaking, is one whose congregation lives outside a town or city and whose house of worship is located in a rural district. But for the practical purposes of these questions, we must include in the "country churches" those also in small towns, whose life is dominated by a rural membership living in the community. Of these rural and small town churches we now have in Indiana 560, about one-half of these, or 280, are literally in the country. About 360 of the 560 have preaching either for full or part time. About 200 have no regular preaching at all. We have no accurate means of knowing the percentage of our preachers which has been furnished by the country churches, but our most experienced and best informed men agree that it is from one-half to three-fourths; some estimate it even higher.

The saying is no more trite than true, that every problem of the Church becomes in its final analysis a preacher problem. Other elements and forces must have their due consideration, but when all is considered, the apostle's question still confronts us, "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?"

The calling, preparation and sending forth of preachers was one of the chief works, if not the chief work in the public ministry of our Lord. It certainly is one of his chief works to-day through the Church. If the country churches, in proportion to their membership and means, are doing such a surprisingly large part of this work, we certainly should be moved, by our appreciation of this necessary and blessed service, to see to it that these churches are not neglected when losses by removals and death and consequent failure to support the preaching of the word have reduced them from their former glory almost to despair.

Not only have these country churches (many of them in obscurity) furnished the larger part of our preachers, but I find that an investigation of the "official boards" and leading membership of our strong county seat and city churches shows a large majority who were born into the Kingdom in these country churches, and later have moved to the stronger centers. One of our experienced evangelists once said: "We have excellent men and women in both city and country churches, but as a rule, the best blood and brains of this country come from the farms."

Bishop Elder, of the Roman Catholic Church, of New Orleans, read a paper at the Congress of Religions in Chicago a few years ago on "Our Twenty Millions Loss." In this paper he argued that the Roman Church has lost 20,000,000 of possible and probable members. He gave two reasons: (1) Because they had failed to secure the leading men of this nation. He substantiated this with a long list of statesmen, soldiers and professional men who have led in this country's greatest progress, and there was scarcely a Roman Catholic among them. (2) Because they had failed to evangelize the rural districts. This fact is apparent to all who have traveled and observed the comparatively small number of Roman churches in the country. (3) He showed by another long list of leading men that the reason for their failure to secure these leading men was because they had failed to evangelize the rural districts, and a large majority of these leading men were from the country. It is not strange that his church censured him severely for writing this paper, even though his arguments were not refuted.

A leading educator in this state, a few years ago, stated that he had just made a careful investigation of the so-called "captains of industry" in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y. He found that 95 per cent of them were poor when they began, and 66 per cent of these were from farms.

These facts are sufficient to emphasize the importance of caring for the country churches. Other things being equal, the artificial life of the city, in inspiring young men to the unselfish life of the Gospel Ministry, can never compete or compare with the natural life of the country, where to be near to nature is to be brought nearer to nature's God, and where, away from the noise and din of the machinery of commerce, the soul may enjoy that solitude that inspires communion with the Creator.

As our missionary work is organized to-day, there is no missionary society that can reach these unreached churches and help them to help themselves, excepting the state society. In an unorganized capacity pastors of stronger churches have done excellent service by "volunteer meetings," but these can not reach one-tenth of the worthy and needy churches. In the past our state society has failed to reach all these churches, because our districts (composed of seven or eight counties each) were too large. We could not secure representation from them in the district conventions. We are now emphasizing the county organization, with constitution and with county board, comprised of representatives of every church in the county, as the connecting link in our organized missionary work.

It is formed by voluntary covenant relationship established in a working system that organizes from the local church upward and outward. This connects the local church with the country, the district, the state, the nation and foreign lands. It reaches churches hitherto unreached, with not only information, but live missionary men and women. It in turn secures reports from them, and the work becomes more intelligent from year to year. Slowly our extreme congregationalism is being broken down by the natural reults of its own failures, and the plan for grouping churches, by county boards, and the process of locating preachers, is slowly but nevertheless surely coming.

We are not a legislative body. We are a missionary body. We do not need a general governing system. We have that already in Christ and his "perfect law of liberty," but we do need a general working system. The whole work is on a systematic, educational basis. A greater sense of care for the country churches is coming, and with it an awakening sense of our ability as a great brotherhood to do infinitely greater things than ever before by putting into practice our plea for unity in co-operative missions.

Two principles must be borne in mind in any normal growth, the extensive and the intensive. If we do not care for those perishing churches in Indiana, we will imperil the support of the missionaries sent abroad and be unable to enter the doors they are able to open. We must also emphasize these two principles, (1) The nearer we can keep the money-raising power to the workers and work done, the more men we shall enlist and the more money we shall raise. (2) The State Missionary Society is the nearest unit of organization strong enough to maintain itself from year to year and therefore be able to sustain the mission work until it becomes self-sustaining. The county and district organizations, as a a rule, are not able to do this. We plead, therefore, for unity in co-operation with the state society in all efforts to save the weak churches and enter the strategic centers in Indiana.

A State Mission Church is always planted in the missionary spirit and as soon as it becomes self-sustaining becomes a world-wide missionary church.

We have a record of which we feel justly proud and for which we are truly thankful, in the increased support given our general, world-wide missions and benevolences by 552 churches that have been organized, reorganized or helped by our state society in the last 69 years. Two country churches have recently reported more money given this year to missions abroad than to local work at home. With comparatively small investments from about one-fifth our churches in offerings to state missions, we rejoice in the greatness of the increase given of God. With no church, for which we plead, in 173 towns from 300 to 1,000 inhabitants, and in 35 cities from 1,000 to 25,000 inhabitants in Indiana—14 of these county seats —we plead for "State loyalty and State pride in State Work," "The co-operation of every preacher and an offering from every church," and the State Mission Day (First Sunday in November) shall be second to none in our missionary calendar for the Gospel conquest of the world.

Indianapolis, Ind.

Kentucky's Country Churches By H. W. Elliott

In response to a request to help in making the issue of The Christian-Evangelist in the interest of the country churches, the writer wishes to say that he is glad to render any service possible that looks toward any probable solution of this great problem. Nothing in our state presents a more serious question for our consideration. What is here said relates to the central and eastern part of the state, as the facts relative to conditions in the western part of our commonwealth are not nearly so well known to the writer. This is because we have had for thirty-four years two missionary co-operative organizations, and for seventeen years the writer has served as secretary in the eighty odd counties comprising our territory.

Number of Churches.

We have a total of 817 congregations, and of this number 517 may be called country churches. No village as large as 500 people is included in this number, although many such congregations might justly be called rural. Of the 517, 263 are in the mountains comprising nearly forty counties. The other 264 are to be found in the Blue Grass and other regions of our field.

Preaching Supply.

Not more than a dozen of these 517 have preaching every Lord's day, and probably 100 of them have preaching half time. The remainder have preaching, for the most, one-fourth time. Many of the churches out of the mountains, and a few of them in that section, are supplied by the students attending the College of the Bible, at Lexington, and a few have the services of the professors. A very small per cent of the country churches (probably not over 10 per cent) out of the mountains are without some regular preaching. The mountains have many native preachers who live by farming, or other occupations, and preach for four congregations regularly. Sometimes a man will preach for twice that many by having appointments at other times than on the first day of the week. The per cent of mountain without any regular preaching is not very large. Before me is a copy of the annual meeting of the country churches of Laurel county, and out of the thirteen congregations, three are reported as not having regular preaching.

Country Churches as a Source of Material for Preachers.

No statistics are at hand to illuminate this. The large majority of young men known to me who have given themselves to the work of the ministry and have prepared themselves for such service, have come from the country churches. The per cent coming from the village, town and city, if the facts were at hand, would be found small.

Present Conditions.

That many of our country churches are declining is a fact that we can not fail to see. In the richest part of Kentucky this is notable. The trend of the people to move into the county seat or city contributes to this. The purchase of large bodies of land by wealthy people has contributed to the reduction of numbers in the country church. It may be that one of our sources of weakness is to be found in the fact that many of these congregations do not have what they need in the way of regular preaching by men located with them and doing the work that is sorely needed. There are instances, however, of steady decline in numbers and ability on the part of congregations that have had such service. The man who can start a tremendous revival of interest and enthusiasm among many of our rural churches will render a great service of a great cause. It is not intended to convey the idea that all our country churches are described by these statements. We have some churches that are making a creditable showing; but their number is small as compared with the many that are struggling against the difficulties indicated above.

The Inevitable Result.

Many of our strong and progressive county town churches are largely indebted to the influx of members from the country for their present numbers and ability. Our fathers builded wiser than we sometimes think in evangelizing the rural regions.

Ask any Blue Grass preacher how much of the strength of his town or city church came from the country and he will astonish you by his reply. One of the preachers in our largest city, when asked by the writer how long he could run the work of the church of which he was minister without the support of the membership that came from the country, replied, "We would have to shut up shop in a week." Without continued growth in the country church we have yet to face another problem, and that is the effect on the town and city church. In my humble judgment the inevitable result of continued decline of the country church will be the decline of our power in the village, town and city.

What is here said applies to the mountain section as well as to other parts of our state. We were fourteen years building up a church in Ashland. We had no country membership to draw upon. There is not another congregation in the county to-day. Jackson, Breathitt county, is a particularly difficult field, for lack of such a source of supply for men and women in the regions round about, who are simply Christian.

We earnestly hope that The Christian-

SELF DELUSION

Many People Deceived by Coffee.

We like to defend our indulgencies and habits even though we may be convinced of their actual harmfulness.

A man can convince himself that whisky is good for him on a cold morning, or beer on a hot summer day—when he wants the whisky or beer?

It's the same with coffee. Thousands of people suffer headache and nervousness year after year but try to persuade themselves the cause is not coffee—because they like coffee.

"While yet a child I commenced using coffee and continued it," writes a Wis. man, "until I was a regular coffee fiend. I drank it every morning and in consequence had a blinding headache nearly every afternoon.

"My folks thought it was coffee that ailed me, but I liked it and would not admit it was the cause of my trouble, so I stuck to coffee and the headaches stuck to me.

"Finally, the folks stopped buying coffee and brought home some Postum. They made it right (directions on pkg.) and told me to see what difference it would make with my head, and during that first week on Postum my old affliction did not bother me once. From that day to this we have used nothing but Postum in place of coffee—headaches are a thing of the past and the whole family is in fine health."

"Postum looks good, smells good, tastes good, is good, and does good to the whole body." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Evagelist will be of vital benefit in solving this great question that ought to have our most careful and prayerful thought.

One Help in Solving the Problem.

If our preachers could be made to realize the need of these fields, and content themselves to devote their lives to such work, we are confident that the future would reveal the wisdom of such effort. While the support offered is not as large, the expenses are not as heavy. A sacrifice would have to be made in some respects. Educational opportunities and social advantages might be of a different type. The salary might have to be supplemented by the garden, dairy and poultry yard. An increasing number of such servants of the Lord will be able to help in the solution of both the country and town church problems.

Sulphur, Ky. H. W. Elliott.

The Illinois Country Church By J. Fred Jones

There are 209 country churches and I suppose about 75 have regular preaching. About 50 of these churches have quit meeting because of removals and the coming in of foreign people.

There are some strong country churches like Eminence, and Bethel of Logan county, Belle Ridge of Edgar county, Six Mile, of Franklin and Pleasant Grove of Wayne. But such churches are not numerous. The Concord church of Tazewell county is also one of the very best country churches.

Many of the country churches are in good fields and those that are so situated do well where there is intelligent and consecrated leadership. There are many of them that do not know how to give in support of their work and all such are passing away.

It is to be regretted that many of the farming brethren in these churches can not understand that a minister must need more than $300 or $400 a year. Men on the farms live by spending that much only on their families, but forget that they get their edibles from the farm and that they are not paid for. They also forget that the preacher must pay for what he gets and that he has no farm to draw from. Once when working for a village church on a modest salary a good farmer, who had the same sized family with myself, lectured me for not saving half my salary. I informed him that it cost him twice as much to live as it did me, He laughed in derision but agreed to keep books for one year, charging himself with everything from the farm at retail prices. At the end of the year he came to tell me that it had cost him just twice as much to live as it did me, but it was a great surprise to him. There are plenty of good men who have not yet kept books on themselves and are now believing as my friend, the farmer, did.

There are many farming communities that are always up-to-date in farming, live in good houses and have good schools, but their churches are of the vintage of forty years ago.

It is my conviction that country churches must purchase a lot of say ten acres in partnership and by groups, and make a home for the preacher. If two to four churches were tied together in this commercial way the partnership would be lasting. As it is the co-operation of country churches is made very uncertain because any one of them will break away on some trivial excuse. But if they owned a little farm and house for the preacher the excuses would not govern.

